3. Tho' wicked men may at present prosper, and flourish like a green bay tree, yet judgments are kept in store for them. Their wickedness is laid up for them, and it will not be lost or forgotten. "For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompence saith the Lord. The Lord shall judge his people."

and others, I consider it as the nominative, and render מְרִבְיֹת multitudes. The preposition מִ has in many places the sense of with. The meaning is, 'God led the multitudes, or ten thousands of Israel.—A fire from his right hand, &c. The cloud of glory, is called 'the right hand,' and this was the signal to them, when to march and when to encamp. Compare Hab. iii. 5. This is the most easy sense of the text; for מִ in Syr. signifies a signal. As some copies join the two words and read מִשְׁמֹרֶת, and as שׁוֹרֵק may be variously pointed, Durrell renders, 'From his right hand issued streams to them. Geddes, 'From whose right hand came streams of water for them, from the copious springs of Kadesh.' I adhere to the more usual sense of the words; and cannot but think the version of Geddes in some degree forced.

3. Yea he loved, &c. The reading in the printed Sam. text, I deem erroneous, as several mss Sam. copies read as the Hebrew.—All his hallow,

- They sat down at ^vhis feet,
And they received of ^vhis words:
- 4 The law which he enjoined us for an inheritance,
An inheritance for the assembly of Jacob ;
- 5 For he was king in Jeshurun.
Then of Reuben and Simeon he said :
- 6 "Let Reuben live, and not die ;
And ^vSimeon", let not his men be few."
- 7 And he said this of Judah,
"Hear, O Jehovah, the voice of Judah,
And bring him back safe to his people ;
Let his own hand be sufficient for him,
And be thou his help against his enemies."
- 8 And of Levi he said,
"Let thy Thummin and thy Urim be with thy pious one,
Whom thou didst prove at Massah,
With whom thou strovest at the waters of Meribah ;
- 9 Who said of his father and mother, 'I regard them not ;'
Who acknowledged not his own brethren ;
Who had no respect to his own children ;
Who ^vobserved thy command,
And who kept thy covenant.—

3. ^vA loving father of the people. Sam. the rest as the text—ibid. ^vSyr. the rest, in his hand or hands, or thy hand.—

Heb. x. 30. Let us, therefore, be afraid of God's judgments ; for, as the apostle infers from this very consideration, "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

4. The great importance of religion, should recommend it to the serious regards of all mankind ; it is not a vain thing, or a light matter, or a thing of indifference, that may be attended to, or neglected ; but our life is at stake. It is the only way to secure peace

ed ones he blessed. The Syr. I conceive has preserved the true reading, which is parallel with the first line. The context justifies the reading his fear, his words, with the versions noticed.

4. The law which he, &c. The common text has Moses ; but this is generally admitted to be an error. This verse and the next relate to Jehovah.—He commanded—he was king—the only king of Israel. Moses never assumed the title. Compare Ch. xvii. 14. Kennicott ingeniously conjectured, that משה has arisen from some critic writing it instead of מורשה, which might easily be done. I have adopted this emendation, as the context justifies it.

8. Thy Thumim and Urim. The Urim and Thumim were appropriated to the High Priest, (see Ex. xxviii. 30), and this phrase must apply to him in its literal and most obvious sense. So Green and Bate understood the passage. Others consider it as denoting him, of whom Aaron was only a type ; and appeal to 1 Cor. x. 9, as a proof of it. Houbigant and Kennicott contend for this sense. As it is of the tribe of Levi Moses is speaking,

- They shall teach Jacob thy judgments, 10
And make known thy law to Israel :
They shall place incense before thee,
And lay holocausts upon thine altar.
Bless, O Jehovah, their substance ; 11
And favour the works of their hands :
Smite the loins of such as are their opponents,
Of such as hate them so that they may rise no more."

- And of Benjamin he said, 12
"The beloved of Jehovah shall dwell in safety ;
^vThe most high shall ever protect him,
And he shall dwell among his mountains."
- And of Joseph he said, 13
"Blessed by Jehovah be his land,
With the precious dew of the heavens,
And with the springs of the low-lying deep ;
With the precious productions of the sun, 14
And with the precious fruits of the moon ;
With the precious things of the ancient moun- 15
tains,
And the precious things of the everlasting hills ;
With the precious things of the earth and its 16
fulness.
And may the favour of him, who dwelt in the bush and happiness in the present life, and to obtain eternal felicity. This is not one of those trifles, which if a man pursue he is not the better, or if he neglect, he is not the worse ; it is a matter of infinite moment. Oh that men were sensible of this ; that they would "set their hearts to keep God's commandments ;" that they would make religion their chief business, and engage in it with seriousness, affection, and resolution ; then would their end be peace.

and as what follows evidently refers to the conduct of this tribe, in resolutely maintaining the cause of God against the worship of the golden calf ; the former opinion seems entitled to preference. Moses here addresses Jehovah ; and by 'thy pious one,' meant his brother Aaron whom God proved, when he commanded him to smite the rock ; and contended with him, when he reprehended his unbelief. See Numb. xx. 8, 12.

9. Who said to his father, &c. Moses refers here to what the Levites did to the worshippers of the golden calf. Exodus xxxii. 26—28.

12. The Most High. The conjecture of Houbigant that we should read עליון, has been adopted by later critics. The Sept. either read this or אלהים ; and consider it as the nominative of the verb ירעה.—Among his mountains. Literally, 'between his shoulders.' I have preferred the sense as the metaphor is not near in our language. The Targums paraphrase thus : 'and in his land, or limits, shall the majesty of the Lord reside ;' alluding no doubt to the temple of Jerusalem ; which was partly in the borders of Benjamin. This idea has been embraced by Dathe and Rosen-

Come upon the head of Joseph;
On the crown of the distinguished of his brethren.

17 His glory is like that of the choicest bull;
And his horns like the horns of the Rhinoceros!
With them he shall push the people,
He shall push them to the extremity of the land!
These are the ten thousands of Ephraim,
And these the thousands of Manasseh!"

18 And of Zebulon and Issachar he said,
"Rejoice Zebulon, in thy commerce;
And, Issachar, in thy tents.

19 They shall invite the people to the holy mountain,
There they shall offer righteous sacrifices,
For they shall suck affluence from the seas,
And from treasures hidden in the sand."

20 And of Gad he said,
"Blessed be he who enlargeth Gad.
Like a lioness he coucheth,
And teareth both the arm and the head.

21 And he seeth the first parts allotted to himself:
For an assigned portion there is secured.
Yet he shall go at the head of the people;
He shall execute the justice of Jehovah,
And his judgments in favour of Israel.

22 And of Dan he said,
"Dan is like the whelp of the lion ;

Like such as leap from Bashan."

And of Naphtali he said, 23
"Naphtali, satisfied with favour,
And filled with the blessing of Jehovah,
Shall possess the sea-coast, and the south."

And of Asher he said, 24
"Asher, blessed shall he be in his children,
And accepted among his brethren,
He shall dip his foot in oil :

Thy bars shall be of iron and of brass : 25
And as thy days, shall thy strength be."

"There is none like the God of Jeshurun ; 26
Who, for thine help, rideth on the heavens,
And in his excellency, on the skies.

The eternal God is thy refuge ; 27
And everlasting arms are thy support ;
And he shall drive out thy foes from before thee,

And shall say, 'Destroy them.'
Israel shall dwell alone, in safety ; 28
The fount of Jacob in a land of corn and wine:
For his heavens shall drop down the dew.
Happy art thou, O Israel ! who like thee ? 29

A people who are saved by Jehovah !
The shield of thine help, and the sword of thy glory !

To thee shall thine enemies submit, muller; et inter montes ejus considereat. That is, Jehovah shall dwell in mount Zion, which belonged to the tribe of Benjamin.

14. Productions of the sun—and moon. These denote annual and monthly productions; the former were such as wheat, barley, grapes; the latter, such as figs, olives, and other things of which they had many crops in a year.

16. Who dwelt in the bush. He alludes to Exodus iii. 2. Compare Gen. xlix. 26.

17. And his horns like, &c. The possessions of the children of Joseph extended like two horns. Their pushing together the people around them is well illustrated by a passage in Joshua xvii. 14—18.

18. Zebulon was a commercial tribe; and that of Issachar given to agriculture and manufactures.

19. Shall invite the people. Being richer than the other tribes, they would invite the rest to feast with them at the holy place.—Treasures hidden in the sand. From the sands of the rivers Belus and Kishon, which ran into the bay of Ptolemais, or Carmel, glass was manufactured at a very early period; and to this Jonathan, in his Targum, applies these words. Pliny attests the same fact.

20. Blessed be he, who, &c. that is, blessed be God, who has granted Gad an ample inheritance in Gilead.—Teareth the arm with the head. This tribe was particularly bold and courageous; and, like the lion, who attacks the head of an animal, on which he rushes, this tribe should attack both kings and their people.

21. He seeth the first parts; that is, of the land. Moses refers to the settlement of this tribe, beyond the Jordan.—An assigned portion. I have followed Darrell in connecting נחלת נפתלי, and I conceive without any change of the text, a suitable and connected sense is given.—Yet he shall go. This refers to the engagement of the Gadites, Reubenites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, to assist the other tribes in the conquest of Canaan. Numb. xxxiii. 16—18.

22. Dan is like the, &c. The tribe of Dan were first settled between those of Simeon and Ephraim; but the place being found too small for them, they made an irruption into the country about Laish, toward the source of the Jordan. This irruption might well be compared to the leap of a lion's whelp. See Josh. xix. 47; Jud. xviii.

23. The sea coast and the south. The inheritance of Naphtali was bounded on both sides by the lakes of Merom and Chinnereth; and lay to the south of the northern Danites.

24. Asher. The very name imports happiness: and indeed no human felicity can be greater than what is here assigned to him. He is to be happy in his family and friends: his olive trees are to be so productive, that he may anoint even his feet with oil: (compare Job. xxix. 6.) instead of wooden bars, which are still common in the East, his were to be iron and brass: in fine, length of days and abundance of riches, were to crown his posterity.

27. The eternal God. I have followed Green in this version; nor do I see any necessity for the version of Bate whom Geddes follows: 'Humbling the gods of antiquity; and subduing the strong of prior times.' I consider this forced, and unsupported by any of the versions.

CHAP. XXXIV. 1, 2. What I have included in brackets is wanting in the Sam. Copy, and I suspect has been added to the text. This whole Chapter was added by Joshua, or some subsequent writer; for the concluding verses seem to indicate, that it was long after, when there had been

And on their high places thou shalt tread."

CHAPTER XXXIV.

B. C. 1452. Moses views the promised land and dieth; his age and mourning for him; Joshua succeedeth him; his character.

- 1 AND Moses went up from the plains of Moab to the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, which is over against Jericho. And Jehovah showed him all the land [from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates, and to the farther sea:] all the land of Gilead unto
- 2 Dan, And all "the land of" Naphtali, and of Ephraim, and Manasseh; and all the land of
- 3 Judah; And the south, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto
- 4 Zoar. And Jehovah said to him, "This is the land which I swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, saying, 'To your seed I will give it:' I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but over into it thou shalt not go."
- 5 So Moses the servant of Jehovah died there in the land of Moab, according to the word

CHAP. XXXIV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIII. 1. We have great reason to be thankful that God hath given us his law. Moses lead Israel to celebrate this, as a token of his special kindness. A goodly land was their inheritance, but the divine revelation was the best possession both for them and their seed: we can leave posterity nothing better than our bibles. Let us bless God for them, and maintain a grateful sense of the Lord Jesus Christ, who came to teach us, as Moses did Israel. This glorious light of the gospel is the greatest blessing which our land can possess. We have in this respect, all reason to say, "the lines are fallen to us in pleasant places, surely we have a goodly heritage."

2. The favour and good-will of God, is the best blessing we can ask for ourselves or our friends. Moses prayed for many blessings upon Joseph, but this was the last and the chief; it is the source of all blessings; it sweetens all others, and secures the soul from evil. At the bush God renewed his covenant; let us recommend our children, servants, friends, and acquaintance to the good-will of God, as our covenant God; and instead of being solicitous for a blessing out of the corn-floor or wine-press, or from worldly prosperity, let us pray, that his good-will may be with them, in time and eternity.

3. That blessed are the people whose God is the Lord. In what lofty strains does Moses describe the happiness of Israel, because they were near to God! God is not ours as he was theirs;

prophets in Israel.

6. He buried him. Perhaps gave him a command to go to some secret cavern, where his bones might rest in peace. Had the place been known, of Jehovah. And he buried him in a valley 6 in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor; but no man knoweth his sepulchre unto this day.

And Moses was one hundred and twenty 7 years old when he died; his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated.

And the children of Israel wept for Moses 8 in the plains of Moab, thirty days; so the days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.

And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the 9 spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him: and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as Jehovah commanded Moses.

And there arose not a prophet since in 10 Israel like to Moses, whom Jehovah knew face to face. In all the signs and wonders, which 11 Jehovah sent him to do in the land of Egypt to Pharaoh, and to all his servants, and to all his land, And in all that mighty hand, and in 12 all the great terror which Moses showed in the sight of all Israel.

but we enter into the best of their privileges. "God is our father in Christ Jesus; he blesses us with spiritual blessings;" he is our support and defence. All the fruitfulness and security of our country is owing to him; that we dwell safely and peaceably, is all to be ascribed to God. But our spiritual blessings render us truly happy, if we know how to improve them. Remember, Israel lost their good land, and all their blessings, by disobedience. Let us, therefore, carefully attend to the apostle's caution, "Be not high-minded, but fear."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIV. 1. The removal of wise and good men, especially of a faithful minister in the vigour of his days, should be seriously lamented. Moses was leader to Israel. Consider how gently and tenderly he had led them; how often he had saved them by his intercession, and led them like a father; it is no wonder he was bewailed, and that by some who were perhaps rebellious before. Considering what a loss the world and church sustain by the removal of such men, their death should be lamented. The greater regard we have for the honour of God, and the interest of religion, the more concerned we shall be when useful and good men are taken away.

2. It is a great comfort, when faithful ministers are removed, that others succeed them. Though 'the prophets do not live for ever, the word of God does; and there will always be a succession of faithful men to dispense it. Joshua, who came in Moses' stead, there is little doubt, that a gross and superstitious people, would have held it sacred; as we find they afterward did the brazen serpent, which Hesekiah destroyed.

had much of his spirit; and was happy in that he had the favour of God, and the affections of the people. It is a great mercy that God raises up faithful pastors, and that his people are not as sheep without a shepherd. Let us rejoice in this, and continually pray that God 'would send more faithful labourers into his harvest.'

3. Let us learn from the whole history of Moses, and especially from his death, how great our happiness is in having Christ for our prince and commander. Moses was faithful as a servant, Christ as a Son. Moses was familiar with God, but Christ was more so; he was in his bosom, intimately acquainted with him and his will. He did superior miracles, signs and wonders; his character was more perfect; he introduced a better revelation;

'he was without blemish, and without spot.' Moses died, and was buried, and saw corruption; but Christ did not: "God would not suffer his holy one to see corruption." He lives again, and lives for ever. "He is a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedek." He has no successor, as Moses had, for his dominion shall continue till the consummation of all things. "He is for ever sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high." He will bring all his faithful people to the heavenly Canaan, and complete all the divine purposes of love and grace to them. Let us rejoice then in Christ Jesus; be thankful for this unspeakable gift; and consider ourselves as under the highest obligations to be obedient to all his requisitions, and wait for his salvation.

INTRODUCTION.

This is called the Book of Joshua, because it relates the events of his life. It comprises a period of near twenty-seven years, and contains an account of the entrance of the Israelites into Canaan; the conquest of that country, or at least the greater part of it, under the command of Joshua; the division of the land, by lot, among the different tribes; the establishment of religion, by erecting the tabernacle at Shiloh, and other ordinances.

It is uncertain who was the author of this book; whether it was written by Joshua, or composed from his journals at a later period. Henry supposes, that both this, and the following historical Books, to the end of kings, were compiled by Jeremiah. I can see no ground for such an opinion; and with others I would refer it to Joshua near the close of his life. If he read the address contained in the last two Chapters, as is most probable, he must have previously written it. I admit that some additions may have been made at some later period. This book must have been peculiarly interesting to the Israelites, as it contains the history of their conquest of the promised land, and specifies what was the portion of their respective tribes. We see in this book God's promise to Abraham fulfilled.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1451. God's call of, and promise to Joshua; and Joshua's orders to the officers.

- 1 Now after the death of Moses, the servant of Jehovah, Jehovah spoke to Joshua the son of Nun, who had been the attendant of Moses, saying, "Moses my servant is dead; now arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I give to them, 2 to the children of Israel. Every place upon which the soles of your feet shall tread, I give 3 to you, as I said to Moses, 'From the wilderness and that Lebanon unto the great river, the river Euphrates, and thence westward unto the great sea, shall be your boundary.' There shall not be any man able to stand before thee all the days of thy life; as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee: I will not leave 4 thee, nor forsake thee. Be strong and of good courage: for unto this people shalt thou divide for an inheritance, the land which I swore to their fathers that I would give to them.

CHAP. I. 11. to possess it, Sept. Vulg. Arab.

CHAPTER I. 4. With others, I have omitted, all the land of the Hethites, on the authority of the Sept. because in specifying the boundaries of the promised land, it is not probable that any notice would be taken of the interjacent country; and because there seems no reason why the land of the Hethites should be mentioned exclusive of the land occupied by the other nations of Canaan.

Only be thou strong and of good courage in 7 observing to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee: from it turn not to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest. Let not this book of the law depart out of 8 thy mouth; but meditate on it day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then shalt thou have good success. Do not I com- 9 mand thee to be strong and of good courage? Fear not, nor be dismayed; for Jehovah thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."

Then Joshua commanded the officers of the 10 people, saying, "Pass through the host, and 11 charge the people saying, 'Prepare for yourselves victuals; for three days hence, ye shall pass over this Jordan, to go in to possess the land, which Jehovah giveth to you.'"

And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, 12 and to the half of the tribe of Manasseh, spoke 13. on this side the Jordan, Sept.

15. Sept.*

7. Mayest prosper. Some render, 'so as to act wisely or prudently;' and though this be the more usual sense of the word, both Schindler and Castel attribute the other to it.

8. Out of thy mouth. The meaning probably is, that, as the leader and commander, he should be ever speaking of the law, and giving orders according to it.

CHAPTER II.

Joshua, saying, "Remember the word which Moses the servant of Jehovah commanded you, saying, 'Jehovah your God hath given you rest, and hath given to you this land. 14 Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, remain in the land which Moses gave to you on this side the Jordan: but ye shall pass before your brethren armed, all the mighty men 15 of valour, and help them; Until Jehovah 'our God' shall have given your brethren rest, as he hath given to you, and they also possess the land which Jehovah your God giveth to them: then ye shall return to the land of your possession, and enjoy it; the land which Moses, Jehovah's servant, gave to you, on this eastern side of the Jordan."

16 And they answered Joshua, saying, "All that thou commandest us we will do, and whither- 17 soever thou sendest us, we will go. According as we hearkened to Moses in all things, so will we hearken unto thee; only may Jehovah thy God be with thee, as he was with 18 Moses. Whosoever he be that rebelleth against thy command, and will not hearken to thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death; only be thou strong and of good courage."

CHAP. II. 1. And the two young men went to Jericho. Sept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. The presence of God with us is our greatest support and encouragement, amidst the labours and difficulties of life. We are risen up in our fathers' places, though we may not be equal to them in wisdom and zeal; but God is the same. All their gifts were derived from him; to him they owed all their success; his power and grace are the same; and that grace, if we seek it, will be sufficient for us. Let not the rising generation be discouraged, but humbly wait on God, and adopt the prayer of Solomon; "the Lord our God be with us, as he was with our fathers: let him not leave us, nor forsake us: that he may incline our hearts to walk in all his ways."

2. Let good men learn to cast all their cares upon God, and

9. In the construction of the first part of this verse I have followed the Syr version, which alone gives, in my opinion the genuine sense. 16, 18. This reply of these warlike tribes, must have established the authority of Joshua, and greatly encouraged him.

CHAP. II. 1. An harlot. Some would derive the noun חַיִּילָה from חַי, and render an hostess, a keeper of a house for the accommodation of travellers. So Castell and others. The usual sense is better founded; and is, in fact, that which the Sept. and the Apostles, Paul and James, have given.

Now Joshua, the son of Nun, had secretly 1 sent from Shittim, two men, spies, saying, "Go view the land, and especially Jericho. And 'they went,' and came into the house of an harlot, named Rahab, and lodged there. And 2 some one told the king of Jericho, saying, "Behold, to night there came in hither, men of the children of Israel, to search out the country. And the king of Jericho sent to 3 Rahab, saying, "Bring forth those men who came to thee, and who entered thine house: for to search out the 'land have they come.'" And the woman took the two men, and hid 4 them, and said thus, "There came men to me, but whence they came I know not: And when 5 it was dark, and the gate about to be shut, the men went out. Whither the men went I know not: pursue after them quickly; for ye may yet overtake them." But she had taken 6 them up to the roof of the house, and hidden them among raw flax, which she had spread upon the roof. And the other men pursued 7 after them the way to the fords of the Jordan; practice moderation and contentment. The apostle teaches us this lesson, Heb. xiii. 5, and quotes the promise made to Joshua as the ground of it: Be not anxiously solicitous about future events; to heap up wealth, or to guard against evil. We have the promise of an ever faithful God to trust to; "I will never leave you, I will never forsake you." And whatever dangers or enemies are in the way, we may boldly say, the Lord is my helper.

3. We may learn from Jehovah's address to Joshua, that obedience to his law is the surest way to prosper, ver. 7, 8. As no dignity or dominion should set a man above subjection to the divine law; so no plea of hurry in business, however important, will excuse for the neglect of religion, and the care of our own soul. Let the cultivation of the spirit of Christ be our chief care.

Compare Heb. xi. 31; James ii. 25. There is, however, no reason to suppose that Rahab followed this practice at this time. It is a usual idiom of scripture, to denominate persons from what they had been. Thus Matthew, who was a publican, is long after he left that employ, still called the publican, Math. x. 3; and Simon, who had been afflicted with the leprosy, is called Simon the leper, Chap. xxvi. 6. We may then suppose, that Rahab had been an harlot, but had repented and was then reformed.

and as soon as they who pursued after them were gone out, they shut the gate after them.

- 8 Now before they had lain down, she went 9 up to them, on the roof; And she said to the men, "I know that Jehovah hath given to you the land; for the dread of you hath fallen on us, and all the inhabitants of the land are discouraged because of you. For we have heard
10 how, when ye came out of Egypt, Jehovah dried up the water of the Red sea before you; and what ye have done to the two kings of the Amorites, who were on the other side the Jordan, Sihon and Og, whom ye have utterly
11 destroyed. And as soon as we heard these things, our hearts melted, neither did there remain any courage in any man, because of you: for Jehovah your God, he is God in the heavens
12 above, and on the earth below. Now, therefore, I pray you, swear to me by Jehovah, that as I have showed you kindness, so ye will show kindness to my father's house; and give to me a sure token, That ye will save alive my father and my mother, and my brethren, and my sisters, and all that they have, and deliver our 14 lives from death." And the men answered her, "Our life for yours if 'thou' utter not this our business. And it shall be, when Jehovah hath given us the land, that we will deal kindly 15 and faithfully with thee." Then she let them down by a rope through the window; (for her house was on the town wall, and she dwelt on 16 the wall;) And she said to them, "Go up to the mountains, lest the pursuers meet you; and there hide yourselves three days, until the pursuers have returned; and afterward ye may go on your way." And the men said to her, 17 "We will be blameless of this oath which thou hast made us swear to thee. Behold, when we 18 are come into the land, thou shalt bind this scarlet coloured rope to the window, by which thou didst let us down; and thou shalt bring into thine house, thy father, and thy mother, and thy brethren, and all thy father's household. But if any of them go out of the doors of thy 19 house into the street, his blood shall be upon his own head, and we shall be guiltless: and if an hand touch him who may be with thee in the house, his blood be on our head. And if 20 thou utter this our business, then will we be blameless of the oath which thou hast made us swear to thee." And she said, "According 21 unto your words, so be it." And she sent them away, and they departed; and she bound the scarlet coloured rope to the window. And they 22 went, and came to the mountains, and there abode three days, until the pursuers were returned; and the pursuers sought them throughout all the way, but found them not.

So the two men returned, and descended 23 from the mountains, and passed over, and came to Joshua the son of Nun, and told all things that had befallen them; And they said unto 24 Joshua, "Truly Jehovah is about to deliver into our hands the whole land; for even all the inhabitants of the land melt because of us."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. Whatever our characters may now be, and however excellent our spirit and conduct, it may be useful to reflect on our past vices. Rahab's past conduct is recorded, both for our warning and encouragement—for

6. Ram flax. Literally, 'flax of the wood;' that is, flax with its ligneous parts, or undressed flax. It is well known that flax is exposed some considerable time to the sun and air, before it can be manufactured; and after that, it is stacked up in regular heaps. Rahab had her flax arranged at the top of her house: the roofs in Judea being flat. It is impossible to vindicate this part of Rahab's conduct. She told the most manifest falsehood; nor could her motive and design justify this violation of truth. We are not allowed to do evil that good may come. God mercifully forgave this sin; and accepted that faith, which she exercised in him as God, in the heavens above, and on the earth below. Rahab affords an our warning, lest we should fall into such sins, as entail disgrace and infamy on us;—and for our encouragement, lest we should continue in an evil course, and instead of repenting and reformatory, go on in our trespasses. A man of piety will not forget the 'hole of instance of that mixture of good and evil, virtue and vice, which the best of men feel and lament.

12. Swear to me by Jehovah. From the works which Jehovah had wrought, and the dread which had fallen on the inhabitants of Canaan, Rahab concluded that he would give the land to the Israelites; and her desire to obtain an oath from the spies is a proof of her faith.

15. And she dwelt on the wall. Her house not only was built by the wall, but a part of it extended over the wall.

20. Made us swear to thee. These were the three conditions, to bind the scarlet thread in the window, to have all her relations in her house,

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 1452 Joshua cometh to the Jordan; officers instruct the people respecting the passage of that river; Joshua encouraged; encourageth the people.

- 1 Now Joshua had risen early on the morning of the third day; and he and all the children of Israel had removed from Shittim and come to the Jordan, and had lodged there before they passed over. And after the three days, the officers went through the camp; And they commanded the people, saying, "When ye see the ark of the covenant of Jehovah your God, and the priests the Levites bearing it, then ye shall remove from your place, and go after it. Yet let there be a space of about two thousand cubits by measure between you and it: come not nearer unto it, that ye may know the way by which ye must go: for ye have not heretofore passed this way." And Joshua said to the people, "Sanctify yourselves; for to morrow Jehovah will do wonders among you."
- 7 For Jehovah had said to Joshua, "This day will I begin to magnify thee in the sight of all Israel, that they may know, that as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee. And thou shalt command the priests that bear the ark of the covenant, saying, "When ye are come to the brink of the water of the Jordan, ye shall stand still in the Jordan." So Joshua spoke to the priests, saying, "Take up the ark of the covenant; and pass over before the people." And they took up the ark of the covenant, and went before the people. Then 9 Joshua said to the children of Israel, "Come hither, and hear the words of Jehovah your God. 'By this, said Joshua, ye shall know 10 that the living God is among you, and that he will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites, and the Hethites, and the Hivites, and the Perizzites, and the Girgasites, and the Amorites, and the Jebusites. Behold 11 the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, 'Lord' of the whole earth, passeth on before you unto the Jordan. Now it shall be, as soon as the 13 soles of the feet of the priests who bear the ark of Jehovah, the Lord of the whole earth, shall rest in the waters of the Jordan, that the waters of the Jordan, which come down from above, shall be cut off; and they shall stand upon an heap."

And it came to pass, when the people removed from their tents, to pass over the Jordan, and the priests bearing the ark of the covenant before the people; And when they who bore 15 the ark were come unto the Jordan, and the feet of the priests who bore the ark were dipped in the edge of the water, (for the Jordan overfloweth all its banks during the whole time of harvest,) That the waters which came 16 down from above stood and rose into an heap very far from the city Adam, which is beside the pit whence he was dug; but will often reflect on his past life to promote his humiliation.

2. Let us learn to imitate the faith of Rahab. She believed the promise, and obeyed the command of the God of Israel. She ventured her life, and all that was dear to her, upon his declaration. She not only assented to this truth, that Jehovah was God in the heavens above, and on the earth below, but acted accordingly; and by works proved the sincerity of her faith, James ii 25 &c. Let us imitate her exand not to tell the business on which they came, or the agreement they had made, lest others also should hang out scarlet ropes.

CHAP. III. 1. On the morning of the third day. This addition is necessary to make the text consistent with itself, and with what is said, Chap. i. 11. Houbigant and Masius contend, that the order of this chapter has been disturbed; and there can be no doubt, that some transpositions have been made.

twelve men out of the tribes of Israel, out of every tribe a man.

ample in this respect; and as we profess to believe in God, let us be careful to maintain good works.

3. We are taught by the stipulations between Rahab and the spies, that, in all our engagements, we should be as particular as possible, to prevent mistakes. Every circumstance was carefully repeated and explained, so that they could not misunderstand one another. Before we enter into any engagement we should consider whether it be lawful, or proper; and if so, we ought not to fail to perform what we undertake.

6. This verse is evidently a part of Joshua's address to the priests, and is connected with the eighth verse, after which I have placed it.

12. I have omitted this verse in the text, as wholly unconnected with what precedes or follows. It has been most probably inserted from the next chapter, 2 verse, where it seems proper. Most Critics consider it as inserted here by mistake.

15. The harvest in Judea begins about the middle of April; when the

Zaretan: and those that came down toward the sea of the plain, (even the salt sea,) failed, and were cut off: and the people passed 17 over opposite to Jericho. And the priests who bore the ark of the covenant of Jehovah stood firm on dry ground in the midst of the Jordan; while all the Israelites were passing over on dry ground; until the whole people had completely passed over the Jordan.

CHAPTER IV.

B. C. 1425. Twelve stones taken out of the Jordan, for a memorial; and twelve others set up in the Jordan; the people pass over; the stones are pitched at Gilgal.

1 AND it came to pass, when all the people were completely passed over the Jordan, that
2 Jehovah spoke to Joshua, saying, "Choose twelve men out of the people, out of every
3 tribe a man, And command them saying, 'Take hence out of the midst of the Jordan, out of the place where the priests' feet stand firm, twelve stones; and ye shall carry them over with you, and leave them in the lodging-place,
4 where ye shall this night lodge.'" Then Joshua called twelve men, whom he appointed from among the children of Israel, out of every tribe a man; And Joshua said to them, "Pass over before the ark of Jehovah your God, into the midst of the Jordan, and take up every one of you a stone upon his shoulder, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Israel: That this may be a sign 5 among you, that when your children ask, in time to come, saying, 'What mean ye by these 6 stones?' Then ye shall answer them, 'That 7 the waters of the Jordan were cut off: and these stones are for a perpetual memorial to the children of Israel.'" And the children of 8 Israel did as Joshua commanded; and took up out of the midst of the Jordan twelve stones, as Jehovah spoke to Joshua, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Israel, and carried them over with them unto the place where they lodged, and laid them down there. [And Joshua set up twelve other 9 stones in the midst of the Jordan, in the place where the feet of the priests, who bore the ark of the covenant, stood: and there they are unto this day.]

Now the priests who bore the ark, stood in 10 the midst of the Jordan, until every thing was finished, which Jehovah had commanded

CHAP. IV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. Let us learn to follow God as our leader and guide. We have no ark to go before us; but we have the providence of God. In many instances this points out the path in which we should go, and often makes it smooth and easy. We have also the divine word, which both warns us against the path of the destroyer, and directs us in that which leads to life. By his word God says to us, 'This is the way, walk ye in it.' We may cheerfully follow his directions, when called to walk in untrodden paths, or to encounter untried difficulties; for he has promised to be with us.

2. We learn that when God was going to display his power and faithfulness, and 'do wonders,' the people were to 'sanctify themselves.' Preparation is necessary for the right discharge of duty; and if we would see God's glory in his church, or enjoy any sense of his love in ordinances, we must put away the evil of our doings, for he will be sanctified by his servants.

10. ° According to all that Moses commanded Joshua.

3. The miracle here recorded afforded another proof of the presence and power of the God of Jacob. David beautifully refers to the passage of the Red sea and of the Jordan. "What ailed thee, O Jordan, that thou wast driven back?" "Was the Lord displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers? No; thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people." In allusion to this, let not, sincere christians, the true Israel of God, be afraid of death; which, like Jordan, is between them and the heavenly Canaan; since God can make for them a safe, easy, and wonderful passage, and bring them to the land of plenty and happiness.

Jordan is commonly high, from previous rain, and the melting of the snows of Lebanon.

CHAP. IV. 5. Pass over. The twelve men were to go beyond where the ark rested, and then take the stones out of the river, and carry them into the land of Canaan.

9. Set up other twelve stones. As the text stands, this is the most obvious and natural sense. Kennicott would render, 'Thus Joshua took out of the midst of the Jordan, from the place where the feet, &c.' The Syr. supports this correction; but the other versions the text. It is difficult to ascertain what purpose these stones could answer in the Jordan, unless they were so large as to form a heap which was visible. In the command given to Joshua, verse 2, 3, there is nothing said concerning twelve stones to be set up in the Jordan; and from this I suspect, that the whole verse has originated from a part of the preceding having been repeated. I have included it in brackets as of doubtful authority.

10. On the authority of the Sept. I have omitted the clause noticed. We nowhere read that Moses gave Joshua a charge respecting the passage of the Jordan; or concerning the taking from its bed twelve stones, as a

Joshua to order the people to do. And the 11 people passed over with speed: And when all the people had completely passed over, the priests passed over, and the ark of Jehovah, 12 in the presence of the people. And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and half of the tribe of Manasseh, passed over, armed before the children of Israel, as Mo-13 ses spoke to them; About forty thousand men ready prepared for war, passed before Jehovah,
to the plains of Jericho.

14 On that day Jehovah magnified Joshua in the sight of all Israel; and they feared him, as they had feared Moses, all the days of his 15 life. And Jehovah spoke to Joshua, saying, 16 "Command the priests who bear the ark of the testimony, that they come up out of the 17 Jordan." Joshua therefore commanded the priests, saying, "Come ye up out of the Jor-18 dan." And it came to pass, when the priests who bore the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, were come up out of the midst of the Jordan, and the soles of the priests' feet were placed on the dry land, that the waters of the Jordan returned to their place, and overflowed all its banks, as before.

21. *So Sept. Syr. Arab.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. Let us contemplate the surprising miracle so particularly narrated, as a proof of the power, grace, and faithfulness of God. The Jordan, within its usual banks, is above twenty yards broad, and its current rapid; the Israelites passed it when at the highest, and when it might be sixty yards broad, and its waters much more impetuous. How great that power which could restrain such a body of water for so long a space of time, till the vast multitude had passed over! Here indeed was God present and manifested; present by a most surprising agency, and manifest as the God of Israel, fulfilling his promises to the children of Abraham!

2. Here we also see the faith of the people. They had no ground of security but the promise of God. They went into the Jordan in obedience to his word; nor did the waters return upon them. The faith and submission of the priests were especially tried. They must first go in with the ark; and there they must stand and wait, till the whole assembly had passed over. As the shepherds of Israel they monument to perpetuate the miracle wrought.

11. In the presence of the people. The people, doubtless, having passed the Jordan, formed on its banks and watched the march of the ark;
and on its having also reached the land, saw with wonder the waters return with their usual force.

VOL. I. PART IV.

And the people went up out of the Jordan, 19
on the tenth day of the first month, and encamped in Gilgal, on the east side of Jericho.
And those twelve stones, which they had ta- 20
ken out of the Jordan, Joshua set up in Gilgal. And he spoke to the children of Israel, 21 saying, "When your children shall ask 'you'
in time to come, saying, 'What mean these stones?' Ye shall then inform your children, 22 saying, 'Israel came over this Jordan on dry land.' For Jehovah your God, dried up the 23 waters of the Jordan before you, until ye passed over, as Jehovah your God, had done
to the Red sea, which he dried up before us, until we passed over: That all the people 24 of the earth might know how mighty is the hand of Jehovah; and that ye might fear Jehovah your God for ever."

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 1451. The Canaanites afraid; circumcision renewed; the Passover kept and an angel appeareth to Joshua.

Now, when all the kings of the Amorites, 1 who were on the west side of the Jordan, and all the kings of the Canaanites, who were by were to lead the way, and to be examples to the flock. By their confidence, stedfastness, and constancy, they were to animate and encourage others. In the exercise of similar graces, let every minister study to glorify God. "Be thou an example to believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity."

3. We are taught, that it is our duty to preserve the memory of God's wonderful works, and make them known to our children. Signal displays of God's power and love, should not be forgotten. The stones set up in Gilgal, were to testify to posterity what God had wrought. Children should learn when young, if they would be wise when old; and the great object of parents should be, to teach them those things which have an evident tendency to engage them to fear the Lord, and to continue faithful in his service. When the memory is early enriched with the facts and truths, contained in the holy scriptures, they may be expected to produce an abundant harvest in future life; 'when we shall no longer see through a glass darkly.'

19. On the tenth day of the first month. On the fifteenth day of the first month they were sent out of Egypt; so that it was forty years within five days, according to the prediction, till they entered Canaan.

CHAP. V. 2. Make sharp knives. Literally 'Flint-knives.' That stones may be sharpened so as to answer the purpose of iron, is established waters of the Jordan, from before the children of Israel, until ^vthey had passed over; their hearts melted, and there was no more courage in them, because of the children of Israel.

- 2 At that time Jehovah said to Joshua, 'Make sharp knives, and circumcise the children of 3 Israel a second time.' And Joshua made sharp knives, and circumcised the children of Israel at Gibeah-aaraloth [THE HILL OF FORESKINS.]
4 And this is the cause why Joshua circumcised them: "All the males of the people who had come up out of Egypt, even all the men of war, had died by the way in the wilderness, after they had come out of Egypt. Now
5 all the people who came out of Egypt were circumcised; but all the people who were born in the wilderness, on the way out of Egypt,
6 they had not circumcised. For the children of Israel had walked forty years in the wilderness, till all the people who were men of war, who had come out of Egypt, were consumed, because they had not obeyed the voice of Jehovah: to whom Jehovah swore, that they should not see the land, which Jehovah had sworn that he would give ^vto them", a 7 land that floweth with milk and honey. And their children whom he had raised up in their stead, were those whom Joshua circumcised: because till now they had not circumcised them
8 by the way. And when the circumcision of all the people was completed, they abode in their place in the camp, until they were healed. Then Jehovah said to Joshua, "This day ⁹ have I removed from you the reproach of Egypt." Therefore the name of this place is called Gilgal [REMOVAL] unto this day.

And the children of Israel encamped in 10 Gilgal, and kept the passover on the fourteenth day of the month, in the Evening, in the plains of Jericho. And they ate of the old corn of 11 the land on the morrow after the passover, unleavened cakes, and (on that same day) parched ears of the new. Now the manna 12 ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land; nor had the children of Israel any more manna; but they ate that year of the fruit of the land of Canaan,

And it happened, while Joshua was by Je- 13 richo, that he raised his eyes and looked, and behold, there stood a man over against him with his sword drawn in his hand; and Joshua went to him, and said unto him, "Art thou for us, or for our adversaries? And 14 he said to him, "Nay; but as captain of Jehovah's host am I now come." Joshua then fell on his face to the earth, and worshipped; and said to him, "What saith my lord unto his servant?" And the captain of Jehovah's 15 host said to Joshua, "Loose thy shoe from off thy foot; for the place whereon thou standest is holy." And Joshua did so.

CHAP. V. 1. ^vm mss.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. How kind and merciful are God's dealings with Israel, notwithstanding their many provocations! He put fear into their enemies to make the conquest easy, and the success sure. He renewed a rite that would be a seal of the pro-

by facts which cannot be controverted. Circumcise—the second time. To what this refers, it is impossible to determine. Some think all the male children had been circumcised at Mount Sinai; and in reference to that, this is called the second time. This is only conjecture. Others understand it to mean, 'a renewed observance of the rite, which had been for so long a time neglected.' Abraham was ordered to be circumcised as a token of the covenant God had made with him; and the promise of this covenant was, that he would give to him and his seed the land of Canaan. Whatever might be the reasons of neglecting this rite, it was proper that it should now be observed, when they, as the seed of Abraham, were about to inherit the land promised.

9. This day have I removed, &c. Some think the reproach of Egypt, denotes the reproach the Israelites justly deserved, for longing to go

6. ^vSyr. Arab. 11 mss.

mise of Canaan, and a pledge of its possession; a seal of the righteousness of faith, and those spiritual blessings which were promised to the pious descendants of Abraham. He renewed the passover, which called to remembrance their deliverance from Egypt; and both these back into that country, and despairing of ever reaching the promised land, now they had entered into it, and begun to eat of its fruits. Others apply it to circumcision: 'You reproach the Egyptians as uncircumcised, and they might justly reproach you for having so long neglected it; now I have removed this cause of reproach.' Others contend that it refers to their state of degradation in Egypt, where they were slaves; but now they were free. There they had no country, but now they had a country flowing with milk and honey.

11. Unleavened cakes. They kept the feast of unleavened bread after the passover, according to divine appointment, and eat old corn, which the inhabitants had left in their barns, when they fled to the cities, and probably also ripe standing corn, both on the same day; thus coming in harvest time they had plenty.

CHAPTER VI.

B. C. 1451. Jericho is besieged; it is encompassed; and must be devoted; the walls fall down, but Rahab is saved.

- 1 Now Jericho was so closely shut up on account of the children of Israel, that none went
- 2 out, or came in. And Jehovah said to Joshua, "See, I give up to thee Jericho, and its king,
- 3 and all its men of valour. And all ye men of war shall compass the city, going once around it, daily. Thus shall ye do" six days.
- 4 And seven priests shall bear seven jubilee-trumpets, and shall blow them, before the ark; and the seventh day ye shall compass the city seven times, and the priests shall blow the
- 5 trumpets. And when they make a long blast with the Jubilee-horns; and when ye hear the sound of the trumpets, all the people shall shout with a great shout; and the wall of the city shall fall down, that the people may ascend up, every one straight before him."
- 6 And Joshua the son of Nun, called the priests, and said to them, "Take up the ark of the covenant, and let seven priests bear seven jubilee-trumpets before the ark of Jehovah."
- 7 And he said unto the people, "Pass on, and compass the city, and let him that is armed pass on before the ark of Jehovah." And 8 when Joshua had spoken to the people, the seven priests, bearing the seven jubilee-trumpets, passed on before Jehovah, and blew the trumpets: and the ark of the covenant of Jehovah followed them. And a party of armed men 9 marched before the priests who blew the trumpets, and the rest marched after the ark, they still going on, and blowing the trumpets. And 10 Joshua had commanded the people, saying, "Ye shall not shout, nor cause your voice to be heard, nor shall a word pass out of your mouth, until the day I bid you shout; then shall ye shout."

When the ark of Jehovah had compassed 11 the city, going once about it, then they came to the camp, and lodged in the camp. And 12 Joshua rose early in the morning, and the priests took up the ark of Jehovah. And se- 13 ven priests, bearing seven jubilee-trumpets, went constantly before the ark of Jehovah, and blew the trumpets; and the party of armed men marched before them; but the rest followed the ark of Jehovah, they still going on, and blowing the trumpets. And the 14 second day they compassed the city once, and returned into the camp: so they did, six days.

were tokens of his continued favour. The circumcision of the men of war might have afforded the enemies of Israel an opportunity to make a successful attack; but their hearts being melted with fear, their hands were tied. Joshua could not be sure of this; and had he not acted by a divine warrant, he would have acted without policy, and risked the safety of the people.

2. Let us rejoice in the character of the Lord Jesus Christ, as captain of the Lord's host. 'He is the captain of our salvation.' All his faithful followers are the true Israel of God; he is engaged on their side; and though a host should be encamped against them, they have no reason to fear, for he is the commander and leader of his people. He leads on his charge against his enemies; and, through his gracious assistance 'we shall be more than conquerors.' To Abraham he appeared as a traveller; to Joshua as a man of war, to animate him, in the conquest of Canaan, and to assure him of his own presence and blessing.

3. ^vSyr, Vulg. others, thou shalt do.

3. The courage, the humility, and reverence of Joshua, teach us in what manner we should draw near to God. We are not favoured with such appearances as those under the old Testament; but still let us remember, when we come to God's house, and engage in his service, that outward expressions of reverence are becoming and suitable. Lifting the hands, raising the eyes, and kneeling in prayer, are recommended to us, by the example of Christ and his apostles. And every humble worshipper will not only engage his heart to approach God, but will show all the external marks of reverence in his worship, for he has expressly required that we "glorify him with body and spirit, which are his." Bowing the knee, and on some occasions, prostration may be used.

13-15. This divine manifestation was designed to encourage Joshua; and some Jews have interpreted it as being the Angel of the covenant, the future redeemer. Compare Exod. xxxiii. 14, 17, and 1 Cor. x. 4.

CHAP. VI. 2. See, I give it up to thee. Literally, 'I give it into thine hand.' Purver renders, 'I have delivered into thy power.' This is the sense, but the present tense seems necessary.

4. Jubilee-trumpets. So Coverdale; and Parkhurst observes, "I cannot find that the word ^{וְהָאֵל} ever signifies a ram; nor have the Sept. Vulg. or other ancient versions ever so rendered it; Exod. xix. 13, is plain against this rabbinical sense of the word." In the next verse they are called horns, but this might be from their form. Of whatever materials they might be, they were such, as were to be used at the Jubilee, according to the Vulgate.

10. Ye shall not shout, &c. The conduct of the Israelites must have 15 But on the seventh day, they rose early, about the dawn of the day, and compassed the city after the same manner, seven times; on that day only they compassed the city seven times.

16 And at the seventh time, when the priests blew the trumpets, Joshua said to the people, "Shout; for Jehovah hath given to you the 17 city: But the city, and all that are in it, shall be devoted to Jehovah: only Rahab the harlot shall live, she and all that are with her in the house, because she hid the mes-
18 sengers, whom we sent. And abstain ye from what is devoted, lest, by taking of what is devoted, ye render yourselves devoted also; and thus make the camp of Israel a curse, and 19 trouble it. But all the silver, and gold, and utensils of brass and iron, are to be hallowed to Jehovah; into Jehovah's treasury shall 20 they be brought." So the priests blew the trumpets; and when the people heard the sound of the trumpets, then "all" the people shouted with a great shout, and the wall fell down, so that the people went into the city, every one straight before him, and they took 21 the city. And they utterly destroyed all that was in the city, both man and woman, young and old, and ox, and sheep, and ass, with the 22 edge of the sword. But Joshua had said to the two men who had spied out the country, "Go into the harlot's house, and bring out thence the woman, and all that she hath, as ye swore to her." And the young men, the 23 spies, had gone in, and brought out Rahab, and her father, and her mother, and her brethren, and all that she had; and they had brought out all her kindred, and placed them without the camp of Israel. And Joshua saved Ra- 24 hab the harlot alive, and her father's household, and all that she had; and she dwelleth in Israel unto this day, because she hid the messengers whom Joshua sent to spy out Jericho. And they burnt the city with fire, and 25 all that was therein: only the silver, and the gold, and the utensils of brass and iron, they put into 'Jehovah's treasury.

And at that time Joshua adjured them say- 26 ing, "Accursed be the man before Jehovah, who attempteth to rebuild this city Jericho: with the loss of his first-born son shall he lay its foundation, and with the loss of his youngest son shall he set up its gates." Thus Je- 27 hovah was with Joshua; and his fame was spread throughout all the country.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. Let us learn to exercise faith in God's promise; "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down." The people believed that God would work this miracle, therefore they compassed it about, and waited patiently seven days, and thus their faith was exercised and improved. This was perfectly rational, because the promise was made by that Being, whose infinite power appeared singular to their enemies. Their profound silence might be designed to lead them to examine the height and strength of the walls, and to recall to their minds God's former wonders.

17. Devoted to Jehovah; that is, devoted to complete destruction. See Levit. xxvii. 28.

20. The common text is irreconcilable with itself, and the omission of the words in the Sept. is warranted by the connexion, and the command verse 5th.

23. Without the camp of Israel. Some refer without to the city, and render, 'without, in the camp of Israel.' The other version, which im-

24. °house of, Sept. Syr. Vulg. Ar. 1 ms. CHAP. VII. 1. °Sept. Syr.

was able to effect it. We may, and ought to trust God to fulfil his word, though things should seem improbable; for nothing is too hard for him. How proper then the exhortation, 'be strong in faith.'

2. How just the reflection of the Psalmist, "they got not the land by their bow, nor did their sword save them." They took not the cities of Canaan in the usual way. This was a strange siege! No

plies, that they were placed on the outside of the camp, appears to me preferable.

26. Who attempteth to rebuild. I have followed Vatable, in this version; for rising up refers to the action of building. This idiom is frequent in Hebrew. The adjuration of Joshua does not interdict the rebuilding of Jericho, but foretels in what manner it should be done. For the fulfilment, see 1 Kings xiii. 34.

CHAP. VII. 1. For Achar. That the j final has been writ instead of the 7 through the mistake of a transcriber is admitted by the best critics. That his name was 737 appears clear from the 25 verse where there is an taken some of the devoted things: and the anger of Jehovah was kindled against the children of Israel.

2 Now Joshua had sent men from Jericho to Ai, (which was by Beth-aven, on the east side of Bethel,) and had spoken to them, saying, "Go up and view the country." And the men

3 had gone up and viewed Ai; And they had returned to Joshua, and said to him, "Let not all the people go up; but let about two or three thousand men go up and smite Ai; fatigue not all the people by sending them

4 thither; for they are but few." So there went up thither of the people about three thousand men but they fled before the men of Ai.

5 And the men of Ai smote of them six and thirty men: for they chased them from the city-gate to Shebarim, and smote them in the descent: therefore the hearts of the people melted, and became as water.

6 And Joshua rent his clothes, and fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of Jehovah, until the evening; he and the elders of Israel, and put dust upon their heads.

7 And Joshua said, "Alas, O Lord Jehovah, why hast thou at all, brought this people over the Jordan, to deliver us into the hands of the Amorites, to destroy us? O that we had been content, and dwelt on the other side the

9 turneth their backs before their enemies! For the Canaanites and all the inhabitants of the land will hear of it, and environ us, and cut off our name from the earth: and what wilt thou do for thine own great name?"

And Jehovah said to Joshua, "Arise; why liest thou thus upon thy face? The people of Israel have sinned, and have also transgressed my covenant which I commanded them; for they have even taken of what was devoted; yea they have also stolen it, ° and put it among their own stuff. Therefore the children of Israel cannot stand before their enemies; before their enemies they will turn their backs because they have incurred the curse: nor will I be with you any more, except ye destroy him who hath incurred the curse from among you. Arise, sanctify the people, and say, "Sanctify yourselves against to morrow: for thus saith Jehovah the God of Israel, 'There is a devoted thing, O Israel: ye cannot stand before your enemies, until ye take away the devoted thing from among you: In the morning, therefore, ye shall be brought out according to your tribes: and it shall be, that the tribe which Jehovah taketh shall come by families; and the family which Jehovah shall take, shall come by households; and the household which Jehovah shall take shall come man by man. And it shall be, that he that is taken with the devoted thing shall be burnt with fire, he and all that he hath: because he hath transgressed the covenant of Jehovah, and because he hath done a wicked deed in Israel.

trenches or batteries; and even the armed men were not allowed to use their arms. Doubtless the inhabitants of Jericho despised and laughed at them, and thought themselves secure. But God intended to try the faith and obedience of his people; to teach them to expect victory not from their sword or valour, but from his assistance and all-sufficiency. As Christians let us remember, that our warfare is not carnal but spiritual;—that the engagement we have to fight, is that of faith; and to gain the victory we must rest on the God of salvation.

3. We see that those who honour God, he will honour. Joshua did so, by exact obedience to his commands; and God appeared to be with him, gave him favour in the eyes of the Israelites, and spread his fame through all the country. If it be our care to follow God's directions, and observe his law, we shall find favour and good understanding in the sight of men.

evident reference to the import of the word. Of this opinion was Houbigant. The text itself, 1 Chron. ii. 7, justifies this correction.

5. To Shebarim. So the Vulg. the other versions, until they had routed them. Geddes, to the barriers, and supposes the rivulet or ravine, at the bottom of the hill, on which Ai stood, to be meant. The meaning of the word in Arabic supports this version. As the sense is uncertain, I have adhered to the common version.

11. This clause, and have dissembled also, though in all the versions except the Sept. I suspect to be an interpolation. We do not read that any inquisition had been made, and of course no occasion had been given to lie concerning it. The deed had been done in secret; and no suspicion even attached to the person who had done it.

12. A devoted thing. Geddes renders, sacrilege, taking what was by the law devoted to God.

17. Families. It is allowed that we ought to read here משפחות. For Joshua brought all the families of Judah before the Lord, that it might be

16 So Joshua rose up early in the morning, and brought Israel by their tribes; and the tribe
 17 of Judah was taken: And he brought forth the families of Judah; and the family of the Zerahites was taken: and he brought forth the family of the Zerahites house by house;
 18 and the house of Zabdi was taken: And he brought his household man by man; and Achar the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, was taken. And Joshua said to Achar, "My son, give, I pray thee, glory to Jehovah the God of Israel, and to him make confession; and tell me now what 20 thou hast done; hide it not from me." And Achar answered Joshua, and said "Indeed I have sinned against Jehovah the God of Israel, and so and so have I done. I saw among the spoils a good Babylonish mantle, and two hundred shekels of silver, and an ingot of gold of the weight of fifty shekels, and I coveted them and I took them away: and, behold, they are hidden in the earth in the midst of my tent, and the silver undermost."
 22 So Joshua sent messengers, and they ran to the tent; and, behold, the things were found hidden in his tent, and the silver undermost.
 23 And they took them out of the tent, and brought them to Joshua, and to all the children of Israel and spread them before Jehovah. And Joshua, 24 and all Israel with him, took Achar the son of Zerah, and the silver, and the mantle, and the ingot of gold, and his sons, and his daughters, and his oxen, and his asses, and his sheep, and his tent, and all that belonged to him: and they brought them unto the valley of Achar. And Joshua said, "Why hast thou distressed 25 us? Jehovah shall this day distress thee." And all Israel stoned him with stones, and, after they had stoned them with stones, they burned himself, and all that belonged to him, with fire. And they raised over them a great heap 26 of stones: and Jehovah turned from the fierceness of his anger. Therefore the name of the place is called, 'The valley of Achar,' unto this day.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. We may here learn the evil tendency of sin! It brings on individuals and nations many calamities; and societies often suffer for the sins of individuals. Let us guard against it in ourselves, and as much as possible, prevent it in others. Sinners are the troublers of the church and the nation; but the righteous are the pillars of both. By their wisdom and piety, they are the salt of the earth.

2. What a blessing to a nation are such Governors as Joshua! He was afflicted with the slightest disaster which happened to Israel; and with a truly patriotic spirit sought their welfare. He humbled himself and sought from God direction and aid; and his acceptance and success should teach us to go and do likewise. He aims at the glory of God. 'What wilt thou do for thine own great name?' All ascertained to what family he belonged, who had stolen the devoted thing. The 14 verse supports the reading of the Syr. in this. All Israel came near by Tribes, and one tribe was fixed on: then, that tribe came by its families, and one family was fixed on: then came that family by its household, and one household was fixed on: and then that household coming man by man, one man was fixed on.

good men are grieved, when God's name is dishonoured, and their desire is, that God, in all things, may be glorified.

3. We are here taught that our sin, however secret, is known to God, and will be exposed. The lot found out Achar. No clouds, no darkness can hide us from the eye of omniscience; yet sinners flatter themselves in their own eyes, that God will not know; that their sin will not be discovered; and promise themselves security. They may be sure their sin will find them out. Among the many thousands of Israelites, God sees the offender, though hid in the tent. He distinguishes between the precious and the vile.

4. In the confession of Achar, we see the progress of sin. He saw a fine Babylonish mantle. How often is the eye the inlet of vice! And how necessary is it to make a covenant with our eyes and turn famous in antiquity: they were considered as marks of dignity, and worn by kings.

25. Distressed us. In this there is an allusion to the name of the offender: for Achar signifies distress: a proof that this, and not Achan, was his real name.

CHAP. VIII. 1. See, I give up to thee. Literally, 'I give into thine hand. I prefer the sense to the idiom.'

2 ple, and his city, and his land; And thou shalt do to Ai and its king, as thou didst to Jericho and its king: save that its spoil, and its cattle, ye shall take for a prey to yourselves: place an ambush behind the city."

3 So Joshua arose, and all the people of war to go up against Ai; and Joshua chose "three" thousand men of valour, and sent them away 4 by night. And he commanded them, saying, "Behold, ye shall lie in wait against the city, behind the city: go not far from the city, but 5 be ye all ready. For I, and all the people that are with me, will approach the city, and when they come against us, as at first, we will 6 flee before them, While they pursue us till we have drawn them from the city; for they will say, "They flee before us, as at first." 7 And when we flee before them, Then ye shall rise up from the ambush, and seize on the city; for Jehovah your God, will deliver it 8 up to you. And it shall be, when ye have taken the city, that ye shall set the city on fire: according to the command of Jehovah shall 9 ye do. See I have commanded you." Joshua therefore sent them forth, and they went to lie in ambush, and abode between Beth-el and Ai; but Joshua lodged that night among the 10 people. Now Joshua arose early on the next morning, and numbered the people, and went up, he and the elders of Israel, before the 11 people, towards Ai. And all the people of war that were with him, went up, and drew nigh, and came in sight of the city, and encamped on the north side of Ai, and there was a valley between them and Ai. Thus an 12 ambush having been placed between Beth-el and Ai, on the west side of the city, And the 13 people, the whole host, they placed on the north of the city, so that its extremity reached to the west of the city; Joshua then "took about five thousand men," and went that night into the midst of the valley.

And when the king of Ai, "and his people" 14 saw this, they hasted and arose early in the morning; and they went out, he and all his people, the men of the city, at an appointed time, to fight with Israel, on the open plain; but he knew not that there was an ambush laid against him, behind the city. And Joshua 15 and all Israel made as if they were beaten before them, and fled by the way to the wilderness. And all the people that were in Ai 16 were called together to pursue them; and they pursued Joshua, and were drawn away from the city. And there was not a man left in Ai, 17 that went not out after Israel: and they left the city open, and pursued Israel. And Jeho- 18 vah said to Joshua, "Stretch out the spear which is in thine hand towards Ai; for I will give it up to thee." And Joshua stretched out the spear which was in his hand towards the city. And, as soon as he had stretched out his hand, 19 the ambush arose quickly from their place, and they ran and entered the city, and took it;

3. Three thousand. The text and all the versions have thirty thousand, which cannot be right. For how an army could lie in ambush a whole day, between Bethel and Ai, without being perceived, it is impossible to conjecture. And as the whole inhabitants of Ai, are said to have been only twelve thousand, three thousand must have been sufficient to take it, as the chief part of its defenders, had been induced to pursue Joshua. Errors in numbers have frequently occurred.

12. This verse, as it now lies in the text, is totally unintelligible. It runs thus—'And Joshua took about 5000 men, and placed them in ambush between Bethel and Ai, on the north west side of Ai.' But we learn from v. 3, that the ambush consisted of 30,000 (read 3000) men, who had been sent thither the preceding night. By transposing some words with Houbigant, the difficulties, which, in the common order, are insuperable, are all removed.

13. Its extremity reached to the west. Joshua's main army was so posted, that the most northern part of it was within sight of the ambuscade. Compare verse 19.

17. The words omitted, on the authority of the Sept. are an evident interpolation. The whole chapter contains no reference to Bethel, nor to its inhabitants. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

30—35. Geddes transposes these verses after the 1st verse of chapter 18th. This account of building an Altar, and inscribing the law on stones, and immediately they set the city on fire. And when the men of Ai looked behind them, they saw, and, behold, the smoke of the city ascended up to the heavens, and they had no power to flee either this way, or that way: and the people of Israel who had fled to the wilderness turned back upon their pursuers. For when Joshua and all Israel saw that the ambush had taken the city, and that the smoke of the city ascended, they then turned about, and slew the men of Ai. And the other party issued out of the city against them; so they were in the midst of Israel, some being on this side, and some on that side: and they smote them, so that none of them was left to escape. And the king of Ai they took alive, and brought him to Joshua. And when Israel had made an end of slaying all the inhabitants of Ai, who had pursued them into the fields, in the wilderness, and when they had all fallen by the edge of the sword, until they were all consumed; all Israel returned unto Ai, and smote it with the edge of the sword. And all that fell that day, both of men and women, were twelve thousand, the whole people of Ai. For Joshua drew not back his hand with which he stretched out the spear, until he had utterly destroyed all the inhabitants of Ai. Only the cattle and the spoil of that city, Israel took for a prey to themselves, according to the word of Jehovah which he commanded Joshua. And Joshua burnt Ai, and made it a perpetual heap, a desolation unto this day. And the king of Ai he hanged on a tree until evening; but as soon as the sun was set, Joshua commanded that they should take down his body from the tree, and cast it at the entrance of the city-gate, and raise upon it a great heap of stones, which remaineth unto this day.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. We here learn that as the race is not won by the swift, so the victory is not to the strong, but to whom Jehovah pleaseth. When Israel obeyed him he prospered them; and when they offended, he inspired their enemies with courage, and they were put to flight. In our contests and conflicts, with the enemies of our peace and happiness, let us always take hold of his strength by faith and prayer, and he will make us conquerors. To secure his aid, and obtain the shield of his favour, we must put away the devoted thing, the evil of our doings.

2. Let us reflect with sorrow on the cause and the desolations of war. "Whence come wars and fightings, but from your own lusts?" They are occasioned by human depravity, and permitted as the punish-and reading the blessings and the curses, has no relation to the narrative. The Israelites had not yet made a conquest of the people, or cities, north of Ai; and it is by no means probable, that they should leave their enemies unsubdued in the rear, and advance a distance of 60 miles into the midst of them; after having performed what is here related, that they should again retrace their steps, and go and besiege Bethel. The order of the conquest of Canaan, as related in this Book shows, that these events

ment of mens' sins. The Israelites were only executioners of God's vengeance on the nations of Canaan. "The iniquity of the Amorites was now full; and the time of the divine forbearance had expired. As these nations had corrupted themselves, they were now to be cut off. While righteousness exalts and secures a nation, sin is the disgrace and ruin of a people.

3. We are reminded, that the worship of God must not be neglected, neither in the din of war, nor in the enjoyments of peace. Joshua and the people must take time to observe God's laws; pay their thanks to him for what is past, and seek further success. Amidst all the joy of peace, God must be revered, and his blessings and curses pronounced, read, and regarded.

here recorded, could not occur sooner than where Geddes has placed them. Compare Deut. xxvii. 1, &c.

CHAP. IX. 1. Now when this was reported. Some think what is here said, refers not to the destruction of Ai, but to the approach of the Israelites to the Jordan; which induced the kings on the west of Jordan to make a league for their defence. Compare Deut. i. 7, 19, 20.

4. They acted with subtlety, also. As there is mention made of Ai, their asses worn sacks and wine bottles, worn and rent, but bound up; And worn and clouted shoes on their feet, and worn garments upon them; and all their provision-bread was dry and mouldy. And they went to Joshua, unto the camp at Gilgal, and said to him, and to the men of Israel, "We are come from a far country; now therefore make you a league with us." And the men of Israel said to these Hivites, "Perhaps ye dwell among us; and how can we make a league with you?" And they said to Joshua, "We are thy servants." And Joshua said to them, "Who are ye, and whence come ye?" And they said to him, "From a very far country thy servants are come, because of the name of Jehovah thy God: for we have heard his fame, and all that he did in Egypt, And all that he did to the two kings of the Amorites, who were beyond the Jordan, to Sihon king of Heshbon, and to Og king of Bashan, who dwelt at Ashtaroth. Wherefore our elders and all the inhabitants of our country spoke to us saying, "Take provisions with you for the journey, and go to meet them, and say to them, 'We are your servants: therefore make ye a league with us.' This our provision-bread we took hot from our houses on the day we set out, to come to you; but now, behold, it is dry, and mouldy! And these wine bottles we filled, were new: and, behold, they are rent! and these, our garments and our shoes, are worn out, from the great length of the journey." And the chiefs of Israel took of their provisions, and consulted not the will of Jehovah. And Joshua treated them kindly, and made a league with them, that they should be preserved; and the chiefs of the congregation swore to them.

But at the end of three days, after they had made a league with them, they heard that they were their neighbours, and dwelt among them. And the children of Israel journeyed, and came to their cities on the third day. Now their cities were Gibeon, and Chephirah, and Beeroth, and Kirjath-jearim. And the children of Israel smote them not, because the chiefs of the congregation had sworn to them by Jehovah the God of Israel. And the whole congregation murmured against the chiefs. But all the chiefs said to the whole congregation, "We have sworn to them by Jehovah the God of Israel: we may not therefore, now touch them. This we may do to them; we will even let them live, lest wrath be upon us, because of the oath which we swore to them. And the chiefs said to them, "Let them live as the chiefs have promised them; but let them be hewers of wood and drawers of water to the whole congregation."

And Joshua called for them, and he spoke to them, saying, "Why have ye beguiled us saying, 'We dwell far from you;' when ye dwell among us? Now therefore ye are cursed, and there shall none of you be freed from being bondmen, and hewers of wood and drawers of water, for the house of my God." And they answered Joshua, and said, "Because it was certainly told thy servants, how that Jehovah thy God commanded his servant Moses to give you all the land, and to destroy all the inhabitants of the land, from before you; we therefore were greatly afraid of our

7. Those Hivites; that is, the Gibeonites, who were a part of the Hivites.—Perhaps ye dwell, &c. that is, in the country which we are to inhabit; in a part of the promised land.

9—13. In the reply of the Gibeonites, they avoid coming to particulars, and answer only in general terms. At length they pretend that religion was their motive, and a regard to the God of Israel; they thought his the best way to secure Joshua's favourable opinion. Puffendorf justifies this artifice of the Gibeonites, as agreeable to the law of nature; but Livines, in general, considers no circumstance can justify deliberate falsehood.

as a certain pledge of peace and friendship.—Consulted not, &c. This is noticed as their sin. They had the Urim and Thummim among them, and ought to have consulted God by them.

15. Treated them kindly. I suppose he made a feast for them, and treated them as persons of consequence.

19. From this whole history, we learn, that promises, though got by deceit, yet when confirmed by oath, are to be kept, when they do not oblige us to any thing that is sinful. So great a regard ought believers to have for the name of God!

CHAPTER X.

B. C. 1451. Five kings fight against Gibeon; Joshua rescueth it; and obtaineth a complete victory; twelve kings conquered.

1 Now when Adonizedek, king of Jerusalem had heard how Joshua had taken Ai, and had utterly destroyed it; and as he had done to Jericho and its king, so had he done to Ai and its king; and how the inhabitants of Gi-beon had made peace with Israel, and were Gibeon was a great city, as one of the royal cities, and because it was greater than Ai, and 3 its men were all valiant. Wherefore Adoni-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. From hence we learn, that religion is often made use of as a pretence where secular interest is the only thing intended. The Gibeonites pretended great regard for God, and desired to join his people, to become servants of him who had such power and wrought such miracles;
 but they only wanted to save their lives, and secure their possessions. This is too common a case. Men talk much of God and religion, to answer their temporal ends: but God cannot be deceived, though men may. 'He desireth truth in the inward parts;' and the hypocrisy of the heart is an abomination unto the Lord.

2. We are admonished to avoid hasty decisions and judgments. The Israelites hastily made a league, without consulting Jehovah, which might easily have been done! Let us guard against too hasty a temper, especially in such solemn affairs as vows and engagements. Remembering Solomon's advice, "Be not rash with thy mouth, or hasty to utter any thing before God," in the ways of vows or promises. For direction let us consult his word, by diligent search; his providence by earnest prayer.

3. Let us learn to reverence an oath, and to keep close to our solemn engagements. We ought to stand by our word, and be when it is taken adjectively, and signifies stout, valiant.

3. Adoni-zedek. Many suppose that he was the successor of Mel-zedek, the king of Jerusalem, sent unto Ho-ham the king of Hebron, and unto Piram the king of Jarmuth, and unto Japhia the king of Lachish, and unto Debir the king of Eglon, saying, "Come up to me, and help me, that 4

 we may smite Gibeon; for it hath made peace with Joshua and with the children of Israel." So the five kings of the Amorites, 5 the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, the king of Eglon, assembled, and went up, they and all their hosts, and encamped before Gi-beon, and made war against it.

And the men of Gibeon sent to Joshua, un- 6
 to the camp to Gilgal, saying, "Withhold not thine assistance from thy servants; come up to us quickly, and help and save us: for all the kings of the Amorites who dwell in the mountains are assembled against us." Then 7 Joshua went up from Gilgal, he, and all the people of war with him, and all the tried men of valour.

And Jehovah said to Joshua, "Fear them 8 not; for into thine hand I deliver them; not a man of them shall stand before thee. So 9 punctual to our bargain, though it should be to our loss or detriment. The Israelites did so, though their oath was fraudulently obtained. It is an undoubted maxim, that men lose more by making God their enemy, than they can possibly gain by any fraudulent or indirect methods. Therefore, let integrity and uprightness guide and preserve us; remembering it is the character of one that shall inhabit God's holy hill, that "he walketh upright-ly, speaketh the truth in his heart; and though he swears to his own hurt, yet he changes not."

4. Let us in another and a better sense imitate the Gibeonites—They sought to preserve their lives; and adopted what they thought the best means to obtain success. Let us seek the salvation of our souls, with as great ardour and diligence; coming with every expression of humiliation, to him whom Joshua typified, and who is indeed the Saviour. For our sins we deserve to die; but assuredly when we cast ourselves at the feet of the Redeemer, he will say, Live. He will make with us a covenant of peace and friendship, and will not forsake us. He will pardon us, receive us to his favour, and exalt us to honour and glory;
 he will not make us 'hewers of wood and drawers of water,' but pillars in the temple of God.

chizedek, and that Salem, and Jerusalem denote the same city. This is probable. Compare Judg. i. 21, and xix. 10.

Joshua, going from Gilgal all that night, came 10 suddenly upon them; And Jehovah discomfited
them before Israel, who slew them with a great slaughter at Gibeon, and chased them along the way that goeth up to Beth-horon, and 11 smote them to Azekah and Makkedah. And as they fled from before Israel, and were on the descent to Beth-horon, Jehovah cast down, from the heavens, great hail-stones upon them,
unto Azekah, so that they died: more were they who died by the hail-stones than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword.

12 Then spoke Joshua to Jehovah on the day when he delivered the Amorites before the children of Israel; and he said in the sight of Israel,

“Sun, stand thou still, over Gibeon;

And thou, Moon, over the valley of Ajalon.”

13 And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves of their enemies. Is not this written in the book of Jasher? Thus the sun stood still in the midst of the heavens, and hasted not to go down 14 when the day was complete. And there was no day like that, before or after it, when Jehovah hearkened to the voice of man! For Jehovah fought for Israel.

16 Now those five kings had fled, and hidden 17 themselves in a cave at Makkedah. And it was told Joshua, saying, “The five kings are found hidden in a cave at Makkedah.” And 18 Joshua said, “Roll great stones upon the mouth of the cave, and set men by it, to watch them; But stay ye not, but pursue your ene- 19

mies, and smite their rear; suffer them not to enter into their cities; for Jehovah your God hath delivered them into your hand. And when 20
the children of Israel had made an end of slaying them with a very great slaughter, until they were consumed, or that they who remained of them had entered into fenced cities; Then 21
all the people returned to the camp to Joshua at Makkedah in peace, none moving his tongue against any of the children of Israel. And 22 Joshua said “Open the mouth of the cave, and bring out those five kings to me from the cave.”
And they did so, for they brought forth those 23 five kings to him from the cave; the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, and the king of Eglon. And when they had brought out 24 those kings to Joshua, Joshua called for all the men of Israel, and said to the captains of the men of war who went with him, “Come near,
put your feet upon the necks of these kings.”
And they drew near, and put their feet upon their necks. And Joshua said to them, “Fear not, 25 nor be dismayed; be strong and of good cou-

15. * And Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.

This verse is wanting in both copies of the Sept.

10. To Beth-horon. That is, by the way of the mountain on which Beth-horon was afterwards built. Compare 1 Chron. vii. 24.

11. Hail-stones. It is indubitable that hail-stones of great magnitude often fall in Judea and the mountainous parts of Arabia; and if this hail-storm happened by night, all the effects ascribed to it are natural. See Harmer, vol. iii. p. 484. Such hail-storms have occurred in our own country, and spread desolation around. In the present case, the miracle consisted in sending this storm, at this particular time, and giving it such a direction, that it should fall on Israel's enemies.

12—14. Sun stand thou still. It is said by a writer, posterior in point of time to this transaction, “that no prophet was like to Moses, with respect to the signs and wonders which he wrought.” (Deut. xxxiv. 11.) But if the common interpretation of what is here said, be just, this miracle far exceeds them all. In the Psalms, almost every other miracle, recorded in the historical books, is either expressly mentioned, or alluded to; and it is singular, that even the Apostle, when describing the fruits of faith, notices the destruction of Jericho, and the conduct of Rahab; but is silent respecting this transaction. The prophet Habakkuk is thought to allude to this, Chap. iii. 11; see Note there. The whole narrative, nevertheless, proves that there was something miraculous in this transaction; and the nature of the miracle depends on the words הָיָה כִּי הָיָה, which are rendered in the common version, about a whole day. If this version be admitted, the earth must have ceased to revolve on its axis for a whole day, which would have produced the effect noticed, so that the sun and moon would have appeared stationary. That Omnipotence could accomplish this, would be preposterous to deny; but if the words will bear another sense, a sense by which a miracle is maintained, and yet the great law of motion preserved, the justest rules of interpretation demand, that we should admit it. That they will admit the version I have given is not denied. I consider then the miracle to be, that when the day was complete, Jehovah at the request of Joshua, sent the hail-storm, and by the unusual density of the atmosphere produced such a refraction of the light, that the sun and moon appeared above the horizon, “until the people had avenged themselves of their enemies.” Nor is it an objection to this opinion, that the sun and moon are said to stand still, in the midst of the heavens. Some understand this to mean the mid-day; but when was the moon seen at mid-day? The midst of the heavens, only signifies, the place or station they occupied.—The author of this book confirms his account by a reference to the book of Jasher; but does not quote from it. The learned reader may consult Notes, Hebrew Bible.

15. This verse is a manifest interpolation, and inconsistent with the narrative. For as Dr Wall observes, the Greek agrees with the He-rage; for thus shall Jehovah do to all your 26 enemies against whom ye fight." And afterwards Joshua smote them, and slew them, and hanged them up on five trees; and on the trees 27 they hung until the evening. But at the time of the sun-setting, Joshua commanded, and they took them down from the trees, and cast them into the cave in which they had hidden themselves, and laid great stones at the cave's mouth, which remain unto this day.

28 And that day Joshua took Makkedah, and smote it with the edge of the sword; and its king he utterly destroyed, and all the persons that were therein; he let none remain: he did to the king of Makkedah as he did to the king of Jeri-29 cho. Then Joshua passed from Makkedah, and all Israel with him, unto Libnah, and fought 30 against Libnah: And Jehovah delivered it also,
 and its king, into the hand of Israel; and all the persons who were therein; he let none remain in it, but did to its king as he did to the king of Jericho.

31 And Joshua passed from Libnah, and all Israel with him, unto Lachish, and encamped 32 against it, and fought against it; And Jehovah delivered Lachish into the hand of Israel, who took it, on the second day, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the persons who were therein, according to all that 33 he had done to Libnah. And Horem, king of Gezer, had come to help Lachish, and Joshua smote him and his people, until he left him none remaining.

34 And from Lachish Joshua passed unto Eg-

lon, and all Israel with him; and they encamped against it, and fought against it; And they 35 took it on that day, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the persons who were therein he utterly destroyed that day, according to all that he had done to Lachish. And Jos- 36 hua went up from Eglon, and all Israel with him, unto Hebron; and they fought against it,
 And they took it, and smote it with the edge 37
 of the sword, and its king, and all its towns and all the persons who were therein; he left none remaining, according to all that he had done to Eglon, but destroyed it utterly, and all the persons who were therein.

Then Joshua, and all Israel with him, turn- 38
 ed to Debir; and fought against it, And took it, 39
 and its king, and all its towns; and they smote them with the edge of the sword, and utterly destroyed all the persons who were therein;
 he left none remaining: as he had done to Hebron, so he did to Debir and to its king;
 and as he had done also to Libnah and its king.

Thus Joshua smote all the people of the moun- 40
tainous country of the south, and of the valleys
 and of the rising grounds, and all their kings:
 he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed
 all that breathed, as Jehovah the God of Israel, had commanded. And Joshua smote them 41 from Kadesh-barnea even unto Gaza, and all the country of "Goshen," unto Gibeon. And 42 all those kings and their land did Joshua take at one time, because Jehovah the God of Israel fought for Israel. And Joshua returned, and 43
 all Israel with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER X. 1. The conduct of the Gibeonites in joining with Israel, brings against them their former friends and allies. In like manner, when sinners repent and reform, and join the Israel of God, they often experience the malice of their former associates. Satan and his agents stir up their rage against those who seek peace with God. Angels welbrew at verse 21; that, as soon as the battle was ended, all the people returned to Joshua, to the camp at Makkedah. Makkedah was nigh the place of battle; Gilgal a great way off. And that Joshua, who (in the next words, v 17.) hearing of the 5 kings hid in a cave, commanded that they should be shut in; yet the soldiers should not stay, but pursue the enemy—that he, I say, should in the mean time, have led back the army to their camp at Gilgal, about 15 miles off, is very improbable.

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 1450. Many kings vanquished at Merom; Hazor taken and burnt the whole country subdued, and the Anakites cut off.

- 1 AND when Jabin king of Hazor had heard these things, he sent to Jobab the king of "Madon," and to the king of Shimron, and to the 2 king of Achshaph, And to the kings who dwelt on the northern mountains, and in the plains, south of Chinneroth, and in the valley,
3 and on the western borders of Dor; And to the Canaanites on the east and on the west, and to the Amorites, and to the Hethites, and to the Perizzites, and to the Jebusites in the mountains, and to the Hivites under Hermon in the 4 land of Mizpeh. And they went out, they and all their hosts with them, a people numerous as the sand upon the sea shore, with very
5 many horses and chariots. And when all these kings were met together, they went and encamped together, by the lake Merom, in order to fight with Israel.
6 And Jehovah said to Joshua, "Be not afraid because of them; for to morrow about this time will I deliver them up all slain before Israel: thou shalt ham-string their horses, and burn their chariots with fire." So Joshua, and 7 all the people of war with him, went out against them to the lake Merom: and suddenly fell upon them. And Jehovah delivered them into 8 the hand of Israel, who smote them, and chased them unto Great Zidon, and unto Misrephoth-maim, and eastward unto the valley of Mizpeh; and they smote them, until they left none remaining. And Joshua did to them 9 as Jehovah bade him; he ham-strung their horses, and their chariots he burned with fire. And at that time Joshua turned back, and took 10 Hazor, and smote its king with the sword: (for Hazor was the capital of all those kingdoms.) And he smote all the persons who were therein, 11 with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them: there was not any left to breathe: and he burnt Hazor with fire. And all the cities 12 of those kings, and all their kings, did Joshua take, and smote them with the edge of the sword, and he utterly destroyed them, as Moses the servant of Jehovah had commanded. But the cities which stood on the hills, Israel 13 burned none of them, save Hazor only which Joshua burned. And the whole spoil of those 14 destroyed the Canaanites by the sword of Israel; but he chooses to manifest his own power, that Israel may know to whom they owe their victory; and his enemies, against whom they exalt themselves. He brought from his treasure the hail-stones, which he reserves against the day of battle and of war. With this he smote them; and how vain was their attempt to flee. When God arises to judgment there is no darkness, where the workers of iniquity can hide themselves. Upon the ungodly he will shortly pour a more terrible hail, from which there will be no escaping.

3. How astonishing the miracle here recorded; and wrought in answer to prayer! The sun and other heavenly bodies, were the great objects the Canaanites worshipped; and one design of the miracle might be, to teach all, who might hear of it, that God created them, and regulates and disposes of them, so as to answer his own purposes. Now the Canaanites saw those luminaries, to which they offered their victims and prayers, linger in the heavens, to afford their enemies light, to accomplish their destruction. Never was such a day as this, on which God so strikingly hearkened to the voice of man! Doubtless Joshua, was directed by divine influence; and whenever a spirit of fervent prayer is excited, it is an indication of what God intends to do.

4. Joshua's success animated him to new achievements. In like manner let the success we have experienced in our spiritual warfare over some enemies, make us resolute and courageous. It should animate us against our fears, and excite and support our courage, for there is still the same power and grace in God. Let us go forth in an humble dependence on him to fight for us, to bring every enemy into subjection.

of the Geshurites, mentioned ch. xiii. 2.

CHAP. XI. 1. King of Hazor. This was situated in upper Galilee, and was afterwards given to the tribe of Naphtali, Chap. xix. 36. Jabin seems to have been the common name of the kings of Hazor, Judges iv. 2. From verse 10 it appears that Hazor was the capital city of the northern parts of Canaan, and though now subdued, it must have recovered its former power, before the time of the judges.—Madan, Calmet would read Maron, with the Sept. Vat. and conjectures the land of Meraz, Judg. v. 23, might be the country of Madan. Shimron fell to the lot of Zebulon; and Achshaph, by Josephus and others, Ecdippe to that of Asher, Ch. xix. 25.

5. The lake Merom. Lit. 'the higher water,' by which, according to some, is meant the lake, called afterwards Samechon, not far from Phiala, the source of the Jordan. Others think that Jabin, and his confederates advanced as far as Tachana, by the river Kishon, and fought with Joshua, where the Israelites afterwards conquered the forces of Sisera. Judges iv. 7, and v. 19:

8. Misrephoth-maim. Houbigant would render, 'Misrephoth on the west.' The Vulg. 'to the waters of Misrephoth.' The Sept. as a proper name, whom I have followed with our last translators. See Note, Heb. B.

9. Hamstringing; that is, cut the tendons, or sinews of the ham, by cities, and the cattle, the children of Israel took for a prey to themselves; but every man they smote with the edge of the sword, until they had destroyed them; neither left they any 15 to breathe. As Jehovah had commanded Moses his servant, so Moses commanded Joshua, and so Joshua did; he left nothing undone of all that Jehovah had commanded Moses.

 16 Thus Joshua took that whole land, even all the southern hill-country, and all the land of Goshen, and the valleys, and the mountains
 17 of "Israel", and its valley: From mount Halak, that extendeth to Seir, unto Baal-gad in the valley of Lebanon, under mount Hermon: and all their kings he took, and smote, and 18 slew them. A long time Joshua made war
 19 with all those kings: For there was not a city which made peace with the children of Israel, save the Hivites the inhabitants of Gibeon: all the rest they took by war. For it was Jehovah's will that they should be so 20 courageous as to meet Israel in battle, that they might utterly destroy them; that they might show to them no favour, but destroy them, as Jehovah had commanded Moses.
 21 And at that time came Joshua, and cut off the Anakites from the mountains, from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, and from all the mountains of Judah, and from all the mountains of Israel: Joshua utterly destroyed them with their cities. There was none of the Anakites left in the land of the children of Israel: they remained only in Gaza, in Gath, and in Ashdod. Thus Joshua took the whole land 23 according to all that Jehovah had said to Moses; and Joshua gave it for an inheritance to Israel, according to their portions by their tribes. So the land rested from war.

B. C. 1450. Recapitulation of the conquests of Moses and Joshua on both sides the Jordan

Now these are the kings of the land, whom the children of Israel smote, and whose land they possessed, on the other side the Jordan, towards the rising sun, from the river Arnon unto mount Hermon, and the whole eastern plain. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XI. 1. Let us admire the goodness of God, who when new difficulties arose, afforded fresh encouragement to his people. The chariots and horsemen terrified Israel; they had never seen such a sight before; and though brave, they might tremble for the result of a contest with a well appointed cavalry. But when God says, be not afraid, that is enough. Such encouragement he gives to the good soldiers of Jesus Christ, who are fighting for the heavenly Canaan. He assures them of success, and encourages them against their fears. Let us depend on him, whose right hand and holy arm is able to baffle the proudest, the most powerful and numerous foes.

2. We learn, that obedience to the divine will, yields, on reflection, the greatest pleasure. It is often said in this Chapter, that they had done as God had commanded Moses. This intimates to us our duty. We are to observe the commands of the divine law; what Jesus, who had a divine commission, has enjoined.

which they were disabled.

13. Stood on the hills. Pilkington has observed, that our common version of this passage conveys no particular idea, 'As for the cities that stood still in their strength, &c.' The Sam. and Vulg. have rendered properly; quæ erant in collibus. For הר in Chal. and Arab. signifies, collis, mons, &c. The word ought to be so rendered Jerem. xxx. 18.

We are not only to do this or the other thing that he commands, but to leave nothing undone; "to walk in all his statutes and ordinances blameless." Then we may hope that God will accept our work through Jesus Christ, and mercifully reward us according to the riches of his grace.

3. We are taught, that sometimes the most formidable are to be encountered last; and that when the warfare of God's people is nearly accomplished, they are called to make one effort more, and then to enjoy peace and rest for ever. The Anakites had so terrified Israel on the report of the spies, (Numb. xiii. 22.) that they refused to enter Canaan, and were doomed to die in the wilderness. Thus Christians sometimes find the last enemy, death, formidable. Some are all their lives subject to bondage through fear of it; but is not victory promised? Let us not forget that our Redeemer has conquered for us, and as he has overcome, so shall we, and sit down with him in his kingdom.

16. Mountain of Israel. If this be not an addition to the text, which I suspect, Israel must be understood as including all the tribes except Judah, as in verse 21.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. It is necessary, because highly useful, to review the providence of God. His past works of power and mercy should not be forgotten; but should be rehearsed to future generations. Joshua records the conquests of his predecessor Moses; and reminds the people of their obligations to him under God. Let us ever study to give to all their due, and be thankful to God for every victory over our enemies, whoever were the leaders or instruments in obtaining it.

2. We here see that one victory led to another, until Israel's enemies were subdued. Is it not so in the spiritual warfare? He who has become a soldier of Jesus Christ, like his leader and the captain of his salvation, must go on, from conquering to conquer. When one Canaanite, one reigning sin, is subdued, he must pursue with courage those which remain; he must not put off his gospel-armour, till every vice is slain and the body of sin destroyed. In this noble warfare let us imitate the Apostle, and not reckon that we have already attained, but press towards the mark for the prize of our high calling.

9. Every other city. Compare Deut. ii. 36, and Note there. Dathe renders, in the above place and here, and verse 16, 'And from the city which is on the island of that river, &c.' I can find nothing in Reland, or Danville, to justify this version, and I still think the sense given is that of the text.

14. This whole verse is found repeated verse 33, and is there wanting in the Sept. Modern Critics reject this as an early mistake of some scribe; and contend that the 33 is its proper place. It has no reference here to what is said.

15. What is contained in the Sept. is so apposite, and introduces the

the children of Gad, an inheritance, according 25 to their families. And their territory was Ja-zer, and the cities of a great part of Gilead, and half of the land of the children of Ammon, 26 unto Aroer, which is before Rabbah; And from Heshbon unto Ramath-mizpeh, and Betonim;
 and from Mahanaim unto the border of Debir; 27 And in the valley, Beth-aram, and Beth-nimrah, and Succoth, and Zaphon, the rest of the kingdom of Sihon, king of Heshbon, along the Jordan, unto the extremity of the sea of Chin-nereth on the other, the east side of the Jordan.
 28 This is the inheritance of the children of Gad
 according to their families; these were their 29 cities, and their villages. And Moses gave to the half tribe of Manasseh, an inheritance, 30 according to their families. And their territory, beginning from Mahanaim, was all Bashan, all the kingdom of Og king of Bashan, and all the sixty towns of Havoth-jair, which are in Bashan:
 31 And half of Gilead, and Ashtaroth, and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan, these were given to the children of Machir the son of Manasseh, the one-half of the children of 32 Machir, according to their families. These are the territories which Moses distributed for an inheritance in the plains of Moab, on the other, the east side of the Jordan, opposite 33 Jericho. But unto the tribe of Levi, Moses gave no inheritance: Jehovah the God of Israel, was their inheritance, as he had said unto them.

 To nine tribes and a half-tribe, was their inhe- 2
 ritage distributed by lot as Jehovah had commanded "Joshua". For Moses had given an 3 inheritance to two tribes and a half tribe, on the other side of the Jordan: but to the Levites
 he gave no inheritance among them. For the 4 children of Joseph were two tribes, those of Manasseh and Ephraim: therefore they gave no part to the Levites in the land, save cities to dwell in, with their suburbs for their cattle and for their substance. As Jehovah had command- 5 ed Moses, so the children of Israel did; and they divided the land.

Now the children of Judah came to Joshua in 6 Gilgal; and Caleb, the Son of Jephunneh, the Kenezite said to him, "Thou knowest the thing which Jehovah said to Moses, the man of God, concerning me and thee, in Kadesh-barnea.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. In the address to Joshua, we are reminded how necessary it is, diligently to finish the work given us to do. Age creeps on, and brings in its train, weakness, diseases and death. Let us then employ the vigour of our days in God's service, that the evening of life may be unclouded and serene. When religion has been neglected, when the active part of human life has been spent in vice and folly, how gloomy and miserable must be its close! "Whatever thy hand, then, findeth to do, do it with all thy might; for there is no work nor device in the grave to which thou art hastening."

2. Joshua is ordered to divide the land, which was not yet conquered; to teach the Israelites their duty, not to rest till they had obtained the possession of it; and to show his own confidence in God's faithfulness. We find they neglected their duty, and that the Canaanites remained long unsubdued; and, for this sin of the Israelites, those nations were as thorns in their sides. How often did they suffer for turning away from their God? But when they repented he forgave them, and finally accomplished all his promises. May not the Christian often see in his own sins the cause of his troubles! Our enemies will not be vanquished by an alliance with them. Let us, then, never put off our armour while much land remains unpossessed; but let us nobly fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life. If, as good soldiers of Christ, we nobly fight, we shall at last be crowned.

Moses commanded the land to be divided, he did not divide it; and belot, and what Moses gave to the two tribes and half, mentioned in the following verse. Compare Numb. xxxiv. 17, &c. and Josh. i. 6—By

lot. This was the best method of doing it, as it was acknowledging God's right to the land, and leaving it to his disposal; it was the way to prevent murmuring, and it would make it evident that the prophecies of Jacob and

7 Forty years old was I, when Moses, the servant of Jehovah sent me from Kadesh-barnea to spy out the land; and I brought him a report according to 'my' own conviction. Nevertheless, my brethren, who went up with me, discouraged the hearts of the people; but I wholly followed Jehovah my God. And Moses swore on that day, saying, 'Surely the land on which thy feet have trodden shall be thine inheritance, and thy children's for ever, because thou hast wholly followed Jehovah 'thy' God.' And now, behold, Jehovah hath kept me alive, as he said, these forty-five years since Jehovah spoke this word to Moses, during forty of which Israel hath wandered in the wilderness; and now, lo! I am this day eighty-five years old. Yet I am this day, as strong as I was on the day that Moses sent me to spy out the land. As my strength then was, even so is my strength now, either for war, or any other business. Now therefore, give to me this mountain, which Jehovah promised on that day, for on that day thou heardest. Although the Anakites are there, and although the cities are great and fortified, Jehovah being with me, as he hath said, I shall be able to drive them out." And Joshua blessed him, and gave to Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, Hebron for an inheritance. Hebron thus became the inheritance of Caleb, the REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. It is a good man's duty and right to claim the fulfilment of promises. Caleb did so, respecting Hebron, and the land belonging to it. This had been promised, and should not therefore be put into a lot, having, by the promise, been already disposed of. He urges his plea with great simplicity, piety and courage. So let us act, in regard to all those promises given and confirmed to us in Christ Jesus. Peter calls them precious; they contain the richest blessings, and are invaluable in the estimation of every one, who embraces them.

2. God chose and gave to the tribes their inheritance; and let us acknowledge the hand of God in fixing the bounds of our

7. According to my own conviction. Literally, 'my own heart,' but this term, not only means, the mind, but the affections and sentiments of the mind. In the report Caleb brought to Moses, he followed his own unbiased judgment.

11. Yet I am this day as strong, &c. This passage contains a striking son of Jephunneh, the Kenezite, unto this day, because that he wholly followed Jehovah, the God of Israel. Now the name of Hebron was 15 before Kirjath-arba; [THE CITY OF ARBA] which Arba was a great man among the Anakites.

B. C. 1444. The boundary of Judah's lot described; Othniel's valour rewarded, and the cities allotted to Judah.

Now when the land had rest from war, this 1 was the lot of the tribe of the children of Judah, according to their families. On the south, to the border of Edom, their boundary was the wilderness of Zin, from the extremity of Teman. Thus 2 their southern boundary was from the shore of the salt sea, from its most southern bay. And 3 it went along the south side of Maaleh-acrab-bim, and passed on to Zin, and ascended to the south side of Kadesh-barnea, and passed along to Hezron, and went on to Adar, and winded about Karkaa. Thence it passed on to Azmon, 4 and went along to the river of Egypt; and terminated at the 'great' sea. This was 'their' southern boundary. And the east boundary 5 was the salt sea to the mouth of the Jordan. And their northern boundary was from the bay of the salt sea to the mouth of the Jordan: And the boundary went to Beth-hoglah, and 6 passed along north of Beth-arabah; thence the

Let us therefore refer ourselves to him, and praise him for a comfortable settlement in life. If 'the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places,' let us bless God, who "is the portion of our inheritance, and who maintaineth our right."

2. We are reminded, that it is our wisdom and duty to follow the Lord fully. It is a delightful character to be resolutely good in a degenerate age; to be faithful like Caleb and Joshua, when all the other spies were faithless, and provoked God. It is particularly honourable to follow the Lord fully, when others

The boundary then passed on to the waters of En-shemesh, and extended along to En-rogel.
 8 Thence the boundary went on through the valley of Hinnom, to the south side of Jebus, (which is Jerusalem); the boundary then went on to the top of the mountain which lieth at the west end of the valley of Hinnom, and at the north end of the valley of the Rephaites [THE

And from the top of that hill, the boundary was drawn to the water-spring of Nephtoah, and went on to mount Ephron; thence the boundary was drawn to Baalah, 10 (which is Kirjath-jearim). The boundary then winded westward from Baalah unto mount Seir; and passed along the north side of mount Jearim (which is Chesalon), and went down to 11 Beth-shemesh, and passed on to Timnah. And the boundary went on to the north side of Ekron and was drawn to Shicron, and passed along to mount Baalah, and went on unto Jabneel; and the termination of the boundary was at the 12 sea. And the western boundary was the great sea, and its coast. This was the surrounding boundary of the children of Judah, according to 13 their families. 8. Valley of Hinnom. This valley lay to the east of Jerusalem, and ren of Judah, according to the command of Jehovah to Joshua: Kirjath-arba [THE CITY OF ARBA], the father of Anak, which city is Hebron. And Caleb drove thence three Anakites, Shes- 14 hai, and Ahiman, and Talmai, the children of Anak. And he went up thence against the 15 inhabitants of Debir; and the name of Debir was formerly Kirjath-sepher. And Caleb said, 16 "He that smiteth Kirjath-sepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achsah my daughter for a wife." And Othniel, the son of Kenaz, the 17 "younger" brother of Caleb, took it: and he gave him Achsah his daughter for a wife. And 18 it came to pass, when she was going home, that she persuaded him to let her ask a field from her father; and she alighted from her ass. And Caleb said to her, "What 'wouldst thou, 'my daughter'?" She answered, "Give to me a 19 blessing; for thou hast given to me a south land; give me also water-springs." And 'Caleb' gave to her both upper springs, and nether springs.

This is the inheritance of the tribe of the 20 children of Judah, according to their families. And the uttermost cities of the tribe of the 21 children of Judah, on the south, towards the border of Edom, were Kabzeel, and Eder, and Jagur. And Kinah, and Dimonah, and Ada- 22 dah, Kedesh, and Hazor, and Ithnan, Ziph, 23 and Telem, and Bealoth, And New-hazor, 25 and Kerioth-'hezron', (which is also called Hazor), Amam, and Shema, and Moladah, 26

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. We may learn, from the portion of promised land which fell to Judah, how exactly the prediction of Jacob was accomplished. This inheritance was the most southern part of the land; and abounded in vine-yards, and fine pasture grounds. Thus he bound his foal to the vine; and his asses' colt to the choice vine. "He washed his raiment in wine, And his clothes in the blood of the grape. Red were his eyes with wine; and his teeth white with milk." Thus will all the predictions of God's holy word be eventually fulfilled.

2. Caleb, in conquering the Anakites, displayed his valour, and proved the truth of what he had said to Joshua, that God being with him, he was able to drive them out. We see that God was with him, and made him successful against his foes. Let us look to the same God, and by believing prayer, secure his presence and assistance, and no foe can stand before us. Then we may conquer the world, the flesh and the devil.

3. The promise of Caleb to give Achsah, his daughter, to him who should conquer Kirjath-sepher, and his ready and faithful fulfilment of that promise, reflect honour on his character. Othniel braved the danger to obtain this prize; and perhaps, having before loved Achsah, was now made happy in receiving her for his wife. Marriage is honourable to all; and when founded on mutual regard, one of the chief sources of earthly happiness. The dowry he gave was ample, more than his daughter asked; both upper and nether springs. Happy they who have nether springs of earthly blessings, and upper springs of divine grace, bestowed on them!

CHAPTER XVI.

B. C. The general boundary of the sons of Joseph: and then that of Ephraim; and afterwards that of Manasseh.

- 1 NEXT came up the lot of the children of Joseph, whose south boundary was from the Jordan by Jericho, unto the waters of Jericho, on the east of the wilderness; and went up from the waters of Jericho, over mount
- 2 Bethel. And from mount Bethel it went along to Luz, [THE CITY OF BETHEL;] and passed
- 3 along unto the border of Archi-Ataroth; And went down westward near the border of Japhleti to the border of nether Beth-horon, and to Gezer: and its termination was at the great
- 4 sea. North of this boundary, the children of Joseph, Manasseh and Ephraim, had their inheritance.
- 5 Now this was the boundary of the children of Ephraim, according to their families. Also the boundary of their inheritance went on the east side of Ataroth-adar, to upper Beth-horon;
- 6 And the boundary went along on the north west side of Michmethah; and then winded eastward to Taanath-shiloh, and passed east-
- 7 ward on to Janohah; And it went down from Janohah to Ataroth, and to Naarath, and came
- 8 to Jericho, and terminated at the Jordan. The boundary went westward from Tapuah to the torrent Kana; and its termination was at the great sea. This is the inheritance of the children of Ephraim, according to their families:
- 9 Besides all the separate cities which the children of Ephraim had among the inheritance of the children of Manasseh, all the cities with
- 10 their villages. But they drove not out the Canaanites who dwelt in Gezer: so the Canaanites dwell among the Ephraimites unto this day, and serve under tribute.

Here also was a lot for the tribe of Manasseh; for he was the first-born of Joseph; that is, for Machir the first-born of Manasseh, the father of Gilead, for Gilead was a man of war, and had obtained Gilead and Bashan. But a 2 lot was yet to be given to the rest of the children of Manasseh according to their families; to the children of Abiezer, and to the children of Helek, and to the children of Asriel, and to the children of Shechem, and to the children of Hepher, and to the children of Shemida: these were the male-children of Manasseh the son of Joseph according to their families.

But Zelophehad, the son of Hepher, the son 3 of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, had no sons, but daughters: and these are the names of his daughters, Mahlah, and Nanah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirza. And they 4 drew near to Eleazar the priest, and to Joshua the son of Nun, and to the chiefs "of Israel", saying, "Jehovah commanded Moses to give to us an inheritance among our brethren." So according to the commandment of Jehovah, an inheritance was given to them among the brethren of their father. And there fell ten 5 portions to Manasseh, beside the land of Gilead and Bashan, which were on the other side the Jordan"; Because the daughters descended 6 from Manasseh had an inheritance among his great-grand sons: but the rest of Manasseh's great-grand sons had the land of Gilead.

Now the boundary of Manasseh was from 7

others, I deem them genuine.

CHAP. XVI. 1. It seems plain that the historian meant to describe the south boundary of the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, in general, in the first four verses; and then afterwards the particular boundaries of each tribe.—Waters of Jericho. Now called 'the well of Elisha.' 2 Kings ii. 18—25.—Wilderness of Jericho, now called Quarantania, where it was said our Lord was tempted by the devil. See Mat. iv. 1, and Note there.

6. Having before drawn the general boundary that separated the children of Joseph from the tribe of Judah, from the Jordan to the Mediterranean sea, the historian now describes the whole boundary of the particular inheritance of the Ephraimites; beginning, not at the sea, or even at Gezer, because that tract remained in the possession of the Canaanites;

but at Atareth-adar, which seems to have been the most western town belonging to the Ephraimites, on the south side of their inheritance.

8. He omits mentioning the coast of the Jordan, or east boundary, from Beth-hoglah to Tapuah; but from the latter place draws the north boundary to the torrent Kana and the great sea.

CHAP. XVII. 5. Ten portions. The posterity of Abiezer, Helek, Shechem, and Shemidah, had five portions; Hepher's five daughters other five: yet equal, it may be supposed; to only a sixth part of the whole. Houbigant adopts and defends the Sept. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

11. A third part of Nopheth. I have followed the Sept. and Vulg. in considering (נפת) as a proper name. Others render, 'three tracts or districts.' Bochart considers it a third part of the territory of Dan, which

- Asher to Michmethah, which is opposite to Shechem; and the boundary went along on the south of the inhabitants of En-tappuah. (For to Manasseh belonged the land of Tappuah; but the city Tappuah on the boundary of Manasseh belonged to the children of Ephraim.) Thence the boundary descended to the torrent Kanah; south of the torrent, the cities of Ephraim are among the cities of Manasseh; but the boundary was on the north side of the torrent, and its termination was at the great sea. The south part belonged to Ephraim, and north to Manasseh, and the great sea was their boundary. And they were contiguous to Asher on the north and to Issachar on the south. And Manasseh had in Issachar, and in Asher, Bethshean and its towns, and Ibleam and its towns, and the inhabitants of Endor and its towns, and the inhabitants of Taanach and its towns, and the inhabitants of Megiddo and its towns, ² a third part of Nopheth." Yet the children of Manasseh could not drive out the inhabitants of those cities; but the Canaanites would dwell in that land. Nevertheless, when the children of Israel became stronger, they put the Canaanites under tribute, but did not utterly drive them out.
- 14 And the children of Joseph spoke to Joshua, saying, "Why hast thou given us but one lot and one portion to inherit, seeing we are so great a people, Jehovah having hitherto so much blessed us?" And Joshua answered them, 15 "Since ye are so great a people, and since mount Ephraim is too narrow for you; go up to the waste land country, and clear away for yourselves there in the land of the Perizzites and Rephaites." And the children of Joseph said, 16 "The hill country is not enough for us; and all the Canaanites who dwell in the low land, have chariots of iron; those who dwell in Bethshean and its towns, and those who dwell in the valley of Jezreel." Again Joshua spoke to the house of Joseph, to Ephraim and Manasseh, saying, 17 "Ye are a great people, and have great power: ye shall not have one lot only: But the mountain shall be yours; and though it be wood, ye may clear it, and its boundaries shall be yours: for ye may drive out the Canaanites, though they have iron chariots, and be strong."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Then Joshua built an altar to Jehovah, the God of Israel, on mount Ebal, As Moses the

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XVI, XVII. 1. In the land allotted to the posterity of Joseph, we again see the prediction of Jacob accomplished. They were blessed with a rich and fertile country. "Through the God of thy father, who helped thee, Through the Almighty, who blessed thee. May the blessings of the heavens from above, The blessings of the low-lying deep, The blessings of the breasts and of the womb, The blessings of thy father and thy mother, With the blessings of the eternal mountains, The desirable things of the everlasting hills, Abound and rest on the head of Joseph—On the crown of the chief among his brethren."

30—35, transposed from the 8th Chapter here.

2. The address of Joshua, while it displays his own courage, forcibly reminds the children of Joseph, of their duty. Instead of complaining that the inheritance given to them was too small for their numbers, their numbers and strength ought have to lead them to expel their enemies. They were able to do this; and by using their strength might easily have done it. How often are we dissatisfied with lot, as not being sufficient for us, when our own negligence, or extravagance is the cause of it. Let us thankfully acknowledge that the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places, and endeavour to improve our advantages; then we shall find reason for submission and contentment.

CHAP. XVIII. 1. At Shiloh. This city was in the tribe of Ephraim about ten or twelve miles from Shechem, according to Eusebius and Jerom. Usher places it about 15 miles from Jerusalem in the very heart of the country. Here the tabernacle was erected, in which was placed the ark of the covenant, and it remained until the time of Samuel, about 328 years according to Usher. The city might be called Shiloh (tranquil, peaceful), because the Israelites were now tranquil.

servant of Jehovah had commanded the children of Israel, as it is written in the book of the law of Moses, "An altar of whole stones, on which no man had laid an iron tool: and on it he" offered burnt-offerings to Jehovah, and sacrificed feast-offerings.

32 And there, upon stones, he inscribed a copy of the law of Moses, which he had written for 38 the children of Israel. And all Israel, and their elders, and officers, and their judges, stood on this side the ark and on that side before the priests, the Levites, who bore the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, as well the stranger as the native; half of them over against mount Gerizim, and half of them over against mount Ebal; as Moses the servant of Jehovah had commanded; that they should in the first place
34 bless the people of Israel. And afterward he read all the words of the law, the blessings and curses, according to all that is written in the 35 book of the law. There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before the whole congregation of Israel; the women, and the little ones, and the strangers who were conversant among them.

2 There still remained among the children of Israel seven tribes, which had not yet received
3 their inheritance. And Joshua said to the children of Israel, "How long will ye neglect to go to possess the land, which Jehovah, the 4 God of your fathers hath given you? Take from among yourselves three men for each tribe; whom I will send, and they shall set out, and go through the land, and describe it for 5 your inheritance; and then return to me. And they shall divide it into seven parts. Judah shall abide in their own southern territory; and the house of Joseph shall abide in their more northern territory. But the rest of the 6 land ye shall describe into seven parts, and bring the description hither to me, that I may cast lots for you here, before Jehovah our God. For the Levites have no part among you; for 7 the priesthood of Jehovah is their inheritance; and Gad, and Reuben, and half the tribe of Manasseh, have received their inheritance on the other, the east side of the Jordan, which Moses, the servant of Jehovah, gave to them." And the men arose, and went away: and Joshua 8 had charged those who went to describe the land saying, "Go and walk through the land, and describe it, and return to me, that I may here cast lots for you, before Jehovah in Shiloh." And the men went and passed through the land 9 and described it in a book, by cities, into seven parts, and they returned to Joshua, unto the camp at Shiloh. And Joshua cast lots for them 10 in Shiloh, before Jehovah: and there Joshua divided the land unto the children of Israel, according to their portions.

And the first lot came up for the tribe of the 11 children of Benjamin, according to their families: and the boundary of their lot fell between the children of Judah and the children of Joseph. And their north boundary was from the 12 Jordan, and went on the north side of Jericho, and went up westward through the mountains; and stretched forward to the wilderness of Beth-aven. And the boundary thence passed on to 13 wards Luz, to the south side of Luz, (which is Bethel,) and the boundary descended to Ataroth-adar, by the hill that lieth on the south side of nether Beth-horon. And the boundary 14 was drawn, and winded south-west from the hill that lieth south of nether Beth-horon; and its termination was at Kirjath-Baal, (which is

32. A copy of the law of Moses. Some render, the second law of Moses, and suppose the whole book of Deuteronomy is meant. This is more probable, than the opinion of others who imagine, the whole law, as contained in Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy to be intended. The Greek and Arabic translators confine it to the last book. Some limit

it to the 27. and 28 chapters of Deuteronomy.

5, 6. The meaning is, they should not at present notice the land occupied by Judah, Ephraim, and Manasseh, but should measure what remained, and divide it into seven parts. We find in the next chapter, that Judah had received a portion too large, and gave up a part to the tribes of Dan and Simeon.

11. The first lot came up, &c. God disposed the lot, that Benjamin, the brother of Joseph should join to Ephraim and Manasseh, his sons, and Kirjath-jearim,) a city of the children of Judah: 15 this was the west corner. And the south side from the end of Kirjath-jearim, the boundary went westward, and went on to the water-spring 16 of Nephtoah. The boundary thence descended to the end of the mountain that lieth before the valley of Hinnom, and which is to the north of the valley of the Rephaites, and descended by the valley of Hinnom, to the south 17 side of Jebus, and went on to En-rogel. And it was drawn from the north, and went on to En-shemesh; and then forward to Geliloth, which is opposite the height of Adummim. Then it descended to Eben-Bohan-ben-Reuben, 18 And passed along northward, to the side over against Arabah, and went down to Arabah. 19 And the boundary passed along northward by the side of Beth-hoglah: and the termination of the boundary was at the north bay of the salt sea, at the end of the Jordan. This was 20 the southern boundary. And the Jordan was its eastern boundary. This was the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, with its surrounding boundaries, according to their families. 21 Now the cities of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, according to their families, were Jericho, 22 and Beth-hoglah, and Emek-Keziz, And 23 Beth-arabah, and Zemaraim, and Bethel, And 24 Avim, and Parah, and Ophrah, And Chepharhaamonai, and Ophni, and Gaba; twelve cities, 25 with their villages. Then Gibeon, and Ramah, 26 and Beeroth, And Mizpeh, and Chephirah, and 27 Mozah, And Rekem, and Irpeel, and Taralah, 28 And Zelah, Eleph, and Jebus, (which is Jerusalem,) Gibeath, and Kirjath-jearim; fourteen cities, with their villages. This is the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, according to their families.

dwell between them and Judah, as Moses had predicted, Deut. xxxiii. 12.

CHAP. XIX. 1-9. The portion of Simeon is within that of Judah. This was one of the smaller tribes of Israel; and thus shut up it was dispersed in Israel, as Jacob had foretold, (Gen. xlix. 6, 7); while their brethren the Levites were scattered throughout all the tribes.

11-16. The description of the boundaries of Zebulun is hardly intelligible: and our best geographers have been extremely puzzled how to place them. The cities mentioned could not be all occupied by this tribe. Two others are mentioned, xxi. 34, 35. According to Jacob, Gen.

AND the second lot came up for Simeon; 1 for the tribe of the children of Simeon, according to their families: and their inheritance was within the inheritance of the children of Judah. And they had in their inheritance Beer- 2 sheba, °and Moladah, And Hazar-shual, and 3 Balah, and Azem, And Eltolad, and Bethul and Hormah, And Ziklag, and Beth-marca- 5 both, and Hazar-susah, And Beth-lebaoth, and 6 Sharuben; thirteen cities with their villages: Ain-Remmon, °and Tachon", and Ether, and 7 Ashan; four cities with their villages: And 8 all the villages which are round about those cities as far south as to Baalath-beer-Ramath, This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Simeon, according to their families. Out of the portion of the children of Judah, 9 the inheritance of the children of Simeon was given: for the portion of the children of Judah was too much for them: therefore the children of Simeon, inherited within their inheritance.

And the third lot came up for the children 10 of Zebulun, according to their families. And the boundary of their inheritance begun at Sarid: And their boundary went along the west 11 side to Maralah; and reached to Dabbasheth, and to the torrent which is opposite Jokneam. And from Sarid it turned eastward, to the sunri- 12 sing, unto the border of Chisloth-tabor, and then goeth on to Daberath, and ascendeth to Japhia. And thence along on the east by Gittah-He- 13 pher, to Ittah-kazin; and thence passeth on to Remmon-methoar-Neah. And the boundary 14 on the north side windeth to Hannathon, and its termination is in the valley of Jiphthah-el. And Kattath, and Nahallal, and Shimron, and 15 Idalah, and Bethlehem: twelve cities, with their villages. This is the inheritance of the children of Zebulun, according to their families: these their cities, with their villages.

Nazareth was in this tribe, where our Lord dwelt; mount Tabor, on which he is supposed to have been transfigured; and the borders of the sea of Galilee, where he wrought many miracles.

18. Boundary. This word, both here and in the description of the following tribes, is not to be understood simply of the bounding line, but also of all the towns within it. It might be rendered territory.

17 And the fourth lot came up for Issachar, for the children of Issachar, according to their 18 families. And their boundary begun at Jezreel, 19 and included Chesulloth, and Shunem, And 20 Haphraim, and Shihon, and Anaharath, And 21 Rabbith, and Kishion, and Abez, And Remeth, and En-gannim, and En-haddah, and Beth- 22 pazzez. And the boundary reacheth to Tabor, and Shahazimah, and Beth-shemesh; and the termination of their boundary is at the Jordan: 23 sixteen cities, with their villages. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Issachar, according to their families; these the cities with their villages.

24 And the fifth lot came up for the tribe of the children of Asher, according to their families. 25 And their boundary was Helkath, and Hali, 26 and Beten, and Achsaph, And Alammelech, and Amad, and Misheal. And westward it 27 reacheth to Carmel, and to Shihor-libnath; And eastward it turneth to Beth-dagon, and reacheth to Zebulun, and to the valley of Jiphthah-el; on the north side it went on to Beth-emek and Neiel; then more north, it passeth to Cabul, 28 And Hebron, and Rehob, and Hammon, and 20 Kanah, unto great Zidon. And the boundary then turneth to Ramah, and towards the strong city Tyre; and thence the boundary turneth to Hosah; and its termination was at the great 30 sea from Hebel to Achzib. Ummah also, and Aphek, and Rehob: twenty and two cities, with 31 their villages. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Asher, according to their families: these the cities, with their villages.

23. The tribe of Issachar was numerous, had the great sea west, the Jordan east, Manasseh on the south, and Zebulun on the north. In this tribe lay the fertile plain of Jezreel; Ahab's royal city of Shunem, in which dwelt the hostess of Elijah; the torrent Kishon, famous for Deborah's victory; Gilboa, where Saul fell, and the valley of Megiddo, where Josiah was slain.

26. Carmel. Mount Carmel was on the south side of the Kishon; the tribe of Asher on the north, opposite to Carmel.—Shihor-libnath, or the Belus; famous for its manufactory of glass.

The sixth lot came up for the children of 32 Naphtali; for the children of Naphtali, according to their families. And their boundary was 33 Heleph-malon, (in Zaanannim,) and went on to Adami, Nekeb, and Jabneel, unto Lakum; and its termination is at the Jordan. And the boun- 34 dary then turneth westward to Aznoth-tabor; and thence passeth on to Hukkok, and reacheth on the south side to Zebulun, and on the west side reacheth to Asher, and ^ato 'the banks' of the Jordan, on the east side. And the fenced 35 cities are Ziddim, Zer, and Hamath, Rakkath, and Chinnereth, And Adamah, and Ramah, 36 and Hazor, And Kedesh, and Edrei, and En- 37 hazor, And Iron, and Migdal-el, Horem, and 38 Beth-anath, and Beth-shemesh; nineteen cities with their villages. This is the inheritance of 39 the tribe of the children of Naphtali, according to these their cities, with their villages.

And the seventh lot came up for the tribe 40 of the children of Dan, according to their families. And the boundary of their inheritance 41 was Zorah, and Eshtaol, and Ir-shemesh, And 42 Shaalabbin, and Ajalon, and Jethlah, And 43 Elon, and Thimnathah, and Ekron, And El- 44 tekeh, and Gibbethon, and Baalath, And Je- 45 hud, and Bene-berak, and Gath-rimmon, And 46 Me-jarkon, and Rakkon, with the country before Japho. This is the inheritance of the 48 tribe of the children of Dan, according to their families; these their cities, with their villages.

^aBut the children of Dan could not drive out the Amorites, who harassed them on their mountains, and suffered them not to come down to the low grounds." So the boundary 47 of the children of Dan, being too narrow for them, the children of Dan therefore went up to fight against Leshem, and took it, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and possessed it, and dwelt therein, and called Leshem, Dan, after the name of Dan their father.

- 49 When they had finished dividing the land for an inheritance according to their boundaries, the children of Israel gave an inheritance to 50 Joshua, the son of Nun, among them. According to the word of Jehovah, they gave to him the city which he asked; Timnath-serah, in mount Ephraim; and he rebuilt the city, and 51 dwelt therein. These are the inheritances, which Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel, divided for an inheritance by lot in Shiloh, before Jehovah, at the door of the congregation-tabernacle. Thus they finished dividing the country.

CHAP. XX.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XVIII. & XIX. 1. The land being subdued, they set up the tabernacle, where they were to offer sacrifices and their prayers. It was fixed at Shiloh, the city whose name denoted tranquility, and where God would give peace to his sincere worshippers. Their conduct should remind us, that the worship of God should have our first regards, and that whatever respects the proper administration of divine ordinances, should have the precedence. God's tabernacle should be set up, before we set up one for ourselves; and we may then hope for his special blessing; we may then assure ourselves that he will dwell with us, will lead and guide us, and be our everlasting portion.

2. We are admonished by this public observance of the injunction of Moses, that persons of every rank and station should join in worshipping God. Joshua having built an altar in mount Ebal, and offered the sacrifices prescribed, wrote also on stone, a copy of the law. Then in a most solemn manner, the whole people, their elders, officers, and judges being assembled, the blessings and the curses were read, to inspire them with a holy fear of offending God, and to strengthen their attachment to him and his service. Let us often review the promises made to obedience, to animate and encourage our own hearts; and let

I spoke to you by Moses: That the man-slayer 3 who killeth any person unwarily and unintentionally may flee thither: and they shall be to you for a refuge from the blood-avenger, 'until he have stood before the congregation for judgment'. Now he who fleeth unto one of those 4 cities shall stand at the entrance of the city gate, and shall declare his cause in the hearing of the elders of that city; who shall take him into the city unto them, and give him a place, that he may dwell among them. And if the blood- 5 avenger pursue him, then they shall not deliver up the man-slayer into his hand; because he smote his neighbour unintentionally, and hated him not beforetime. And he shall dwell in that 6 city, until the death of the high priest, who shall be in those days; then may the man-slayer return, and come to his own city, and unto his own house, unto the city whence he fled."

And they appointed Kedesh in Galilee, in 7 the hill-country of Naphtali; and Shechem, in the hill-country of Ephraim, and Kirjath-arba, (which is Hebron,) in the hill-country of Judah. And on the other side of the Jordan, eastward 8 from Jericho, they assigned Bezer in the wil-us reflect on the terrors of the Lord, that we may not turn from the good way. The blessing and the curse are sounding in our ears; be it our care to secure the former, and prevent the latter.

3 Thus at length the whole land of Canaan was divided for an inheritance to the children of Israel. They waited long for the fulfilment of God's promise, but at length it was fulfilled. From the call of Abraham to this division of the land by Joshua, what vicissitudes had they experienced! At length they are settled in the land of promise; they have obtained cities to dwell in. So will it be with the Christian. After all his trials, his sins and sorrows; his conflicts within and without; his changes in temporal circumstances, he will at length repose in the better Canaan, the rest which remaineth for the people of God.

4. Joshua divided the land to others, but took none himself. How amiable is this part of his character! The congregation choose for him, and what they give him he takes and is satisfied. When the rulers of a nation have such a spirit, the people must reward them. How few such characters does the page of history exhibit! Let us all cultivate a liberal, generous spirit; as we are assured that God will reward it. God often gives abundance to those who seek not the things of this world.

9. The cities appointed. They were all Levitical cities, as we learn from the next chapter, so that they who fled thither might find persons to instruct them, and make their confinement a blessing.

derness, in the plain-country of the tribe of Reuben; and Ramoth in Gilead out of the cities of the tribe of Gad; and Golan, in Bashan, out of the cities of the tribe of Manasseh. These were the cities appointed for all the children of Israel, and for the stranger who sojourned among them, that whosoever killed any person undesignedly, might flee thither and not die by the hand of the blood-avenger, until he had stood before the congregation.

CHAPTER XXI.

R. C. 1444. Eight and forty cities are given to the Levites, by lot, out of the other tribes.

1 THEN came near the chief-fathers of the Levites to Eleazar the priest, and to Joshua the son of Nun, and to the chief-fathers of the 2 tribes of the children of Israel; And they spoke to them at Shiloh, in the land of Canaan, saying, "Jehovah commanded by Moses, that cities to dwell in should be given to us, with 3 their suburbs for our cattle." And the children of Israel gave to the Levites out of their inheritance, at the command of Jehovah, these cities 4 and their suburbs. And the first lot came up for the families of the Kohathites: of whom the Levites, the children of Aaron the priest, had by lot, thirteen cities, out of the tribe of Judah, and out of the tribe of Simeon, and out of the 5 tribe of Benjamin. And the rest of the children of the families of Kohath, had by lot, ten cities out of the tribe of Ephraim, and out of the tribe of Dan, and out of the half tribe of Manasseh. And the children of Gershon had, 6 by lot, thirteen cities, out of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the tribe of Asher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the tribe of Manasseh in Bashan. The children of Merari 7 by their families, had twelve cities, out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun. And the 8 children of Israel gave, by lot, to the Levites, these cities with their suburbs, as Jehovah had commanded by Moses.

And they gave out of the tribe of the children 9 of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, these cities which are mentioned by name, Which the children of Aaron 10 of the families of the Kohathites, who were of the children of Levi, had; for their's was the first lot. And they gave to them Kirjath-Arba 11 [THE CITY OF ARBA] the father of Anak, which is Hebron, in the hill-country of Judah, with its surrounding suburbs: But the fields of the 12 city, and its villages, they had given to Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, for his possession.

Thus they gave to the children of Aaron 13 the priest, Hebron (a city of refuge for the man-slayer,) with its suburbs; and Libnah, with its suburbs; And Jattir, with its suburbs; 14 and Eshtemoa, with its suburbs; And Holon 15 with its suburbs; and Debir, with its suburbs; And 'Ashan' with its suburbs; and Juttah with 16 its suburbs; and Beth-shemesh, with its suburbs; nine cities out of these two tribes. And out of 17

CHAP. XXI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. The cities of refuge were a common blessing to every Israelite, whose unhappy lot it might be to need their protection; and it was the interest of every one to have this provision made as soon as possible. Moses had appointed three cities on the other side of the Jordan, Bezer, Ramoth and Golan; and those now set apart, were Kedesh, Hebron and Shechem. They were so situated as to stand at the most convenient distances, that all the tribes might be near some one of them. In a nobler sense, a refuge is provided for sinners; and it is made known. Let every one hasten to it that he may be safe.

CHAP. XXI. 5. I have adopted the emendation of Houbigant, as it is supported by the context, referring families to Kohath, and not to the tribe of Ephraim.

16. Ashan. We have no city of this name mentioned except Ch. xix.

16. v1 Chron. 6. 18. Sept. the rest Alm.

2. It has been observed that the names of these cities are very significant. Kedesh signifies, holiness; Shechem, a shoulder; Hebron, fellowship; Bezer, a fortress; Ramoth, high; and Golan, joy. Thus in the perfection of the Redeemer's merits, lies the foundation of the sinner's holiness, and the security of his hope; on his shoulder the government is laid, so that no enemy can hurt us; the sweetest fellowship is that enjoyed through faith in him; his arm of power and love is our fortress; and his exaltation the pledge of our own; for he will bring all who have fled to him for refuge, to Zion, with songs of joy.

7. See note there. In 1 Chron. vi. 59, this city is called רַחֵם and which is the same city as is mentioned Ch. xix. 17, among the cities which fell to the tribe of Judah. The Sept. here read רַחֵם.

18. Almon. In 1 Chr. vi. it is called רַחֵם. A change of the letters

 20 And the families of the children of Kohath, the Levites who remained of the children of Kohath, even they had the cities of their lot, 21 out of the tribe of Ephraim. And they gave to them Shechem, (a city of refuge for the man-slayer) with its suburbs, in mount Ephraim;
 22 and Gezer, with its suburbs; And Kibzaim, with its suburbs; and Beth-horon, with its suburbs; from the similarity, might easily be made. The text here I think correct.

22. Kibzaim. In the parallel place is called קִיבְצַיִם. It is difficult, if not impossible, to decide which is the genuine lection. The Syr. adds, at the end of this, and after all the verses containing the number of the cities, 'with the suburbs.' This is certainly implied as in the directions given respecting the Levitical cities, their suburbs were to be included. Compare Numbers xxxv. 5. &c.

26. Beth-shean. The common reading is here erroneous. Gath-rimmon was a city in the tribe of Dan, mentioned verse 24. Beth-shean, or shan, was certainly a Levitical city; and it is happy that some copies of the Sept. have preserved this lection.

27. Beesh-terah. The Masorets read בִּישַׁן; and so it is read before desh, in Galilee, (a city of refuge for the man-slayer,) with its suburbs; and Hammoth-dor, with its suburbs; and 'Kirjathaim', with its suburbs; three cities. All the cities of the 33 Gershonites, according to their families, were thirteen cities, with their suburbs.

And to the families of the children of Merari, 34 the rest of the Levites, were given out of the tribe of Zebulun, Jokneam, with its suburbs; and Kartah, with its suburbs; Dimnah, with its 35 suburbs; Nahalal, with its suburbs; four cities. And out of the tribe of Reuben, Bezer, 'by the 36 wilderness, (a city of refuge for the man-slayer)' with its suburbs; and Jahazah, with its suburbs; Kedemoth, with its suburbs; and Mephaath, 37 with its suburbs; four cities. And out of the 38 tribe of Gad, Ramoth, in Gilead, (a city of refuge for the man-slayer) with its suburbs; and Mahanaim, with its suburbs; Heshbon, with 39 its suburbs; Jazer, with its suburbs; four cities in all. Thus all the cities of the children of 40 Merari by their families, which were of the remaining families of the Levites, were by their lot, twelve cities. All the cities of the Levites, 41 within the possession of the children of Israel, were forty and eight cities, with their suburbs. These cities had all their surrounding suburbs: 42 thus were all these cities.

And Jehovah gave to Israel all the land, 43 which he had sworn to their fathers that he would give; and they possessed it and dwelt therein. And Jehovah gave them rest on eve- 44 ry side, according to all that he had sworn to their fathers: and not a man of all their enemies could stand before them; Jehovah deliver-

CHAPTER XXII.

B. C. 1444. The two tribes and half are dismissed; they build the altar of witness; the Israelites offended send to them; they give them satisfaction.

1 JOSHUA then called the Reubenites, and the 7 Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh. (Now to the one half of the tribe of Manasseh, Moses had given possession in Bashan; but to the other half, Joshua had given among their brethren on this west side of the Jordan.) And
2 said unto them, "Ye have kept all that Moses, the servant of Jehovah, commanded you; and have obeyed my voice in all that I have com-
3 manded you. Ye have not left your brethren these many days, unto this day; but have kept the charge of the commandment of Jehovah
4 your God. And now Jehovah your God, hath given rest to your brethren, as he promised to them; therefore now return ye, and go to your own tents, unto the land of your possession, which Moses, the servant of Jehovah, gave
5 to you, on the other side of the Jordan. But take heed to do the commandment and the law, with which Moses, the servant of Jehovah, charged you; to love Jehovah, your God, and to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and to cleave unto him, and to serve him with all your heart and with all your soul."
6 So Joshua blessed them, and sent them away;

and they went unto their own tents. And also 7 when Joshua sent them away unto their own tents, he blessed them, And spoke unto them, 8 saying, "With great wealth, and with very much cattle, with silver, and with gold, and with brass, and with iron, and with very [much raiment, return to your own tents; and divide with your brethren, the spoils of your enemies."

And the children of Reuben, and the child- 9 ren of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, returned, and departed from the children of Israel, out of Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan, to go unto the country of Gilead; to the land of their own possession, of which they had been put in possession, according to the word of Jehovah, by Moses. And when they 10 came unto the banks of the Jordan, which are opposite the land of Canaan, the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, built there an altar, by the Jordan; a great altar, that it might be conspicuous.

And the children of Israel heard say, "Be- 11 hold! the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, have built an altar over against the land of Canaan; on the banks of the Jordan, at the passage of the children of Israel;" The whole congregation 12 of the children of Israel assembled at Shiloh, to go up to make war against them. And the 13 children of Israel sent to the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half tribe of Manasseh, into the land of Gilead,

CHAP. XXII. 7.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. Thus were the Levites dispersed in Israel, among all the other tribes, that they might enjoy the benefit of their instructions. Devoted to the study of the law and literature, they were at hand every where to give direction, solve the doubts of the people, and teach them their duty. From their sacred profession they were bound to be exemplary in their conduct; and to let their light so shine that others might be led to God. How important then might this appointment be to the state and to religion! And how just the precept, 'Remember the Levite.'

of the Jordan, in their own territory. We must then give the preposition (2) a rather unusual sense in this verse, to make it agree with what follows. It often signifies against, or towards. See Noldius. Had the altar been on the west side of Jordan, the other tribes would soon have destroyed it.

12. And when the children of Israel heard; Sept. Syr. Vulg. 4 ms.

2. The reflection on God's faithfulness is as encouraging as it is true. As he is under no obligation to promise any thing to guilty man; every promise must arise from his own grace; and as truth and constancy are perfections of his nature, we may safely infer that no unconditional promise will fail. "Hath he said it, and shall it not come to pass? Hath he spoken, and shall he not do it?" Christian, cleave to the promise of one who cannot lie; trust to the promise of one, to whom nothing is impossible, and the riches of whose grace is equal to the greatness of his power.

They built it large, that it might be seen at a distance.

12. The whole congregation. This can only mean their chiefs and rulers.

17. Is the iniquity of Peor, &c. Compare Numb. xxv. 3, 4. Build.

14 Phinehas, the son of Eleazar the priest, And with him, ten chiefs, a chief from each chief-house, through all the ten tribes of Israel; and each one was head of the house of their fathers, among the thousands of Israel.

15 And they came unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half tribe of Manasseh, unto the land of Gilead,

16 and they spoke with them, saying, "Thus saith the whole congregation of Jehovah, 'What trespass is this that ye have committed against the God of Israel, in turning now away, from following Jehovah; in building for yourselves an altar, and so rebelling this day against Jeho-

17 vah? Is the iniquity of Peor too little for us; from which, although there was a plague in the congregation of Jehovah, we are not cleansed,

18 unto this day, But that ye must turn away now from following Jehovah? For it will be, that as ye, to day, rebel against Jehovah, to morrow he will be wroth against the whole con-

19 gregation of the children of Israel! If the land of your possession be deemed unclean, pass ye over unto the land of Jehovah's possession, where Jehovah's tabernacle dwelleth; and take possession among us: but rebel not against Jehovah, nor rebel against us, by building for yourselves an altar, besides the altar of Jehovah,

20 our God. Did not Achar, the son of Zerah, commit a trespass in what was devoted? and was there not wrath on the whole congregation of Israel? For that man perished not alone in his iniquity."

21 Then the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, answered, and said unto the heads of the thou-

22 sands of Israel. "God of gods is Jehovah; the God of gods is Jehovah; himself knoweth our design; and Israel he shall know it. If it be in rebellion, or if in transgression against Jehovah, 'let him' not this day spare us. If 23 we have built an altar for ourselves to turn from following Jehovah, or if to offer thereon burnt-offering, or wheaten-offering, or to offer feast-offerings thereon, let Jehovah himself require it! But have we not rather done it for 24 fear of this thing, saying, 'In time to come your children might speak unto our children, saying, 'What have ye to do with Jehovah, the God of Israel? For Jehovah hath made the 25 Jordan a boundary between us and you, ye children of Reuben and children of Gad; ye have no part in Jehovah:' thus your children may make our children cease to fear Jehovah. Therefore we said, 'Let us now for ourselves 26 build an altar; not for burnt offering, or for other sacrifice; But that it may be a witness 27 between us and you, and our generations after us, that we may perform the service of Jehovah in his presence, with our burnt-offerings, and with our sacrifices, and with our feast-offerings; that your children may not say to our children in time to come, 'Ye have no part in Jehovah.' For we said it shall be, if they should thus say 28 to us or to our generations, in time to come, that we may say, 'Behold the pattern of the altar of Jehovah, which our fathers made, not for burnt offerings, nor for other sacrifices; but as a witness between us and you.' Far be it 29 from us, that we should rebel against Jehovah, and turn this day from following Jehovah, by building an altar for burnt-offerings, for wheaten-offerings, or for other sacrifices, besides the altar of Jehovah, our God, which is before his tabernacle."

And when Phinehas the priest, and the chiefs 30 of the congregation and heads of the thousands of Israel who were with him, heard the words

ing another altar for sacrifice was rebellion against Jehovah; and turning from his appointed method of worship.

19. Be deemed unclean. If ye do not consider it as part of the promised land, or as not holy because the altar of Jehovah is with us, come back and inherit among us.

20. Perished not alone. Geddes renders, 'nor was he the only man who perished for, &c'

22. Let him not. The textual reading refers to Eliazar, 'spare thou us not.' The reading of the version, which I have adopted refers to Jehovah, who is before mentioned. The whole of this reply to Eliazar is very affecting; and shows the deep interest the two tribes and half took in maintaining their religious privileges.

that the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the children of Manasseh spoke, 31 they were satisfied. And Phinehas, the son of Eleazar the priest, said to the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the children of Manasseh, "This day we perceive that Jehovah is among us, because ye have not committed this trespass against Jehovah: now ye have delivered the children of Israel from the avenging hand of Jehovah."

32 And Phinehas, the son of Eleazar the priest, and the chiefs, returned from the children of Reuben, and from the children of Gad, out of the land of Gilead, unto the land of Canaan, to the children of Israel, and brought them the 33 answer. And the answer satisfied the children of Israel; and the children of Israel blessed God, and spoke no more of going to make war against them, to destroy the land in which the children of Reuben and of Gad dwelt. 34 And the children of Reuben and the children of Gad called the altar 'Ed' [A WITNESS]: for (said they) it is a witness between us that Jehovah 'He' is God.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXII. 1. We learn that fidelity to our promise, and steady obedience to God, are worthy of applause and commendation. For this Joshua commends the Reubenites and their neighbours. It is much for our honour and advantage to be constant and faithful in the discharge of our duty; and he that is so, is approved of God and accepted with men.

2. We behold in the conduct of the nine tribes and half tribe, a zeal in supporting religion worthy of praise. Their zeal was not like a devouring fire; its ardour was mitigated by charity, and its exercise tempered with prudence. They first make inquiry, lest they should be misinformed. Before we censure the supposed errors of others, let us in like manner make inquisition, and then act accordingly. A little prudence would often prevent mistakes and quarrels.

3. If we are ever so severely censured and reproached, let us put on meekness, and rule our own spirits; so these Reubenites did. Had they answered with reproaches and passion, perhaps it might have occasioned the loss of thousands of lives, and laid a foundation for perpetual difference and contention between

AND many days had now passed, after Jehovah had given rest unto Israel from all their surrounding enemies; and Joshua was old and far gone in days. And Joshua called for all 2 Israel, for their elders, and for their chiefs, and for their judges, and for their officers, and said unto them, 'I am old, far gone in days. And ye have seen all that Jehovah your 3 God hath done unto all these nations for your sakes; for Jehovah your God, is he that hath fought for you. Behold, I have divided to you 4 by lot these nations that remain, to be an inheritance for your tribes, with all the nations that I have cut off from the Jordan even unto the great western sea. And Jehovah your God, 5 he shall expel them from before you, and drive them out of your sight; and ye shall possess their land as Jehovah your God, hath promised to you. Be ye therefore most strenuous to keep 6 and to do all that is written in the book of the tribes of Israel. A soft answer turneth away wrath. They did not bid the other tribes mind their own business, or give them an impertinent answer; but they explained the matter, and with all calmness vindicated themselves; a good example to us 'when we are reviled, not to revile again.'

4. When we are censured, it is a happy thing to be able to appeal to God for the purity of our intentions. It is no uncommon thing for those that erect another altar, or place of worship, to be censured and condemned, though they may keep close to God and not depart from him; they are often charged by violent bigots as schismatics and rebels. It is fit we should give a mild answer to such unjust censures. The Lord God knows that we have not built or supported a church, to promote faction or party, to draw men from God and religion, but to lead them to him. We hold communion with all that love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. And it should be our concern to let Israel know this; to let them see, by the purity of our worship and the regularity of our lives, and especially charity to our differing brethren, that our principles are good, and our motives upright.

the law of Moses, that ye turn not aside from 7 it, to the right or to the left; That ye mix not with those nations, those who remain among you; nor make mention of, nor swear by, the name of their gods, nor serve them, nor bow 8 down yourselves to them: But cleave unto Jehovah your God, as ye have hitherto done.
 9 Hence Jehovah hath driven out from before you, great and powerful nations; so that no man hath hitherto been able to stand before 10 you. One man of you shall chase a thousand,
 for Jehovah your God, himself will fight for you, 11 as he hath promised to you. Take good heed, therefore, to yourselves, that ye love Jehovah 12 your God. For if ye indeed turn aside and cleave to the remnant of those nations, those who remain among you, and intermarry with them, and mix with them, and they with you:
 13 Know for certain, that Jehovah your God, will no more drive out "any" of these nations from before you; but they shall become to you nets and snares: spurs in your sides, and thorns in your eyes; until ye perish off this good land which 14 Jehovah your God hath given to you. And now behold! I am going the way of all the earth; and ye all know in your hearts and in your souls, that not one of all the good things which Jehovah, your God, promised to you, hath failed; all have come to you; not one of them hath failed. Therefore it shall be, that 15

 as all the good things which Jehovah, your God promised, have come to you; so, if ye disobey
him, Jehovah will bring upon you every kind of evil, until he have destroyed you from off this good land, which Jehovah, your God, hath given to you. When ye transgress the cove- 16 nant of Jehovah, your God, which he hath commanded you to keep, and go and serve other gods, and bow down yourselves to them;
 then will the anger of Jehovah be kindled against you, and ye shall perish quickly from off the good land, which he hath given to you."

CHAPTER XXIV.

B. C. 1427. Joshua's second address, to the whole assembly of the Israelites; he reneweth the covenant with them; his age and death.

AGAIN Joshua assembled all the tribes of Israel 1
 to "Shiloh"; and called for the elders of Israel, and for their chiefs, and for their judges, and for their officers; and they presented themselves before God. And Joshua said to the whole 2 people, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'Your fathers down to Terah, the father of Abraham, and the father of Nahor, river, and served other gods. And I took your 3

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIII. 1. Joshua, now grown old, most seriously and affectionately addressed the chiefs of Israel; as on their stedfastness and piety the future welfare of the state and the church depended. Attached as they were to their venerable leader, it is to be presumed, his advice and admonitions must have had considerable influence on their minds, and tended to strengthen their pious resolutions. Thus should aged Christians act—endeavouring to fix religious impressions, on the minds of those who are to succeed them; and, by every motive, engaging them in the service of God.

2. Joshua states the past kindness and faithfulness of God; and urges the people to cleave to and love him. They must be strenuous in keeping his law; must not turn to the right or left, but take heed to all their ways; and then they may confidently hope for success and prosperity. So must we lay it down as an invariable rule of God's proceeding, that humble obedience and the fulfilment of his kind promises on the one hand, and that dis-

given; and so Castalio and Tugurine render.

14. I am going the way, &c; that is, to die, as all other men must.

obedience and the fulfilment of his threatenings, on the other,
 are inseparably connected. Let all the grace of God's promises, and the terror of his threatenings, join to engage us 'to cleave to him all our days.' "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, seeing he is faithful who hath promised."

3. Let us frequently consider death as the way of all the earth, as the way in which we must go. Joshua, as great a man as he was, must go this way. Let us seriously think of this;
 and each say to ourselves, 'when a few years are come, perhaps a few days, I must go the way of all flesh, the way whence I shall not return.' Let this rouse our inactive spirits, quicken our languid zeal, and animate our endeavours to do good. We see our neighbours and acquaintance continually going this way, and we must soon follow. How suitable and important is Solomon's advice, Eccles. ix. 10. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest."

Age and infirmities reminded him, that the time of his departure was near.

CHAP. XXIV. 1. Shiloh. No reason can be assigned, why, in case

father. Abraham from the other side of the river, and led him through the whole land of Canaan. And I promised to multiply his seed; 4 and I gave to him Isaac. And I gave to Isaac, Jacob and Esau; and to Esau I gave mount Seir, for a possession; but Jacob and his children went down into Egypt; and they became there a great, numerous and powerful nation. 5 But the Egyptians afflicted them; And I sent Moses and Aaron, and I smote Egypt with the plagues which I caused among them: and afterward I brought you out. And I brought your fathers out of Egypt; and "they" came unto the sea; and the Egyptians pursued your fathers with chariots and horsemen unto the 7 Red sea. And when they cried to Jehovah, he put darkness between "them" and the Egyptians, and brought the sea upon them, and covered them; and your eyes have seen what I did to the Egyptians. When ye had dwelt a 8 long period in the wilderness, I then brought you into the land of the Amorites, who dwelt on the other side of the Jordan: and they fought with you, and I gave them into your hand, and I destroyed them from before you that 9 ye might possess their land. Then Balak, the son of Zippor, king of Moab, arose to make war against Israel, and sent and called Balaam, 10 the son of Beor, to curse you: But I would not hearken to Balaam; therefore he still blessed you: thus I delivered you out of his hand. 11 And ye passed over the Jordan, and came unto Jericho; and the men of Jericho fought against you, as did the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hethites, and the Girgasites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites; and I delivered them into your hand. And I sent 12 the hornet before you, which drove out "twelve" kings of the Amorites from before you; for not with your sword, nor with your bow, were they vanquished. And I have given to you a 13 land, for which ye did not labour, and in cities which ye built not, ye dwell; ye eat of vineyards and oliveyards which ye did not plant.

"Now therefore fear Jehovah, and serve him 14 in sincerity and in truth: and put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the river, and in Egypt; and serve Jehovah. Or if it seem evil to you to serve 15 Jehovah, choose ye this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the river, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell! But as for me, and my household, we will serve Jehovah." The people then answered and said, "Far be 16 it from us that we should forsake Jehovah, to serve other gods; For Jehovah is our God; 17 he it is brought us and our fathers out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage, and who did those great signs in our sight, and hath preserved us in all the ways in which we walked, and among all the nations through which we passed. And Jehovah hath driven 18 out from before us, all the people, even the Amorites, who dwelt in the land: Jehovah we will also serve; for HE is our God." And 19

the textual reading be retained, Joshua should leave the tabernacle, and assemble them elsewhere. But from the text itself they assembled, where the tabernacle was, as they 'presented themselves before God,' which uniformly signifies 'before the ark,' which was in the tabernacle. The 26 verse confirms this remark, and proves Shiloh, and not Shechem is the true reading.

2. River; i. e. the Euphrates.—Your fathers. The turn I have given to this verse is necessary; for Terah only is mentioned, to whom, fathers cannot apply. Their remote ancestors, down to Terah, had lived in the east, but Terah crossed the river, and came to Haran, where he died. They, like others, had been idolaters. This is noticed to magnify the freeness and riches of that grace displayed in the vocation of Abraham.

3. And I promised to multiply. The whole history requires this version, as the following words, restrict the meaning of (בָּרַךְ) to this sense. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

4. The clause retained by the Sept. renders the narrative more full, complete and connected.

5. You out. Many of the people to whom these words are addressed, had been brought out of Egypt; and, although they were at that period under twenty years of age, they could not have forgotten what their own eyes had seen.

12. And I sent the hornet. This had been promised, Exod. xxiii. 28; and again Deut. vii. 20. Yet we do not read of its having happened in the conquest of Canaan. I consider the words figurative. See Note, Exod. xxiii. 28. I am satisfied Joshua does not refer to the conquest of Sihon and Og, but to the kings of Hazor, and the contiguous and independent cities. Deut. vii. 20. Moses mentions this after the conquest of Sihon and Og, as what God would do to the kings of Canaan.

19. Ye cannot serve Jehovah. Some modern interpreters have supposed, that the true reading here should be cease ye not. The conjecture is ingenious, but unsupported by any ms. or ancient version: nor is it necessary. The original word does not always imply an impossibility. It here implies only a doubt, as if a General should say to his troops, ardently

Joshua said to the people, "Ye cannot serve Jehovah; for he is a most holy God; he is a jealous God; he will not bear your transgressions and your sins. If ye forsake Jehovah, and serve strange gods, then, after that he hath done good to you, he will turn and afflict you, and consume you." And the people said to Joshua, "Nay; but Jehovah we will serve." And Joshua said unto the people, "Ye are witnesses against yourselves that ye have chosen Jehovah, and engaged to serve him only." And they said, "We are witnesses." "Now, therefore, put away, said he, the strange gods that are among you, and incline your heart to Jehovah, the God of Israel." And the people said to Joshua, "Jehovah our God, will we serve, and his voice will we obey." Thus, Joshua made a covenant, that day, with the people, and made it a statute and an ordinance in 'Shiloh', 'before the tabernacle of the God of Israel'. And Joshua wrote these words in the book of the law of God; and took a great stone, and set it up there under a turpentine tree, which was by the sanctuary of Jehovah. And Joshua said to all the people, "Behold! this stone shall be a witness against 'you'; for it hath heard all the words of Jehovah, which he hath 'this day' spoken to 'you': it shall therefore be a witness against you; lest ye deny your God." Then Joshua sent away the people, every one unto his inheritance.

And after these things, Joshua, the son of Nun, the servant of Jehovah, died; being an hundred and ten years old. And they buried him in the border of his own inheritance, in Timnath-serah, which is in mount Ephraim, on the north side of the hill of Gaash. And Israel served Jehovah all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that overlived Joshua, and who had known all the works of Jehovah, which he had done for Israel.

And the bones of Joseph, which the children of Israel brought up out of Egypt, they buried in Shechem, in a parcel of ground which Jacob bought of the sons of Hamor, the father of Shechem, for an hundred pieces of silver: and it became an inheritance of the children of Joseph. And Eleazar, the son of Aaron, the priest, died; and they buried him in Gebaath; which had been given to his son Phinehas, in mount Ephraim.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. 1. We have now come to the close of Joshua's active life and brave exploits; and on reviewing them there is much to admire and commend. He is the first person, who received that name, which is dear to all Christians, Joshua, or Jesus; and it might be intended that he should be typical of him, who is a saviour in a far more noble sense, than Joshua was to the Israelites. Let us trace, in the persons and events recorded in the old Testament, those shadows of good things to come, those morning stars who were the precursors of the sun of righteousness, and rejoice that we enjoy the full light of gospel day.

2. The first miracle, wrought in favour of Joshua, was the driving back of the waters of the Jordan; and in this river our Lord was baptized, when the heavens were opened, and the Holy Spirit descended as a dove, and a voice from the excellent glory proclaimed him to be the 'son of God.'—Joshua led the tribes desirous to attack the enemy, 'ye cannot conquer them;' while he seems to doubt their valour, he, in fact, exhorts them to display it. So Joshua; as if he had said, 'I know the temptations to which ye will be exposed, and your proneness to idolatry; and I fear the consequence, especially, when I consider the holiness of God, and his jealous regard to his own honour; for he will not bear with your defection and your sins in turning to other gods.'

23. Put away the strange gods. From this it is evident, that though they worshipped Jehovah publicly, many privately had their idols.

25. Thus Joshua made a covenant. The people had three times most solemnly promised to serve Jehovah; and, as God's minister, confirmed their engagement, in the usual manner, by ordering sacrifices to be offered, before the tabernacle of the God of Israel.

26, 27. Joshua took care that this public and solemn covenant should be recorded for the benefit of future generations. Hence a Copy of the Covenant was written in the book of the law of God; perhaps that which was laid up before the ark; and next he took and set up a great stone by the sanctuary, as a witness of the transaction.

30. The hill of Gaash. The Sept. and Arab. add after this, "And with him in the same monument, were deposited the sharp (stone) knives, with which, as the Lord had commanded, the children of Israel were circumcised; and there they remain unto this day."

33. After this verse the Sept. contains the following addition, which seems in part to have been taken from Judges: "From that day the children of Israel took the ark, and carried it about among them: and Phinehas served as priest, instead of his father Eleazar, until his death; when he was entombed in Gabaar (Gibeah), which belonged to him—But the children of Israel, having gone, every one to his own place and city, worshipped Astarte and Astaroth, and the other gods of the nations around them: and the Lord delivered them into the hands of Eglon king of Moab, who had dominion over them eighteen years."

through the Jordan to Canaan. Moses died in the wilderness;—the law could not bring them in; but they must pass the Jordan and obtain possession under Joshua, a Saviour. Nor can we ever enter the promised land, the better country, but in the same manner, under the conduct of Jesus, and indebted to his grace. He has conquered death; and will make all his people victorious too. In dependence on him, aged and dying saints, descend undismayed into the Jordan of death! His rod and staff will support you; and blissful shall be your future state!

3. Let the transactions we have read of, teach us, how necessary it is to bind ourselves by solemn engagements, to serve Jehovah. Heads of families, adopt Joshua's resolution. Determine that you and your household will serve Jehovah. Princes, magistrates, and leaders in the state, choose Jehovah for your God; cleave to, and love him. Let all, of whatever rank, put away their idols, repent of their sins, and work out their salvation with fear and trembling. Engage your hearts to the Lord; and as he has done you good, so he will continue to do. No enemy shall then stand before you.

4. Joshua, the leader, and Eleazar, the priest of Israel, died; and we shall soon find Israel forgetting their engagements and forsaking God. Our leader and priest, Jesus, liveth for ever. Having once submitted to death for our redemption, death hath no dominion over him. He hath an unchangeable priesthood; and ever liveth to make intercession for us. He had promised to be with his church to the end of the world; to guard, direct and enliven it. To him reader ever look; on his power and grace rely; and where he is, thou shalt go, to share in his glory, and to enjoy his presence for ever!

INTRODUCTION.

This book is called Shophetim (שופטים) which may be rendered, 'the book of the avenging deliverers.' The Judges as they are usually called, were not only the chief magistrates, but the military commanders of the people. Their authority arose from their superior valour and prudence; and usually continued to the end of their lives. Some of them seem to have been the Judges of particular tribes only. (See Introduction, Part i. Ch. 1. § 2.)

Who was the author is uncertain. It is generally ascribed to Samuel, who was the last of the Judges; and, who at the request of the people, resigned his authority to Saul, chosen the king of Israel. The book has been divided into two parts, the first containing an account of the Judges from Othniel to Samson, ending at the sixteenth Chapter; the second containing several incidents which occurred not long after the death of Joshua, and are placed towards the end of the book, in the seventeenth and following Chapters. What relates to the two last Judges, Eli and Samuel, is placed in the 1 Book of Samuel. The Chronology of this period is attended with many difficulties. If we allow 34 years, after the death of Joshua to Othniel, the first Judge, to the 21st of Samuel, the government of the Judges continued for about 317 years.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1425. The deeds of Adoni-bezek requited: Jerusalem and Hebron taken; the conquests of other places; a messenger comes from Gilgal.

1 Now after the death of Joshua, the children of Israel inquired of Jehovah, saying, "Who shall go up first, to fight for us, against the
2 Canaanites?" And Jehovah said, "Judah shall go up; behold! I deliver the land into his
3 hand." And Judah said to Simeon his brother, "Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight against the Canaanites; and I likewise will go with thee into thy lot." So Simeon
4 went with him. And Judah went up; and Jehovah delivered the Canaanites and the Perizzites into their hand; and they slew of them,
5 in Bezek, ten thousand men. And they found Adoni-bezek, in Bezek; and they fought against him, and they slew the Canaanites and 6 the Perizzites. And Adoni-bezek fled; and they pursued him, and caught him, and cut off 7 his thumbs and his great toes. And Adoni-be-

zek said, "Seventy kings, having their thumbs and their great toes cut off, gathered their food under my table! As I have done, so God hath requited me." And they brought him to Jerusalem, and there he died.

The children of Judah, then fought against 8 Jerusalem, and took and smote it with the edge of the sword, and set the city on fire. And 9 afterwards the children of Judah went down to fight against the Canaanites, who dwelt in the southern mountains, and in the plains. And 10 Judah went against the Canaanites who dwelt in Hebron; (but the name of Hebron was formerly Kirjath-arba): 'And they gave Hebron 20 to Caleb, as Moses had said; and he expelled the three Anakites', Sheshai, and Ahiman, and Talmai, and they were slain. And thence they 11 went against the inhabitants of Debir: (but the name of Debir was formerly Kirjath-sepher). And Caleb said, "He that smiteth Kirjath- 12 sepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achsah my daughter to wife. And Othniel the son of 13

CHAP. XXIV. 1. They inquired of Jehovah; that is, through the medium of the High Priest, who put on the Urim and Thummim, and returned the answer which God gave.

5. Adoni-Bezek. Literally, 'My Lord of Bezek.' He seems to have been a considerable sovereign, and a cruel tyrant; whose capital was Bezek; a town still existing in the days of Jerom, between Sichem and Bethshean.

7. Seventy kings. Doubtless chiefs, or heads of small hordes.

8. The king of Jerusalem is numbered among those smitten by Joshua: Ch. xii. 10; but either the city was not then taken, or had been retaken by the Jebusites. Even after this sacking, it seems to have been rebuilt, and repossessed by its ancient inhabitants. See 2 Sam. v. 6.

10—15. These verses occur Joshua xv. 14—20. What is here related happened after the death of Joshua; so that in this place we have the proper order of time. They are related in the book of Joshua, because there the writer treats of the division of the land; and Caleb, according to the

Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother, took it; and 14 he gave him Achsah his daughter to wife. And it came to pass, when she was going with him;
that she persuaded him to let her ask a field
from her father: and she alighted from her ass;
and Caleb said unto her, "What wouldst thou, 15 'my daughter'?" And she said to him, "Give to me a blessing: for thou hast given to me a south land; give to me also springs of water." And Caleb gave her upper springs and nether springs.
16 And the children of 'Hobab, the" Kenite, Moses' kinsman, went up out of the city of palm-trees, with the children of Judah, into the wilderness of Judah, which lieth in the south of Arad; and they went and dwelt among the 17 people. And Judah went with Simeon his brother, and they slew the Canaanites who inhabited Zephath, and utterly destroyed it. And the name of the city was called Hormah, [THE 18 DEVOTED PLACE]. But Judah took "not" Gaza with its territories, nor Askelon with its territories, 19 nor Ekron with its territories. And Jehovah was with Judah; and he drove out the inhabitants of the mountain; but went not to drive out the inhabitants of the plain, because they had chariots of iron.
21 Nor did the children of Benjamin drive out the Jebusites who inhabited Jerusalem; but the Jebusites dwell with the children of Benjamin,
in Jerusalem, unto this day.
22 And the "children" of Joseph also went up against Bethel; and Jehovah was with them.
23 And the "children" of Joseph sent to descry 24 Bethel; the name of which city was Luz. And the watch saw a man come out of the city, and they said unto him, "Show to us, we pray thee,

the entrance into the city, and we will show mercy to thee." And when he had showed to 25 them the entrance into the city; they smote the city with the edge of the sword; but they let go the man and all his family. And the man 26 went into the land of the Hethites, and built a city, and called its name Luz; which is its name unto this day.
Nor did Manasseh drive out the inhabitants 27
of Beth-shean and its towns, nor those of Taanach
and its towns, nor the inhabitants of Dor
and its towns, nor the inhabitants of Ibleam
and its towns, nor the inhabitants of Megiddo
and its towns: but in that land, the Canaanites continued to dwell. But when Israel was strong, 28 they put the Canaanites under tribute, and did not utterly drive them out.
Nor did Ephraim drive out the Canaanites 29 who dwelt in Gezer; but the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among them.
Nor did Zebulun drive out the inhabitants 30 of Kitron, nor the inhabitants of Nahalol; but the Canaanites dwelt among them, and became tributaries.
Nor did Asher drive out the inhabitants of 31
Accho, nor the inhabitants of Zidon, nor of Ahlab, nor of Achzib, nor of Helbah, nor of Aphik, nor of Rehob: But the Asherites 32
dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land: for they did not drive them out.
Nor did Naphtali drive out the inhabitants 33
of Beth-shemesh, nor the inhabitants of Bethanath;
but they dwelt among the Canaanites, divine command, had Hebron and the contiguous country allotted to him. See Notes, Joshua xv. 18, &c.

16. Hobab—the kinsman. The word (חָוִי) signifies, 'a relation by marriage;' and as it is most probable, he was the brother-in-law, I have rendered by a general term. See Note, Numb. x. 29.

18. But they took not. The whole of the following history proves, that the Philistines were not now subdued, nor their cities possessed by the Israelites. Hence I have adopted the reading of the Sept.

19. But went not, &c. As the text is here elliptical, and something must be supplied, we ought to supply in such a manner as to vindicate the divine character. It has been said, that God would not so assist Judah as to expel the inhabitants of the plain, because they had iron chariots. The present version of the Sept. the Vulg. and two mss. support the opinion. The Chaldee explains, 'For after they had sinned, they could not drive, &c.' Both the Syr. and Arab. either read differently, or they have rendered freely: 'But the inhabitants of the plain, they slew not.' If we adhere to the textual reading, we ought to supply as I have done; and lay the blame on the unwise policy and unbelieving fear of Judah.

20. I have transposed this verse, as evidently connected with the 10

27. Continued to dwell. The verb (לָשָׁב) denotes, to resolve, to determine, but seems here and in other places, when connected with (לָשָׁבָה) to dwell, to signify the consequence of their resolution. For though they were harrassed by the Israelites, and reduced under tribute, they still continued to dwell in that land.

the inhabitants of the land: nevertheless the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh and of Beth-anath became tributaries unto them. And the Amorites confined the children of Dan in the mountains; for they would not suffer them to come down to the valleys; But the Amorites continued to dwell in mount Heres, in Aijalon, and in Shaalbim; yet the hand of the children of Joseph prevailed, so that they became tributaries. And the boundary of those Amorites was among the heights of Akrabbim, from Selah and upwards.

1 Now a messenger of Jehovah came up from Gilgal to Bochim, and said to the children of Israel, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'I brought you out of Egypt, and have brought you unto the land which I swore to your fathers; and I said, I will never break my covenant with you; But ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land, nor worship their gods'; but their statues ye shall break down, and their altars ye shall destroy. Yet ye have not obeyed my voice! Why have ye thus done? Therefore I also say to you, 'I will not drive them out from before you; but they shall be as traps for you, and their gods shall be to you as snares!" And when the messenger of Jehovah had spoken these words to all the children of Israel, the people raised their voice, and wept. And they called the name of that place Bochim, [THE WEEPING PLACE.] And there they sacrificed to Jehovah.

CHAPTER II.

B C. 1425. What occurred on the death of Joshua; the wickedness of the new generation; the Canaanites left to punish them.

Now when Joshua dismissed the people, the children of Israel went to possess the land, every man unto his inheritance. And the people served Jehovah all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders who overlived Joshua; who had seen all the great works of Jehovah, that he did for Israel. And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Jehovah, died, being an hundred and ten years old. And they buried him in the border of his inheritance, in Timnath-serah, in mount Ephraim, on the north side of the hill Gaash. And all that generation also were gathered unto their fathers; and there arose another generation after them, who knew not Jehovah, nor yet

CHAP. II. 1. ^aSo Syr. Ar. said to them, Thus saith Jehovah. Sept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. This Chapter affords a striking instance of the uncertainty of worldly greatness, and of a just and retributive providence. Adoni-bezek had for a while been successful in his enterprises; and subdued and reduced to the most degrading condition seventy surrounding chiefs. His cruelty appears, in his treatment of his vanquished foes; and his pride, in preserving them as witnesses of his victory and power. At length he is conquered; and the measure he had meted to others, is meted to him. 'As I have done, so hath God done to me!' How often are the particular sins of men marked in their punishment! Let conquerors and oppressors remember, 'that verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth.'

2. We also learn, how often through mistaken policy, love of ease, and an unbelieving heart, men lose the advantages and comforts they enjoy, and bring on themselves various troubles and distresses. Had the Israelites gone forward, in the strength

36. From Selah and upwards. Geddes renders, the upper Selah; and observes there were two Selahs, or Petras: one in Arabia Petraea, the other in Palestine. The latter seems here designated.

CHAP. II. 1. A messenger. The Hebrew word signifies either a messenger or an angel: the context here, seems to require the former; and so it is understood by our best modern critics. He was probably some of the Lord Jehovah, their enemies soon would have been subdued! But resting on their arms, their enemies acquired fresh strength, and continued to dwell among them. Thus is it in the spiritual warfare. Our negligence in conquering our bad habits, and in seeking more earnestly divine aid and spiritual blessings, deprives us of much consolation, and embitters the whole of our lives.

3. We learn from this, that there may be some kind of sorrow for sin, and prayer to God, without reformation. The Israelites wept, and sacrificed unto Jehovah, and prayed on account of their sin, but yet they afterwards rebelled. That some are impressed with a sense of sin, brought to tears of contrition, from the fear of hell, or some general sense of having provoked God; and they offer many prayers for forgiveness, and yet return to folly. Let us remember, it is not confessing our sins, or weeping on account of them, but our forsaking them, which will secure to us forgiveness.

prophet who resided at Gilgal. See Poole. It was not usual, when an angel appeared to mention the place from which he came.—Bochim. The Greek translator supposed it to be in the neighbourhood of Bethel: and this is highly probable. Compare 2 Sam. v. 23, and 1 Chron. xiv. 14. The additions to this verse from the old versions seem necessary.

3. Traps. Our version renders sides. Dethe adopts the notion of 11 the works which he had done for Israel. And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of Jehovah, and served the Baals of the Canaanites. And they forsook Jehovah, the God of their fathers, who brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people who were round about them, and worshipped them, and provoked Jehovah to anger. So they forsook Jehovah, and served Baal and Ashtaroth.

14 And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Israel, and he delivered them into the hands of pillagers, who pillaged them; and he gave them up into the hands of their enemies round about, so that they could not any longer stand before their enemies. Whatsoever they undertook, the hand of Jehovah was against them for evil, as Jehovah had said, and as he had sworn to them.

16 Nevertheless when they were greatly distressed, Jehovah raised up judges, who delivered them out of the hand of those who pillaged them. And yet to their judges they would not hearken; but went astray after other gods, and worshipped them. They turned quickly from the way in which their fathers walked, who obeyed the commandments of Jehovah; but not so did they. For when Jehovah raised them up judges, and Jehovah was with the judge, and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies all the days of the judge, (for Jehovah repented because of their groanings through those who oppressed them); Yet when the judge was dead, they returned and corrupted themselves more than their fore-fathers, in following other gods, and in serving and worshipping them; they departed not from their own evil deeds, nor from their own perverse way. Therefore the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Israel; and he said, "Because that this people have transgressed my covenant which I commanded their fathers, and have not hearkened to my voice; I also will not henceforth drive out from before them any of the nations which Joshua left when he died; That by them Israel may be proved whether they will keep the way of Jehovah to walk therein, as their fathers kept it, or not! For this reason Jehovah had left those nations, without driving them out hastily; nor had he delivered them into the hand of Joshua.

Now these are the nations which Jehovah left, to prove Israel by them; as many of them as had not known all the wars of Canaan; Also that the generations of the children of Israel might learn war; at least such as knew nothing thereof: The five lordships of the Philistines, and all the Sidonian Canaanites, and the Hivites that dwelt about mount Lebanon, from mount Baal-hermon unto the entrance of Hamath. And by them were Israel to be proved, to know whether they would hearken

Schultens, and from the Arabic renders adversarii, deriving the noun from אויב or אוי. Schindler renders as I have done.

5. And there they offered. &c. Hence it has been inferred, that whith was the same with Shiloh; as sacrifices, by the law of Moses, were to be offered only before the ark. But the law, in this respect was not always observed, and the ark itself was occasionally carried from place to place. Compare Ch. vi. 19; 1 Sam. xvi. 2, and 2 Sam. xxiv. 25.

6-9. Compare Joshua xxiv. 29-31.

11. Served the Baals, &c. See Introduction, Part iii. Ch. vi. § 33.

13. Baal and Ashtaroth. See Introduction, Part iii. Ch. 6, § 4.

15. Whatsoever they undertook. Literally, 'whithersoever they went.' I have preferred the sense to the idiom. Bochart observes that this is the sense. See Poole.

17. Their fathers, who obeyed. I think there is a reference here to their immediate fathers, who entered into Canaan; and who are said to have obeyed and served the Lord; and in the 19 verse to their forefathers, who perished in the wilderness.

20-23. It has been urged, that the author of this book contradicts Moses, who asserts that God commanded the Canaanites to be destroyed, lest they should be 'a snare' to his people, and promised to give them the power to do it; but here we are told he left these Canaanites, that by them

he might prove his people, whether they would hearken to his voice or not. Compare Deut. vii. 16, 24, and xx. 16. Whoever reads the passages referred to, and considers their connexion, will conclude, that they were conditional; their fulfilment depending on the obedience of the people; and had the Israelites followed up their conquest of Canaan, there can be little doubt they would have extirpated or driven out the whole race. But instead of this, they turned from the right way, and went and served the gods of the land; they transgressed the covenant; hence God said, 'I also will not drive out any, &c; but by them ye shall be proved or tried. If ye keep the way of Jehovah, ye shall prosper; but if not they shall harass and oppress you.' In this I can see no contradiction; I see only what Moses so often urged as a motive to obedience, the calamities which would follow disobedience.

CHAP. III. 1-4. Here the author assigns another reason, why certain Canaanites were suffered to remain; that a military spirit might be preserved, and those who had not known the wars waged in the conquest of Canaan, might be trained to arms, lest the whole kingdom should be vanquished by some of the surrounding nations.

3. All the Sidonian Canaanites. Literally, 'all the Canaanites, even the Sidonians.' This is the true version; the common one is absurd, as it implies that no Canaanites had been subdued.

8 Ashtaroths. Therefore the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Israel, and he gave them into the hand of Chushan-rishathaim, king of 'Mesopotamia'; and the children of Israel
9 served Chushan-rishathaim eight years. And when the children of Israel cried to Jehovah, Jehovah raised up a deliverer to the children of Israel, who delivered them, even Othniel, the 10 son of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother. And the Spirit of Jehovah came upon him, and he judged Israel, and went out to war; and Jehovah delivered Chushan-rishathaim, king of Mesopotamia, into his hand; and his hand

CHAP. III. 7. *So Syr. 8. *Sept. Syr. Arab. of Aram.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. We here see the folly and hardening nature of sin. How strange is it that after all the miracles, warnings, and admonitions the Israelites had received, they should turn to strange gods. Such is the nature of sin; it hardens the hearts of men, and then, contrary to the remonstrances of God's word, and the convictions of conscience, they run headlong into ruin. The more we have seen and known of God, the more solemnly we have professed to obey him, the greater will our shame and guilt be if we forsake him.

2. It is just in God to make those our torment and vexation,

7. Baals and Ashtaroths. I have rendered in the plural, because I think there is a reference to the various compound images of Baal and Ashtaroth; that is, the Sun and the Moon.

8. The children of Israel served, &c. This implies at least, that they paid an annual tribute to Chushan-rishathaim; and might be subject to other grievous exactions. So the phrase must be understood afterwards.

10. The Spirit of Jehovah came upon him. By this phrase, which often occurs in this book, seems to be meant, a spirit of courage and bravery, by which Othniel and others, were impelled to avenge their country's wrongs, and to maintain their liberty and independence.

prevailed against Chushan-rishathaim. And 11 the land had rest forty years.

And Othniel, the son of Kenaz, died; And 12 the children of Israel again did evil in the sight of Jehovah; and Jehovah strengthened Eglon, the king of Moab, against Israel, because they had done evil in the sight of Jehovah. And he 13 gathered to him the children of Ammon and Amalek, and went and smote Israel, and possessed the city of Palm-trees. And the chil- 14 dren of Israel served Eglon, the king of Moab, eighteen years. But when the children of 15 Israel cried to Jehovah, Jehovah raised them up a deliverer, Ehud, the son of Gera, a Benjaminite, a left-handed man: and by him the children of Israel sent a present to Eglon, the king of Moab. Now Ehud had made for him- 16 self a two-edged dagger, of a cubit's length; and he had girded it under his garments, upon his right thigh. And he brought the present 17 to Eglon, king of Moab; (now Eglon was a very fat man.) And when he had made an end 18 of offering the present, he sent away the people who had carried the present. But he him- 19 self returned from the carved idols which were by Gilgal, and said, "I have a secret message to thee, O king!" The king said, "Silence!" So all who attended him went out from him, whom, by the neglect of our duty, we make friends and associates. God commanded Israel to root out the Canaanites, and to avoid their society; but they would not hearken to his voice; therefore God left them to scourge and tyrannize over them. Thus if men, instead of mortifying their lusts and subduing their corrupt passions, will indulge them, allow them to live and govern them, 'God will give them up to their own hearts' lusts, and they will suffer the dreadful consequences of their own neglect. If men will be the associates of the wicked, the worthless, and the idle, they will certainly suffer by it, for these will become thorns in their eyes, and prove a snare to their souls.

13. City of Palm trees; that is, Jericho. He had crossed the Jordan, and seized this city as a post, whence he might attack other parts of the country.

15. A left-handed man. The Geneva, the Bishops, and Purver, render, 'lame of the right hand.' Others, 'who used both hands for the right; or alike.' Both the Sept. and Vulg. support this last version; and 1 Chron. xii. 2, at least supports the opinion, that they could sling stones, or shoot with the bow, with the left hand. It is often mentioned by the Heathen Poets as a qualification of their heroes, that they could use both hands alike.

17. Brought the present. This was under pretence of honouring him.

20 Then Ehud came to him, and he was sitting alone in a summer-chamber, which he had for himself. And Ehud said, "I have a message from God to thee." And he arose from his
22 it into his belly: And the haft also went in after the blade; and the fat closed upon the blade, so that he could not draw the dagger out of his belly; and it went through behind.
23 Then Ehud, when he had shut the doors of the chamber upon him, and locked them, went out
24 through the porch. When he was gone, Eglon's servants came; and they looked, and lo! the doors of the chamber were locked; and they said, "Surely he repositeth in his summer-cham-25 ber." And they waited until they were ashamed; and, behold, he opened not the doors of the chamber; therefore they took a key, and opened them: and, behold! their lord was 26 lying dead on the ground. And Ehud, during their consternation, escaped, and passed beyond the carved idols, and got safe to Seirath.
27 And when he had come, he caused the trumpet to be blown in mount Ephraim, and the children of Israel went down with him from the mount, and he before them. And he said to them, 28 "Follow me; for Jehovah hath delivered your enemies, the Moabites, into your hand." And they followed him, and took the fords of the Jordan, towards Moab, and suffered not a man to pass over. And they slew of Moab, at that 29 time, about ten thousand men, all stout, and all men of valour; and not one escaped. So 30 Moab was subdued, that day, under the hand of Israel. And the land had rest eighty years.

And after Ehud, was Shamgar, the son of 31 Anath, who slew of the Philistines, six hundred men, with ox goads; and so he, in that quarter, delivered Israel.

B. C. 1316. Deborah and Barak deliver Israel from Jabin and Sisera. Jael killeth Sisera.

AND, when Ehud was dead, the children of 1 Israel again did evil in the sight of Jehovah; And Jehovah gave them into the hand of Jabin, 2 a king of Canaan, who reigned in Hazor; the captain of whose host was Sisera, who dwelt in Harosheth-goin. And the children of Israel 3

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. We see in this Chapter, the fulfilment of God's threatening. Again Israel sinned, and again they were delivered into the hand of their enemies. They repeatedly felt the scourge of oppression, that they might know the difference between God's service, and the service of the surrounding nations. Sin always brings sorrow; and the sinner will find it bitterness in the end. As sin is what God hates, so it is what he will punish. He may for a while delay, but will at length take vengeance.

2. We also learn the efficacy of repentance. When they became sensible of their sin, and sought to God, he, being full of compassion, raised them up deliverers. He endowed Othniel and Ehud with a suitable spirit, and they threw off the yoke of oppression. When and of conciliating his favour.

19. Carved idols. So both the Sept. and Vulg. render; and there is no authority for the common version, quarries. These idols had been probably erected by Eglon; and the sight of them might inspire Ehud with new ardour to execute his purpose.—Silence. Both the Syr. and Arab. seem to have read differently, from the present text, and as if he had addressed his attendants; and what follows strongly supports this version.

20. Sitting in a summer chamber. What Shaw calls a Kiosk; a room raised above the rest, and built beyond the house for the sake of retirement and coolness.

22. And it went through behind. The Hebrew word rendered behind, is found only here. It seems not to have been in the copy of the Greek translator; and indeed I am inclined to think it an interpolation, or corruption.

VOL. I. PART V.

God designs to accomplish any work, he never fails to raise up fit instruments to effect it.

3. The reverence with which Eglon rose to receive a message from a god, shames the irreverence of many christians. Though he was a king, in private, and unweildy; though he was a proud, tyrannical oppressor, yet he rose to receive a message from a God, whom he knew not. It becomes us to receive messages from the true God, whom we profess to know and fear, with the greatest reverence of mind. The messages delivered to us from our God, are all kind and gracious, not intended to destroy, but to save us; and therefore carelessness and disregard are highly unbecoming and provoking to him. Let us guard against levity in approaching a throne of grace.

23. From what Shaw says, it appears there was usually a private passage from these rooms, into the porch. When Ehud had effected his purpose, he fled by this way.

24. Surely he repositeth. Literally, 'he covereth his feet.' All our old versions, understood this to mean, easing nature. Most modern Critics more properly consider it as denoting, 'lying down to sleep;' and so the Syr. and Arab. render the words 1 Sam. xxiv. 3.

31. And after Ehud. Geddes supposes Shamgar to have been contemporary with Ehud; and that while the Moabites oppressed the eastern tribes, the Philistines oppressed the western tribes.—Ox goad. In Judea this was in some respects equal to a spear, and was often employed as an offensive weapon. We are not to imagine that Shamgar alone, with one ox-goad, slew all those Philistines: but was accompanied with what Israelites he could assemble, in the quarter next to the Philistines. After all, cried to Jehovah; for he had nine hundred iron chariots, and for twenty years had grievously oppressed the children of Israel.

- 4 And Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth, at that time judged Israel. And she dwelt under the Palm-tree, now called that of Deborah, between Ramah and Beth-el, in mount Ephraim; and the children of Israel
6 went up to her for judgment. And she sent and called Barak, the son of Abinoam, out of Kadesh-naphtali, and said unto him, "Hath not Jehovah, the God of Israel, commanded, saying, 'Go and draw towards mount Tabor, and take with thee ten thousand men of the children of Naphtali, and of the children of 7 Zebulun? And I will draw to thee, to the river Kishon, Sisera, the captain of Jabin's army, with his chariots and his multitude; and I will
8 deliver him into thine hand.'" And Barak said to her, "If thou wilt go with me, then I will go: but if thou wilt not go with me, then I will 9 not go." And she said, "I will surely go with thee; but the expedition which thou makest will not be for thine honour; for Jehovah shall give Sisera into the hand of a woman." And Deborah arose, and went with Barak to Kadesh.
10 And Barak called Zebulun and Naphtali to Kadesh; and he went up with ten thousand men after him; and Deborah went up with him.
12 And they showed Sisera that Barak, the son of 13 Abinoam, was gone up to mount Tabor. And Sisera assembled all his chariots, nine hundred iron chariots, and all the people that were with him, from Harosheth-gaim, unto the river 14 Kishon. And Deborah said unto Barak, "Arise now; for this is the day, in which Jehovah delivereth Sisera into thine hand: is not Jehovah gone out before thee?" So Barak went down from mount Tabor, and ten thousand men after him. And Jehovah discomfited Sisera, and all 15 his chariots, and all his host, with the edge of the sword, before Barak; so that Sisera alighted from his chariot, and fled on foot. But Ba- 16 rak pursued the chariots, and the host, unto Harosheth-gaim: and all the host of Sisera fell by the edge of the sword; not one man was left.

But Sisera had fled on foot to the tent of 17 Jael, the wife of Heber, the Kenite: for there was peace between Jabin, the king of Hazor, and the house of Heber, the Kenite. Now 11 Heber, the Kenite, was of the children of Hobab, the kinsman of Moses; and he had separated from the Kenites, and pitched his tent near the Turpentine-tree of Zaanaim, which is by Kadesh. And Jael went out to 18 meet Sisera, and said unto him, "Turn in, my lord, turn in to me; fear not." And he had turned in with her into the tent, and she covered him with a mantle. And he said to her, 19 "Give me, I pray thee, a little water to drink; for I am thirsty." And she opened a bottle of milk, and let him drink, and again covered him. He then said to her, "Stand in the door of the 20 tent; and should any one come and inquire of thee, and say, 'Is there any man here?' thou shalt say, 'No.'" But Jael, Heber's wife, took a 21 tent-pin, and had an hammer in her hand, and went softly unto him, and smote the nail into his temples, until it was fixed in the ground; (for he was fast asleep,) and he writhed and died. And, behold, as Barak pursued Sisera, 22 Jael came out to meet him, and said to him,

CHAP. IV. 2. Gave them. The sense of (מכר) is to transfer property into the possession of the purchaser; and in such a connexion as this, it signifies 'to give up, to deliver to.'—Harosheth-gaim. I have rendered as a proper name the latter word; for what propriety is there in the common version? All, 'not of the seed of Abraham, were Gentiles.' Compare Josh. xi. 1, 10.

3. Nine hundred iron; &c. The strength of Jabin's army consisted in these. Ch. i. 19.

4. Deborah, a prophetess. God raised individuals to teach and instruct his people; and from what follows it appears, that Deborah not only instructed, but judged them.

6, 7. Deborah here announces the divine will to Barak; and he is assured of victory. This must have been a great encouragement to undertake the enterprise.

19. A bottle of milk. It is supposed to have been Oxygal, or sour camel's milk, which is not only very cooling, but also inebriating. If Sisera drank freely of this, Jael might with more safety destroy him in the manner stated.

21. And he writhed and died. I point with several of the ancient versions, and with them consider (נָפַח) in the sense of rolling, agitating, as a bird its wings.

CHAP. V. 1. On that day. Not on the very day of Battle, but soon after; probably in a solemn assembly of the people. The composi-

“Come, and I will show thee the man whom thou seekest.” And he went with her into the tent, and, behold! Sisera, lay dead, with the 23 tent-pin in his temples. So God subdued on that day, Jabin, the king of Canaan, before 24 the children of Israel. And the hand of the children of Israel prospered, and prevailed against Jabin, the king of Canaan, until they had destroyed Jabin, the king of Canaan.

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 1296. The triumphant song of Deborah and Barak.

1 THEN sang Deborah, and Barak the son of Abinoam, on that day, saying,
2 “For the voluntary exertions of the people In the naked, defenceless state of Israel— Praise ye Jehovah.
3 Hearken, ye kings! give ear ye princes! While I, even I, to Jehovah will sing; Sing psalms to Jehovah the God of Israel:
4 O Jehovah, when thou camest from Seir, When thou didst march from the fields of Edom, The earth trembled, the heavens were dissolved, Dissolved were the clouds into waters!
5 Mountains melted at the presence of Jehovah; Sinai itself at the presence of the God of Israel.

CHAP. VI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. How often are past miseries forgotten and present enjoyments abused to indulgence and profligacy. During sixty years peace, Israel grew proud, forsook God, and again turned to idols. Let their conduct be a caution to us; and if God prospers us, let us in prosperity be humble and thankful, as the best method to secure a continuance of it.
2. How easily can God destroy those objects in which men trust for safety! Sisera doubtless despised the Israelites, and vainly hoped that his iron chariots would save him. He viewed without dismay, perhaps with proud exultation, the little army of Deborah and Barak, and considered the attempt against him, as presumption. How soon was tion is highly poetical; and has been deservedly admired; though some parts of it are very obscure, and others in the common version, unintelligible. Kennicott supposes that it was sung responsively; and he has attempted to distribute certain parts to Deborah, to Barak, and to others as choruses. Without deserting the text, I hope the version given will be found just and perspicuous.

2 I have adopted the version of Geddes, who alone has understood his text. This verse is evidently an introductory exposition of the subject of the song. Parkhurst has observed there is no authority for attributing to the word (פָּרַח) the sense of ‘avenging.’ It denotes, to be free, dissolute, exposed. He would render, ‘For the deliverance wrought for Israel,

In the days of Shamgar, the son of Anath,^o 6

In by-paths travellers travelled:
Deserted were the villages in Israel; 7
Deserted, until I Deborah arose—
Until I arose to be a mother in Israel.

Then was war brought to their gates!
Was there a spear or a shield seen
Among forty thousand in Israel?

And those who walked along the way,
Were abashed at the noise of the archers 11
Between the different watering-places.
Then they rehearsed the just acts of Jehovah,
His just acts towards the villages of Israel:
Then went down to the gates Jehovah’s people.
Awake, awake, Deborah! 12
Awake, awake, utter a song.
Arise, Barak, son of Abinoam,
And lead thy captivity captive.

To me came down the people of Jehovah.

he compelled to fly on foot, and seek for safety in the tent of a woman. There he hoped for protection, but he found death. Let us learp, that danger is often nearest, when least expected; and that when sinners cry ‘peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh.’
3. When called to any duty, let us not make excuses, but haste to obey the call. When satisfied respecting the path of duty, arise, O man, and pursue it, say not there is a lion in the way;—say not the enemy is formidable, and hath iron charriots? Is not Jehovah with thee? Now is the acceptable time, now is the day of salvation. O lose not the present opportunity of securing thy salvation. “Prepare reader to meet thy God.”

&c.’ but this, I think is foreign from the radical sense.
3. This is an elegant Apostrophe to the neighbouring kings, and their counsellors.
4, 5. An appeal to past times, when Israel was under the special protection of the Lord; compared with their late disastrous situation.
7. Deserted were the villages. All the unfenced towns and single homesteads; which were continually liable to be pillaged by the enemy.
8. I have followed the present text; and consider the general sentiment to be, that in consequence of their idolatry, the enemy not only ravaged the open country, but was brought to the gates of their fortified cities; nor had the Israelites spirit to defend them. See Note, Heb. Bible,

- 14 Among the mighty were the sons of Ephraim:

17. †Syr. the rest Gilead.

9. My love. Literally, 'my heart'; but the heart often signifies the affections. Cranmer's and the Bishops' Bible have, 'My heart loveth, &c.'

10. Riders on fine streaked asses. Harmer supposes that the asses are called (אֲרָאִים), white, or streaked, from their caparisons; or various coloured cloths on which they rode, as it is the present custom of the Arabs. Bochart understands asses of the Zebra kind to be meant, which are partly-coloured.—Those went to sit, &c. I give this sense to the verb as here necessary, and consider this line as describing, by their office, those who rode on fine streaked asses. Geddes renders this line, 'Travellers sitting in counsels,' and applies it to females, who generally travel in this manner. See Note, Isa. lxvi. 20. I cannot but think this version, wholly unsupported by the text or the ancient translators. The sentiment is, 'that the nobles who rode, and the common people who walked on foot, were equally unsafe.'

11. Were abashed, &c. Literally, 'were humbled.' I join the verb (שָׁבַע) to this verse, and place the period after (מַשְׁתַּבְּחִים) watering places. The common punctuation has introduced 'obscurity and incoherency.—Then they rehearsed, &c. Their distresses led them to confess the justice of God in his conduct towards them. Then they went down to the gates; that is, as I understand the words, they assembled to deliberate on what might be done, to obtain deliverance, and to supplicate divine aid.

12. Utter a song. This can only signify, as its connexion verifies, rousing, animating words; for the point was to rouse the people from their supine and spiritless state. The address to Barak is beautiful, and produced the effect intended. At the call of Deborah, he collected forces and sprang to action.—Lead thy captivity, captive; that is, lead those captive, whose captive thou art. So the Syr. which is doubtless the sense. Our old versions, 'Arise Barak, and apprehend thy captives.' Geddes, 'Reverse thy captivity, &c.' Be no longer the slave of Jabin and his Canaanites, but subdue them in thy turn.

13. Then came down, &c. Not one of the ancient translations supports our version in rendering (יָרַד) to have dominion. They all give the sense I have done. Deborah now begins to describe the brave men who formed the army, and obtained so signal a victory.—Among the mighty, &c. I join the last word of the preceding verse to this. See Note, Hebrew Bible.—Those settled near, &c. Literally, 'rooted, or planted.' I follow the Sept. in considering Amalek, the name of a mountainous tract, in the territory of the Ephraimites. Compare Ch. xii. 15. It is probable it was thus called because the Amalekites had once occupied it.

15. Were numbered, &c. I have followed the text as arranged by Green. See Note, Hebrew Bible.—When he marched. Namely when he went down from Mount Tabor, to meet the enemy on very disadvantageous ground; having no cavalry.—In the districts of Reuben, &c. This is a delicate but severe irony; as appears from its repetition after, and indeed from the context. The Reubenites deliberated much, but did nothing.

16, 17. Why abodest thou, &c. The Reubenites, Gadites, Danites, and Asherites, remained inactive, and preferred their occupations to the dangers of war. The tribes of Benjamin, Zebulun, Naphtali, Issachar, only joined the Ephraimites. Not the least mention is made of Judah or of Simeon.

18. High places of the field; that is, in the most dangerous places. They nobly sustained the attack of the enemy, and repulsed him.

19. A fragment of silver. They expected victory, and a large spoil as the consequence, but were greatly disappointed.

23. From the heavens the stars, &c. A most beautiful image. A tempest meeting the enemy in the face, discomfited them; and the torrent Kishon was so suddenly swelled by the rain, that many of them were swept away by it in their precipitate flight: hence the poet calls it the first, or prince of torrents. The whole is exceedingly poetical.

21. Over mighty persons. I consider (עַל גִּבּוֹרִים) as in construction, with Houbigant and others; and every Hebrew scholar knows that (עַל) not only means, soul, but person, and even sometimes is applied to the dead body. This preserves the connexion with what precedes. Geddes renders, 'Thou trampledst on mighty personages.' Is there any meaning in the common version? 'O my soul, thou hast trodden down strength.' A Critic has objected to my Note, Hebrew Bible, and contends that the REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. How Kind and merciful was God to his people, in raising up among them such persons as Deborah and Barak! The former by her wisdom, and the spirit of piety which animated her, taught them their duty, recalled them from their idolatry, and predicted their triumphs. Encouraged by the assurances of divine aid, Barak collected forces and found them endued with the most determined resolution. Let us be thankful when individuals of talent, virtue and eminent piety, are raised up in a nation! They are shields of the land.

2. We are here reminded how becoming it is to celebrate those deeds, by which our freedom is obtained and established, especially to praise God as the author of them. The description of Israel's calamity when under oppression, should make us thankful that it is not ours, and we should frequently rehearse these mighty acts of the Lord, who has delivered us from our enemies, and give praise to the action of treading down cannot be applied to a river. Why not? When a river is personified, it may as well have feet as hands attributed to it; and I see no more impropriety in the one case than in the other. I have given the sense, as to tread on, denotes complete victory.

God of Israel. We can pursue our occupations in safety, the high road is occupied, our villages flourish, and enjoy the fruit of honest labour without fear; especially "we can go up to the house of Jehovah, to see his beauty, and to inquire in his temple."

3. The conduct of many of the tribes was disgraceful; and they were unworthy the name of Israel. The love of ease, the fear of trouble, too great a regard to the interests of this world, the care of their estates, or of their flocks, engage the attention of men, and indispose them for active services in God's cause and honour. Let us guard against these things, cultivate a generous, public spirit; be willing to give up our own trifling concerns for the interest of God's church and people, and join hearts and hands to promote it. For those who come not to the help of Jehovah, fall under the curse of disaffection, and will be esteemed as enemies. When duty calls, let us be the first to obey, and we shall not lose our reward.

22. Horse's hoofs broken. In those times horses were not shod; nor are they yet in many parts of the east.—Speed of his rider. So Castel renders (רָכַב). Two nouns in construction as the text; the latter is taken as an adjective in the superlative degree.

23. Meroz. The same, perhaps, with Merom, mentioned in Josh. xi. 5.—Saith the messenger, &c. Probably he who was sent to summon them to the standard of Barak. Some think Barak himself is meant: and so the Chaldee paraphrase understood it.—To the help of Jehovah; that is, of his people; for this cause is also his.

27. Geddes rightly observes, this is most beautifully expressed in the original: every word of which, to use a common phrase, tells; yet the repetition seems to me to add force to the sentiment.

28. Nothing could be more happily imagined, than this poetical transition, from Sisera, lying dead in the tent of Jael, to his mother anxiously waiting his triumphant return.

29. Yea, she returned, &c. The common version is, 'yea, she returned answer to herself. The sense of this line depends on the preceding; and if the reading of the Syr. Vulg. Arab. and six mss. be adopted, the version I have given is the true one. Is it probable that the author would introduce all her ladies, or one of them, as giving an answer to sooth her agitated and anxious mind; and then without telling us what they said, bring her forward again as replying to her own questions? As this does not seem to me likely, I have preferred the various reading, and consider the next verse as the words which one of her Ladies returned in answer to her.

6 lay it waste. Thus was Israel greatly impoverished by the Midianites.

But the children of Israel cried to Jehovah.
7 And when the children of Israel cried to Jehovah, because of the Midianites, Jehovah sent a prophet to the children of Israel, who said to them, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'I brought you up from the land of Egypt, and brought you out of the house of bondage;
9 And I delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all that oppressed you; and drove out from before you,
10 these nations, and gave you their land; And I said unto you, 'I am Jehovah your God; fear not the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell;' but ye have not obeyed my voice."

11 There then came an angel of Jehovah, and sat under the turpentine-tree which was in Ophrah, which belonged to Joash, the Abiezerite; and his son Gideon was threshing wheat by the wine-press, to hide it from the Midianites. And the angel of Jehovah appeared unto him, and said to him, "Jehovah is with thee, thou mighty man of valour." And Gideon said to him, "Oh my Lord, if Jehovah be with us, why then hath all this befallen us? and where are all his miracles which our fathers told us of, saying, 'Did not Jehovah bring us from Egypt?' but now Jehovah hath forsaken us, and delivered us into the hands of the 14 Midianites." And the angel of Jehovah turned to him, and said, "Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel from the hand of the Midianites: have not I sent thee?" And he 15 said unto him, "Oh my Lord, by what means shall I save Israel? Behold, my family is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house." And the "angel" of Jehovah said to him, 16 "Surely I will be with thee, and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man." And he said 17 to him, "If now I have found favour in thy sight, then shew me a token that thou speakest with me in the name of Jehovah. Depart not 18 hence, I pray thee, until I come to thee, and bring forth my present, and set it before thee." And he said, I will tarry until thou come again.

And Gideon went in, and made ready a kid, 19 and unleavened cakes of an ephah of flour; the flesh he put in a basket, and pure wine he put in a pot, and brought it to him under the turpentine-tree, and presented it. And the 20 angel of God said to him, "Take the flesh and the unleavened cakes, and lay them upon this rock, and pour out the pure wine." And he did so. Then the angel of Jehovah put forth 21 the end of the staff which he had in his hand, and touched the flesh and the unleavened cakes; and fire issued from the rock, and consumed the flesh and the unleavened cakes: and the angel of Jehovah vanished from his sight. Gideon now perceived that he was an angel of 22 Jehovah, and Gideon said, "Alas for me, Jehovah! since I have thus seen, face to face, an angel of Jehovah." But Jehovah said to 23 him, "Peace be to thee; fear not: thou shalt not die."

33. A damsel or two. Females were generally taken in those days as the slaves of the conquerors. So Homer represents the Greeks as taking the women for their slaves.—A spoil of coloured, &c. The spoil alluded to seems to have been rich, short mantles, which warriors used to wear.

31. So perish, &c. In this line, remarks Bishop Lowth, the fatal disappointment of female hope and credulity, tacitly insinuated, by the sudden and unexpected apostrophe, is expressed more forcibly by this very silence of the person who was just speaking, than it could possibly have been by all the powers of language.

CHAP. VI. 3. Other people of the east. The various Arab tribes.

8. A prophet, &c. Thus God raised up and sent among his people prophets to teach them, warn them of their sins and bring them to repentance.

11. Was threshing wheat. The word rendered threshing, seems to denote beating with rods; that the noise might be small as possible.

17. Show me a token. The Sept. render at least, clearly, 'And do, now, what thou hast said to me.' As Gideon supposed the person addressing him to be a prophet, I prefer the version given, as explained by the words added.

19. Pure wine. The term (חֲמֶזֶק) is generally rendered broth; but I think that the Syr. and Arab. have given the sense; rendering pure wine, as every wheaten-offering was accompanied with a drink-offering.

21. Vanished, &c. The angel disappeared so that Gideon did not see him depart.

23. But Jehovah said to him. Probably in a dream, that night; and at the same time, that he suggested to him, the demolition of Baal's altar, &c. as is related v. 25. For v. 24 is an historical anticipation, very common in scripture narratives; which has not been always attended to by translators.

26. The second bullock. It is not said what he was to do with the other young bull or steer: but we may readily suppose he was to be offered as a simple sin-offering, or eucharistic sacrifice; the flesh of which might be

24 Then Gideon built an altar there to Jehovah, and called it JEHOVAH - SHALOM : [JEHOVAH SPEAKETH PEACE]. Unto this day it remaineth 25 in Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites. For on that same night, Jehovah said to him, "Take thy father's young bullock, seven years old, and throw down the altar of Baal, which belongeth to thy father, and cut down the grove that is by 26 it; And build an altar to Jehovah thy God, upon the top of this rock, on which the former offering was placed, and take the second bullock, and offer for a burnt-offering, with the wood of the grove which thou shalt cut down."
27 Then Gideon took from among his servants, ten men, and did as Jehovah had said to him; and, because he feared his father's household, and the men of the city, he could not do it by day, so he did it by night.
28 And when the men of the city arose early in the morning, behold, the altar of Baal was broken down, and the grove was cut down that was by it, and the second bullock was 29 offered upon the altar which was built. And they said one to another, "Who hath done this thing?" And they inquired and sought, and some said, "Gideon, the son of Joash, hath 30 done this thing." Then the men of the city said to Joash, "Bring forth thy son, that he may die, because he hath broken down the altar of Baal, and because he hath cut down
31 the grove that was by it." And Joash said to all that stood against him, "Will ye contend for Baal? Should ye preserve him who hath contended with him, he will die ere the morning dawn. If he be a god, he will contend for himself, with him who hath broken down his altar." From that day hence 32 he was called Jerubbaal [LET BAAL CONTEND] from his father's saying, "Baal will contend for himself, with him who hath broken down his altar."

Then all the Midianites and Amalekites and 33 other people of the east, assembled and passed over "the Jordan", and encamped in the valley of Jezreel. And the spirit of Jehovah 34 came upon Gideon, and he blew a trumpet; and Abi-ezer was gathered to him. And he 35 sent messengers throughout all Manasseh; who also was gathered to him: and he sent messengers to Asher, and to Zebulun, and to Naphtali; and they came up to meet them.
And Gideon said to God, "If thou wilt save 36 Israel by mine hand, as thou hast said, Behold, 37 I will put a fleece of wool on this threshing-floor; and if dew be on the fleece only, and all the ground be dry, then I shall know that thou wilt save Israel by mine hand, as thou hast said." And it was so; for he arose early on the mor- 38 row, and squeezed the fleece, and wrung the dew from the fleece, a bowl full of water. And 39 Gideon said unto God, "Let not thine anger be kindled against me and I will speak but this once: let me prove, I pray thee, but this once with the fleece; let it now be dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew." And God did so that night: 40 for it was dry upon the fleece only, and there was dew on all the ground.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. A generous solicitude for the good of others, is highly becoming a true Israelite. Gideon's head and heart were full of concern for oppressed Israel, and therefore the angel saluted him. He put himself among the rest saying, 'if Jehovah be with us.' He had no comfort while Israel was in sorrow; he was chiefly concerned for the public interest, and could take no satisfaction in any message, while Israel was oppressed. Let us thus cultivate a concern for the public good, and esteem the welfare of Jerusalem as our chief joy.

2. Those who are raised up to reform and deliver others, must first begin at home. The idolatry, and other sins of Israel brought down divine judgments; and Gideon must destroy the altars of Baal, eaten by the offerer and his associates.

31. Should ye preserve him, &c. I have adhered to the order of the text, and the sense given, I am satisfied, is that intended. The common version is contradictory. It makes Joash propose, that he who pleadeth for Baal, should be immediately put to death, and then assert that Baal would plead for himself. Some render, 'Should ye preserve him who hath contended with him until the morning, &c." I have followed Menochius (See Poole) and consider the meaning to be, 'If Baal be really a god, ye need not avenge his quarrel, or desire the death of my son: Baal will speedily avenge himself; and you will see the demolisher of his altar die a sudden death.'

36-40. Gideon, by the signs requested, desired to know, whether the

which his father had built, before God would save Israel by his hand. How could he expect to succeed, unless this evidence of the defection of his family from God was removed? Gideon displayed a noble spirit; and, on the same night he received the divine command, broke down Baal's altar. Let us make no delay in reforming ourselves, and putting away our idols.

3. We see in the men of Abiezer the power of sin. They were ready to put Gideon to death for demolishing Baal's altar. Their distresses had not yet taught them to forsake their idols. Their subsequent conduct shows, that a change of mind respecting Gideon, had been effected. They were the first, who assembled, when he blew

4. Try them, &c. Literally, 'prove them as silver is proved by the fire.'

5. Every one that lappeth. Lapping water from the hollow of the hand, was considered as a mark of sobriety and promptitude. The manly, peth of the water with his tongue, as a dog lappeth, thou shalt set apart by himself; so also every one that boweth down on his knees to drink." And the number of those who lapped 6 putting their hand to their mouth, were three hundred men; but all the rest of the people bowed down on their knees to drink water. And Jehovah said to Gideon, "By the three 7 hundred men who lapped, will I save you, and deliver the Midianites into 'your' hand: and let all the other people go, every one to his own place." So they took the victuals of the 8 people, and their trumpets, for their own use: he retained only those three hundred men, but sent all the rest of Israel, every one to his own tent.

Now the host of Midian was beneath him in the valley. And that same night, Jehovah 9 said to him, "Arise, go down to the camp; for I deliver it into thine hand. But if thou be 10 afraid to go down, with thy men, go down thyself to the camp, with Phurah thy servant; And thou shalt hear what they say; and after- 11 wards thou shalt be encouraged to go down to the camp with thy men. Then he went down with Phurah his servant, to the outermost of the armed men who belonged to the camp. And the Midianites and the Amalekites and all 12 the trumpet of war. Thus divine grace often changes enemies to friends, persecutors into preachers, and the most profligate sinners into converts of truth and righteousness.

4. We here see God's condescension to the weakness of his servants. The angel, instead of rebuking Gideon for his doubts and fears, looked favourably upon him, gave him one sign upon another, comforted his heart, and invigorated his faith. Thus graciously does God deal with his servants, 'he breaks not the bruised reed,' but pities their infirmities, and takes a variety of methods to give the heirs of promise strong consolation. But while we have such encouragements, let us 'not tempt the Lord our God,' active soldier contented himself with a passing sup of the refreshing stream; while the more dainty, kneeled down to draw large draughts from the water's brim.

8. They took, &c. that is, Gideon and the three hundred men took the provisions and trumpets of those who were sent home. I have followed the order of the text in the first clause, and transposed the latter for the sake of perspicuity.

11. Shall be encouraged. Literally, 'thine hand shall be strengthened;' I prefer the sense to the idiom.

the other people of the east lay along in the valley like grasshoppers for multitude; and their camels were without number, as the sand 13 by the sea shore for multitude. And when Gideon had come, behold, one man was telling a dream to another, and said, "Behold, I dreamed a dream, and, lo, a cake of barley bread tumbled into the camp of Midian, and came to a tent, and smote it that it fell, and 14 so overturned it, that the tent lay flat." And his companion answered and said, "This is nothing but the sword of Gideon, the son of Joash, a man of Israel; into whose hand God delivereth Midian, and the whole camp."
15 And when Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and its interpretation, he worshipped, and returned into the camp of Israel, and said, "Arise; for Jehovah delivereth into your 16 hand, the camp of Midian." And he divided the three hundred men into three companies, and he put a trumpet in every man's hand, with empty pitchers, and lamps within the pitchers.
17 And he said to them, "Look on me, and do likewise; and, behold, when I come to the outside of the camp, as I do, so shall ye do.
18 When I and all who are with me blow the trumpet, then blow ye the trumpets also, on every side of the whole camp, and say, "The sword" of Jehovah, and of Gideon."
19 So Gideon, and the hundred men who were with him, came to the outside of the camp in the beginning of the middle watch; and they had but newly set the watch: and they blew the trumpets, and broke the pitchers which were in their hands. And the three companies 20 blew the trumpets, and broke the pitchers; and they held the lamps in their left hands, and in their right hands the trumpets, to blow with; and they cried, "The sword of Jehovah, and of Gideon." And they stood still, every one 21 in his place, round about the camp. And the whole camp was thrown into confusion; and they cried out and fled. And the three hun- 22 dred men blew the trumpets, and Jehovah set every man's sword against his fellow, throughout the whole camp; and the "whole" camp fled to Beth-shittah of Zererath, and to the border of Abel-meholah by Tabbath. The men of 23 Israel then assembled out of Naphtali, and out of Asher, and out of all Manasseh, and pursued the Midianites.

Gideon now sent messengers throughout all 24 mount Ephraim, saying, "Come down against the Midianites, and take before them the waters at Beth-barah and the Jordan." Then all the men of Ephraim assembled, and took the waters at Beth-barah and the Jordan. And 25 they took two princes of the Midianites, Oreb and Zeeb; and they slew Oreb upon the rock, from this called Oreb, and Zeeb they slew at the wine-press, from this called Zeeb, and pursued Midian, and brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb, to Gideon, on the other side of the Jordan.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. We see how careful God is to hide pride from man. He knows the pride of man's heart, and conducts his deliverances in such a manner, as to show his own hand. "He will not give his glory to another." None shall say, 'My own hand hath saved me;' all is of grace, and the design of all is, that 'he that glorieth may glory in the Lord.'

2. We have here another instance by what weak instruments God often chooses to bring about his purposes, and therefore 'we must not despise the day of small things.' It is all one to him to work by few as by many. So he did in planting the gospel, as was foretold in allusion to this history, Isa. ix. 4, 5. God often weakens the strength of his church to this day, to show that he can do

18. A cake of barley-bread. This seems to allude to the low condition of Gideon, mentioned ch. 6. 15. If a huge stone had rolled against a tent, there would have been no wonder, if it overturned it; but that this should be done by a poor barley cake was wonderful indeed.—The words a man of Israel, in the next verse, appear also to have a reference to the meanness of Gideon's family. It was neither king nor chief, that was to subdue them; but a common Israelite.
16. Empty pitchers. According to Harmer, these were a part of the camp equipage. They were used to conceal the lamps, until the proper occasion.

19. Middle watch; that is, about midnight. This stratagem, blowing the trumpets, breaking the pitchers, and the instant blaze of 300 lamps, must have excited fear and produced confusion through the whole camp of Midian.
22. Set every man's sword, &c. In their hurry and consternation, they could not, in the darkness of the night, distinguish friend from foe.
24. Beth-barah. Geddes conjectures this to be the same place as Beth-abara.
CHAP. VIII. 1. Why hast thou served, &c. The tribe of Ephraim was, after Judah, the most powerful of all the Israelites; and extremely

CHAPTER VIII.

B. C. 1249. The Ephraimites pacified; Zebah and Zalmunna taken; Succoth and Peniel destroyed; Gideon revengeth the death of his brethren; maketh an Ephod.

- 1 AND the men of Ephraim said to him, "Why hast thou served us thus, that thou calledst us not, when thou wentest to fight with the Midianites?" And they contended with him sharply.
- 2 But he said to them, "How little have I done now in comparison of you? Is not the gleaning of the grapes of Ephraim better than the vintage of Abi-ezer? God hath delivered up the princes of Midian, Oreb and Zeeb; and what was I able to do in comparison of you?" Then their anger was abated towards him, when he had spoken these words.
- 4 And Gideon came to the Jordan, and passed over, he, and the three hundred men who were with him, faint, yet pursuing. And he said to the men of Succoth, "Give, I pray you, some loaves of bread to the people that follow me; for they are faint, and I am pursuing Zebah and Zalmunna, kings of Midian." And the chiefs of Succoth said, "Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we should give bread unto thine host?" And Gideon said, "Therefore when Jehovah hath delivered Zebah and Zalmunna into mine hand, then I will tear your flesh with wilderness-thorns and with briers."

without the help of those whom men are ready to think most mighty. And both these reflections are included in what the apostle says concerning the christian ministry, 2 Cor. iv. 7, in which, some think, he alludes to this account: "We have this treasure, this light, in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of men."

3. Learn from the terrible alarm of the Midianites, the confusion of the last awful day; it shall come suddenly as a thief jealous of their superiority. On this occasion, they were affronted that a mean Abiezrite, from beyond the Jordan, should have undertaken so great an enterprise without consulting them. Hence their expostulation with Gideon, whose prudent and modest answer was well calculated to pacify them. Compare Ch. xi. 1-16.

6. And the chiefs of Succoth. It may seem astonishing that the inhabitants of Succoth and Peniel should refuse bread to their famished brethren: but having been seven years under the domination of the Midianites, they dreaded their vengeance; and deemed it highly improbable that Gideon could succeed.

13. By the height of Hares. So all the versions render, except the

And he went up thence to Peniel, and spoke 8 to them in like manner; and the men of Peniel answered him as the men of Succoth had answered him. And he spake also to the men 9 of Peniel, saying, "When I come again in peace, I will break down this tower."

Now Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor, 10 and their hosts with them, about fifteen thousand men, all who were left of all the hosts of the people of the east: for there had fallen one hundred and twenty thousand men who drew the sword. And Gideon went up by the way 11 of those who dwelt in tents, on the east of Nobah and Jogbehah, and smote the camp, when the camp was secure. And when Zebah and 12 Zalmunna fled, he pursued after them, and took the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, and discomfited the whole host.

And Gideon, the son of Joash, returned from 13 battle by the height of Hares, And caught a 14 young man of the men of Succoth, and inquired of him; and he described to him the chiefs of Succoth, and its elders, seventy and seven men. And he came to the men of Succoth, and said, 15 "Behold Zebah and Zalmunna, with whom ye upbraided me, saying, 'Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we should give bread to thy men who are weary?'" And he took the elders of the city, and wilder- 16 ness-thorns and briers, and with them he chastised the men of Succoth. And he beat down 17 in the night, when men are not aware. What terror and astonishment shall take hold of them, when the archangel shall blow the trumpet, "when the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements melt with fervent heat; when the Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout; with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God!" May we prepare for that time, "and give diligence to be found of him in peace; that when Christ shall appear, we may stand before him with joy."

Vulg. which our translators followed. The route of Gideon, from Peniel, seems to have been across the mountains of Gilead, to the north-east of the Jabok, through a tract of country inhabited by Scenites or Bedouins: hence he came unexpectedly upon the camp of the Midianites, who looked for no attack from that quarter. If Jogbeba be the same with Ramoth-Gilead, as the Chaldee paraphrast supposes, the Midianites were probably encamped somewhere about Abela, called Ch. xi. 33, Abel-cheramim; that is, the plain of the vineyards. Gideon appears to have returned to Succoth by another short way; namely, by the heights of Hares, or sun-hills; probably so called, because, over them, the rising sun was first seen by the inhabitants of the low country about the Jordan; and, indeed, the tower of Peniel, and slew the men of the city.

18 Then said he to Zebah and Zalmunna, "What manner of men were they whom ye slew at Tabor?" And they answered, "As thou art, so were they; each one resembled the son
19 of a king." And he said, "They were my brethren, the sons of my own mother: as Jehovah liveth, if ye had saved them alive, I 20 would not slay you." And he said to Jether his first-born, "Rise, and slay them." But the youth drew not his sword: for he feared, as 21 he was yet a youth. Then Zebah and Zalmunna said, "Rise thou, and fall upon us; for according to one's age is his strength." And Gideon arose, and slew Zebah and Zalmunna, and took for himself the crescents, and pendants, and purple garments that were on them, and the collars, that were on their camel's necks.
22 Then the men of Israel said to Gideon, "Rule thou over us, both thou, and thy son, and thy son's son also; for thou hast delivered
23 us from the hand of Midian." And Gideon said unto them, "I will not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you; Jehovah 24 shall rule over you." Gideon also said to them "I will make but one request to you, that ye would, every one, give to me the pendants of his prey:" (For those slain, who were Ishmaelites, wore golden pendants.) And they 25 answered, "We will willingly give them." And they spread a garment, and cast therein, every one, the pendants of his prey. And the 26 weight of the golden pendants which he had requested, was one thousand and seven hundred shekels of gold; besides the crescents; and drops, and purple garments, that were on the kings of Midian, and besides the collars that were about the camels' necks. And Gideon 27 made an ephod of it, and put it in his own city, in Ophrah; and all Israel went thither astray after it: which thing became a snare to Gideon, and to his house.

Thus was Midian subdued before the children 28 of Israel, so that they lifted up their heads no more: and the land had rest, in the days of Gideon, forty years. And Jerubbaal, the son 29 of Joash, went and dwelt in his own house. And Gideon had twenty sons, of his own body 30 begotten; for he had many wives. And his 31 concubine who was at Shechem, also bare to him a son, whose name he called Abimelech. And Gideon, the son of Joash, died in a good 32 old age, and was buried in the sepulchre of Joash his father, in Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. We see in the spirit of the Ephraimites, pride and jealousy united. They had not had the courage to arise and subdue the Midianites; but when Gideon did it, they were offended. He had not applied to them; and they appear to have thought themselves robbed of the honour, to which they were entitled. Thus pride on all occasions manifests itself; and is mortified when others signalize themselves.
2. In the reply of Gideon, we have a proof that a soft answer turneth away wrath. Gideon never appeared so great, even when pursuing the Midianites, or destroying kings, as now, when he ruled his own spirit, treating insolent men with humility, angry men with meekness. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty;" and no man is so truly great and honourable as he, who keeps under his passions, and 'by yielding pacifieth great wrath.'

3. Let us learn by Gideon's example, not to be discouraged from pursuing what is good, by any unkind or ill treatment we may meet with. The men of Succoth and Peniel derided and discouraged him, but he went on, pursued the Midianites, and completed the victory. In our spiritual warfare, though ready to tire and faint, still let us hold on and pursue the victory, and we shall finally prevail.
4. Gideon's humility should be a lesson to us. He modestly declined the offer the people made him; happy in having conquered the enemies of his country, and restored freedom, he wishes not to possess a power dangerous to it. The love of power is so natural, that his refusal of it is rendered more glorious. Happy the people, whose leading men are thus humble and unassuming!

by all the Israelites, who resided on the western side of that river.
21. According to one's age. I have followed the Vulg. as giving the clearest sense. The words in Italic, from verse 26, seem to have dropped out of the text. Most probably a line has been omitted, through haste or inadvertency.
26. Crescents and drops. These are allowed to be what the original terms signify. See Parkhurst on the words.
27. Made an Ephod. A rich sacerdotal garment; made, probably, in imitation of that worn by the high priest; and then kept at Shiloh. When ther Gideon meant this as a mere commemorative trophy; or whether he had a levitical priest in his house, it is hard to say. The latter I think more probable. Compare Ch. xvii. 5.—All Israel. I conceive, all those who lived in Gilead, and on the east side of the Jordan; who, having now an ephod and worship in their own country, would not so readily go over to the tabernacle at Shiloh.

CHAP. III. 1. Baal-berith. A Canaanite god; supposed to be the avenger of a breach of covenant.
5. On one stone. They were doubtless beheaded like the sons of Ahab.

CHAPTER IX.

B. C. 1209. Israel relapses to idolatry; Abimelech and the Shechemites, murder all Gideon's sons, except Jotham; his parable; war between Abimelech and the Shechemites.

33 AND as soon as Gideon was dead, the children of Israel again went astray after Baal; and they made Baal-berith their special god.
 34 And the children of Israel remembered not Jehovah their God, who had delivered them out of the hands of all their enemies on every 35 side; Nor did they show regard to the house of Jerubbaal, or Gideon, according to all the kindness which he had showed to Israel.
 1 For Abimelech, the son of Jerubbaal, went to Shechem, to his mother's brethren, and communed with them, and with all the family of the house of his mother's father, saying,
 2 "Speak, I pray you, in the hearing of all the leading men of Shechem, 'Whether is it better for you, that all the sons of Jerubbaal, three-score and ten persons, reign over you, or that one reign over you? Remember also that I am
 3 your own bone and your own flesh.'" And his mother's brethren spoke for him, in the hearing of all the leading men of Shechem, all these words: and their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech; for they said, "He is our
 4 brother." And they gave to him seventy shekels of silver out of the house of Baal-berith, with which Abimelech hired vain and light
 5 persons, who followed him. And he went to his father's house at Ophrah, and slew his brethren, the sons of Jerubbaal, seventy persons, upon one stone: yet Jotham, the youngest son of Jerubbaal, was left; for he hid himself.
 6 And all the leading men of Shechem assembled, and all the house of Millo, and went, and made Abimelech king, by the turpentine tree, which stands near Shechem.

And when they told this to Jotham, he went 7 and stood on the top of mount Gerizim, and raised his voice, and cried, and said to them; "Hearken to me, ye leading men of Shechem! so God may hearken to you." 'The trees went 8 forth to anoint a king over them; and they said to the olive tree, 'Reign thou over us.' But the olive tree said unto them, 'Shall I 9 relinquish my oil, with which God and men are honoured, and go to rule over the trees?' The trees then said to the fig-tree, 'Come thou; 10 and reign over us.' But the fig-tree said to 11 them, 'Shall I relinquish my sweetness, and excellent fruit, and go to rule over the trees?' Then said the trees to the vine, 'Come thou; 12 and reign over us.' And the vine said to them; 13 'Shall I relinquish my wine, which giveth joy to God and man, and go to rule over the trees?' Then said all the trees to the bramble, 'Come 14 thou, and reign over us.' And the bramble 15 said to the trees, 'If ye truly intend to anoint me king over you, come, take shelter under my shade; and if not, let fire come out of the bramble, and devour the cedars of Lebanon.' Now, therefore, if ye have done truly and up- 16 rightly, in making Abimelech king; and if ye have treated kindly Jerubbaal and his house, and have done to him according to his claims upon you; (For my father fought for you, 17 and risked his life, and delivered you out of the hand of Midian: Yet have ye, this day, 18 risen up against my father's house, and have slain his sons, seventy persons, on one stone; and have made Abimelech, the son of his bond-maid, king over the men of Shechem, because he is your brother;) If then ye have dealt 19

See 2 Kings x. 7.

6. Leading men. I have so rendered (לְבָרִי), because I think it never denotes men in general but conveys always the idea of rule, authority and distinction.—The house of Millo. Millo appears to have been a fortress or citadel; and is called verses 46 and 49, the tower of Shechem. Here those who inhabited it are understood.

8. This is the first fable or apologue, which we read in the Hebrew Scriptures. It is elegantly turned, and the application is strikingly sarcastical. The genuine and generous offspring of Jerubbaal had no wish to be kings; but the spurious bramble-like Abimelech eagerly grasps the regal power.

9. God and men are honoured. God was honoured by the oil used in sacrifices, to feed the lamps, and anoint the priests, and it was useful to man in food and medicine.

13. Which giveth joy. Wine was used in sacrifices: it was a part of the provisions of God's house and altar, with which he was delighted, and men were cheered. Thus all these noble trees, that is, Gideon and his sons, much better men than Abimelech, had refused the dignity of which he was so ambitious.

21. To Beer. This was a city in the tribe of Judah, or Benjamin, not far from Jerusalem. From this it appears, that the dominion of Abimelech was confined to Shechem and the places contiguous.

truly and uprightly, with Jerubbaal and with his house this day, then rejoice in Abimelech, and let him also rejoice in you: But if not, let fire come out from Abimelech, and devour the leading men of Shechem, and the house of Millo; and let fire come out from the men of Shechem, and from the house of Millo, and devour Abimelech." And Jotham fled with speed, and went to Beer, and dwelt there, for fear of Abimelech, his brother.

When Abimelech had reigned over Israel three years, God sent a spirit of discord between Abimelech and the leading men of Shechem; and the leading men of Shechem dealt treacherously with Abimelech: That the cruelty done to the seventy sons of Jerubbaal might be avenged, and their blood laid upon Abimelech, their brother, who had slain them; and on the leading men of Shechem, who had assisted him in the slaughter of his brethren.

And the leading men of Shechem set ambushes for him, on the top of the mountains; and they robbed all who came by them that way; and it was told Abimelech. Now Gaal, the son of Ebed, came with his brethren, and went over to Shechem; and the leading men of Shechem put their confidence in him. And they went out into the fields, and they gathered their vineyards, and trode the grapes; and then made a feast, and went into the house of their god, and ate and drank, and cursed Abimelech.

And Gaal, the son of Ebed, said, "Who is Abimelech, and who the king of Shechem, that we should serve him? Have not the son of Jerubbaal, and Zebul, his officer, made the men of Hamor, the father of Shechem, slaves? yet why should we be slaves to him? O that this people were under my hand! I would soon remove Abimelech: 'I would say' to Abimelech, 'Increase thine host, and come forth.'"

CHAP. IX.

27. Make a feast. So the Syr. which I conceive to be the sense. The feast in honour of their idol.

28. Who is the king of Shechem? I have supplied for the sake of precision. Others think by Shechem is meant the Shechemites, which to me does not seem probable. See Sept. and Vulg.

29. Shadows of the mountains. Josephus represents Zebul as telling

And when Zebul, the governor of the city, 30 heard the words of Gaal, the son of Ebed, his anger was kindled. And he privately sent 31 messengers to Abimelech, saying, "Behold, Gaal, the son of Ebed, and his brethren have come to Shechem; and behold, they fortify the city against thee. Now, therefore, arise by 32 night, thou and the people who are with thee, and lie in ambush in the field; And do thou 33 rise early in the morning, as soon as the sun is up, and rush upon the city; and, behold, when he and the people who are with him come out against thee, then mayest thou do with them as thou shalt find it necessary.

And Abimelech rose up, and all the people 34 who were with him, by night, and they laid ambushes against Shechem, in four companies. And Gaal, the son of Ebed, went out, and 35 stood at the entrance of the city-gate; and Abimelech and the people who were with him, rose up from the ambush. And when Gaal saw 36 the people, he said to Zebul, "Behold, people are coming down from the top of the mountains." And Zebul said to him, "Thou seest the shadow of the mountains as if they were men." And Gaal again spoke, and said, "See 37 people come down from the heights; and another company come along by the turpentine-tree of Meonenim. Then said Zebul to him, 38 "Where now are thy words, which thou saidst, 'Who is Abimelech, that we should be slaves to him?' Is not this the people whom thou didst despise? go out now, I pray, and fight with them." And Gaal went out before the 39 men of Shechem, and fought with Abimelech. And Abimelech attacked him, and he fled 40 before him; and many were overthrown and wounded, even to the entrance of the city-gate. And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah, until Zebul 41 had driven out Gaal and his brethren, from him, he mistook the shadow of the rocks for men. A commentator might be at a loss to account for this change, that had not read Doubdan's representation of some part of the holy land, in which he tells us, that in those places there are many detached rocks scattered up and down, some growing out of the ground, and others are fragments, broken off from precipices, the shadow of which, it appears, Josephus thought might be among the inhabitants of Shechem. But on the morning after, some persons told Abimelech 43 that the people went out into the field; And he took his own people, and divided them into three companies, and lay in ambush in the field, until he saw, and, behold, the people had come forth from the city; and he rose up against 44 them, and smote them. For Abimelech, and the company which was with him, rushed forward, and stood at the entrance of the city-gate; and the other two companies fell upon all 45 who were in the fields, and slew them. And Abimelech fought against the city all that day; and he took the city, and slew the people that were in it; and he demolished the city, and sowed it with salt.

46 And when all the men of the tower of Shechem heard this, they went into the strong-47 hold of the temple of the god Berith. And it was told Abimelech, that all the men of the tower of Shechem were there crowded to-
48 gether; And Abimelech went up to mount Zalmon, he and all the people that were with him; and Abimelech took an ax in his hand, and cut down a bough from the trees, and took it, and laid it on his shoulder, and said unto the people that were with him, "Ye have 49 seen what I have done;" And all the people likewise cut down every man his bough, and followed Abimelech; and they put them to the strong-hold, and with them they set the strong-hold on fire. Thus, also, died all the men of the tower of Shechem; about a thousand men, and the women.

50 Then went Abimelech to Thebez, and encamped against Thebez, and took it. But 51 there was a strong tower within the city; and thither fled all the men and women, even all the inhabitants of the city; and they beset the entrance and went up to the top of the tower. And Abimelech came unto the tower, 52 and fought against it; and he approached to the door of the tower to burn it with fire. And a certain woman cast a piece of a milstone 53 upon Abimelech's head; and it broke his skull. Then he called hastily unto the young man, his 54 armour-bearer, and said to him, "Draw thy sword, and slay me, that men may not say of me, 'A woman slew him.'" And his young man thrust him through, and he died. And when 55 the men of Israel saw that Abimelech was dead, they departed every one to his own place.

Thus Jehovah requited the wicked deed of 56 Abimelech, which he did to his father, by slaying his own seventy brethren; And all the 57 evil deeds of the men of Shechem, Jehovah brought upon their own heads; and upon them came the curse of Jotham, the son of Jerubbaal.

And after Abimelech there arose to defend 1 Israel Tola the son of Puah, the son of Dodo, a man of Issachar; and he dwelt in Shamir in mount Ephraim. And he judged Israel twenty 2 three years, and died, and was buried in Shamir.

And after him arose Jair, a Gileadite, and 3 judged Israel twenty two years. And he had 4 thirty sons, who rode on thirty young asses, and thirty villages, which are called Havoth-jair [THE VILLAGES OF JAIR] unto this day, which are in the land of Gilead. And Jair died, and 5 was buried in Camon.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. We here see the ingratitude of the people of Israel, both to God and man. They forsook God, though he had so wonderfully appeared for them; and chose as the object of their devotion Baal-berith. They ought to have remembered that Jehovah had entered into covenant with them; and that their ancestors had uniformly found that he would avenge the violation of his own covenant. They were ungrateful to the house of Gideon. They had offered him supreme dominion, which he had nobly refused; and for his generosity, most naturally imagined to look like troops of men at a distance, rather than the shadow of mountains.

45. Sowed it with salt. In the scripture a land of salt denotes a bar-they assisted the son of his concubine to murder all his other offspring.

2. Let us learn to be content with an humble station as the most secure. Jotham in his parable intimates the danger of greatness, as the reason why Gideon and others declined it. A man in power must lose a great deal of ease and comfort, subject himself to much toil and labour, and expose himself to the malice and ill-will of others. This is so common a case, that it should make us content with inferior stations, and bring down all ren land; and by sowing Shechem with salt, Abimelech showed his hatred, wishing that it might never be rebuilt. The transactions of this whole Chapter resemble those of feudal times in our own History.

CHAPTER X.

B. C. 1161. The Israelites are again enslaved and oppressed by the Philistines; they are reproved for their idolatry, but on their repentance, God hath compassion, and raiseth up Jephthah.

- 6 AND the children of Israel again did evil in the sight of Jehovah, and served Baals, and Ashtaroth, and the gods of "Aram", and the gods of Zidon, and the gods of Moab, and the gods of the children of Ammon, and the gods of the Philistines; and they forsook Jehovah, and him they served not. And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Israel, and he gave them up into the hands of the Philistines, and into the hands of the children of Ammon.
- 8 And at that time they vexed and oppressed the children of Israel eighteen years; all the children of Israel that were on the other side of the Jordan, in the land of the Amorites, which is in Gilead. Moreover the children of Ammon passed over the Jordan, to fight also against Judah, and against Benjamin, and against the house of Ephraim; so that Israel was greatly distressed.
- 10 And the children of Israel cried to Jehovah, saying, "We have sinned against thee, both because we have forsaken our God, and also served Baals." And Jehovah said to the children of Israel, "Did not I deliver you from the Egyptians, and from the Amorites, and from the children of Ammon, and from the Philistines? The Zidonians also, and the Amalekites, and the "Midianites", oppressed you; and ye cried to me, and I delivered you out of their hand. Yet ye have forsaken me, and served other gods; wherefore I will deliver you no more. Go and cry to the gods whom ye have chosen; let them deliver you in the time of your tribulation." And the children of Israel said to Jehovah, "We have sinned; do thou to us whatsoever seemeth good to thee; only deliver us, we pray thee, this day." And they put away the strange gods from among them, and served Jehovah "only"; and his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel.

The children of Ammon were now gathered together, and encamped in Gilead; and the children of Israel assembled, and encamped in Mizpeh. And the chief people of Gilead said one to another, "What man is he that will begin to fight against the children of Ammon? he shall be head over all the inhabitants of Gilead."

Now Jephthah, the Gileadite, (for Gilead begot Jephthah) was a mighty man of valour; although he was the son of a harlot. And the wife of Gilead bare to him sons; and his wife's sons grew up, and they drove out Jephthah, and said to him, "Thou shalt not inherit in our father's house; for thou art the son of a strange woman." Then Jephthah fled from his brethren, and dwelt in the land of Tob; and idle men flocked to Jephthah, and went out with him.

our aspiring thoughts. "Give us neither poverty nor riches; but having food and raiment, we may therewith be content."

3. We learn from this history that nothing is more vain than popular applause. The men of Shechem made Abimelech king one day, and soon after were for dethroning and murdering him. They cursed him in the house of their god, whence they had so lately taken money to support him. How little is the clamour of the multitude to be depended upon, especially the fame that is gained by evil arts! Let us learn to be mortified to human applause, and act 'as pleasing God who searches the heart.' His approbation will be our constant support; for with him there is no variableness or change.

How awfully, and yet how justly did he punish Abimelech for murdering his brethren; and the men of Shechem for being accessory to it. They joined in this horrid design, and were destroyed one by another. God delayed the punishment of Abimelech three years; but it came terribly at last. The triumph of the wicked is short, and their time to fall quickly comes. Jotham's curse which was not causeless came upon the heads of those bloody and deceitful men. The whole story teaches us, that "Jehovah is known by the judgments which he executeth, and that the wicked are snared in the work of their own hands."

4 Now, in process of time, the children of 5 Ammon made war against Israel. And when the children of Ammon made war against Israel, the elders of Gilead went to fetch Jeph-6 thah from the land of Tob; And they said unto Jephthah, "Come, and be our captain, that we may fight with the children of Ammon."
7 And Jephthah said to the children of Gilead,
"Did not ye hate me, and expel me from my father's house? and why do ye come to me now 8 when ye are in distress?" And the elders of Gilead said to Jephthah, "For that reason we now apply to thee, that thou mayest go with us, and fight against the children of Ammon, and be our chief, over all the inhabitants of Gilead." 9 And Jephthah said to the elders of Gilead, "If ye bring me home again to fight against the children of Ammon, and Jehovah deliver them 10 before me, shall I be your chief?" And the elders of Gilead said to Jephthah, "Jehovah be witness between us, if we do not so, accord-11 ing to thy words." Then Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him
chief and captain over them; and Jephthah uttered all his words before Jehovah in Mizpeh.
12 And Jephthah sent messengers to the king of the children of Ammon, saying, "What hast thou to do with me, that thou art come against 13 me to fight in my land?" And the king of the children of Ammon answered the messengers of Jephthah, "Because Israel took away my land, when they came up out of Egypt, from the Arnon unto the Jabbok, and the Jordan:
now therefore restore those lands peaceably."
14 Again Jephthah sent messengers to the king
15 of the children of Ammon, And said to him,
"Thus saith Jephthah, Israel took not away
the land of Moab, nor the land of the chil-16 dren of Ammon; But when Israel came up from Egypt, and had walked through the wilderness unto the Red sea, and were come to Kadesh; Then Israel sent messengers to the 17

king of Edom, saying, "Let me, I pray thee, pass through thy land: but the king of Edom would not consent. And in like manner they sent to the king of Moab; but he would not consent: so Israel abode in Kadesh. They 18 then went along through the wilderness, and compassed the land of Edom, and the land of Moab, and came by the east side of the land of Moab, and pitched on the other side of the Arnon, but came not within the boundary of Moab; for the Arnon was the boundary of Moab. And Israel sent messengers unto 19
Sihon, king of the Amorites, the king of Heshbon; and Israel said to him, 'Let us pass we pray thee, through thy land, unto our own place.' But Sihon would not trust Israel to 20 pass through his territory; but Sihon assembled all his people, and encamped in Jahaz, and fought against Israel. And Jehovah, the 21
God of Israel, delivered Sihon and all his people into the hand of Israel, and they smote them: so Israel possessed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country. And 22
they possessed all the territories of the Amorites, from the Arnon unto the Jabbok, and and from the wilderness unto the Jordan. So 23
now Jehovah, the God of Israel hath dispossessed the Amorites of that land, on account of his people Israel, and wouldst thou possess
it? Wilt not thou possess what Chemosh thy 24 god hath given to thee to possess? So will we possess the land of all those whom Jehovah our God shall drive out before us. And now 25 hast thou in any thing a better claim than Balak, the son of Zippor, king of Moab? Did he then contend with Israel, or did he ever fight against them? Three hundred years 26 hath Israel dwelt in Heshbon and its towns, and his people out of their hands.

CHAP. XI. 3. And went out with him; that is made attacks upon the various hordes around them. This kind of warfare was then common, as it is still, in those countries. See Dathe's remarks, Hebrew Bible.

11. Uttered all his words. There was a convention of the people at Mizpeh; and Jephthah repeated the terms of agreement with the Gileadites, before Jehovah; that is, solemnly ratifying it; and regulating all things necessary for conducting the war.

13—28. The answer of the king of Ammon, is certainly as void of truth as of justice; and the reply of Jephthah is distinguished by both. Were kings to listen to reason, how few wars would there be! Ambition is the principal cause of fighting.

24. What Chemosh thy god. Jephthah here argues on his own principle. He ought to be satisfied with what Chemosh gives to him.

31. Shall belong to Jehovah; that is, if it be a person or animal which cannot be offered in sacrifice, it shall be consecrated to the service of

in Aroer and its towns, and in all the cities which are along the coasts of the Arnon? why, during that time, have ye not recovered them?

27 We, then, have not offended against thee, but thou doest us wrong to war against us: let Jehovah, the Judge, decide this day, between the children of Israel and the children of Ammon."

28 Nevertheless the king of the children of Ammon would not hearken to the words of Jephthah, which he sent to him.

29 Then the Spirit of Jehovah came upon Jephthah, and he passed through Gilead and Manasseh, and passed on to Mizpeh of Gilead, and from Mizpeh of Gilead he passed on towards

30 the children of Ammon. And Jephthah made a vow to Jehovah, and said, "If thou wilt, without fail, deliver the children of Ammon

31 into my hands, Then it shall be, that whatsoever cometh out of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely belong to Jehovah,

32 or I will offer it up for a burnt-offering. Then Jephthah passed on to the children of Ammon, to fight against them; and Jehovah delivered

33 them into his hands. And he smote them with a very great slaughter from Aroer, all the way to Minnith, and unto Abel-cheramim; twenty cities. Thus the children of Ammon were humbled before the children of Israel.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS X & XI. 1. We have another proof in this history, that sin is the cause of sorrow, and repentance the only way to obtain deliverance. When the Israelites put away their idols, God showed himself merciful. He reminded them of his past favours, and of their abuse of them, and ingratitude to him. They confessed the truth of these charges, but yet supplicate for mercy. Let those who are under God's rebukes; acknowledge his justice and righteousness. "I will bear the indignation of Jehovah, because I have sinned against him." When, as a nation, we expect calamities at home or abroad, and are praying for deliverances, let us remember to acknowledge Jehovah; or if what is proper to be offered, it shall be offered. I follow our marginal version in rendering, or instead of and.

34. His only child. She was therefore, more dear to her father; and as he had devoted her to God, all hope of posterity by her was cut off. This accounts for his distress.

36. If thou hast opened, &c. The reply of Jephthah's daughter shows both piety and magnanimity. Since God had made him the instrument of saving her country, she was content to die in her virgin state.

39. And she knew no man. Some suppose Jephthah offered his daughter

And Jephthah came to Mizpeh to his own 34 house; and behold! his daughter came out to meet him with tabours and with pipes: and she was his only child; beside her he had neither son nor daughter. And when he saw 35 her, he rent his clothes, and said, "Alas! my daughter! thou hast brought me low indeed! and thou art among those who distress me: for I have opened my mouth to Jehovah, and I cannot reverse it." And she said unto him, 36 "My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth to Jehovah, do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; forasmuch as Jehovah hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, of the children of Ammon." And 37 she said to her father; "Let this thing be done for me: Let me alone two months, that I may go up and down upon the mountains, and with my companions bewail my virginity." And 38 he said, "Go." And he sent her away for two months: and she went, and with her companions bewailed her virginity upon the mountains. And it came to pass at the end of two months, 39 that she returned to her father, who did with her according to his vow which he had made; and she knew no man. And it became a custom in Israel, For the daughters of Israel 40 to go yearly to lament with the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite; four days in the year.

our folly and guilt, and prepare to meet God in the way of his judgments, saying, "We have sinned, do thou unto us as seemeth good in thy sight."

2. Let us learn to be upon our guard against rash vows and resolutions. It may be sometimes useful to bind ourselves by our solemn vows, to show our gratitude to God, and confirm our regard to his glory. But those vows should be wisely made, and extend only to those things that will be clearly serviceable to the interest of religion, which are our duty, had no such vows been made. But many persons, besides Jephthah, have run themselves and their families into great inconveniences by rash resolutions

ter as a burnt-offering to Jehovah; a sentiment which I think unsupported by the text. Dathe has produced strong arguments against this opinion; and I conceive the remark which concludes this verse decisive. For if she was put to death, in her virginity, it is needless to inform us, she knew no man; but if she was devoted to a virgin-state, then this remark is just.

40. To lament with the daughter, &c. I have again adopted our marginal version; as giving the genuine sense. According to Houbigant this custom only continued during the life of Jephthah's daughter, as we find no reference to it afterwards.

CHAPTER XII.

B. C. 1143. A civil war between the Ephraimites and Gileadites; the former conquered; Jephthah dies, and Ibzan, Elon and Abdon successively judge Israel.

- 1 AND the men of Ephraim assembled, and went northward, and said to Jephthah, "Why didst thou pass on to fight against the children of Ammon, and didst not call us to go with thee? We will burn thy house, about thee with fire." And Jephthah said to them, "I and my people had a great contest with the children of Ammon; and when I called you, ye would not deliver me out of their hands.
- 3 And when I saw that ye would not deliver me, I exposed my life, and passed on against the children of Ammon, and Jehovah delivered them into my hand: wherefore then are ye come up to
- 4 me this day, to fight against me?" Then Jephthah assembled all the men of Gilead, and fought with Ephraim; and the men of Gilead smote Ephraim, because they said, "Ye are only fugitives of Ephraim: Gilead is a base
- 5 breed between Ephraim and Manasseh! And the Gileadites took the fords of the Jordan before the Ephraimites: and when any of those Ephraimites who had escaped, said, 'Let me go over;'

and vows; therefore it is better to let such things alone, and always guard our hearts and lips. So Solomon advises, "Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few."

3. We are also reminded by the persevering resolution of Jephthah, and the cheerful submission of his daughter, that lawful vows should be kept. For better is it not to vow, than to vow, and not perform. We have all of us vowed to be the Lord's by our profession of christianity, and by giving up ourselves to him. Let us remember that we have opened our mouth, and cannot go back with honour and a good conscience. Let us be faithful to all our engagements. So Solomon exhorts: "When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it, for he hath no pleasure in fools. Pay that which thou hast vowed."

CHAP. XII. 1. The conduct of the Ephraimites on this occasion shows, that they affected rule and authority over the other tribes. The whole history proves their ambition and love of preeminence.

4. Fugitives of Ephraim. The Ephraimites abused their brethren. I have followed the order of the text, and supplied with Geddes, as to the sense.—A base breed; that is, a mixed breed, belonging neither to the men of Gilead said to him, 'Art thou an Ephraimite?' If he said, 'Nay;' Then said 6 they to him, 'Say now Shibboleth: and he said Sibboleth: for he could not rightly pronounce it: then they took him, and slew him at the fords of the Jordan. And there fell at that time, of the Ephraimites, forty two thousand. And Jephthah judged Israel six years. Then 7 died Jephthah, the Gileadite, and was buried in 'his own city', in Gilead.

And after him Ibzan of Bethlehem judged 8 Israel. And he had thirty sons, and thirty 9 daughters; those he married out, and took in thirty maidens for his sons. And he judged Israel seven years. Then died Ibzan, and was 10 buried at Bethlehem.

And after him, Elon, a Zebulunite, judged 11 Israel; and he judged Israel ten years. And 12 Elon the Zebulunite died, and was buried in Aijalon, in the country of Zebulun.

And after him Abdon the son of Hillel, a 13 Pirathonite, judged Israel. And he had forty 14 sons and thirty nephews who rode on seventy young asses: and he judged Israel eight years. And Abdon the son of Hillel, the Pirathonite, died, and was buried in Pirathon, in the land of Ephraim, on mount Amalek.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. The Ephraimites were now as haughty as they had been unkind. Jephthah invited them, but they would not come to his assistance; and when he had succeeded they were offended. The guilty persons began to accuse their brethren, as is generally the case; but how pitiful, how detestable do they appear! May we guard against thinking that every honour is our due, and envying those that are honoured and distinguished above us. Let us ever maintain an humble spirit; and take heed also to our tongue; for grievous words stir up anger, and separate chief friends.

2. We here see that the beginning of strife is like the bursting forth of waters. Abusive words raise the passions, and these impel men to deeds of violence. The Ephraimites raised a storm by which they severely suffered; and Jephthah and the Gileadites tarnished the glory of their former victory, by the slaughter of them nor to Manasseh. They intend what is reproachful.

6. Say Shibboleth. This shows that the Gileadites, though they spoke the same language, had a different mode of pronunciation; as the people of Nazareth had in the time of Jesus Christ. The word shibboleth signifies a stream; which would naturally occur to the Gileadites, as a test, being an object before their eyes.

CHAPTER XIII.

B. C. 1161. The Philistines oppress Israel; an angel appeareth to the wife of Manoah and then to him also; a son promised, and Samson born.

- 1 AND the children of Israel again did evil in the sight of Jehovah; and Jehovah delivered them into the hand of the Philistines, forty years.
- 2 Now, there was a certain man of Zorah, of the family of the Danites, whose name was Manoah; and his wife was barren, and bare not.
- 3 And an angel of Jehovah appeared to the woman, and said to her, "Behold now, thou art barren, and bearest not; but thou shalt conceive, and bear a son. Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink no wine nor strong drink, nor eat of any thing unclean. For, lo! thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; but let no razor come on his head: for the child must be a Nazarite to God from the womb: and he shall begin to deliver Israel out of the hands of the Philistines."
- 6 Then the woman came and told her husband, saying, "A man of God came to me, and his countenance was like the countenance of an angel of God, very awful: but I asked him not whence he came, nor did he tell his name. But he said unto me, 'Behold, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; but drink now no wine nor strong drink, nor eat any thing unclean: for the child shall be a Nazarite to God from the womb, to the day of his death.'"
- 8 Then Manoah intreated Jehovah, and said, "O my Lord, let the man of God whom thou didst send come again to us, and teach us what we shall do to the child that shall be born." And God hearkened to the voice of Manoah; 9 and the angel of God came again to the woman as she sat in the field; but Manoah her husband was not with her. And the woman made haste, 10 and ran, and showed her husband, and said to him, "Behold, the man hath appeared unto me, that came unto me the other day." And 11 Manoah arose, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and said unto him, "Art thou the man who spakest to the woman?" And he said, "I am." And Manoah said, "When thy 12 words come to pass, how shall we train up the child? and what shall we do to him?" And 13 the angel of Jehovah said to Manoah, "Of all that I said to the woman, let her beware. She 14 must not eat of any thing that cometh from the vine; and she must not drink wine or strong drink, nor eat of any thing unclean: all that I commanded her let her observe."

And Manoah said to the angel of Jehovah, 15 "I pray thee, let us detain thee, until we shall have made ready a kid for thee." And the 16 angel of Jehovah said to Manoah, "Though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread: and if thou wilt offer a burnt-offering, thou must offer it to Jehovah." For Manoah knew not that he was an angel of Jehovah. And 17 Manoah said to the angel of Jehovah, "What is thy name, that when thy sayings come to pass we may do thee honour?" And the angel 18 of Jehovah said to him, "Why askest thou

If they should be angry, revengeful, persecuting and malicious, still "let us love our enemies, bless them that curse us; and do good to them that despitefully use and persecute us;" and thus show ourselves to be "the children of our heavenly father, who causeth his sun to shine, and his rain to descend, on the evil and the good, on the just and the unjust." Were this temper cultivated, peace would be preserved.

12. How shall we train up, &c. I have preferred the sense to the idiom, with Houbigant. The words allude to what was said verse 8.

19. When a wonderful thing. The Vulg. and some copies of the Sept. consider Jehovah as the antecedent, and render, 'who did wonderfully.' Others consider the Angel as the agent. As it is not clear which is the antecedent I have rendered in the passive. Some make the wonderful thing to be, that fire came out of the rock, to consume the sacrifice; but it is clear that this is mere supposition, and that the wonder was the angel's

19 thus after my name! It is a secret?" So Manoah took a kid with a wheaten-offering, and offered them upon a rock to Jehovah; when a wonderful thing was done, while Manoah and 20 his wife looked on. For when the flame went up towards the heavens from off the altar, the angel of Jehovah ascended amid the flame from the altar. And when Manoah and his wife saw this, they fell on their faces to the ground.
21 And as the angel of Jehovah appeared no more to Manoah or to his wife, Manoah then knew 22 that he was an angel of Jehovah. And Manoah said to his wife, "We shall surely die, because 23 we have seen God." But his wife said to him, "If Jehovah had intended to kill us, he would not have received a burnt-offering and a wheaten-offering at our hands, nor would he have showed us all these things, nor have now told us such things as these."

CHAPTER XIV.

B. C. 1141. Samson falleth in love with a woman of Timnath; on his journey thither killeth a lion; on a second journey findeth honey in its carcase; his marriage feast, and his riddle.

25 blessed him. And the Spirit of Jehovah began to move him at times, in the camp of Dan,

CHAP. XIV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. The direction given to Manoah's wife, may remind us, that temperance in all things is an important duty. This greatly contributes to our own health, and that of our offspring. By the wise constitution of nature, the vigour of the human frame in a great measure depends on parents; and general experience proves, that indulgence enervates and enfeebles. From their temperate habits, Nazarites are said to have been 'more ruddy than rubies.'

2. We are here taught, that such as want and seek divine direction, may expect to receive it. Manoah prayed that God would teach him his duty, and God did so. It is thus, that good men own and "acknowledge God in all their ways, and he directs their paths." We should do this especially when we have experienced, as in the case before us, his readiness to favour and help us. There are secret ascending amid the flame towards the heavens.

22. Have seen God; that is, in his angel.

CHAP. XIV. 1. To Timnath. Jerom informs us, that this place was on the confines of three tribes, Judah, Dan and Ephraim, between Ptolemais and Gazah.

between Zorah and Eshtaol. And Samson went 1 down to Timnath, and saw a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines. And he 2 came up, and told his father and his mother, and said, "I have seen a woman in Timnath, of the daughters of the Philistines: now, therefore, get her for a wife to me." Then his 3 father and his mother said to him, "Is there no woman among the daughters of thine own brethren, or among all 'thine own' people, that thou wouldst go to take a wife from 'among the daughters' of the uncircumcised Philistines?" And Samson said to his father, "Get her for me; for she pleaseth me well." Now his father 4 and his mother knew not that he was moved by Jehovah, and that he sought an occasion against the Philistines: for, at that time the Philistines had dominion over Israel.

Then went Samson down, and his father and 5 his mother, to Timnath; and they came to the vineyards of Timnath; and, behold! a young lion roared against him. And the Spirit of 6 Jehovah came mightily upon him, and he tore him to pieces as he would have torn a kid, though he had nothing in his hand: (but he told not his father or his mother what he had done.) And he went down and talked with the 7 woman; and she pleased Samson well.

3. v Syr. Arab.—ibid. 3 mss.

things with which we have nothing to do; but in every case of importance let us look up to Jehovah, and he will teach us his paths.

3. We see in the reflection of Manoah, on this divine appearance, great fear, and in that of his wife, great faith. He had spoken with great assurance of the son they were to have, and was anxious to know how he was to be trained up; but now he is so alarmed, that instead of expecting a son, he looks for death. How just the reasoning of the wife? She was now his support; the weaker vessel was the stronger believer. She infers from the many tokens of God's favour, his design was not to kill, but to save; not to reject but to honour them, and fulfil his promise.

4. We may reason as Manoah's wife did respecting the sacrifice of Christ. God appointed the sacrifice of Christ, and declared his acceptance of it, by raising him from the dead; by sending down his

6. The clause in brackets has to me the appearance of an interpolation. For how could Samson do this attended by his father and mother, and they not know it? And if they knew, how could he conceal it from them? Some suppose that on hearing the roaring of the young lion he went to attack him, but did not tell his father or his mother, what he had done.

8 And, after some time, he returned to take her for his wife; and he turned aside to see the carcase of the lion; and, behold! there was a swarm of bees and honey, in the carcase of the lion. And he took some of it in his hands, and went on eating; and when he came to his father and mother, he gave some of it to them, and they ate: but he told them not that he had taken the honey out of the carcase of the lion.

10 So his father and mother went down unto the woman; and Samson made there a feast "of seven days"; for it was the custom for young men on their marriage to do so. And when the Philistines saw this, they brought thirty companions to be with him. And Samson said to them, "I will now put forth a riddle to you: if ye can certainly find it out and expound it to me within the seven days of the feast, then I will give you thirty shirts and thirty suits of raiment:

13 But if ye cannot declare it to me, then shall ye give me thirty shirts and thirty suits of raiment."

And they said to him, "Put forth thy riddle, that we may hear it." And he said unto them, "Out of the eater came eatables, and out of the fierce came sweetness." And, during three days they could not expound the riddle. And it came to pass on the "fourth" day, that they said to Samson's wife, "Entice thy husband, that he may declare to 'thee' the riddle; else we will burn thee and thy father's house with fire. Have ye called us to take what we have? Is it not so?" And Samson's wife wept before him, and said, "Thou dost but hate me, and lovest me not: thou hast put forth a riddle to the children of my people, and hast not told it to me." And he said to her, "Behold, I have not told it to my father or my mother, and shall I tell it to thee?" And she wept before him 17 the seven days, while their feast lasted: and it came to pass, on the seventh day, that he told her, because she strongly pressed him; and she told the riddle to the children of her people. And the men of the city said unto him, on the 18 seventh day, before the sun went down, "What is sweeter than honey? and what is more fierce than a lion?" And he said to them, "If ye had not plowed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle."

And the Spirit of Jehovah came upon him, 19 and he went down to Ashkelon, and slew of them thirty men, and took their spoil, and gave suits of raiment to them who expounded the riddle. And his anger was kindled, and he went up to his father's house. But Samson's 20 wife was given to his companion, whom he had used as his friend.

spirit, and acknowledging and accepting his Son as our mediator and representative, therefore he will not be inexorable; if we apply to him in the gospel way. She argued from a promise given; we, in the present case, from a promise fulfilled. "I beseech you therefore in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God, for he hath made him a sacrifice for sin, for us, though he knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. However brave Samson was, he discovered little prudence and less piety. He acted in a manner very unworthy a nazarite, or a patriot, in marrying a Philis-tine, an enemy to God and Israel. He sacrificed every important consideration to his foolish fancy. There are many such melancholy instances as this in scripture, which were recorded for our admonition; yet young people will not take warning. When they are only governed by fancy and caprice, no wonder they entail sorrow and calamity on themselves and their offspring. 'I wish, says Bp. Hall, Manoaah could speak so loud, that all our Israelites might hear him.' "Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goest to marry a stranger to God and religion?"

2. We see how ancient the custom is of feasting on the occasion

18. Before the sun went down. Geddes renders, 'before the supper was served,' and observes, he thinks the word commonly rendered the sun denotes 'the evening meal.' It signifies in Arabic, 'food prepared on the account of the birth of a son, or a marriage;' but I think there is no instance of such a sense in Hebrew. It is, however, probable, that they expounded his riddle, before they ate.—Plowed with my heifer. This seems to have been a proverbial expression: the purport of which is, if ye had not dived into my secret, through my petulant bride, ye would not have been able to solve my riddle.

20. Whom he had used as his friend; that is, the friend of the bridegroom, his first attendant. Samson seems to have been displeased with the

CHAPTER XV.

B. C. 1140. Samson denied his wife; burneth the corn of the Philistines; they burn his wife and her father; he is bound and delivered to the Philistines; but routeth them with the jaw-bone of an ass.

1 BUT it came to pass, in a while after, in the time of wheat harvest, that Samson visited his wife with a kid: and he said, "I will go in to my wife into the chamber." But her father would not suffer him to go in. And her father said, "I verily thought that thou hadst utterly hated her; therefore I gave her to thy companion: is not her younger sister fairer than she? take her, I pray thee, instead of her." 3 And Samson, said concerning them, "Now shall I be more blameless than the Philistines, 4 though I do them a displeasure." And Samson went and caught three hundred jackals, and took firebrands, and turned tail to tail, and put a firebrand in the middle between two 5 tails. And when he had set the brands on fire, he let them go into the standing corn of the Philistines, and burned up both the piled up corn, and also the standing corn, with the 6 vines and the olives. Then the Philistines said "Who hath done this?" And some answered, "Samson, the son-in-law of the Timnite, because he hath taken his wife, and given her to his companion." And the Philistines came up and burned with fire both her and her of marriage. Samson complied with it; and had there been no greater fault, than compliance with such a custom, it would have been well for Samson and others! Our Lord honoured a marriage feast with his presence, and there manifested his glory. On such occasions to be singular, is often more the effect of pride than piety.

3. We learn, from Samson's riddle, that on such occasions it was usual to spend the time in proposing and answering suitable questions. Noisy mirth, riot and intemperance are alike inconsistent with the dignity of man and the precepts of religion. There is much ingenuity in Samson's riddle; and without some clue it would have been treachery of his wife and the mean spirit of her relations; and on this account he departed. The conduct of his wife and her friends shows how little regard was paid to matrimonial rights in those days.

CHAP. XV. 1. With a kid. Kids were and are considered, in the east, as the most delicious food. Hence Samson intended by this present to do honour to his wife.

4. Jackals. It is now generally allowed that the animal meant is the Jackal. It is a gregarious animal, somewhat like a fox, but far less cunning, and more easily caught. They abounded in Judea. Those com-

Then the Philistines went up, and encamped 9 in Judah, and spread themselves, in Lehi. And 10 the men of Judah said, "Why are ye come up against us?" And they answered, "To bind Samson are we come up, to do to him as he hath done to us." Then three thousand men 11 of Judah went to the top of the rock Etam, and said to Samson, "Knowest thou not that the Philistines are rulers over us? what is this that thou hast done unto us?" And he said unto them, "As they did to me, so have I done to them." And they said to him, "We are 12 come down to bind thee, that we may deliver thee into the hand of the Philistines." And Samson said to them, "Swear to me, that ye will not fall upon me yourselves." And they 13 spoke to him, saying, "No; but we will bind thee fast, and deliver thee into their hand; but assuredly we will not kill thee." And they bound him with two new cords, and brought him from the rock.

And when he came to Lehi, the Philistines 14 shouted against him; and the Spirit of Jehovah impossible to expound it. How many things, in providence, are like this riddle, to us inexplicable! They will in the end, to all who serve God, be subservient to their happiness.

4. The Philistines, in threatening Samson's wife with destruction, if she did not entice him to tell her his riddle, show their pride and cruelty. Had they possessed the least generosity, they would have acknowledged their incompetency to expound it; and paid the forfeit. They deserved the treatment they afterwards received, both from Samson and their own people. Let us always pray that honour and integrity may preserve us!

mentators, who would render 'sheaves,' have surely never attended to the context. It has been thought that Samson tied one tail to another, so that the animals would pull different ways. But he might tie tail to tail, so that they might run side by side, and nothing is said to lead us to judge otherwise.

8. Shoulder upon thigh; that is, as I conceive, so thickly, that the shoulder of the one fell upon the thigh of the other. At least if this be not the meaning, I understand not the words. Dathe supposes the word to be proverbial, and the meaning to be expressed by (מכר גורלה) 'a great

 17 of an ass I have smote a thousand men." And when he had made an end of speaking, he cast away the jaw-bone out of his hand, and called that place Ramath-lehi, [THE JAW-BONE-HILL.]

18 And he was exceedingly thirsty, and called on Jehovah, and said, "Thou hast wrought this great deliverance by the hand of thy servant; and shall I now die through thirst, and fall into the hand of the uncircumcised?"
 19 God then opened a crevice which was at Ramath-lehi, and from it water issued forth; and having drunk, his spirit was restored and revived. Hence he called the name of that well En-hakkore [THE INVOCATION-HILL,] which is to this day in Ramath-lehi.°

B. C. 1120. Samson carrieth away the gates of Gaza; Delilah, corrupted by the Philistines, enticeth him; his eyes are put out; his strength being recovered he pulleth down the house on himself and the Philistines.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. From the calamity which befel Samson's wife, we learn, that 'the fear of the wicked shall come upon them.' She had betrayed and abused her husband, for fear of being burned; and now she is plunged into the flames she would have avoided. When men through unreasonable fears, or from other motives, betray their friends and violate their consciences, what can slaughter.' Houbigant renders, 'He contended with them and slew them with a great, &c.'—Etam. An almost inaccessible rock, in the tribe of Judah. 2 Chron. xi. 6.

15. Smite them. The Hebrew word, which we render smite, is not always equivalent to kill. It means any sort of discomfiture; and seems here to denote the total rout of those Philistines, after mentioned.

16. Utterly routed them. The Sept. Chald. and Syr. render so as clearly to prove, that they read the two last words as verbs and not as nouns, according to the present Masoretic points. They render with perspicuity and force; 'with the jaw bone of an ass I have utterly routed them, &c.' See Note, Hebrew Bible.

19. A crevice which was at Ramoth-Lehi. The name of Ramath-Lehi

a harlot; and went in to her. "And it was 2 told" the Gazites, saying, "Samson is come hither." And they surrounded him and lay in wait for him all night, near the city-gate, and were quiet all the night, saying, "In the morning, when it is day, we will kill him." And 3 Samson lay till midnight; and at midnight he arose, and took the doors of the city-gate, and the two posts, with the bar; and, having put them on his shoulders, he went away with them, and carried them up to the top of a hill which is opposite to Hebron.

Now, after this, it happened, that he loved a 4 woman in Nahal-sorek, whose name was Delilah. And the lords of the Philistines came up 5 to her, and said to her, "Entice him, and see wherein lieth his great strength, and by what means we may prevail against him, so as to bind him and humble him; and we will each of us give to thee eleven hundred shekels of silver." And Delilah said to Samson, "Tell me, I 6 pray thee, wherein lieth thy great strength, and with what thou mayest be bound and humbled?" And Samson said to her, "If they bind me 7 with seven green withes which were never dried, then shall I be weak, and be as another man." Then the lords of the Philistines brought up to 8 her seven green withes which had not been dried, and she bound him with them. Now, while 9 men lay waiting in her chamber, she said to they expect but suffering? The God to whom vengeance belongeth brought this evil upon her; and it often happens that those who deal treacherously, are dealt treacherously with: sooner or later there will be a recompense both of good and evil.

2. We see in the conduct of the men of Judah, a base and servile spirit, who instead of setting Samson at their head and nobly con-

was given to the place, where Samson cast away the jaw bone. To consider the word then, as an appellative, in the next verse; and to say that, 'when Samson was thirsty, God clave an hollow place that was in the jaw, and there came water thereout;' must be through want of common attention; because they immediately subjoin, 'wherefore he called the name thereof En-hakkore, (that is, the well of him that called,) which is in Lehi, unto this day.'

20. It is probable that this com. has been inserted here through mistake; as we find it in its proper place at the beginning of the next chapter.

CHAP. XVI. 1. Samson must have gone to Gaza privately. His conduct in going in to a harlot cannot be justified. It was his sin, and had nearly proved his ruin.

him, "The Philistines are about to fall upon thee, Samson." And he broke the withes, as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth the fire. So the cause of his strength was not known. And Delilah said to Samson, "Behold, thou hast deceived me, and told me lies; now tell me, I pray thee, with what thou mayest be bound." And he said to her, "If they bind me fast with new ropes which have never been used, then shall I be weak, and be as another man." Delilah therefore took new ropes, and bound him with them, and while men were waiting in the chamber, she said to him, "The Philistines are about to fall upon thee, Samson." And he broke the ropes from off his arms like thread. And Delilah said to Samson, "Hitherto thou hast deceived me, and told me lies: tell me with what thou mayest be bound." And he said to her, "If thou interweave the seven locks of my head with that web, and fasten them to the pin, I shall become weak, and be as another man." So, while he was asleep, she interwove with the web, the seven locks of his head", And she fastened them to the pin, and said to him, "The Philistines are about to fall upon thee, Samson." And he awoke out of his sleep, and went away with the pin of the beam, and with the web.

15 And she said to him, "How canst thou say, tending for their freedom, resolve to sacrifice him to his enemies. Samson submits to be bound, on condition that his brethren would not smite him, which they readily assent to. Thus they would purchase peace by betraying their brave countryman; and live in slavery rather than follow him to victory and liberty. How oft is this done in the world! Men complain of oppression, when it is the effect of their own apathy and crimes!

3. With joy the Philistines beheld their captive-enemy! They shouted against him! In this instance, at least, the triumphing of

4. Nahel-Sorek. This was in the tribe of Dan, not far from Eshtaol. Delilah, was doubtless a courtesan; and Samson's attachment to her proved his ruin.

7. Tell me, I pray thee, &c. Had Samson given her a positive refusal, he would have acted more like a man of honour, than by repeatedly imposing on her. His conduct shows the influence this woman had over him; and justifies the remark of Solomon, that by such a character many 'strong have been cast down.'

13, 14. The Sept. read here as in the other instances; and there can be no doubt, but some transcriber omitted a whole line, and others have

'I love thee,' when thy heart is not with me? thou hast deceived me these three times, and hast not told me in what thy great strength lieth. Now as she pressed him daily with her words, and urged him, so that his soul was vexed unto death; He told her all his mind, and said unto her, "There hath not come a razor upon my head; for I have been a Nazarite to God, from my mother's womb: were I shaved my strength would depart from me, and I should become weak and be like any other man." And when Delilah saw that he had told her all his mind, she sent and called for the lords of the Philistines, saying, "Come up this once, for he hath showed me all his mind. Then the lords of the Philistines came up to her, and brought money in their hand. And 19 she made him sleep upon her knees; and she called for a man, and she caused him to shave off the seven locks of his head; and she began to humble him, for his strength had departed from him. And she said, "The Philistines are about to fall upon thee, Samson." And he awoke out of his sleep, and said, "I will go out as at former times, and rouse up myself:" for he knew not, as yet, that Jehovah had departed from him. The Philistines now took 21 him, and put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and bound him with fetters of these sinners was of short duration! Soon they felt the power of Samson's arm, and were utterly routed. Thus was God's word fulfilled, "One shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight." Aided and influenced by his Spirit, one or few can save as well as many. Samson celebrates his own victory, not doubtless through vanity, but in admiration of what God had enabled him to do, with the jaw-bone of an ass! Let us ever give God the glory of all our success, both in temporal and spiritual affairs; for he it is that arms us for the fight, and causes us to triumph.

followed his faulty codex. In order to have some idea of what is here told, the reader must know, first, that the looms of Palestine were extremely simple; probably, not unlike those that are still used in many parts of Asia and Africa: secondly, that they were worked by women: thirdly, that the web was narrow, little more, perhaps, than a hand's breadth: fourthly, that the woof was driven into the warp, not by a reed, but by a wooden spatula: fifthly, that the end of the web, was fastened to a pin or stake; fixed, probably in the wall, or driven into the ground: sixthly, that Samson was, probably, sleeping with his head on Delilah's lap, when she wove his hair into the web. Compare v. 19.

22 The hair of his head after he had been sha-
23 ved began now to grow again. And the lords of the Philistines assembled to offer a great sacrifice to Dagon, their god, and to rejoice: for they said, "Our god hath delivered Samson, 24 our enemy, into our hand." And when the people saw him, they praised their god, for they said, "Our god hath delivered into our hands our enemy, and the destroyer of our country, 25 who slew so many of us." And when their hearts were merry, they said, "Call for Samson that he may make us sport." And they called for Samson out of the prison-house; and they set him between the pillars of the house: 26 and he made them sport. And Samson said unto the lad that held him by the hand, "Suffer me that I may feel the pillars upon which the house standeth, that I may lean 27 upon them." Now the house was full of men and women; and all the lords of the Philistines were there; and there were upon the roof about three thousand men and women, 28 who beheld while Samson made sport. And Samson called to Jehovah, and said, "O Lord

Jehovah, remember me, I pray thee, and strengthen me, I pray thee, only this once, O God, that I may be at once avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes. And Samson took 29 hold of the two middle pillars upon which the house stood, and by which it was borne up, of the one with his right hand, and of the other with his left. And Samson said, "Let me die 30 with the Philistines." And he bowed himself with all his might; and the house fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were in it. So the dead, whom he slew at his death were more than those whom he had slain in his life. Then his brethren and all the house 31 of his father came down, and took him, and brought him up, and buried him between Zorah and Eshtaol in the burying-place of Manoah his father. And he judged Israel twenty years.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. We may learn from this singular History, that great gifts are often connected with great imperfections. Samson had courage and strength, and bravely fought against the enemies of his country; but he had little self-government, and indulged the most criminal passions. While as a Nazarite he was careful to abstain from strong drink, he took little heed of cultivating that purity of sentiment and conduct, which always stamps the highest dignity on man.

2. From the remark of Delilah, we may infer, that 'they only have our love, who have our hearts.' This is true with regard to our love of God: if any profess love to him, and it is no more than external worship, or bodily exercise, it is all vain and empty show. Love consists in the sincerity and warmth of our affection; and if we do not love God with our whole heart, how can it be said that we love him at all? His demand is, 'my son, give me thine heart.'

3. Samson overcome by sin, was for arising and arousing himself as at other times; but alas! he was shorn of his strength. He knew

20. He knew not, as yet, &c. It was natural to expect that as he had forsaken God, indulged a most criminal passion, and betrayed a secret which he ought to have kept, God would so far forsake him as to let him know the consequence of his conduct.

27. Upon the roof. The temple of Dagon seems to have been a round, or oval edifice. In the middle were two main posts, from which, beams not that God had left him. Like him, there are many from whom God is departed, who yet are ignorant of it; they continue rich, healthy and merry; but God is become their enemy, and they know it not nor consider it; never complain of their loss, but go on as if all was well, and expect 'that things will be as at another time.' This is the worst calamity than can come upon us: "Wo unto them, says God, when I depart from them."

4. In the treatment of Samson, we see the just judgment of God. His sin is marked in his punishment. Those eyes which had gazed on harlots are put out; and he who had become a slave to his passion, is made a slave to his enemies. Samson, the terror of the Philistines, through his own sin, becomes the subject of their mirth. Let us hope that in his affliction he repented; and as God enabled him to avenge himself of his enemies, lest they should exult and ascribe their success to their god Dagon, that his magnanimity and faith in his last struggle, were accepted and that he was saved. He is mentioned as one of those who possessed and exercised strong faith, Heb. xi.

diverging to the wall supported a gallery that went round the building. Samson was placed between those posts, that he might be seen, not only by those who were below; but also by those who were in the gallery. This gallery is here called the roof. So Dr. Shaw explains it, which seems most probable.

CHAP. XVII. 1. See Introductory Remarks to this Book. The mother, "The eleven hundred shekels of silver that were taken from thee, about which thou cursedst, and spokest of also in mine hearing; behold, the silver is with me; I took it." And his mother said, "Blessed of Jehovah be my son." And when he had restored the eleven hundred shekels of silver to his mother, his mother said, "I had wholly dedicated the silver to Jehovah on account of my son; that it might be made into an engraved, molten image: therefore to thee I will now return it." But he gave back the money to his mother, and his mother took two hundred shekels of the silver, and gave them to the founder, who made of them an engraved, molten image: and it was placed in the house of Micah. And the man Micah had a house for his god; and he made an ephod, and teraphs, and consecrated one of his sons, who became his priest. In those days there was no king in Israel; so every man did what was right in his own eyes.

Now there was a young man from Bethlehem-Judah, ° who was a Levite, and had sojourned there. And the man departed out of the city of Bethlehem-Judah, to sojourn where he could find a place: and he came to mount Ephraim, to the house of Micah, as he journeyed. And Micah said to him, "Whence comest thou?" And he said to him, "I am a Levite of Bethlehem-Judah, and I go to sojourn where I may find a place." And Micah said to him, "Dwell with me, and be to me a father and a priest, and I will give to thee every year ten shekels of silver, and a suit of clothes, and thy victuals." So the Levite went in. And the Levite was content to dwell with the man; and the young man was to him as one of his sons. And Micah con-things now related must have occurred soon after the time of Joshua.

3. An engraved, molten image. I agree with those Critics, who consider both the words (פסל ומסכה) as only denoting one image; which was first cast by the founder and then engraved. The verb in the end of the next verse is singular, in the text and versions, and makes it evident that only one image is here intended. For it is, not they were placed, but it was placed.

7. In the common text two words have been inserted by mistake; and secrated the Levite; and the young man became his priest, and was in the house of Micah. Then 13 said Micah, "Now know I that Jehovah will do me good, seeing I have a Levite for my priest."

In those days, there was no king in Israel; 1 and in those days the tribe of the Danites sought an inheritance to dwell in; for to that day all their inheritance had not fallen to them among the tribes of Israel. And the children 2 of Dan sent five men of their own family, men of valour, from their own boundaries, from Zorah, and from Eshtaol, to spy out the land and to search it; and they said unto them, "Go, search the land." And they came to mount Ephraim, near to the house of Micah, and they lodged there. When they were near 3 the house of Micah, they distinguished the voice of the young man, the Levite; and they turned in thither, and said to him, "Who brought thee hither? and what doest thou in this place? and what is thine office here?" And he said to them, "Thus and thus Micah 4 treateth me, and I am his priest." And they 5 said to him, "Ask counsel, we pray thee, of God, that we may know whether our enterprise on which we go, shall be prosperous." And the priest said to them, "Go in peace: 6 Jehovah is with you, in your enterprise, on which ye go."

Then the five men departed, and came to 7 'Leshem'; and they saw that the people who dwelt in it were careless; after the manner of the Zidonians, quiet and secure; and there was nothing to molest them in the land: they possessed also riches without restraint. And they were far from the Zidonians, and had no intercourse with other men. And they came 8 had we no authority for their omission, but the general history, they ought to be omitted; for how could a man be a Levite, and yet of the family of Judah!

CHAP. XVIII. 1. The Danites sought, &c. The inheritance first assigned to the Danites was too narrow for them, which forced them to undertake this expedition. See Josh. xix. 47.

7. Leshem. So the place is called Josh. xix. 47, where this history is briefly related. I consider the context leads to the version given. They

to their brethren to Zorah and Eshtaol; and their brethren said to them, "What is your report?" And they said, "Arise, let us go up against them; for we have seen the land, and behold, it is very good: hasten therefore, delay not to go and take possession of the land. When ye go, ye shall come to a secure people, and to an extensive country; a place in which there is no want of any thing on the earth; and which God will deliver into your hands." And there went thence of the family of the Danites, from Zorah and from Eshtaol, six hundred men armed with weapons of war. And they went up, and encamped near Kirjath-jearim, in Judah; hence that place, to this day, is called Mahaneh-Dan: [THE CAMP OF DAN] behold, it is behind Kirjath-jearim. And they passed thence to mount Ephraim, and came to the house of Micah. Then spoke the five men who had gone to spy out the country of Leshem, and said to their brethren, "Do ye know that there is in these houses an ephod, and teraphs, and an engraved, molten image? now therefore consider what ye have to do." And they turned thitherward, and came to the house of the young man, the Levite, to the house of Micah, and saluted him. And the six hundred men armed with their weapons of war, which were of the children of Dan, stood near the entrance of the gate. And the five men who had gone to spy out the land, went up, and came in thither, and took the engraved, molten image, and the ephod, and the teraphs; and the priest stood near the entrance of the gate, with the six hundred men, who were armed with weapons of war. So these men went into Micah's house, and brought out the engraved, molten image, the ephod, and the teraphs. Then said the priest to them, "What are ye about to do?" And they said to him, "Be thou silent; 19 lay thine hand upon thy mouth; and go with us, and be to us a father and a priest. Is it better for thee to be a priest to the house of one man, or to be a priest to a tribe-family in Israel?" And the priest's heart was glad, 20 and he took the ephod, and the teraphs, and the engraved, molten image, and went along with the people. So they turned and departed, 21 and put before them the little ones, and cattle and substance.

When they were a good way from the house 22 of Micah, the men whose houses were near to Micah's house assembled, and followed after the children of Dan. And they cried to the 23 children of Dan; and they turned their faces, and said to Micah, "What aileth thee, that thou thus criest aloud?" And he said, "Ye 24 have taken away the gods which I made for myself, and the priest, and ye are gone away: and what have I more? and how can ye say to me, "What aileth thee?" And the children 25 of Dan said to him, "Let not thy voice be heard among us, lest angry men rush upon thee, and thou lose thy life, with the lives of thy household." And the children of Dan 26 went on their way; and when Micah saw they were too strong for him, he turned and went back to his own house.

So they took the gods which Micah had made, 27 and the priest which he had, and came to Leshem, to a people quiet and secure; and they smote them with the edge of the sword, and burnt the city with fire. And there was 28 no deliverer, because it was far from Zidon, (for it was in the valley, which is by Beth-horeb,) and the people had no intercourse with other men. And they rebuilt the city, and ived secluded from others in a rich fertile vale; and being unprepared for war might easily be conquered.

21. The little ones. The text is here doubtful; and most suppose the little ones, and cattle, and substance, to belong to the Danites. I agree with Geddes in thinking they belonged to the Levite.

30. Son of Moses. It is disputed whether we should read משה or משהו. The Jews themselves confess the latter has been inserted, or as it is in many

ms and editions, suspended, for the honour of Moses, to denote that Jonathan was more worthy to be the grandson of Manasseh, the idolatrous king of Israel, than of Moses the legislator. Some critics still contend for Manasseh; and among these I am surprized to find Dathe. If he had been consistent with himself (see his note on the 17 ch.) he must have admitted that the circumstance of time invalidates this opinion; and the authorities in favour of Moses being the original reading are also of considerable weight.

29 dwelt in it; And they called the name of the city Dan, after the name of Dan their father, who was born to Israel: but the name
30 of the city was formerly Leshem. And the children of Dan set up the engraved image of Micah; and Jonathan, the son of Gershom, the son of Moses, he and his sons were priests to the tribe of Dan until the day of the captivity of the land. And they set them up Micah's graven image, which he made, all the time that the house of God was in Shiloh.

CHAPTER XIX.

B. C. 1406. A Levite goeth to Bethlehem to fetch his wife; an old man lodgeth him; the Gibeonites abuse his concubine-wife to death.

1 AND it came to pass in those days, when there was no king in Israel, that a certain Levite who sojourned on the side of Mount-Ephraim, took to him a concubine-wife out of Bethlehem
2 of Judah. But his concubine disliked him, and departed from him unto her father's house, to Bethlehem of Judah, and was there four whole
3 months. And her husband arose, and went after her, that he might gain her affection, and bring her back, having his servant with him, and a couple of asses. And she brought him into her father's house; and when the father of the

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XVII, XVIII. 1. We see in Micah, what evils the love of money produces; it tempted him to rob his mother, and her to fly into such a violent rage, as to curse the person that had meddled with her treasure. Her silver was her god before she had made an image of it; or else she would not have been so outrageous when it was stolen. The loss of a little money makes covetous men impatient and fretful; and they are ready to curse the persons by whom they have suffered. Would we govern our passions, let us lessen our value for the things of this world, as well knowing that the love of money is the root of all evil.

2. We may learn from these idolaters, the reasonableness of acknowledging God in all our ways. They consulted idolatrous images, to know whether it was agreeable to the will of God, that they should proceed in their design. How proper is it for us to

CHAP. XIX. 1. The history here recorded, is, in Josephus, placed after the expedition of the Ephraimites to Bethel (recorded c. i. 22.) It is plain from c. xx. 28, that it happened while Phinehas was high priest: and therefore is here entirely out of its place.

2. I have followed the versions in reading here, 'she disliked him;' for had she played the harlot, he would have had the right to have punishdamsel saw him, he rejoiced to meet him again. And his father-in-law, the damsel's father, retained him; and he abode with him three days: and they ate, and drank, and lodged together. And on the fourth day, they arose early in the morning, and he prepared to depart; but the damsel's father said to his son-in-law, "Refresh thyself with food, and afterwards depart." And 6 they sat down, and both of them ate and drank together: and the damsel's father said to the man, "Consent, I pray thee, to tarry all night, and enjoy thyself." And when the man rose to 7 depart, his father-in-law urged him, so that he lodged there again. And he arose early in the 8 morning, on the fifth day, to depart: and the damsel's father said, "Refresh thyself, I pray thee." And they tarried until afternoon, and they both of them ate. And the man then rose 9 to depart, he, and his concubine, and his servant; but his father-in-law, the damsel's father, said to him, "Behold, now the day draweth towards evening, tarry, I pray thee all night: behold, the day vergeth to an-end, lodge here, and enjoy thyself; and early to-morrow go on your way, and get home." But the man would inquire by prayer, 'what God would have us to do,' and to take him with us. If 'our way is before the Lord,' we may go in peace, and depend on success.

3. We may also learn what is the supreme object of our affection, by observing what we are most unwilling to part with; what it is, the loss of which affects us most. If we lose our money, or health, or friends, or reputation, and act as if we had lost our all, and say, 'what have we more?' it is a sign we make those things idols, and set them up in the place of God. If our happiness be bound up in any earthly comfort whatever, it usurps the regard we owe to him, and shows we are real idolaters. An interest in God is our best treasure; the loss of his favour, our greatest calamity, and an irreparable damage; 'wo be to us if he depart, for what have we more?' Jehovah is the portion and treasure of a good man.

ed her. Besides, his going to gain her heart or affection is a proof that this is the true reading.

4-9. We here see much simplicity and hospitality. The Levite succeeds in gaining the affection of his concubine-wife, and she is willing to go with him.

15. No man took them into his house. This shows that the people of lem; and there were with him two saddled asses, 11 and his concubine also was with him. And when they were by Jebus, the day was far spent; and the servant said to his master, "Come, I pray thee, and let us turn in to this city of the Jebu-12 sites, and lodge in it." And his master said to him, "We will not turn aside hither into the city of strangers, who are not of the children of 13 Israel; we will pass on to Gibeah." And he said unto his servant, "Go on, until we reach

 one of those places, and let us lodge in Gibeah, 14 or in Ramath." And they passed on and went forward; and the sun went down upon them when they were by Gibeah, which belonged to 15 Benjamin. And thither they turned aside, to go in to lodge in Gibeah; and when they went in,
 they sat down in a street in the city; for no man took them into his house to lodge.
 16 And, behold, there came from his work out of the field at even, an old man; who was likewise of Mount-Ephraim, although he sojourned in Gibeah: but the men of the place 17 were Benjaminites. And when he raised his eyes, he saw a wayfaring-man in the street of the city: and the old man said, "Whither go-18 est thou? and whence comest thou?" And he said to him, "We are passing from Bethlehem of Judah unto the side of Mount-Ephraim, whence I am. And I went to Bethlehem of Judah, but am now going to the house of Jehovah; and there is no man that receiveth me 19 to his house. Yet we have both straw and provender for our asses; and bread and wine also for myself, and for thine hand-maid, and for the young man who is with thy servant":
 20 we want not any thing." And the old man said,
 "Peace be with thee; howsoever, let all thy wants lie upon me; only lodge not in the street." 21 So he brought them unto his house, and gave provender unto the asses: and they washed their feet, and ate and drank.

Now as they were enjoying themselves, be- 22
 hold the men of the city, certain worthless men, surrounded the house, beat at the door, and spoke to the master of the house, the old man, saying, "Bring forth the man who came into thine house, that we may know him." And 23 the man, the master of the house, went out to them, and said to them, "Nay, my brethren,
 I pray you, act not wickedly; seeing this man is come into mine house, do not this shameful deed. Behold, here is my daughter, a maiden, 24
 and his concubine; them I will bring out now, and humble ye them, and do with them what seemeth good to yourselves: but unto this man do not so shameful a deed." But the men would 25 not hearken; so the man took his concubine, and brought her forth unto them; and they knew her, and abused her all the night until the morning: and when the day began to dawn, they let her go. Then came the woman at the 26
 dawning of the day, and fell down at the door of the man's house, in which her husband was;
where she lay till it was light. And her hus- 27 band arose in the morning, and opened the doors of the house, and went out to go his way; and,
 behold, the woman, his concubine, was fallen down at the door of the house, and her hands were upon the threshold. And he said to her, 28
 "Rise, and let us be going." But none answered. Then the man took her upon an ass; and the man set out and went to his own place.
 And when he had come to his own house, he 29
 took a knife, and dismembered his concubine, into twelve pieces, and sent her into all the districts of Israel. And whosoever saw it said, 30
 "There hath been no such deed done nor seen

Gibeah were unkind and inhospitable.

19. We want not any thing. They had provisions and necessities with them; they only wanted shelter during the night. Such was then, and such is still, the mode of travelling, in that and other eastern countries.

22. Worthless men. This is allowed to be the sense of the idiomatic phrase, 'sons of belial,' which I have preferred as not liable to be misunderstood. Their conduct shows the highest degree of depravity.

23-25. The conduct of the old man and the Levite, reminds us of that of Lot. The same sense of the rights of hospitality is manifest.

26. Nothing can be more base than their conduct towards strangers; and they deserved that vengeance which at last fell on them.

29. And dismembered, &c. This expresses the sense of the text, without the idiom.

CHAP. XX. 1. In Mizpeh. This was a central place, and not far up out of the land of Egypt unto this day : consider it, take advice, and speak your minds."

CHAPTER XX.

B. C. 1406. A general assembly of the Israelites ; their determination ; the Benjaminites refuse to destroy the men of Gibeah, and twice repulse the other tribes ; they are at last destroyed.

1 THEN all the congregation of Israel, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, with the land of Gilead, came out as one man, and held an assembly 2 before Jehovah at Mizpeh. And the chief of all the people, of all the tribes of Israel, presented themselves in this assembly of the people of God, four hundred thousand footmen who 3 drew the sword. And the children of Benjamin heard that the children of Israel were gone up to Mizpeh.

Then said the children of Israel, "Tell us 4 how this wickedness was done?" And the Levite, the husband of the woman who had been slain, answered and said, "I came to Gibeah which belongeth to Benjamin, I and my concubine, to lodge; And certain men of Gibeah arose against me, and surrounded the house where I was, by night, and me they intended to have slain : and my concubine they so abused that she died. And I took my concubine and cut her in pieces, and sent her throughout all the country of the inheritance of Israel:

CHAP. XX.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIX. 1. This Chapter may teach us, not to waste our time in prolonging our visits. Time is a precious gift, and every man should husband it by diligence in his calling. When friends press us still to tarry with them, the conduct of the Levite should remind us not to comply. Kindness, in this respect, is sometimes a snare; and friendships are often most lasting, when intercourse is conducted with prudence.

2. When we are in the most agreeable circumstances of life, we know not what evil may be before us, and therefore should never be secure. This Levite was pleased in having regained the affections of his wife; she was pleased to return to him; the father in law was pleased that the breach was made up. This history may teach us, that we know not what danger may be before us, nor how soon the end of our mirth may be heaviness. Our from Shiloh. This general assembly proves, that all the Israelites were not like the men of Gibeah.

9. We will go up by lot. I have followed the Sept. Houbigant renders, 'We will draw lots against Gibeah; and I doubt, whether this may not be the sense.

for they have committed most shameful lewdness in Israel. Behold, ye are all children of 7 Israel; give here your advice, and counsel."

And all the people arose as one man, saying, 8 "We will not any of us go to his tent, nor will any of us return to his own house. But 9 now this shall be the thing which we will do to Gibeah; 'we will go up' by lot against it; And we will take ten men of a hundred throughout all the tribes of Israel, and a hundred of a thousand, and a thousand out of ten thousand, to fetch victuals for the people, that they may do, when they come to Gibeah of Benjamin, according to the shameful deed which they of that city have wrought in Israel." So 11 all the men of Israel were gathered and combined as one man against that city.

Still the tribes of Israel sent men through 12 all the tribes of Benjamin, saying, "What wickedness is this which hath been done among you? Now, therefore, deliver to us the men, 13 the worthless men, who are in Gibeah, that we may put them to death, and put away evil from Israel." But the children of Benjamin would not hearken to the voice of their brethren, the children of Israel: But the children 14 of Benjamin assembled out of the other cities unto Gibeah, to go out thence to battle against the children of Israel. And the children of 15 earthly comforts and enjoyments are all uncertain; and therefore we should be as though we possessed them not, and prepare for disappointments.

3. Let us reflect on the shameful deeds of these worthless Benjaminites, to inspire us with hatred, and to animate us in the service of God. The first sign of their wickedness was leaving a stranger, and a Levite, to lodge in the street. If the fear of God had been in any of their houses, his servants had not been excluded. The worst of pagans, says Bp. Hall, were saints to these Israelites. What availed it to have Shiloh in their neighbourhood, and Sodom in their streets? to have the laws of God in their hands, and upon their fringes, and the devil in their hearts? Nothing but hell can yield a worse creature than a depraved Israelite, a wicked professor of religion.

18. Went up to Bethel. Our translators and others render, 'the

They are smitten twice.

JUDGES XX.

At length they conquer.

Benjamin were numbered, at that time, out of the cities, twenty and six thousand men who drew the sword, besides the inhabitants of Gibeah, of whom were numbered, seven hundred 16 chosen men. Among all this people there were seven hundred chosen men, left-handed; every one could sling stones at a hair, and not miss.
17 And of the men of Israel, besides Benjamin, were numbered four hundred thousand men who drew the sword: all these were men of war.
18 And the children of Israel arose, and went up to Bethel, and asked counsel of God, and said, "Which of us shall go up first to the battle against the children of Benjamin?" And 19 Jehovah said, "Judah shall go up first." And the children of Israel arose in the morning,
20 and encamped against Gibeah. And the men of Israel went out to battle against Benjamin; and the men of Israel put themselves in array
21 to fight against them at Gibeah. And the children of Benjamin came forth out of Gibeah, and destroyed down to the ground of the Israelites that day twenty two thousand men.
23 And the children of Israel went up and wept before Jehovah until the evening, and asked counsel of Jehovah, saying, "Shall we go up to battle against the children of Benjamin our brother?" And Jehovah said, "Go up against 22 them." And the people, the men of Israel, encouraged themselves, and set their battle again in array in the place where they put themselves in array the first day. And on the second
24 day, the children of Israel drew near to fight
25 the children of Benjamin. And Benjamin went forth against them out of Gibeah on the second day, and again destroyed down to the ground of the children of Israel, eighteen thousand men; all these drew the sword.

Then all the children of Israel, and all the people, went up, and came to Bethel; and wept and sat there before Jehovah, and fasted that day until the evening, and offered burnt-offerings and feast-offerings before Jehovah. And the 26 children of Israel inquired of Jehovah, (for the ark of the covenant of God was there in those days, And Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, stood before it in those days,) saying, "Shall we yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin our brother, or shall we cease?" And Jehovah said, "Go up; for to-morrow I will deliver them into your hand." Israel now placed men in ambush
27 round about Gibeah. And the children of Israel went up against the children of Benjamin on a third day, and put themselves in array against Gibeah, as at other times. And the 28 children of Benjamin went out against the people, and were drawn away from the city; and they began to smite of the people, and kill, as at other times, in the highways, one of which went up towards Bethel, and the other to Gibeah in the field, about thirty men of Israel. And the children of Benjamin said, "They 29 are smitten down before us, as at the first." But the children of Israel said, "Let us flee, and draw them from the city to the highways." And all the men of Israel arose out of their 30 place, and put themselves in array at Baal-tamar; and the men of Israel in ambush came forth out of their places, out of the caves of Gibeah. Hence came against Gibeah ten thousand 31 chosen men of all Israel, and the battle was dreadful; but the children of Benjamin knew not the evil that was near them. And 32 Jehovah smote Benjamin before Israel: and the children of Israel destroyed of the Benjamin-house of God.' The old versions consider Bethel as meant, which lay in their way to Gibeah. Besides, the house is never called (בית אל) but, (בית האלוהים or בית יהוה). Nor does their consulting God imply, that they had come to Shiloh to the tabernacle; for they consulted God, when they were before Gibeah, doubtless by the High-Priest.

21. Twenty two thousand. From the nature of the ground, on which they fought, it is probable the numbers of the Israelites, were of no advantage; and hence their final stratagem to draw the Benjaminites away, and by an ambush take the city.

22, 23. These two verses have been clearly transposed. Modern critics transpose after the next, where they properly belong. The order of the narrative requires this change. Can it be supposed that the men of Israel were encouraged to set the battle in order, before they had consulted God, and received his command to go up again before Gibeah? By transposing the two verses all is natural and easy.

27. For the ark of the covenant, &c. The ark was often taken from the tabernacle as we learn in the subsequent history; and it was now at Bethel, though the Tabernacle was at Shiloh.

31. Gibeah in the field. Geddes supposes this might be a village, called from its situation, Gibeah in the field. This is no improbable supposition.

33. Caves of Gibeah. So Rabbi Levi renders, and I think justly; for how could ambushes be laid in meadows?

minites, that day, twenty-five thousand and one 36 hundred men: all these drew the sword. For the children of Benjamin saw that the children of Israel were smitten as before: for the men of Israel gave place to the Benjaminites, because they trusted to the men in ambush, whom 37 they had placed about Gibeah. And the men in ambush hasted, and rushed upon Gibeah;
 and they invaded, and smote the whole city 38 with the edge of the sword. Now a signal had been appointed between the men of Israel and the men in ambush; namely, that they should make a cloud of smoke to rise up out of the 39 city. And when the men of Israel retired in the battle, Benjamin began to smite and kill of the men of Israel about thirty persons; for they said, "Surely they are smitten down before us, 40 as in the first battle." But when the cloud of smoke began to rise out of the city like a pillar, the Benjaminites looked behind them,
 and, behold, the flame of the city ascended up 41 to the heavens. And when the men of Israel turned again, the men of Benjamin were confounded; for they saw that evil was come upon 42 them. They, therefore, retreated before the men of Israel by the way of the wilderness;
 but the battle overtook them: and they who came out of their own city destroyed them in 43 the mid-way. Thus they surrounded the Ben-jaminites, and chased them, and trod them down with ease, over against Gibeah, towards the sunrising. And there fell of Benjamin eigh- 44 teen thousand men; all these were men of valour. And the rest turned and fled towards 45 the wilderness, unto the rock of Rimmon: and they gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men! and pursued them to "Gibeon", and slew of them two thousand men. So that 46

 all who fell that day, of Benjamin, were twenty-five thousand men, who drew the sword;
 all these were men of valour. But six hun- 47
 dred men turned and fled to the wilderness, to the rock of Rimmon; and on the rock of Rimmon they abode four months. And the 48 men of Israel returned upon the rest of the children of Benjamin, and smote whomsoever
 they found, with the edge of the sword, as well the men of every city, as the beasts; also they set on fire all the cities to which they came.

CHAPTER XXI.

B. C. 1406. The Israelites bewail the destruction of Benjamin; they take the virgins of Jabesh-gilead for wives to those who remained; and advise those still without to take the young women of Shiloh by surprise.

Now the men of Israel had sworn in Mizpeh, 1 saying, "There shall not any of us give his daughter unto Benjamin to wife." And the 2 people came to Bethel, and abode there till the evening, before God; and they raised their voices, and wept much: "And said, O Jehovah, 3

45. v Syr. Arab.

that the Benjaminites could not be so rash as to venture to come to a contest. If this were their spirit, the Lord taught them by sad experience that the battle is not always to the strong.

3. In the humiliation, fasting, and prayer of the Israelites, and in the confidence of the Benjaminites from past success, we might almost infer what would be the consequence of another battle. An humble, penitent people, God has promised to bless; and a haughty people to abase. Hence the Benjaminites soon found that the triumphing of the wicked is short. How dreadful the judgment which fell on them; but how justly deserved! They not only connived at the wicked deeds of others, but they associated to defend them; and therefore fell with them. What calamities did the sinners of Gibeah bring on their whole tribe! Thus we see, that the wicked shall not go unpunished.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. We ought justly to admire the zeal of this great assembly. They acted with spirit and resolution, to put away the evil from Israel. They did not suffer their zeal to abate by unnecessary delay; nor did they act rashly against the other Benjaminites. They only required that those sinners of Gibeah should be given up to public justice, who had disgraced the name of Israelites, by their flagitious deed. Thus it is good to be always zealously affected in a good cause; and for zeal to be according to knowledge.

2. We may justly suspect, from the losses of the Israelites in their first attacks, that they had not acted righteously before God.
 They inquired of him who should go up first against Benjamin;
 but we do not find that they had sought his aid and blessing.
 Perhaps they went confiding in their numbers, and supposing

36. These and the ten following verses, are a more minute account of the manner in which the battle was carried on.

CHAP. XI. 3. One tribe wanting, &c. Those who felt any regard to the welfare of their country, must have deeply lamented the sad necessity which had nearly blotted out one of the tribes of Israel. They had many enemies around them, and civil war weakened them.

the God of Israel, why is this come to pass in Israel that there should be, this day, one tribe wanting in Israel?" And early on the morrow, the people arose, and built there an altar, and offered burnt-offerings and feast-offerings. And the children of Israel said, "Who is there among all the tribes of Israel that came not up to the assembly, held before Jehovah?" For they had made a great oath concerning such as came not to Mizpeh, before Jehovah, saying, "They shall surely be put to death." And the children of Israel repented concerning Benjamin their brother, and said, "There is one tribe cut off from Israel, this day." What shall we do for wives for those who remain, seeing we have sworn by Jehovah, that we will not give them for wives any of our daughters?" And they said, "What one is there of the tribes of Israel, that came not up to Mizpeh, before Jehovah?" And, behold, there came none to the camp and the assembly from Jabesh-gilead. For the people were numbered, when, behold, there were none of the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead there. And the congregation sent thither twelve thousand of the most valiant, and commanded them, saying, "Go and smite the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead with the edge of the sword; with their wives and children. And this is the thing ye shall do, 'Ye shall utterly destroy every male, and every woman that hath lain with man; but the virgins ye shall preserve alive.'" And they found among the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead four hundred young virgins who had not lain with man: and they brought them to the camp to Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan.

11. *Sept. Vulg.

The whole congregation then sent messengers to speak to the children of Benjamin, who were on the rock of Rimmon, and to proclaim peace to them. And the Benjaminites at that time returned; and they gave to them for wives the women of Jabesh-gilead, whom they had preserved alive; but these were not sufficient for them. And the people repented concerning Benjamin, because that Jehovah had made a breach in the tribes of Israel.

Then the elders of the congregation said, "What shall we do for wives for them that remain, seeing the women are destroyed out of Benjamin." And they said, "The inheritance of Benjamin must be kept for those who have escaped, that a tribe be not destroyed out of Israel. Yet we may not give to them wives of our daughters; for the children of Israel have sworn, saying, 'Cursed be he that giveth a wife to Benjamin.'" They then said, "Behold, there is a yearly feast to Jehovah in a place in Shiloh, (which is on the north side of Bethel, on the east side of the highway that goeth up from Bethel to Shechem, and on the south of Lebonah.) They therefore advised the children of Benjamin, saying, 'Go and lie in ambush among the vineyards; And look, and lo! when the daughters of Shiloh come out to dance in companies, then come ye out of the vineyards, and catch ye every one his woman from among the daughters of Shiloh, and go to the land of Benjamin. And it shall be, when their fathers or their brethren come to us to complain, we will say to them, 'Be favourable to them for our sakes; because we reserved not to each man his wife

it is probable they are added from Joshua, to intimate, that Jabesh-Gilead was on the other side the Jordan, and strictly speaking in the land properly called Canaan.

13—15. The proposal of peace to the few Benjaminites who remained, and the solicitude to provide them wives, shows the repentance of the other Israelites for what had occurred.

19. A feast of Jehovah. This was the feast of tabernacles, which was celebrated with rejoicing; and at this place the young women who dwelt in Shiloh, and the cities about, used to assemble to dance when the weather permitted them.

21. Catch every one, &c. This might easily be done, as there were

11. The addition now found in the Sept. is supported by the context; and even the cautious Dath admits it to be genuine.

12. In the land of Canaan. These words may seem redundant, but in the war: for as ye did not at this time give 23 to any of them, ye cannot be guilty." And the children of Benjamin did so, and took wives, according to their number, of those, whom they caught dancing: and they went and returned into their own inheritance, and repaired

the cities, and dwelt in them. And at that 24 time the, children of Israel departed thence, every man to his own tribe and family; and they went thence every one to his own inheritance.
In those days there was no king in Israel: every 25
one did what was right in his own eyes.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. Though we may commend the zeal of the assembly of Israel, in engaging to punish the men of Gibeah, and those who came to their assistance, yet their conduct in smiting all the cities, and in destroying the innocent with the guilty, merits abhorrence. How difficult is it for men to govern their passions? To be humble in prosperity, to display placid submission in adversity; in the moment of victory, to temper justice with mercy? How much better would those Israelites have acted, if they had shown some tenderness and compassion! They would not then have had ground for lamentation and remorse; but rash vows and actions are generally accompanied with sorrow and distress.

2. We sympathize with the assembly, when their passions became cool, and they reflected on what had been done. Filled with remorse, they say, 'Why is this come to pass, that there should be this day, one tribe wanting in Israel?' Ah, how often do we only the young women together, the daughters of Shiloh. No men, as is the custom of the present day; nor did the married women so far forget their gravity, and regard to their families, as to go with them.

22. This contrivance to supply the Benjaminites with wives, will recall bring on ourselves miseries, and then ask, why is this come to pass?

Let us trace the cause of all our calamities in our own sins. For is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? In the discords of families and nations, and all the effects of them, may we not see, that he punishes less than our iniquities deserve.

3. What is related in this whole book ought deeply to impress us with gratitude for the blessing of a wise and good civil government. This is an ordinance of the God of nature; and the end of it is security to our persons and property. The due administration of justice by fixed laws is necessary to its preservation. Let us be thankful that we live under such a government; and that justice is administered, not by armies, but by peace-officers. To such a government we ought to be subject, not only for the sake of peace, but of conscience; we should render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and to God the things which are God's; honour to whom honour is due.

to the Classical reader, a like contrivance of the Romans. It is here supposed, that the brothers of the young women ought to have defended them; and we see this custom early established. Compare Gen. xxiv. 20, and xxxiv. 25-31, and notes there.

INTRODUCTION.

This book is a kind of supplement to the book of Judges, and is supposed to have been written by Samuel, as it brings down the history of Israel to his time. It is called the book of Ruth; because it treats of her, and details the manner, in which she was united to the Israelites. It may be considered as an introduction to the history of David, whose genealogy it contains; and designed to show, that the Messiah, who was the descendant of David, sprang from Judah, by Ruth, according to the prophecy of Jacob. The Jews considered it disgraceful to David, to have derived his birth from a Moabitess; and some think Shimei alludes to this in his revilings against him. This circumstance is a striking proof of its verity; for had it not been an incontrovertible fact, a circumstance so little flattering to the most beloved of their kings, would not have been recorded. It has been observed that the Evangelists have also stamped the seal of divine authority on this book, by referring to it in the genealogy of our Lord; and perhaps the union of a Moabitess, with the family, from which our Lord sprang, was intended to intimate, that he was to be alike the Saviour of Jew and Gentile.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1312. Elimelech driven by famine into Moab, dieth; his two sons also die there; Naomi returning to Bethlehem, persuades her daughters-in-law to remain, but Ruth attends her.

- 1 Now in the days when the judges ruled, there was a famine in the land. And a certain man of Bethlehem, of Judah, went to sojourn in the country of Moab, he, and his wife, and
- 2 his two sons. And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi, and the name of his two sons Mahlon and Chilion, Ephrathites of Bethlehem of Judah. And they came into the country of Moab, and
- 3 continued there. And Elimelech, Naomi's husband, died; and she was left, and her two sons.
- 4 And they took to themselves wives of the women of Moab; the name of the one was Orpah, and the name of the other Ruth. And they
- 5 dwelled there about ten years, When both Mahlon and Chilion likewise died: thus the woman was left behind her two sons and her husband.
- 6 Then she arose with her daughters-in-law, that she might return from the country of Moab; for she had heard, in the country of Moab, how

Jehovah had visited his people, by giving them bread. Therefore she departed from the place 7 where she was, and her two daughters-in-law with her; and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah. And Naomi said to 8 her two daughters-in-law, "Go, return, each to her mother's house: may Jehovah deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead, and with me. Jehovah grant that ye may each find 9 rest, in the house of her own husband." Then she kissed them; and they raised their voice, and wept. And they said to her, "Surely we 10 will return with thee unto thy people." And 11 Naomi said, "Return, my daughters: why will ye go with me? are there yet any sons in my womb, that they may be husbands to you? Return, my daughters, go back; for I am too 12 old to have a husband. Should I say there is yet hope; should I this night, have a husband; and should I also bear sons; Would ye tarry 13 until they were grown up? would ye on account of them be detained from having husbands? No, my daughters! although it be more bitter to me than to you, that the hand of Jehovah hath gone forth against me." And they raised their 14

CHAPTER I. 4. Took to themselves wives. This was a violation of the law of God; for this, perhaps, they died childless.

8, 9. Naomi said to her. She probably thought, that their situation would be better in their own country than in Judea; and this was the reason of her advice. She had witnessed in both her daughters-in-law, prudence and kindness, and devoutly prayed that each might again be married.

11—13. From this address it seems probable that Naomi had informed them of the nature of the Levirate-law, or that some such law also obtained in Moab.

13. Although it be more bitter, &c. This is the version of the Sept. Syr. Arab. and Targums, and I am persuaded is it the real sense of the text. The meaning I take to be, "My loss is greater than yours, my affliction voice, and again wept: and Orpah kissed her mother-in-law, and returned to her own people"; but Ruth cleaved to her. And she said, "Behold, thy sister-in-law is gone to her people, and to her gods: return thou after thy sister-in-law." But Ruth said, "Intreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following thee: for, whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God, Where thou diest, I will die, and there will I be buried. May Jehovah do so and so to me, if ought but death part me from thee." When she saw that she was determined to go with her, she then ceased to reason with her.

19 So they both went on until they came to Bethlehem; and when they were come to Bethlehem, all the city was moved about them, and they said, "Is this Naomi?" And she said to them, "Call me not Naomi, [JOYFUL]; call me Mara, [SORROWFUL]; for with bitter sorrow hath the Almighty dealt with me. I went out full, and Jehovah hath brought me back empty; why then call me Naomi, since Jehovah hath humbled me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?"

CHAP. I.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. The conduct of Elimelech appears to have been improper; and he was perhaps too hasty in quitting his country, and exposing himself and his family to the temptations of idolatry. It appears he that had some property in Bethlehem; this he ought to have sold before he had taken such a step. He might intend to abide only for a short time, and then return; but new circumstances arose and he died there. It is a dangerous thing, and truly displeasing to God, to forsake the station in which providence hath placed us, because there are some inconveniences in it; it shows an unstable mind and a distrust of providence.

2. Naomi and her daughters-in-law appear alike amiable, and may teach mothers and daughters-in-law, how to behave to more bitter. You have only lost your husbands; I have lost both my husband and my two sons, and am too old to expect another husband and children.

14. And returned, &c. All the versions have the two first words, and returned; the Greek only, to her own people.

16, 17. The artless simplicity of Ruth's reply to Naomi; the tender attachment it discovers, her firm and dignified resolution to share in her fortunes in life and death; have been justly and deservedly admired. There is not in all the compass of classic literature, any thing comparable to this.

21. Humbled me. So all the old versions render; for 'humbled me,'

CHAPTER II.

B. C. 1312. Ruth gleaneth in the field of Boaz; he kindly noticeeth her, and gives her liberty to glean with his maidens.

THUS Naomi returned from the country of 22 Moab, and Ruth, the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her; and they came to Bethlehem in the beginning of the barley harvest.

And Naomi had a kinsman of her husband's, 1 of the family of Elimelech, a man of great wealth; and his name was Boaz. And Ruth, 2 the Moabitess said to Naomi, "Let me now go to the field, and glean ears of corn after him, in whose sight I may find favour." And she said to her, "Go, my daughter." And she 3 went, and came, and gleaned in the field, after the reapers; and she happened to light on a part of the field belonging to Boaz, who was of the family of Elimelech. And, behold! Boaz 4 came from Bethlehem, and said to the reapers, "Jehovah be with you." And they answered, "Jehovah bless thee." Then said Boaz to his 5 servant who was set over the reapers, "Whose damsel is this?" And the servant who was set 6 over the reapers, answered and said, "It is the Moabitish damsel that came back with Naomi, out of the country of Moab. And she said, 7

each other. These are relations in which there are more differences and contentions, than in any other; and therefore caution is very proper. Naomi had been a kind, friendly mother to her daughters-in-law, and tender of their comfort and interest; and they showed great respect to her. Kindness generally wins the heart; and if persons are not beloved, it is often, if not always, their own fault.

3. The resolution of Ruth may teach all, and particularly young persons, that they ought to go and do likewise. Be willing to take the Lord for your God, your father, and ruler; and his people for your people. Let them be your friends and companions; associate with them, and continue among them; and bind yourselves to this in the strongest manner. Let no difficul-is parallel with 'afflicted me,' in the next clause.

22. The beginning of barley-harvest. According to the Targum, this was at the Pass-over, when they began to mow the sheaf to be waved, which was of barley.

CHAP. II. 1. And glean. This shows both an humble soul, and a readiness to do what she could to support her aged mother-in-law.

7. Just sat down in the shed. It was usual to raise temporary sheds in their harvest fields, to which they could retire during the extreme heat of the mid-day.

12. Thou art come to take shelter. So Purver and others; and thus

'Let me, I pray you, glean and gather after the reapers among the sheaves;' so she came, and hath continued even from the morning until now, that she hath sat down in the shed."

8 Then said Boaz to Ruth, "Heardest thou not, my daughter? Go not to glean in another field; nor go hence, but abide here, close by my maidens: Observe on what field they reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men not to touch thee? and when thou art thirsty, go to the vessels, and drink of what the young men have drawn." Then she fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said to him, "Why have I found such favour in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take notice of me, since I am a stranger?" And Boaz answered and said to her, "All which thou hast done to thy mother-in-law since the death of thy husband, hath been fully made known to me: thou hast indeed left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come to a people whom heretofore thou knewest not! May Jehovah recompense thy work, and a full reward be given to thee, by Jehovah, the God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to take shelter." Then she said, "Let me find favour in thy sight, my lord; for since thou hast comforted me, and hast spoken kindly to thine handmaid, 'let me be as' one of thine own handmaids." And Boaz said to her, "At meal-time come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morsel in the vinegar." So she sat beside the reapers; and he reached her parched corn; and she ate, and was satisfied, and yet left. And when she rose up to glean, 15 Boaz commanded his young men, saying, "Let her glean even among the sheaves, and reproach her not: And let fall also some of the 16 handfuls, on purpose, for her; and leave them, that she may glean them, and rebuke her not." So she gleaned in the field until evening; and 17 she beat out what she had gleaned; and it was about an ephah of barley.

And she took it up, and went into the city; 18 and 'she showed' her mother-in-law what she had gleaned: and she brought forth, and gave to her what remained after she was satisfied. And her mother-in-law said to her, "Where 19 hast thou gleaned to day? and where hast thou laboured? blessed be he who took notice of thee." And she told her mother-in-law with whom she had laboured, and said, "The man's name with whom I laboured to day, is Boaz." And Naomi said to her daughter-in-law, "Blessed be 'Jehovah', who hath not left off his kindness, to the living nor to the dead." And Naomi said to her, "The man is near of kin to us, one of our next kinsmen." And Ruth 21 the Moabite said, "He said unto me also, 'Thou shalt keep close by my 'maidens', until ties deter you; no intreaties or solicitations prevail, to abide in sin; or when turned from idols to go back to them. On your steadfastness depends your peace, comfort, and final happiness. Adhere, then, to God your Saviour, with strong affection; and when like Orpah, some forsake him, say, 'to whom shall I go? thou only hast the words of eternal life.'

4. Naomi drank deep of the cup of sorrow. One distress followed another; the loss of her husband was succeeded by that the beautiful metaphor is preserved.

13. Let me be as one of thine handmaids. The common version of this clause shows that it is not without difficulty. 'Though I be not like unto one of thy handmaids.' How is this connected with the context? Neither the Sept. nor the Syr. read the negative אֵל; and by this omission their version is appropriate, and expresses the request of Ruth, 'that she may be as one of his own handmaids.'

14. Vinegar. When Boaz is represented as having provided vinegar for his reapers, into which they might dip their bread, and kindly invited Ruth to share with them in the repast, we are not to understand it of simple of her sons. Let this teach us, that though we may now be full—full of comfort, abounding in those delights, which possess the heart, we know not how soon we may be deprived of all, and he made empty! We may change our names and say, call us not Joyful, but Sorrowful. From this, let us give to him who never changes and never fails, our warmest affection; and live in expectation of those vicissitudes of which life is made up. Let those who possess, be as though they possessed not.

vinegar, but vinegar mingled with a small portion of oil. For even the Algerines indulge their miserable captives with a small portion of oil to the vinegar they allow them with their bread, according to the account Pitts gives of the treatment he and his companions received from them.

18. And showed her mother, &c. The various reading is more appropriate than the text, as it makes רַחֵם the object of the verb רָאָה. Ruth returned to the city, and then showed her mother-in-law what she had gleaned. This order supposes Ruth the nominative to all the verbs; but the text makes Naomi the nominative to רָאָה, and also to the following, which is absurd and contradictory.

22 they have ended all my harvest." And Naomi said to Ruth, her daughter-in-law, "It is good, my daughter, that thou go out with his maidens, 23 that they meet thee not in any other field." So she kept close by the maidens of Boaz; and gleaned unto the end of barley harvest and of wheat harvest; but she dwelt with her mother-in-law.

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 1312. By Naomi's direction, Ruth lieth at Boaz's feet; he acknowledges the right of a kinsman; gives her six measures of barley.

1 THEN Naomi, her mother-in-law, said to her, "My daughter, shall I not seek rest for thee, 2 that it may be well with thee? And now is not Boaz of our kindred, with whose maidens thou hast been? Behold! to night he winnoweth 3 barley in the threshing-floor. Wash thyself then and anoint thyself, and put on thy best raiment, and go down to the threshing-floor: keep thyself unnoticed by the man, until he have done 4 eating and drinking. But when he lieth down, thou shalt mark the place where he shall lie, and thou shalt go in, and uncover his feet, and lie down; and he will tell thee what thou 5 must do." And she said to her, "All that thou sayest to me I will do."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. The conduct of Ruth affords an example of industry, humility and gratitude. She brought her mind to her condition; was content to glean for her support. She was not ashamed to confess her poverty, nor willing to eat the bread of idleness. Many had rather beg, and stoop to the greatest meanness, or the worst villany, than labour with their own hands. Ruth is also a good example of gratitude and respect; she was very thankful for the kindness shown her, and desirous also to secure the interest and favour of her benefactor. We see no arrogant airs, no abuse of his kindness; but the greatest thankfulness united with the greatest modesty. This amiable spirit was the basis of her subsequent elevation. Thus, as an haughty spirit goeth before a fall, so humility before honour.

2. The conduct of Boaz ought to be an example to masters and persons in affluent circumstances. Those who wholly trust the management of their business to others, have often reason to repent.

CHAP. III. 3. Until he hath done eating, &c. The harvest being completed, it was the custom to make a feast; and though Boaz only be mentioned, I think it probable that he treated all the labourers.

7. At the end of the corn-heap. This ought to excite no surprize, when the heat of the climate, and the custom of the country is recollected.

8. The man was astonished, &c. Fluttered, agitated, is the radical

And she went down to the threshing-floor, 6 and did according to all that her mother-in-law bade her. And when Boaz had eaten and 7 drunk, and his heart was joyful, he went to lie down at the end of the corn-heap: and she came softly, and uncovered his feet, and lay down. And at midnight, the man was astonished, 8 when he turned himself, and, behold, a woman lay at his feet. And he said, "Who art thou?" And she answered, "I am Ruth thy handmaid: take, therefore, thy handmaid under thy protection: for thou art a near kinsman." And he said, "Blessed be thou by 10 Jehovah, my daughter: for thou hast showed more kindness in this last instance than before; inasmuch as thou hast not followed young men, whether poor or rich. And now, my daughter, 11 fear not; I will do to thee all that thou requirest: for all my fellow citizens know that thou art a virtuous woman. And now it is 12 true that I am thy near kinsman; but there is a kinsman nearer than I. Lodge this night, 13 and it shall be in the morning, that if he will perform to thee the part of a kinsman, well; let him do the kinsman's part; but if he will not do the part of a kinsman to thee, then as Jehovah liveth will I do the part of a kinsman

Though Boaz had a steward he came himself to the reapers, and looked well to the ways of his household. He wished to know how the business went on, and to see whether his servants did their duty. Every motive should influence us to follow this example. Religion commands it, and self-interest requires it. "Be not slothful then, but diligent in business, for the diligent hand maketh rich."

3. With diligence we are taught to unite piety and kindness. Boaz did not enter his harvest-field like a demon, cursing those who were labouring for him; but like a man of God, or an angel of peace, he prays for their welfare: 'Jehovah be with you.' They return his kindness by saying, 'Jehovah bless thee.' Such behaviour on his part, could not fail to gain their esteem and good wishes; and to make them more attentive to his interest. How often do masters teach their servants to injure them, by their own unkind treatment? Love is the most perfect bond; and he who exercises it towards others will generally find others exercise it towards him.

import of the verb, and may doubtless apply to fear; but here I think the radical sense preferable. When the Levirate-Law is considered, (see Introduction, Pt. ii. Ch. 3, § 3.) the advice of Naomi and the conduct of Ruth, are free from all blame. They only did what the law ordered and justified.

9. Take, therefore, thine hand-maid, &c. Literally, 'spread thy wing.

14 to thee: lie still until the morning: And she lay at his feet until the morning; and she rose up before one could know another: for he said, "Let it not be known that a woman came to the threshing-floor." Also he said, "Bring the veil which is upon thee, and hold it." And when she held it, he measured six measures of barley, and laid it on her; and she went into the city. And when she came to her mother-in-law, she said, "How hast thou succeeded my daughter?" And she told her all that the man had done to her. And she said, "These six measures of barley he gave to me; for he said to me, 'Go not empty to thy mother-in-law.'" Then said she, "Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall out: for the man will not rest, until he have this day finished the matter.

CHAPTER IV.

B. C. 1312. Boaz calleth Ruth's nearest kinsman to redeem; he refuseth, and Boaz then redeems the inheritance and marrieth Ruth, who beareth Obed, the grand-father of David.

1 THEN went Boaz to the gate, and sat down there: and, behold, the kinsman passed by, of whom Boaz had spoken; to whom, calling him

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. From Naomi's concern for her daughter-in-law, we may observe, that which should be desired in the marriage state is rest, and that it may be well with us; that the affections may be fixed, and ease and happiness be found. It is the wisdom and duty of parents to seek this rest for their children; by assisting them in the choice of proper help-mates: and to remember, that this rest is not to be expected, where there is not a real union of tempers and affections. And may we all remember, that it is never well with us, truly well, till it is well with our souls; without this we shall never have true rest.

2. Virtue in any station should have its due praise, and be held in high esteem. Boaz commends Ruth for her honest industry and filial affection; yea the whole city could not but own, that she was a virtuous woman; her poverty did not hide her virtue, but made it more eminent and remarkable. We ought to commend what is good over me.' I have preferred the sense to the idiom, because the latter may be misunderstood and misapplied. She claims from him the protection and right of the Levirate-Law. Take me under thy protection, by marrying me; for thou art a near kinsman; or thou art the person whose right it is to redeem.

10-14. Boaz acknowledges her claim, and engages to see justice done to her. As unfavourable inferences might be drawn from the manner in which Ruth had preferred her claim, Boaz adviseth her to return privately from the threshing-floor.

by his name, he said, "turn aside, sit down here." And he turned aside, and sat down. And he took ten men of the elders of the city, 2 and said, "Sit ye down here;" and they sat down. He then said to the kinsman, "Naomi 3 who hath returned from the country of Moab, hath a field to sell which belonged to our kinsman Elimelech: So I thought it right to tell 4 thee, saying, 'Buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people.' If thou wilt redeem, redeem; but if thou wilt not redeem, tell me that I may know: for there is none to redeem besides thee; and I am next to thee." And he said, "I will redeem." Then 5 said Boaz, "What day thou buyest the field of Naomi, thou must buy also Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance." And 6 the kinsman said, "I cannot on this condition redeem for myself, lest I injure mine own inheritance: redeem thou for thyself my right; for I cannot redeem." Now this was the manner in 7 former time in Israel, concerning redeeming and concerning changing, for the purpose of confirming all things; a man pulled off his shoe, and gave it to his neighbour: and this was a testimony in the poorest and meanest; steady virtue will approve itself to mankind; and those who behave consistently with their rank and condition, will find favour both with God and man.

3. We are also taught by the conduct of Boaz, that we should be careful to preserve our reputation and good name. He knew the purity of Ruth's intention, and was conscious of his own virtue; yet he was desirous to conceal what might raise suspicion; that he might not trouble those who were good, nor give an occasion to those who were bad, to reproach and censure. We ought to be afraid of scandal, as well as of sin; and not do that which will lay us open to blame, nor let that be known which may be misinterpreted. We should "think on those things that are lovely and of good report; and herein exercise ourselves daily, to keep our consciences void of offence towards God and man." By such a conduct we honour God, and may become blessings to men.

CHAP. IV. 1. Calling him by his name. The versions generally so render; and I cannot think it probable, that Boaz should say to a kinsman, 'Ho, such an one.' Compare 1 Sam. xxi. 2, and 2 King. vi. 8.

5. Thou must also buy Ruth. The whole connexion leads to this sense. With the inheritance he must take the widow of the dead. So 1 ms. and the Syr.

7. How simple the mode of transferring property in those days. Witnesses and giving the shoe or sandal. Perhaps this last was preserved by the purchaser, and might answer the purpose of deeds. I take the mean-

8 in Israel. Therefore the kinsman said to Boaz, "Buy it for thyself;" and he pulled off his shoe, and gave it to him".

9 And Boaz said to the elders, and to all the people, "Ye are this day witnesses, that I have bought of Naomi all that belonged to Elimelech, and all that belonged to Chilion and Mahlon. Also Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchased to be my wife, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from among his fellow citizens: ye are this day witnesses."

11 And all the people who were in the gate, and the elders, said, "We are witnesses. Jehovah make the woman who is coming into thy house, like Rachel and like Leah; those two who builded the house of Israel; and make her an example of virtue in Ephratah, and famous in Bethlehem. And may thy house be like the house of Pharez, whom Tamar bare to Judah, through the offspring which Jehovah shall give to thee by this young woman."

So Boaz took Ruth, and she became his wife; 13 and when he went into her, Jehovah made her fruitful, and she bare a son. And the women 14 said to Naomi, "Blessed be Jehovah, who hath not left thee, this day without a kinsman, whose name shall be famous in Israel. And he shall 15 be to thee a comforter and the support of thine old age: for thy daughter-in-law, who loveth thee, who is better to thee than seven sons, hath born him." And Naomi took the child, and 16 laid him in her bosom, and became his nurse. And the women, her neighbours, gave him a 17 name, saying, "There is a son born to Naomi;" and they called his name Obed [ATTENDANT]. He was the father of Jesse, the father of David. Now these are the generations of Pharez: Pha- 18 rez begot Hezron, And Hezron begot Ram, 19 and Ram begot Amminadab, And Amminadab 20 begot Nahshon, and Nahshon begot Salmon, And Salmon begot Boaz, and Boaz begot Obed, 21 And Obed begot Jesse, and Jesse begot David. 22

CHAP. IV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. From this chapter we may learn, that contracts, and especially marriage contracts, should be open and public. Those whose designs are upright and honourable, have no reason to be ashamed, or to dread exposure. It is only when trick and wickedness are intended, that men court secrecy; but let such characters remember, that what is done in secret, shall one day be published as on the house-tops.

2. The conduct of Boaz may remind us of our Lord. Boaz acted the part of kinsman, and redeemed; he took Ruth, though poor, and raised her to dignity and wealth. So our Lord, most willingly acted the part of kinsman to us. We had lost our inheritance, and were altogether unable to redeem it; but he who was rich, came to claim and redeem for us; yea, not only to restore our inheritance, but to raise us to honour, riches, happiness and glory!

3. The devotion and piety of these early ages, are worthy of our imitation. We see in the most common occurrences of life, they ex-

ing to be, that he who purchased of another might be said to put on his shoes, and occupy his place.

11. Make her an example of virtue. So the Vulg. and I think properly. Our translators refer this to Boaz, and so Dathe and others. I take it to mean Ruth, with Jerom, Houbigant and a many other divines. Nor is the imperative mood an objection, as it is often used for the future, and press a deep sense of God, and much of the spirit of prayer. The manner in which the neighbours of Boaz congratulated him upon his marriage, and the birth of his son, teaches us to mingle devotion with civility, and to acknowledge the hand of God in every favourable event. It is a pity that this pious language should be lost among us, or grow into mere custom, and words without meaning.

8. *So Sept. Arab.

4. It is matter of comfort to parents, to see their children prosper; and to serious parents, to see them wise and good. This was Naomi's comfort, that her daughter was married, not only to a man of wealth, but to a man of integrity, generosity and piety. She was blessed with a grandson, and saw anew generation rising up to serve God. Let christian parents endeavour to 'bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord,' that they may have comfort in them when old and dying, and leave them behind with a good hope; that they will be the ornaments and supports of religion. It is delightful to a good man, to see his children, fear and serve God.

vice versa. See Glasius.

13. Made her fruitful. The idiom of the text is unusual, and for this reason I have rendered equivalently.

17. Michaelis and Geddes conjecture, that the reason of the name has dropped from the text. They would therefore supply, Because he will be the attendant of Naomi.

INTRODUCTION.

Whether this and the following book are called the books of Samuel, because he was the author of them, or because his history constitutes a chief part of the narrative, is uncertain. Among the Hebrews, the two books were considered as one, and the Talmudists maintain that the first 24 Chapters were written by Samuel and the rest by Gad and Nathan. They found this opinion on what is said, 1 Chron. xxix. 29; and it is not improbable, as the prophets are generally believed to have been the Historians of contemporary events. It is certain that both these books were composed prior to those of Kings and Chronicles, as many things in these last are clearly taken from them. In the Greek and Vulg. these Books are called the 1st and 2nd of Kings, and the two following the 3rd and 4th. The first Book of Samuel contains a space of nearly 80 years, reckoning from the birth of Samuel to the death of Saul.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1171. Elkanah, a Levite, and his two wives; loveth Hannah, who was barren; her prayer; Samuel born, and presented to the Lord; Hannah's song.

- 1 Now there was a certain man of Ramathaim-zuphim, of mount Ephraim, and his name was Elkanah, the son of Jeroham, the son of Elihu, the son of Tohu, the son of Zuph, an Ephraimite; And he had two wives; the name of the one was Hannah, and the name of the other Peninnah; and Peninnah had children, but Hannah had no children. And this man went yearly from his city to worship, and to sacrifice to Jehovah "the God" of hosts in Shiloh. And "Eli and his" two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, were the priests of Jehovah.
- 4 And whenever Elkanah offered sacrifices, he gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her sons and daughters, portions; But to Hannah he gave a special portion; for he loved Hannah, although Jehovah had given her no children.
- 6 And her rival also greatly provoked her to fretfulness, because he had given her no children. Thus she did year by year, when she 7 went up to the house of Jehovah; so she provoked her; Hannah, therefore, wept, and did not eat. Then would Elkanah her husband 8 say to her, "Hannah, why weepest thou? and why eatest thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? am not I better to thee than ten sons?"

Now Hannah one year, after she had eaten 9 and drunk in Shiloh, arose, "and went up to the tabernacle of Jehovah"; and Eli the priest sat upon a seat by one of the posts of the tabernacle of Jehovah. And she was in bitterness of soul, and prayed to Jehovah, and wept greatly. And she made a vow to Je- 10 hovah, and said, "O Jehovah, "the God" of hosts, if thou wilt indeed look on the affliction of thy handmaid, and remember me, and not forget thy handmaid, but wilt give to thy handmaid a male child; then will I give him to Jehovah all the days of his life; and he shall not drink either wine or strong drink; nor shall a razor come upon his head." And 12

CHAP. I. 3. ^aSept.—ibid. ^vSept. 9. ^aSo the Arab.

11. ^aSept. 3 mss.—ibid. Sept. 2 mss.—ibid. ^aSept.

CHAPTER I. The son of Zuph; that is, Zuph, who was originally of Ephrathah or Bethlehem, had removed to mount Ephraim; where his posterity were called Zuphites: and the place where they dwelt Ramathaim-zuphim; or Rama of the Zuphites.

8. God of hosts. It is probable, that originally (אלוהים) uniformly obtained before (עבדתי). The Sept generally so render, as if they found (אלוהים) in their copies. I have followed the order of the Sept. in the latter clause as more natural. The sons of Eli officiated under him.

5. Had given her no children. This is the meaning of the text; which as it is not capable of any misapplication, I have preferred to the literal rendering.

9. The clause added from the Arabic renders the narrative more full

as she continued praying before Jehovah, Eli 13 marked her mouth. Now Hannah spoke only in her heart; her lips moved, but her voice was not heard: therefore Eli thought that she 14 was drunk. And Eli said to her, "How long wilt thou be drunk? put away thy wine from 15 thee." And Hannah answered and said, "Nay
 my lord; I am a woman of a distressed mind:
 I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink,
 but have poured out my soul before Jehovah.
 16 Account not thy handmaid a worthless woman;
 for, from the greatness of my distress and 17 grief, have I hitherto spoken." Then Eli answered and said, "Go in peace; and the God of Israel grant thy request, which thou hast 18 made to him." And she said, "Let thine handmaid find favour in thy sight." So the woman went her way ^ato her own lodgings,
 and she ate ^aand drank with her husband,
 and her countenance was no more sad.
 19 And they arose early in the morning, and worshipped before Jehovah, and returned, and came to their own house in Ramah; and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife; and Jehovah 20 remembered her. And when, after Hannah had conceived, the due period had come, she bare a son, and called his name Samuel [GOD HATH HEARD]; for of Jehovah, said she, I ask-21 ed him. And the man Elkanah, and all his household, went up ^ato Shiloh" to offer to Jehovah the yearly sacrifice, and votive offerings, 22 ^aand all his tithe". But Hannah went not up ^awith him"; for she said to her husband,

"I will not go up until the child be weaned;
 and then I will bring him, that he may appear before Jehovah, and there abide for ever." And 23 Elkanah her husband said to her, "Do what seemeth good to thee; abide until thou have weaned him; only may Jehovah establish thy word." So the woman abode, and suckled her son until she weaned him. And when she 24 had weaned him, she took him up with her ^ato Shiloh", with ^aa steer three years old", and an ephah of flour, and a skin-bottle of wine, and brought him to the tabernacle of Jehovah
 in Shiloh: and the child was yet very young.
 And ^ahis father slaughtered his yearly sacrifice 25
 to Jehovah", and then slew the steer. ^aAnd his mother Hannah" brought the child to Eli;
 And she said, "Oh my lord! as sure as thou 26
 livest, my lord, I am the woman who stood by thee here, praying to Jehovah. For this 27 child I prayed; and Jehovah hath granted my request which I made to him; Therefore I 28
 also have devoted him to Jehovah; as long as he liveth he shall be devoted to Jehovah."
 And there ^athey" worshipped Jehovah.

Then Hannah prayed and said,

"My heart exulteth in Jehovah:
 Through Jehovah my horn is exalted:
 My mouth is opened before mine enemies,
 Because, through thy salvation, I rejoice.
 There is none holy like Jehovah;
 For there is no rock like our God;
 Yea, there is no God besides thee.
 Talk no more so vain-gloriously;

and complete. I mention once for all, that I uniformly render the phrases בית יהוה & דבלי יהוה by tabernacle of Jehovah; as the terms, house, or temple of Jehovah, ought to be appropriated to the temple of Solomon.

11. The addition now found in the Sept. is a part of the vow belonging to the Nazarites. Compare Numb. vi. 3, and Judg. xiii. 5, &c.

16. A worthless woman. The common idiom, a daughter, or son of Belial, for a worthless, or profligate man or woman, I believe is generally misunderstood. I have asked persons of some reading and good natural parts, what they supposed it meant; and they have replied, that they thought Belial, a name of the Devil. Had not our translators some such notion, as it is printed with a capital Belial, as if it denoted a person?
 The Bishops' and Geneva versions, are wicked woman; Purver, ungodly woman. How often did James's translators, by retaining the Hebrew idiom, obscure the sense?

18. The additions found in the Sept. are necessary to reconcile this with the following verse. For it is clear that Hannah did not now go on her way home, but abode all night at Shiloh; and that on the following day, after having performed their devotions, they all returned together.

24. A steer of three years old. Every critic must prefer the various lection to the text, because it is the usual reading in other places, and because in the following verse it is said, they slaughtered the (רֶמֶשׁ) steer, not (רֶמֶשׁ) steers. Dathe admits this to be the proper and genuine reading.

CHAP. II. 1. My horn is exalted. There is through the whole of this song an oblique reference to Peninah, and I think a direct one to the enemies of Israel. Hannah can now lift up her head and rejoice; can open her mouth with confidence in the presence of her rival.

2. I have followed the order of the Sept. See Green.

3. For an all-knowing God. Literally, 'a God of knowledge,' but the plural noun is often used in Hebrew for an adjective in the superlative degree.

Let no arrogance come from your mouth;
For an all-knowing God is Jehovah,
And by him are events regulated.
4 The bows of the mighty have been broken,
And the feeble have been girded with strength.
5 The full have hired themselves for bread,
And the famished have ceased to want.
The barren hath born in abundance,
And she, abounding in children, is worn out.
6 Jehovah killeth, and maketh alive;
Bringeth down to the grave, and raiseth up.
7 Jehovah maketh poor, and maketh rich;
He humbleth, and he exalteth:
8 He raiseth up the poor from the dust,
The beggar he exalteth from the dunghill;
To place them with the nobles * of the people*,
And make them possess the seat of honour.
For Jehovah's are the foundations of the earth,
And on them hath he placed the world.
9 The footsteps of his saints he will guard,
But the wicked in darkness shall abide.
For through his own strength shall no one prevail.
10 Jehovah will dismay his adversaries:
From the heavens, he will thunder upon them:

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. Elkanah exhibits an amiable example of affection and piety; affection to his wives and piety towards God. 'He feared God with all his house;' took them with him to public worship; was kind and affectionate to a good wife, and bore meekly and patiently the perverse temper and insolent spirit of a bad one. "Husbands are to love their wives, and not be bitter against them," and should be peculiarly careful to comfort them under their afflictions. Parents may learn likewise to devote their children to God, to teach them the language of prayer, and bring them to God's tabernacle and ordinances; and then they may hope that they will prove comforts to them.

2. From the conduct of Hannah we are taught where to seek

8. This verse, and most part of the next, is wanting in the Sept. but it contains the following: "Who giveth to the vower his wish, and blesseth the years of the just; for man by his own might is not mighty. Holy is the Lord! Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, nor the mighty man glory in his might, nor the rich man glory in his riches: but in this alone let him glory; in understanding and knowing the Lord, and doing judgment and justice in the earth. The Lord ascendeth the heavens, and thundereth, he judgeth the ends of the earth: to our kings he will give power; and exalt the horn of his anointed."—And she left him there before the Lord and returned to Ramah. A part of this is copied from Jeremiah, xxii. 3, and I am satisfied that the Sept. has been here interpolated.

The ends of the earth Jehovah will judge.
But to his own king he will give strength;
And exalt the horn of his anointed."

Elkanah then went to Ramah, to his own 11 house; but the child ministered to Jehovah, in the presence of Eli, the priest.

CHAPTER II.

B. C. 1165. The profligacy of Eli's sons; Samuel ministers to the Lord; Eli reproveth his sons; prophecy against them.

Now the sons of Eli were worthless men; 12 they regarded not Jehovah, Nor the duty of 13 the priests towards the people. When any one offered a sacrifice, the young priest came, while the flesh was boiling, with a three pronged fork in his hand; And he struck it into the 14 kettle, or caldron, or pot, or pan; and all that the fork brought up the priest took for himself. Thus they did in Shiloh to all the Israelites who came thither * to sacrifice to Jehovah *. Also before they burnt the fat, the young 15 priests came, and said to the man who sacrificed, "Give flesh to roast for the priest; for he will not take of thee boiled flesh, but raw. And if any one said to him, "Let the fat by 16

relief in our distress. "Is any man afflicted? let him pray." Under all our troubles, crosses, and vexations, let this be our refuge: let our prayers, like Hannah's, be humble and fervent. We shall find this to be a remedy for every complaint, a support in every trouble; it will give ease to the heart under all our sorrows; it refreshes the mind, and brightens the countenance. And when we seek mercy, let us accompany our prayers with pious resolutions.

3. The remark of Eli and the modest reply of Hannah suggest to us, that we should be careful to avoid rash censures; but if censured, we should not retort with bitterness and wrath. How often do men blame and praise without any just cause for either? They judge from appearances, and these are not always

10. But to his own king, &c. Under the influence of the spirit, Hannah in this verse, predicts the future victories of Israel over the Philistines, the rise of the monarchy, and according to Kimchi, the Saviour, the king Messiah, or anointed. In the song of the virgin, Luke i. 46, and of Zechariah, 69, 70, there seems to be a reference to the song of Hannah. See Note there.

12, 13. The song of Hannah ought to have concluded the first Chapter, as properly connected with it. I have followed the punctuation of the Sept and Vulg. with most modern critics; and this alone converts confusion into order.

14—16. The law authorized the priests to demand the 'breast and all means be burnt, as usual, then take for thyself, what thy soul desireth;" he would say "Nay; but now thou shalt give it, and if 17 not, I will take it by force." Therefore the sin of the young men was very great before Jehovah; for men were induced to abhor the offerings of Jehovah.

18 Now Samuel the child, girded with a peculiar ephod, ministered before Jehovah. Moreover his mother made for him every year a little robe, and brought it to him, when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly 23 sacrifice. And Eli blessed Elkanah and his wife, and said, "Jehovah give to thee seed by this woman for the gift which she hath devoted to Jehovah. And they went to their 21 own home; And Jehovah visited Hannah, and she conceived, and bare three sons and two daughters: and the child Samuel grew up before Jehovah.

22 Now Eli was very old, and heard all that his sons did to all Israel; and how they lay with the women who ministered at the door 23 of the congregation-tabernacle. And he said to them, "Why do ye such things? for from 24 all this people I hear of your evil deeds. Nay, my sons; truly not good is the report that I to be trusted. No vice is more degrading than drunkenness, and especially to women. All such are indeed worthless women. When Eli made this charge Hannah explains, and assures him that she was filled not with wine, but with sorrow. "Be not drunk with wine, in which there is excess; but be filled with the spirit," the spirit of devotion, meekness, and humility."

4. We are here taught to perform our vows, and render praise to God for his mercies. Elkanah and Hannah brought the

the shoulder,' of all feast-sacrifices. The sin of those sons of Eli consisted, not only in demanding more than their right, but in taking what they chose, before that which belonged to God, had been offered to him. See Leviticus vii. 23-25.

17. For men, &c. to abhor. Their conduct disgusted the Israelites, and led them to disregard the tabernacle and the offerings.

22. Who ministered. See Exodus xxxviii. 8.

25. Then judges may decide. That is, in matters of trespass between neighbours, there is an appointed method of reparation; the law prescribes what is to be done, that the trespass may be forgiven; but if a man sin against Jehovah himself, rebel against the sovereign, and be guilty of treason against the majesty of heaven, who shall become an intercessor for him? As the text stands, this is obviously the sense; but I suspect that the text has suffered, and that Jehovah is the genuine reading in the former part as well as the latter. The Sept. Syr. and Arab. seem to have so read. Admitting this reading, the version will be, "If one man sin against hear: ye make Jehovah's people to transgress. If one man sin against another, then judges may 25 decide; but if a man sin against Jehovah, who shall entreat for him?" But they hearkened not to the voice of their father; because Jehovah had purposed to slay them. And the 26 child Samuel grew up, and was in favour both with Jehovah, and also with men.

And a man of God came to Eli, and said
27 to him, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'I clearly revealed myself to the house of thy father, when they were in Egypt, in Pharaoh's house; And 28 I chose him, out of all the tribes of Israel, to be my priest, to offer sacrifices upon mine altar, to burn incense, to wear an ephod before me; and I gave to the house of thy father all the burnt-offerings of the children of Israel. Why spurn ye, through perverseness, at my 29 sacrifice and my offering, which I have commanded? Yea, thy sons thou hast honoured more than me, while ye fatten on the choicest of all the offerings of Israel my people. There-
30 fore Jehovah, the God of Israel saith, 'I said indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father, should minister before me for ever;' but now saith Jehovah, 'Far be it from me; for them who honour me I will honour, but child to the tabernacle, and solemnly devoted him to God. As he was the child of prayer, he was given up to the God of prayer. They felt the warmest emotions of gratitude, and could each say with David, "I love the Lord, because he hath heard my voice, and my supplications. Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live." Hannah in particular, magnified Jehovah, while her spirit exulted in God her Saviour. What noble sentiments does her song contain!

another, Jehovah may be entreated; but if a man sin against Jehovah, who shall entreat for him?" Geddes renders, "If one man sin against another, he has God for his arbiter; but if a man sin against God, who shall be his arbiter?" Coverdale's version, is excellent, "If one man sin against another, the judge, (Cranmer and Matthews, days-man,) can redress it; but if a man sin against Jehovah who can redress it? (Matthews,) who can be his days-man?" Such a sinner must be left to the judgment of God. Eli, by his language, shows the greatness of the offence of his sons. — Because Jehovah had purposed, &c. for their many and aggravated sins already committed.

29. Through perverseness. I consider the term (יָצָו) as the noun with the preposition, and the sense given, without any change in the text, suitable and coherent. The Sept read (יָצָו) and probably supplied a word to convey the sense: 'Why spurn ye, &c through an evil eye?' Compare Chap. xviii. 9.

30. Thy house and the house of thy father. There were two patriarchal they who despise me shall themselves be des-31 pised.' Behold, the days come, 'saith Jehovah', that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's house, so that there shall not be an old 32 man in thy house. And with envy thou shalt see a rival, who in every thing shall do good to Israel; but there shall not be an old man of thy 33 house for ever. And the man of thine, whom I cut not off from mine altar, shall remain only to consume thine eyes, and to grieve thy heart:

 for the whole increase of thy house shall die in 34 the flower of their age. And this which shall come upon thy two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, shall be a sign to thee; in one day both of them 35 shall die. And I will raise up for myself a faithful priest, who shall do according to what is in my heart and my mind; and I will firmly build up his house; he shall minister before me 36 and mine anointed continually. And every one who is left of thy house shall come and crouch to him for a piece of silver and a morsel of bread, and shall say, 'Put me, I pray thee, into one of the priest's offices, that I may eat

 a piece of bread.'

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 1141. Jehovah revealeth himself to Samuel; denounceth the destruction of Eli's house; Eli's submission.

AND the youth Samuel ministered to Jehovah 1
 before Eli, 'the priest. In those days the word of Jehovah was rare; prophetic vision was not common. Now, at that time it was, when Eli 2 lay down in his own place, and his eyes had become so dim, that he could not see; And 3 before the lamp of God went out in the tabernacle of Jehovah, where was the ark of God, that Samuel also lay down: And Jehovah 4
 called to Samuel: and he answered, "Here I

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. We behold religion disgraced in the conduct of Eli's sons. The very office bound them, not only to regard the rules of propriety and decorum, but to cultivate the spirit of piety and devotion. Forgetting all obligation they broke through every bound of decency, honour and religion. Their first crime was injustice; taking from the offerers more than right. Their second luxury; pampering themselves, and dressing their food to please their own vitiated taste. Their third crime was sacrilege; robbing God of what had been appropriated to his altar. And lastly wantonness, as the effect of their other vices. What degraded wretches are wicked priests! They are the scandal of religion, and the scorn and contempt of the un-godly themselves. They are two fold more the children of hell than other sinners! O let ministers of the sanctuary, consider that the vows of God are upon them; and dreadful will be their lot, if they feed themselves instead of the flock, and ruin souls, instead of aiming to save them.

CHAP. III. 1. Sept. Syr. Arab. 1 ms.

2. We are taught, how lovely piety is, especially in young people. The encomium upon Samuel in this chapter is very remarkably introduced. After the wickedness of Eli's sons had been specified, then comes Samuel's good character. He minded his business, and did it unmoved by the example of those priests, though they were his superiors in age, knowledge, and station.
 He kept his integrity, regarded and profited by Eli's instruction;
 and God loved him, and all the good people of Israel loved him.
 Good children will always be the favourites of heaven, and of all wise and good men. It should be our hearty prayer, that all our children and young friends may grow in wisdom as they grow in stature, 'and in favour with God and man.'

3. Let us attend to that important maxim, that settled rule of God's government, that 'those who honour him, he will honour.'
 If we honour God by serious worship, by a holy behaviour, and families of the house of Aaron, that of Eleazar and Ithamar. Eli sprung from the latter; but when the office of High Priest was taken from the family of Eleazar, or for what reasons, is not mentioned in the Scriptures. It should seem some conditional promise had been made when this transfer was made; but as Eli was not so faithful as he ought to have been, and suffered his sons to disgrace the priestly office, God now assures him, that misery and disgrace should come on his race.

31. Cut off thine arm; that is, thy power. The Greek translator read another word; and rendered seed.

32. Thou shalt see, with envy. We have here the same word, as in the 29 verse. It is a word of the most general signification, denoting every kind of depravity. As it is here connected with seeing, it must have the sense attributed. The Vulg. renders (γν) emulus, rival. This refers to Samuel.

33. To consume thine eyes, &c. What is said must be thus understood, that such should be the calamities of his house, that if he were then alive,

his eyes would be consumed with weeping.

35. And mine Anointed. The faithful priest refers to Zadok, who was of the line of Eleazar, and whom Solomon made High Priest, instead of Abiathar, who was the last of Eli's house, who enjoyed that office. I make Anointed the nominative of the verb, and understand it to refer to the high priest; others render, 'He shall minister before mine Anointed,' and refer it to the king of Israel, Solomon. The former I think the true version. So both Syr. and Arab. render.

CHAP. III. 1. The youth Samuel. Josephus and others suppose he was now upwards of twelve years old; and under the direction of Eli performed such services in the tabernacle as were fit for his age.—The word of Jehovah was rare. I have followed Mendoza in this version. Compare Ps. cxvi. 15, and Isa. xiii. 2. So also Poole explains, rare or scarce. The next words illustrate and confirm these, 'Prophetic vision was not common.'
 So the Tigurine version. Others, 'No open vision;' and Purver, 'no vision coming forth.' I prefer the sense to the idiom. There was no pub-

5 am." And he ran to Eli, and said, "Here I am; for thou calledst me." And he said, "I called not; lie down again." And he went and lay down. Again Jehovah called to Samuel. And Samuel arose and went to Eli, and said, "Here am I; for thou didst call me." And he answered, "I called not, my son; lie down again." Now Samuel did not know that it was Jehovah; for as yet the word of Jehovah had not been revealed to him. And Jehovah called to Samuel the third time. And he arose and went to Eli, and said, "Here am I; for thou didst call me." Eli now understood that Jehovah had called to the youth. Therefore Eli said to Samuel, "Go, lie down; and it shall be, if one call to thee, that thou shalt say, 'Speak, O Jehovah; for thy servant heareth.'" So Samuel went and lay down in his own place. And Jehovah came, and stood, and called as before, "Samuel, Samuel." Then Samuel answered, "Speak, O Jehovah"; for thy servant heareth." And Jehovah said to Samuel, "Behold, I will do a thing in Israel, at which, both the ears of every one who heareth of it, shall tingle.

zeal for his glory, he will honour us by reputation among men, his own esteem, and innumerable benefits. But if we despise him, by forgetting his worship, breaking his laws, and being unconcerned about his glory, we shall sink into contempt, become mean and vile creatures, and be the objects of the divine displeasure, which is the greatest evil that can possibly befall us. Religion makes men honourable in the sight of God, and all wise and good beings; but sin is the greatest reproach of human nature, and will bring upon men everlasting shame and contempt.

4. Let parents learn from the awful threatening denounced against Eli, the terrible consequence of spoiling their children, and conniving at their vices. Eli appears, in every other respect, to have been a worthy, good man; but a foolish partiality and licly authorized prophet, to whom persons could apply for satisfaction, in their doubts and difficulties. This contains the reason of what follows in respect of Samuel.

7. Did not know, &c. From this account it appears, that Jehovah revealed himself by an audible voice, but which Samuel not knowing, thought it had been Eli who had addressed him.

10. Speak O Jehovah, &c. The reading of the versions is supported by the direction of Eli, in the preceding verse.

12. From first to last. Purver renders, 'beginning and ending;' and Cranmer, 'from the beginning to the ending,' which is the literal sense, and to the same purport with that given; and so the Syr. The Vulg. after

In that day, I will perform against Eli, all that I have spoken from first to last, concerning his house. For I have told him that I will judge his house for ever, because, although he knew the iniquity of his sons, who made themselves vile, he restrained them not. And therefore, I have sworn concerning the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house, shall never be expiated by sacrifice, or other offering."

And Samuel lay until the morning, and opened the doors of the tabernacle of Jehovah. And Samuel feared to tell the vision to Eli; But Eli called to Samuel, and said, "Samuel, my son." And he answered, "Here am I." And he said, "What is the thing which Jehovah hath spoken to thee? I pray thee, conceal it not from me: God do so and so to thee, and more also, if thou conceal a thing from me of all the things which he said to thee." And Samuel told him every thing, and concealed from him nothing. And he said, "It is Jehovah; let him do what to himself seemeth good." And Samuel grew up, and Jehovah was with him, and not any of his words did he suffer to fail. And all Israel, from Dan, even to Beer-fondness for his children, brought ruin upon them. He reproved them indeed, but it was in the most gentle manner for the most execrable crimes; and treated them more lightly than he did Hannah, whom he only suspected. Let parents then reprove and admonish, and always proportion their reproofs to the nature of the crime; otherwise 'they honour their children above God' an awful and awakening expression! Those who allow their children in any evil way, are more tender of them than of God's honour and glory, more solicitous to honour their children than honour him. Let all learn then to take warning by this melancholy story, and not be accessory to the present and eternal ruin of their children: and thus, as was the case with Eli, have their grey hairs brought down with sorrow to the grave."

the Sept. 'I will begin and make an end.'

13. Because, although, &c. I have followed the text as corrected on the authority of the Sept. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

18. It is Jehovah; that is, His judgments are righteous, and I ought to be resigned.

19. Any of his words, &c. I have preferred the sense to the idiom with our old translators, and with those of James, in other places. Compare Josh. xxi. 45; 1 Kings viii. 56, and Esther vi. 10.

CHAPTER IV. -

B. C. 1141. A disastrous war with the Philistines; the ark of God taken, the sons of Eli slain, and his own death.

- 1 *ELI was now very old, and his sons still went on, and their way was evil before Jehovah; and the Philistines assembled and came forth to fight against Israel". And Israel went forth against the Philistines to battle, and encamped near Eben-ezer; and the Philistines encamped in Aphek. And the Philistines put themselves 2 in array against Israel; and when they joined battle, Israel was smitten before the Philistines: and they slew of the army, on the field, about four thousand men.
- 3 And when the people were come into the camp, the elders of Israel said, "Why hath Jehovah smitten us to day before the Philistines? Let us bring to us from Shiloh, the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, that it may go among us and save us from the hand of our 4 enemies. So the people sent persons to Shiloh,

CHAP. IV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. We are here taught that young persons should be subject to the aged; that children and servants should pay due respect to their masters and instructors. How humble and diligent was Samuel! ready to rise out of his bed at every call of Eli; and was very careful and tender of him. Children should honour their aged and weakly parents; and servants do all they can for the ease and comfort of those whom they serve: and learn from this pious child, that their obedience should be ready and cheerful, and then it will be acceptable.

We learn, that when God speaks, his creatures should attend. If it be our duty to obey the calls, and attend to the instructions, of earthly masters, much more of the infinitely great and glorious God, whose servants we all are. When reading or hearing his word, this should be our language, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

CHAP. IV. 1. I have followed the Sept. and partly the Vulg. and the passage thus corrected, is at least, more full and connected.

3. Let us bring to us the ark. They might be induced to do this from recollecting that the ark was carried by their ancestors; and they might hope that this special token of God's presence would secure them victory.

4. Two sons of Eli were there. In Shiloh; but they went with the

that they might bring thence the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, the God of hosts, who dwelleth between the cherubs: And the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there with the ark of the covenant of God.

Now when the ark of the covenant of Jehovah came into the camp, all Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again. And when the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, they said, "What meaneth the noise of this great shout in the camp of the Hebrews?" And they understood that the ark of Jehovah was come into the camp. And the Philistines 7 were afraid, for they said, "A god is come into the camp." And they said, "Woe to us! for there hath not been such a thing heretofore. Woe to us! who shall deliver us out of the 8 hands of those mighty gods? those gods which smote the Egyptians with every kind of plague, and did such wonders" in the wilderness! Be 9 strong, and quit yourselves like men, O ye Philistines, that ye become not servants to the Hebrews, as they have been to you: quit yourselves like men, and fight." And the 10 Philistines fought, and Israel was smitten, and they fled every one to his own home: and the slaughter was very great; for there fell of Israel

1. Sept. and partly Vulg.

Let us hear and attend to 'what the Lord our God will speak,' and then we may hope 'he will speak peace to us.'

3. We may learn from the example of Eli, a submissive temper of mind under all the dispensations of providence. When this dreadful threatening was heard, he said, "It is Jehovah, let him do what to himself seemeth good." He lays it down as a plain truth, It is Jehovah, a Being of perfect justice, almighty power, and infinite wisdom, who never punishes without a just cause, and in a righteous manner. And then he draws this very proper and satisfactory conclusion, let him do what to himself seemeth good. Not what I think just and fit, who am so ignorant, and have so often erred, but what his perfect knowledge judges to be best. May we thus accept the punishment of our iniquity, and "bear the indignation of the Lord, because we have sinned against him."

ark to the field of battle. It does not appear that either Israel or the priests consulted God on this occasion, but acted according to their own will.

7-9. They speak as idolaters; and from their remarks we infer, that it had not been usual with them or the people, with whom they had intercourse, to carry the images of their gods to the field of battle.

12. With his clothes rent, &c. These were the actual tokens of grief and distress. Compare Gen. xlvii. 29; Josh vii. 6, &c.

11 thirty thousand men. And the ark of God was taken; and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were slain.

12 And a man of Benjamin ran from the army, and came to Shiloh the same day, with his clothes rent, and with earth upon his head.

13 And when he came, lo, Eli was sitting upon a high seat, by the "gate", watching; for his heart trembled for the ark of God. And when the man came to the city, with the news, the 14 whole city cried aloud. And when Eli heard the noise of the cry, he said, "What meaneth the noise of this tumult?" And the man came

15 in hastily, and told Eli. Now Eli was ninety-eight years old; and his eyes were so dim, that

16 he could not see. And the man said to Eli, "I come from the army; and from the army I this day fled." And he said, "What hath been

17 done, my son?" And the messenger answered and said, "Israel fled before the Philistines; and there hath been also a great slaughter among the people, and thy two sons also,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. How common is it for men, destitute of all piety, to pay a superstitious regard, to some sacred things, or outward ceremonies! Thus the Israelites did to the ark. They expected this would save them. Thus in the present day, men boast of their external privileges, and trust to the rites and ceremonies of religion, while by their sins they are displeasing God, and drawing down ruin upon themselves. They think they shall be saved by a fiery zeal for these things, while humility, piety, and charity are neglected: but the instance before us shows, that such expectations will disappoint them. The ark was never designed to be a sanctuary for impenitent sinners. The outside of religion will never save those who are strangers to the soul and substance of it. Let us be cautious then, not to rest in a form of godliness, while we are destitute of the power.

2. We may learn from Eli and his daughter-in-law, that pious persons are peculiarly concerned for the church of God. Eli trembled for the ark of God; and when it was taken, his daughter-in-law, said, 'the glory is departed from Israel.' Good men are more con-

13. Sitting upon a seat. It was a sort of elevated throne, on which, most probably, Eli was wont to administer justice.

15. Ninety-eight years old. So the text Chald. Vulg. and some copies of the Sept; but the Syr. and Arab. have seventy-eight.

18. Eli fell backward. As we know not the precise form of the seat, we cannot decide in what manner this accident occurred. Excessive grief might so affect him, that falling backward, and being heavy, the high seat, of 'Jehovah' is taken. Now when he made mention of the ark of 'Jehovah', Eli fell backward from off the high seat, which was by the gate, and broke his neck, and died; for he was an old man, and heavy. And he judged Israel forty years.

And his daughter-in-law, the wife of Phine- 19 has, was with child, near the time of delivery; and when she heard the tidings, that the ark of 'Jehovah' was taken, and that her father-in-law and her husband were dead, she fell in labour; for her pains came upon her. And near the 20 time of her death, the women who attended her said to her, "Fear not; for thou hast born a son." But she neither answered nor regarded what was said. Yet she named the child 21 I-chabod, [INGLORIOUS] saying, "The glory is departed from Israel:" because the ark of 'Jehovah' was taken, and because of the death of her father-in-law and her husband. So she said, "The glory is departed from Israel: 22 for the ark of 'Jehovah', 'the God of Israel' is taken."

cerned for the interests of the church, than their own private and secular affairs; they esteem the welfare of Jerusalem as their chief joy; cultivate a public spirit; and their hearts take the alarm when they see iniquity abound. Let us show our concern, by earnest prayer and vigorous endeavours to stand in the breach, to appear on the Lord's side, in support of his cause and interest in the world.

3. We learn that God's ordinances and presence are the glory of a nation; and to lose them is the greatest loss it can possibly sustain. The ark was the symbol of God's presence, a token of his favour to Israel, and that he dwelt among them. When they lost that, their glory was gone. If a nation provoke God to withdraw from them, to take his ordinances away, to remove his candlestick from them, nothing can be more dreadful. And have we no reason to fear this should be the case with our nation? Have not we too many profane priests? Have we not much superstition, and but little devotion? Let us remember what God did to Shiloh, Jerem. vii. 12—16; and what he has done to other places, where once his glory was manifested. Britain, read and fear.

might also be overturned. For forty years, he presided as chief both in the administration of religious and civil affairs.

19—22. Distress of mind, brought on the wife of Phinehas premature labour, which proved the occasion of her death. The name, which she gave to her son, indicates the state of her mind; and shows that she felt sensibly the loss of the ark.

CHAP. V. 1. Bishop Wilson observes, that in this Chapter all the

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 1141. The Philistines carry the ark to the temple of Dagon, who falls before it; they are afflicted with piles and mice; after seven months they send back the ark, with golden images of their piles and mice.

1 AND the Philistines took the ark of God, and 2 brought it from Eben-ezer unto Ashdod. And the Philistines having taken the ark of 'Jehovah', they brought it into the house of Dagon, 3 and set it beside Dagon. But, on the morrow, the men of Ashdod arose early, and, behold! Dagon was fallen upon his face to the 4 earth before the ark of Jehovah. And they took Dagon, and set him in his place again.
But when they arose early on the next morning, behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the ground before the ark of Jehovah; and the head of Dagon and both the palms of his hands were cut off, and lying upon the thresh-5 old; only the fish form of him remained. On this account neither the priests of Dagon, nor any of those who go into Dagon's temple, tread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod,
unto this day.
6 But the hand of Jehovah was heavy upon the people of Ashdod, and he destroyed them, and smote them with piles, Ashdod and its territory: 'the land also swarmed with mice,
and there was great confusion and destruc-7 tion in the city'. And when the men of Ashdod saw that it was so, they said, "The ark of the God of Israel shall not abide with us;
for his hand is hard upon us, and upon Da-8 gon our god." They sent therefore and gathered to them all the lords of the Philistines, and said, "What shall we do with the ark of the God of Israel?" And the Gathites answered,

"Let the ark of the God of Israel be carried round to Gath." And they carried round the ark of the God of Israel to Gath. And 9
it was so, that, after they had carried it round to Gath, the hand of Jehovah was upon the city, with a very great destruction; for he smote the men of the city, both small and great,
so that they had the piles inwardly. There- 10
fore they sent the ark of 'Jehovah' to Ekron:
but when the ark of 'Jehovah' came to Ekron,
the Ekronites cried out, saying, "They have brought round to us the ark of the God of Israel, to slay us and our people." So they 11 sent and gathered all the lords of the Philistines, and said, "Send away the ark of the God of Israel, and let it go again to its own place, lest he slay us, and our people:" for when the ark of the God of Israel was carried thither, the hand of Jehovah was heavy upon them, and there was a mortal destruction throughout all the city. And the men who 12 died not were smitten with the piles; so that the cry of the city went up to the heavens.

Now the ark of Jehovah had been in the coun- 1
try of the Philistines seven months. And the 2 Philistines called for the priests and the divi-ners, saying, "What shall we do with the ark of Jehovah? Tell us in what manner we shall send it away to its own place?" And they 3 said, "If ye send away the ark of the God of Israel, send it not away empty, but certainly return him a trespass-offering: then, should you attributes of God are displayed. His justice, in punishing his own people for their sins. His goodness, in thus manifesting himself to them that knew him not. His power, in making the idols fall before him. His truth, in vindicating himself upon the Israelites for their sins, and the Philistines for their idolatry and false gods.

2. And set it beside Dagon. As a trophy of their victory, and a reproach to the God of Israel.

4. Dagon was fallen. They might think the first fall was casual;
but when they found the idol broken, they began to fear.—The fish form.
The word clearly denotes this here. Dagon had the form of a man from the navel upwards; and below, the form of a fish. See Introduction, Part iii. Chap. 6.

5. Hence we learn, that they were not reformed, but long after showed their respect for Dagon, by not treading on the threshold of his temple, where he had been broken.

6. Piles. Geddes renders, 'blind piles.' The word only occurs in reference to this divine correction, and Deut. xxviii. 27; but according to the best Lexicographers, I have given the sense.

7—10. The removal of the ark from city to city, and the plagues which attended it, so alarmed the Ekronites, that they proposed to send it back to Israel.

CHAP. VI. 2. In what manner, &c. That is, with what gifts; for they had before agreed to send it away.

3. A trespass-offering. Thereby acknowledging they had trespassed against God, and also imploring his forgiveness.

5. And give glory. The glory of his power in conquering you, who be healed, it will be known to you why his 4 hand hath not been removed from you." And said they, "What shall be the trespass-offering which we shall return to him?" They answered, "Five golden piles, and five golden mice, according to the number of the lords of the Philistines: for the same plague was 5 on you all, as was on your lords. Therefore ye shall make images of your piles, and images of your mice that ravage the land; and ye shall give glory to the God of Israel; perhaps he will remove his hand from off you, and from off your gods, and from off your land.

 6 Why would ye harden your hearts, as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts?
 Did they not, when he exalted himself among them, let the people go and they departed?
 7 Now, therefore, make a new cart, and take two cows, on which there hath come no yoke, and tie the cows to the cart, and bring their 8 calves home from them; And take the ark of the "God of Israel", and lay it upon the cart;
 and put the golden images, which ye return him as a trespass-offering, in a coffer beside it, and send it away, that it may depart. And 9 if ye see, that it goeth up by the way of his own territory to Beth-shemesh, then hath he done us "all" this great evil; but if not, then we shall know that his hand smote us not; it was only an accident that hath befallen us." 10 And the men did so; and they took two milk cows, and tied them to the cart, and 11 shut up their calves at home; And they laid the ark of Jehovah upon the cart, and the coffer with the golden mice, and the images 12 of their piles. And the cows took the straight road to Beth-shemesh; they went along the highway, lowing as they went; and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left; and the lords of the Philistines went after them to the boundary of Beth-shemesh. And the peo- 13

 ple of Beth-shemesh were reaping their wheat harvest in the valley; and they raised their eyes, and saw the ark, and rejoiced to see it.
 And the cart came into the field of Joshua, 14
 a Beth-shemite, and stood there, where there was a great stone; and they clove the wood of the cart, and offered the cows a burnt-offering to Jehovah. And the Levites took down 15 the ark of Jehovah, and the coffer that was with it, in which were the golden images, and put them on the great stone; and the men of Beth-shemesh offered burnt-offerings and slaughtered other sacrifices, that day, to Jehovah. And when the five lords of the Phi- 16 listines had seen all this, they returned the same day to Ekron. And these are the golden 17 piles which the Philistines returned as a trespass-offering to Jehovah; for Ashdod one, for Gaza one, for Askelon one, for Gath one, for Ekron one; And the golden mice, according 18 to the number of all the cities of the Philistines, of the five lords, both of fenced cities, and of country villages, even unto the great
 "stone", on which they set down the ark of Jehovah, (and which remaineth unto this day,)
 in the field of Joshua, the Beth-shemite.

And Jehovah smote the men of Beth-shemesh, 19
 because they had looked into the ark of Jehovah; even he smote of the people "seventy"
 men: and the people lamented, because Jehovah had smitten the people with so great a seemed and pretended to have conquered him; of his justice in punishing you, and of his goodness if he shall relieve you.

6. When he had exalted himself among them. Geddes renders, 'when he had befooled them.' I follow Parkhurst; and conceive every place where the verb is used, supports this version. The Sept. countenances the version of Geddes. Purver, 'when he had wrought upon them,' referring to the plagues, with which they were smitten.

7-9. This contrivance was singular; and shows in what manner these idolaters were accustomed to form conjectures respecting the will of their gods. It would be evident, they thought, if the cows took the road to the land of Israel, undirected, and leaving their calves, that the God of Israel had brought on them their plagues.

13. Wheat-harvest. Most probably in the month of April. See Introduction, Part iv. Chap. 1

15. And the Levites took, &c. Beth-shemesh was in the tribe of Judah;
 and given to the Levites. Josh. xv. 10, and xxi. 16.

18. The great stone, &c. For Abel, we should read Aben, with the authorities given. This makes the narrative clear and consistent.

19. Seventy men. In the common text, a clause has been interpolated. 'He smote seventy men, and fifty thousand men.' This is contrary to the usual order of the Hebrew, in which the greater number always precedes the less. The Syr. and Arab. have 5070. I have adopted the least number, as most probable. See Kennicott on the place; and Note, H. B.

21. I have added the first, and part of the second, verse of the next

20 slaughter. And the men of Beth-shemesh said, "Who is able to stand before this holy God Jehovah? And to whom shall he go from us?"
 21 And they sent messengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, saying, "The Philistines have brought again the ark of Jehovah; come ye, fetch it to you." And the men of Kirjath-jearim came, and fetched the ark of Jehovah, and brought it into the house of Abinadab, which was on a hill; and they sanctified Eleazar, his son, to keep the ark of Jehovah.
 2 Now the ark of Jehovah abode in Kirjath-jearim a long time; for it was there twenty years.

Now all the house of Israel lamented after Jehovah. And Samuel spoke to the whole

CHAP. VII. 1^a Sept. Chald. Syr. Ar. and many mss.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS V, VI. 1. We have here a remarkable instance of the folly and stupidity of idolatry. What could be more ridiculous than the conduct of the Philistines, in worshipping a god that could not help himself. Lifting up their hands to him that could not lift up himself! A poor god indeed, that had lost both hands and head, so that he could have neither power nor wisdom to help them! Yet they continued their regard to him; yea, revered the very threshold on which he was broken. What a lamentable instance of the corruption of human nature, that men should be so besotted! Justly might the Psalmist say concerning idols, "they that make them are like unto them, and so are all they that put their trust in them."

2. We are also taught how natural it is, even for the wicked, under affliction, to seek relief. The Philistines sought it by sending the ark from place to place, and this only increased their calamity, spread the contagion, and multiplied the triumphs of the ark. Thus sinners fret and murmur under their afflictions; they have recourse to company, or pleasure, to some false principle or superstitious practice, but do not return to God. Had the Philistines been led to worship God, it would have been no more than might have been expected and then the ark would have been a blessing, and not a plague; but they sent away the ark, when they should have sent away Dagon. Thus sinners, while

Ch. to this with Geddes, as clearly connected with it.

CHAP. VII. 2. Lamented after, &c. They now regretted their own sin, in departing from him, and sought him by sacrifice and prayer.

3. Baals and Ashtaroths. I have ventured to give a plural termination to the latter word, as I think the context requires. Various images of these gods and goddesses were formed; and these they had worshipped, house of Israel, saying, "If ye return to Jehovah with all your heart, and put away the strange gods, the Baals, and Ashtaroths from among you, and prepare your hearts for Jehovah, and serve him only: then he will deliver you from the hand of the Philistines." And the children of Israel put away the Baals and Ashtaroths and served Jehovah only. And Samuel said, "Gather all Israel to Mizpeh, and I will pray to Jehovah for you." And they assembled at Mizpeh, and there they drew water, and poured it out before Jehovah, and fasted on that day, and said, "We have sinned against Jehovah." And Samuel judged the children of Israel in Mizpeh.

And when the Philistines heard that the children of Israel were assembled at Mizpeh, the lords of the Philistines went forth against Israel. And when the children of Israel heard this, they were afraid of the Philistines. And the children of Israel said to Samuel, "Cease they are weary of the hand that punisheth them, will still hold fast the cause of their punishment.

3. Divine judgments should be recollected to restrain us from sin, and lead us to repent of it. The wisest part of the conduct of the Philistines, is their arguing from the plagues brought on Pharaoh. This story, with many others in the bible, is recorded for our instruction. God's judgments on impenitent sinners were intended that we might hear, and fear, and do no more wickedly.

4. We see, from what we have read, that God will triumph over his enemies, and be honoured among his own people. His ark for a few months seemed to be in disgrace; but we see it return accompanied with lasting proofs of its victory over Dagon. Well might the Levites be glad to see this token of the divine presence again among them! Doubtless the pious went mourning, while the ark was in the possession of the enemy, and when religion was under a cloud. On its return, the men of Beth-Shemesh, left their harvest-work, and offered sacrifices. Happy had it been for them, if they had maintained the reverence due to God. Prompted by a rash curiosity, they wished to see what God had concealed, and they were punished for it. Let us ever remember that God is holy, and will be honoured by those who draw near unto him.

either alone or in connexion with Jehovah. They now put them away.

6. They drew water, &c. This was a rite of humiliation, and contained an acknowledgment of their impurity. Houbigant considers it as a part of the ceremonial of fasting. Compare 2 Sam. xiv. 14.

10. And so confounded them, &c. The storm might be in the face of the Philistines, and by occasioning disorder, render the conquest easy.

not to cry to Jehovah our God for us, that he may save us from the hand of the Philistines. Samuel then took a sucking lamb, and offered it a whole-burnt-offering to Jehovah. And Samuel cried to Jehovah for Israel; and Jehovah heard him. And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel; but Jehovah thundered with so great thunder, on that day, upon the Philistines, and so confounded them, that they were smitten before Israel. For the men of Israel went out of Mizpeh, and pursued the Philistines, and smote them, as far as below Beth-^vcar. Then Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Beth-shen, and called the name of it Ebenezer, [THE HELP-STONE] saying, "Hitherto hath Jehovah helped us." So the Philistines were subdued, and they came no more into the territory of Israel: and the hand of Jehovah was against the Philistines all the days of Samuel. And the cities which the Philistines had taken from Israel were restored to Israel, from Ekron even unto Gath; and their territories did Israel deliver from the hands of the Philistines. And there was peace between Israel and the Amorites. And Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life. And he went yearly, in circuit, to Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places. He then returned to Ramah; for there was his house; and there he judged Israel; and there he built an altar to Jehovah.

CHAPTER VIII.

B. C. 1112. Samuel's sons govern ill; the Israelites in consequence, desire a king; Samuel sheweth the claims of a king.

Now when Samuel became old, he made his sons judges over Israel. And the name of his first-born was Joel; and the name of his second, Abiah. They were judges, the one in Bethel, and the other in Beer-sheba. And his sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment. Then all the elders of Israel assembled, and came to Samuel, to Ramah; And they said to

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. We behold in this Chapter a sight, which occasions joy among the angels of heaven; not only one sinner repenting, but a sinful nation! They had long dishonoured their God, and suffered greatly for their sins; but now they lamented them, and inquired how they might return to him. A happy time indeed was this to Israel! And nothing can be more agreeable to a pious mind, than to see those who have forgotten God, and lived without him; who have been insensible of his presence, and unconcerned about his glory and honour, beginning with grief and concern to inquire after him, and to be uneasy till they have recovered his favour. Would to God this were more frequently seen in our days, and that one and another were 'asking the way to Zion, with their faces thitherwards.'

2. We are here taught the nature of true repentance. We must not only put away our idols, and break off some outward sins, but we must prepare our hearts for Jehovah, that he may accept and bless us. We must think on our former ways; turn from every sin; particularly from that 'which most easily besets us.' We must dismiss every idol that has twined about our hearts, and taken deep root in our affections. Without this we shall only affront God, injure ourselves, and make our condemnation the more aggravated.

12. Beth-shen. The Syr. and Arab. read as in the 11 verse. Geddes suspects the text to be corrupted and reads as Josh xv. 52. Eshcan.

16. Went yearly in circuit, &c. This was a proper method of maintaining the honour of the law; and from this other nations derived the custom.

3. Here is another instance of the power of fervent prayer. The penitent Israelites were sensible they could not succeed without divine aid; and they not only sought it themselves, but requested Samuel to cry to Jehovah, their God, for them. On the approach of the enemy, when the skies gathered blackness, the lightnings blazed, and the loud peals of thunder, succeeded each other, they witnessed, in the confusion and flight of the Philistines, an answer to the cry of Samuel. Let us then ever pray, and not faint, encouraged by the character of God, who heareth prayer, and who is able to do for us all that we need.

4. The conduct of Samuel, both as a prophet and a judge, deserves not only applause but imitation. When Israel had conquered, he thankfully acknowledged the hand of God; and to perpetuate the remembrance of the favour, erected a stone, and called it Ebenezer. Let us ever be mindful of benefits; and give glory to the giver of all our blessings. How happy was Israel under the government of such a pious, active, generous man, as Samuel was, who administered justice so faithfully; who took so much pains to travel through the land of Israel, to promote righteousness and peace; and who kept up the public exercises of religion. We should earnestly pray for judges and magistrates, that they, like Samuel, may be able men, men of truth, 'fearing, God, and hating covetousness.'

CHAP. VIII. 2. The one in Bethel. What I have applied in italics is now found in Josephus, and has all the appearance of truth in its favour. It seems improbable, that Samuel would appoint his sons judges of such place only.

- him, "Behold, thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways: now appoint for us a king to judge us, like all the nations."
- 6 But the thing displeased Samuel, when they said, "Give to us a king, to judge us." And
- 7 Samuel prayed unto Jehovah. And Jehovah said to Samuel, "Hearken to the voice of the people in all that they have said to thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them."
- 8 According to all the works which they have done since the day that I brought them out of "the land of" Egypt, even unto this day; for they have forsaken me, and served other gods;
- 9 so also do they do to thee. Now, therefore, hearken to their voice; yet solemnly protest to them, and show them the manner in which a king will reign over them."
- 10 And Samuel told all the words of Jehovah to
- 11 the people who had asked of him a king. And he said, "This will be the manner in which a king will reign over you. He will take your sons, and appoint them for his chariots, and his horsemen; and some shall run before his chariots. And he will appoint of them captains over thousands, and captains over "hundreds, and captains over" fifties, "and captains over tens". And he will take of them to till his ground, and to reap his harvest, and to make his instruments of war, and the furniture of his chariots. And your daughters he will take 13 to be confectioners, and cooks, and bakers. And he will take the best of your fields, and of 14 your vine-yards, and of your olive-yards, and give them to his servants. And he will take 15 the tenth of your seed, and of your vine-yards, and give to his officers, and to his servants. And he will take your chosen and best men- 16 servants, and maid-servants; and your asses; and put them to his own work. He will take 17 the tenth of your sheep; and his servants ye shall be. And ye shall cry out in that day 18 because of your king, whom ye yourselves have chosen; but Jehovah will not hear you in that day."

Nevertheless, the people refused to hear the 19 voice of Samuel; and they said, "Nay; but we will have a king over us; That we may be 20 like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles." And Samuel heard all the words of 21 the people, and he rehearsed them in the ears of Jehovah. And Jehovah said to Samuel, 22 "Hearken to their voice, and appoint for them a king." And Samuel said to the men of Israel, "Go ye every man unto his own city."

CHAP. VIII. 8. *Syr. Arab. 2 mss.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. How distressing is it to see the sons of so good a man as Samuel, acting in the manner they did! Forgetting the awful calamities brought on the house of Eli, they became oppressive and unjust. They had doubtless received the best instructions, and these enforced by a life devoted to the service of God and his people. Perhaps they were considered as promising, and promoted, in consequence, to the office of judges. How must it have grieved Samuel to hear this account of them! Thus, many children, who begin well, and who promise fair, when they get abroad from under the eyes of their parents, become vicious and the companions of fools. Preferment and power have spoiled multitudes, who in inferior situations might have kept their integrity.

3. Turned aside after lucre. Like the sons of Eli, they perverted justice to enrich themselves, and their conduct led to their humiliation.

6. Appoint for us a king, &c. They requested him to do this as a prophet. They must have known, that Moses allowed them to choose one, under certain limitations. Deut. xvii. 14.

8-9. Samuel was grieved, not so much on his own account as for the dishonour this step reflected on God. He was in a peculiar sense their king; and by desiring another, they showed disrespect to him. He gave

12. *Sept. Syr. Vulg. Arab.—ibid as before.

2 The description given of arbitrary government should make us thankful for our civil freedom. How wretched must the people under such a one be! Let us bless God for our liberty and safety; that our property is secure; that our children are not torn from us by violence that we can eat of the labour of our hands, none making us afraid. This is owing to the care and goodness of God to us. Let us be tenacious of our freedom as Britons; and pray for a succession of wise and good princes, who may preserve our constitution inviolate.

3. The persevering obstinacy of the people in their request for a king, shows their pride and folly. What a strange infatuation! They would indulge their pride at the expense of their liberty. They would have a king, with all the pomp and ostentation of an eastern, them a king, but it was in anger. Hosea xiii. 11.

10-18. They wanted a king like the nations around them; and these were despotic. Hitherto the Israelites had had Governors, who exacted no tribute, who kept no guards, nor standing army. Samuel, therefore, suggested to them, the sacrifices they must make, if they persisted in their demand. No doubt they found hereafter the truth of what the prophet had said. They however persisted in their request; and nothing would satisfy them, but a king.

CHAPTER IX.

B. C. 1095. Saul sent to seek his father's asses; by the advice of his servant he goeth to consult Samuel, who entertaineth him.

1 Now there was a man of Benjamin, whose name was Kish, the son of Abiel, the son of Zoror, the son of Bechorath, the son of Aphiah, 2 a Benjaminite, a man of great wealth. And he had a son, whose name was Saul, a choice and goodly young man: and among the children of Israel there was not a goodlier person than he: from his shoulders and upward, he was 3 higher than any of the people. And the asses of Kish, Saul's father, were lost. And Kish said to Saul, his son, "Take now one of the young men with thee, and arise, go, seek the asses." ^aAnd Saul took one of the young men, 4 and went to seek the asses of his father". And "they" passed through mount Ephraim, and through the land of Shalisha, but they found them not. They then passed through the land of Shalim, and they were not there; and "they" passed through the land of the Benjaminites, 5 but they found them not. When they were come to the land of Zuph, Saul said to his young man who was with him, "Come, let us return; lest my father cease to think on the asses, 6 and become anxious for us." And he said unto him, "Behold now, there is in this city a man of God, and he is an honourable man; all that he saith assuredly cometh to pass: let us now go thither; perhaps he may show us the way in which we should go." Then said Saul to his young man, "But, behold, should we go, what shall we present to the man? for the bread which was in our bags is spent, and we have not a present to bring to the man of God: what have we?" And the young man answered Saul again, and said, "Behold, I have in my possession, the fourth part of a shekel of silver: that 'let us' give to the man of God, that he may show us our way." Then said Saul to his young man, "Thy saying is good; come, let us go." So they went to the city where the man of God lived.

And as they went up the hill to the city, they 11 found young maidens going out to draw water, and said to them, "Is the Seer in this place?" (Formerly, when any man, in Israel, went to inquire of God, he said thus, "Come, and let us go to the Seer:" for a prophet was formerly called a Seer.) And they answered them, and 12 said, "He is: behold, there he is before you: make haste then; for he is come to day to the city, because there is to day a sacrifice of the people on the high place. As soon as ye come 13 into the city, ye will certainly find him, before he go up to the high place to eat: for the people will not eat until he come, because it is he who blesseth the sacrifice; after which, they who are invited, eat. Now, therefore, go up; for about this time ye will find him." And they 14 went up into the city; and when they were come into the city, behold, Samuel met them, monarch, imagining this would be a greater honour to them than a theocracy. This is the case with sinners, 'they will not have this man to reign over them.' They choose the world and the flesh for their sovereigns, though they are hard masters; their government is terrible, and their wages is death.

4. How foolish and miserable must they be, who imitate bad examples because they are numerous! The Israelites would have a king like other nations: they would not be singular and differ from them, though their singularity was their glory. Thus men follow a multitude to do evil; though there is no readier way to sin and ruin, than doing so, and choosing that which is the way of the world. Those that share in their sins, must share in their plagues. May we guard against a disposition so fatal, and yet so common. Let us dare to be singularly pious, and steady in our adherence to God, though all men should forsake him. Our duty and our interest are alike involved in such a noble conduct.

8. ^vSo all the versions.

CHAP. IX. 1. A man of great wealth. This refers, I think, to Aphiah, and not to Kish the father of Saul. Coverdale renders, 'a valiant man.' I have followed our marginal version.

3. And Saul took, &c. This addition to the common text is so much in the style of the Hebrew, and so agreeable to the context, that I cannot but deem it genuine.

5. To the land of Zuph. In which was Ramah, the place of Samuel's birth and habitation. See Ch. i. 1, and Note there.

7. What shall we present, &c. It is the invariable custom of the East, on visiting a superior, to present a gift. See Harmer.

9. I have transposed this verse with Houbigant after the 11th, which gives a reason for the name then given to a prophet.

15. Had revealed his will, &c. Literally, 'had revealed to the ear of Samuel.' Geddes renders, 'had whispered in the ear of Samuel.' I prefer in going up to the high place.

15 Now Jehovah had revealed his will to Samuel 16 the day before Saul came, saying, "To morrow about this time I will send to thee a man from the land of Benjamin, and thou shalt anoint him Chief over my people Israel; that he may save my people from the hand of the Philistines: for I have seen the affliction of my people; because their cry is come unto me." 17 And when Samuel saw Saul, Jehovah said to him, "Behold, the man of whom I spoke to thee!
18 this is he, who shall govern my people." Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, and said,
"Tell me, I pray thee, where the seer's house 19 is." And Samuel answered Saul, and said, "I am the seer; go up before me to the high place;
for ye shall eat with me to day: and to morrow, when I have told thee all that is in thy 20 heart, I will let thee go. And as for thine asses that were lost three days ago, set not thy mind on them; for they are found. And for whom is every desirable thing in Israel? Is it not for 21 thee, and for all thy father's house?" And Saul answered and said, "Am not I a Benjaminite, of the smallest tribe of Israel? and my family

23. ¹from the 24 verse.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. Saul manifested a ready compliance with his father's will; and hastened to seek the asses which were lost. When he did not find them, he showed a filial regard, in his concern lest his father should be grieved for his delay. All young people should desire to be employed, and should consult their parents' interest; be willing to submit to what may seem a mean office, if it be for their advantage; and do nothing that will make them uneasy. "Honour thy father and mother," is the first command with promise.

2. We may learn from the example of Saul, to take advice even from inferiors. He paid a regard to what his servant said, because it carried reason with it. Wisdom and piety do not always go by rank and fortune. Servants may see further than their masters; and as their advice should be given with respect and deference, it should be received without any haughty airs; especially when their advice is such as will be of service to our best interest.

3. To own the hand of God in giving us food, by blessing him for it, is a duty which we should all perform. It was Samuel's inva-

the sense to the idiom.

19. All that is in thy heart. That is, all that thou desirest.

20. Is every desirable thing, &c. All our old translators with Purver, render as I have done with little variation. By becoming king, he would enjoy that honour and those good things which belonged to the throne.

23. I have followed Geddes in transposing the words marked from the

the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? why then speakest thou so to me?" And 22 Samuel took Saul and his young man, and brought them into the dining room, and placed them at the head of those invited, who were about thirty persons. And Samuel said to the 23 cook, "Bring the portion which I gave thee, of which I said to thee, 'Set it apart, by thee,' when I told thee that I had invited the people." And the cook took up the shoulder, and what 24 was upon it, and set it before Saul. And Samuel said, "Behold what hath been reserved for thee, set before thee; eat, for it hath been on purpose, kept for thee." So Saul, on that day, ate with Samuel. They then came down 25 from the high place into the city, and Samuel communed with Saul on the roof of the house; for in the roof a bed had been made for Saul in which he slept".

CHAPTER X.

B. C. 1095. Samuel privately anointeth Saul; and predicts three things which should occur to him, and be tokens of his advancement to the throne of Israel.

Now when the morning dawned, Samuel cal- 26

riable custom; nor did the people think of eating till this was done. Let none neglect it, nor perform it in a few hasty, muttering words, which have no meaning, and in which those who are present cannot join. God may justly withhold his blessing, when we have not the grace to ask for it; and better not ask it at all, than do it in a trifling or profane manner. "Every creature of God is good, if it be received with thanksgiving."

4. We are led to form a high opinion of the piety, humility, and submission of Samuel, from his treatment of Saul. He discovers no disinclination to resign his power into his hands; no envy of one who was to succeed him. He made for him a feast; gives him the most honourable place, and, knowing the divine will, intimates his advancement to the throne. Truly good men are not ambitious of honour; and are willing to lay it down when God pleases. Those make an idol of honour, who grudge at the promotion of others. John rejoiced concerning Christ, saying, "He shall increase, but I shall decrease."

end of the next verse. They give here a suitable sense; but as they stood they were wholly inexplicable.

25. I think the addition of the Sept. and Vulg. makes the narrative more full; and is supported by the next verse, which implies that Saul slept on the roof. Had Samuel communed with Saul on the roof, it is probable he would have there informed him, that God had chosen him to be led to Saul on the roof of the house, saying, "Arise, that I may send thee away." And Saul arose, and both he and Samuel went out, 27 abroad. As they were going to the end of the city, Samuel said to Saul, "Bid the young man pass on before us; (and he passed on,) but stand thou still a while, that I may show 1 thee the purpose of God." Then Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kissed him and said, "Is it not because Jehovah hath anointed thee chief ^a over his people Israel? for thou shalt govern Jehovah's people, and shalt save them from the hand of their enemies, who are around them. And this shall be a token to thee, that Jehovah hath anointed 2 thee chief over his inheritance". When to day thou hast departed from me, thou wilt meet two men by Rachel's sepulchre, on the border of Benjamin, at Zelzah; and they will say to thee, "The asses which thou wentest to seek are found; and, lo! thy father hath no more concern about the asses, but is anxious for you, saying, 'What shall I do for my son?' 3 Then shalt thou pass on forward thence, and thou wilt come to the plain of Tabor, and there shall meet thee three men going up to worship God at Bethel; one carrying three kids, and another carrying three loaves of bread, and 4 another carrying a skin-bottle of wine. And they will salute thee, and give to thee two "loaves" of bread; which thou shalt receive 5 from their hands. After that thou wilt come to the hill of God, where there is a garrison of the Philistines; and it shall be when thou art come into the city, that thou wilt meet a company of prophets, coming down from the high place, preceded by a psaltery, and a tabor, and a pipe; and a harp: and themselves prophesying. And the Spirit of Jehovah will come 6 upon thee, and thou shalt prophesy with them, and be changed into another man. And when 7 "all" these signs have happened to thee, then do thou as it may be necessary; for God is with thee. But thou shalt go down, before me 8 to Gilgal; and, behold, I will come down to thee, to offer burnt-offerings, and to slaughter feast-sacrifices; seven days shalt thou tarry, until I come to thee, and show thee what thou shalt do."

When now he had turned his back to go from 9 Samuel, God gave him another heart; and all those tokens came to pass that day. For when 10 he had come thence to the hill of God, behold a company of prophets met him; and the Spirit of God came upon him, and he prophesied among them. And, when all who knew him be 11 foretime saw, and behold, he prophesied among the prophets, they then said one to another, "What is this that hath happened to the son of Kish? Is Saul, also, among the prophets?" And 12 one that was there answered and said, "But who is his father? ^a Is it not Kish?" Hence it became a proverb, "Is Saul also among the prophets?" And when he had done prophesying, 13 he went to the high place. And Saul's uncle 14 said to him, and to his young man, "Whither went ye?" And he said, "To seek the asses: and when we could see them no where, we came to Samuel." And Saul's uncle said, "Tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel said to you." And 16 Saul said to his uncle, "He told us plainly that king over Israel, and would also have anointed him, as he might have done both with the greatest privacy; but we find from what follows he did not.

CHAP. X. 1. The addition of the Sept. is so suitable to the place, that several Critics deem it genuine. Houbigant admits the latter part, "And this shall, &c."

5. The hill of God. Some suppose this was Gibeah, See Ch. xiii. 3; and that it was thus called, because there was a school of the prophets.—Prophesying. Not predicting future events, but singing sacred hymns, in a style like what the prophets used. Some think they were extemporary. Harmer supposes that this company of the prophets consisted of the young men who had finished their religious education, and were now going in solemn procession; according to a custom which still prevails. See his Observations, vol. ii. p 414.

6. Into another man. That is, filled with another spirit; a spirit of wisdom and courage, suitable to the dignity conferred on him.

9. Gave him another heart. It is not said a new heart, but another; and this explains the 6th verse. God gave him such qualifications as were suitable to his office.

12. Who is his father? They wondered how a man who was not the son of a prophet, could so suddenly prophesy. The present text has, but who is their father? without the additional words, which are only in some copies of the Greek version; but which, I am persuaded, were originally in the Hebrew.

19.—22. The first king of Israel was chosen by lot; to prevent all disputes, and the claims of the different tribes, or of the more powerful families, the asses were found." But respecting the kingdom, whereof Samuel spoke, he told him not.

17 And Samuel called the people together at Miz-18 peh before Jehovah; And said to the children of Israel, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'I brought up *the children of" Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you from the hands of the Egyptians, and from the hand of all those 19 kings who oppressed you; Yet ye have this day rejected your God, who himself saved you out of all your adversities and your tribulations; and ye have said to him, 'Nay, but set a king over us.' Now, therefore, present yourselves before Jehovah by your tribes, and by your *families".

20 And when Samuel had caused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was 21 taken. When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken; and when they sought him, he could 22 not be found. Therefore they inquired of Jehovah further, if the man would yet come thither. And Jehovah answered, "Behold, he hath hid 23 himself among the baggage." And they ran and fetched him thence; and when he stood among the people, he was higher than any of the people, from his shoulders and upwards.
24 And Samuel said to all the people, "See ye that there is none like him, whom Jehovah hath chosen among the people?" And all the people shouted, and said, "Long live the king." Then 25 Samuel told the people the rights of the kingdom, and wrote them in a book, and laid it up before Jehovah. And Samuel sent all the people away, every man to his own house.

And Saul also went home to Gibeah; and 26 there went with him a band of men, whose hearts God had touched. But some worthless persons 27 said, "How shall this man save us?" So they despised him, and brought him no presents; but he regarded them not.

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 1095. Nahash, the Ammonite, besieges Jabesh-gilead, and offers a reproachful condition to the inhabitants; they send messengers, and are delivered by Saul; his authority solemnly acknowledged.

THEN Nahash, the Ammonite, came up and 1 encamped against Jabesh-gilead: and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, "Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee." And 2 Nahash, the Ammonite, answered and said, "On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes, and lay a reproach upon all Israel." And the elders 3 of Jabesh said to him, "Give to us seven days respite, that we may send messengers to all the districts of Israel: and then, if there be no man to save us, we will come out to thee."

19. * So Sept. Syr. Vulg. and many mss.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER X. 1. The events which Samuel predicted, all came to pass, by which his character as a prophet of God was still more established. He spoke by that spirit which searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. What a confirmation must these occurrences have been to the mind of Saul. In like manner let us contemplate all the wonderful predictions of scripture, and their fulfilment, as the firmest ground of confidence; and as an encouragement to trust in the Lord, and to hope and wait for his salvation.

2. We may admire the wisdom of God in appointing prophets as the spiritual instructors of his people; and seminaries in which pious young men were trained up for this office. We read of such being in Bethel, Jericho, Gibeah and Naioth in Ramah, of which Samuel was president. The service of the tabernacle belonged to the priests and Levites; and it is probable they were too much devoted to the ceremonial of religion. The prophets were trained up, by a long course of study, temperance and discipline, to be preachers of righteousness; and to receive, upon extraordinary occasions, the inspiration of the spirit. God generally chose prophets out of such as were educated in these colleges. This was a very wise institution; let us be thankful that we have such among us; and pray for the schools of the prophets, that from these fountains, such streams may issue forth, as shall 'make glad the city of God.'

—ibid. * Vulg.

3. When Saul was anointed, some honoured him as king, and brought presents; others refused subjection, and in contempt said, 'how can this man save us?' So men treat God's anointed Son. They whose hearts God hath touched, own him to be their Lord,

25. The rights of the kingdom, &c. Some think Samuel founded his rights on what Moses had said Deuter. xvii. 16, &c. It is clear from this, that there was a mutual stipulation between the king and the people; the rights of both were specified, and laid up in the tabernacle. Hence the Jewish kings were by no means absolute; though they often exercised a despotic power.

CHAP. XI. 1. Then Nahash, &c. From the next Chapter we learn, that the fear of this invasion, was one ground of the people's requesting a 4 Then came the messengers to Gibeah, of Saul, and told the tidings in the ears of the people: and all the people raised their voices, and wept.

 5 And, behold, Saul came, following his oxen, from the field; and Saul said, "What hath befallen the people that they weep?" And they
 6 told him the tidings of the men of Jabesh. And the Spirit of God came upon Saul when he heard those tidings, and his anger was kindled greatly.
 7 And he took the pair of oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the districts of Israel by the hands of messengers, saying, "Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done to his oxen."
 And the fear of Jehovah fell on the people, and 8 they came forth with one consent. And when he numbered them in Bezek, the children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the 9 men of Judah thirty thousand. And they said to the messengers who had come, "Thus shall ye say to the men of Jabesh-gilead, 'To morrow, by mid-day ye shall have help.'" And the messengers came and told this to the men of Jabesh;
 10 and they were glad. Therefore the men of Jabesh said "to Nahash, the Ammonite", "To morrow we will come forth to you, and ye may do
 11 with us all as seemeth good to you." But on the morrow, Saul having put the people in three companies, they came into the midst of the camp, in the morning watch, and slew the Ammonites until noon: and they who remained were scattered, so that two of them were not left together.
 12 And the people said to Samuel, "Who is he that said, 'Shall Saul reign over us?' bring the men, that we may put them to death." And 13 Saul said, "There shall not a man be put to death this day: for to day Jehovah hath wrought salvation in Israel." Then said Samuel to the 14 people, "Come, and let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there." And all the people 15 went to Gilgal; and there they made Saul king before Jehovah; and there they slaughtered feast-sacrifices before Jehovah; and there Saul and all the men of Israel rejoiced exceedingly.

And Samuel said to all Israel, "Behold, I have hearkened to your voice in all that ye said to me; and have made a king over you. And 2 now, behold, that king is your conductor: for I am become old and gray-headed; yet lo, my sons are with you: and I have conducted you from my youth to this day. Behold, here I am: 3 answer me before Jehovah, and before his anointed. Whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? or whom have I oppressed? or from whose hand have I received a bribe wherewith to blind mine eyes? Tell me and I will restore it to you." And they said, "Thou hast not defrauded us, 4 nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught from any man's hand." And he said to them, 5 "Jehovah is witness, and his anointed is this day witness against you, that ye have not found aught in my hand." And they answered, "Jehovah is witness."

And Samuel said to the people, "Jehovah, 6 who appointed Moses and Aaron, and who brought your fathers out of the land of Egypt ⁷ "witness". Now, therefore, stand still, that I may reason with you before Jehovah, on all the righteous acts of Jehovah, which he hath done ⁸ to you and to your fathers. When Jacob had come into Egypt, and your fathers cried to Jehovah, then Jehovah sent Moses and Aaron, who brought your fathers out of the land of Egypt, ⁹ and made them to dwell in this place. And when they forgot Jehovah their God, he delivered them into the hand of Sisera, captain of the host of "Jabin, king of" Hazor; and into the hand of the Philistines; and into the hand of the king of Moab; and they fought against them. ¹⁰ And they cried to Jehovah, and said, "We have sinned; because we have forsaken Jehovah, and have served Baals and Ashtaroths: but now deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we ¹¹ will serve thee." And Jehovah sent Deborah and Barak, and Gideon, and Jephthah, and Samson, and delivered you out of the hand of your enemies on every side, and ye dwelled ¹² securely. Yet, when ye saw that Nahash, the king of the children of Ammon, came against you, ye said to me, 'Nay; but a king shall reign over us,' when Jehovah your God was your king. ¹³ Now, therefore, behold the king whom ye have chosen, and whom ye have desired! and, behold, ¹⁴ Jehovah hath set a king over you. If ye will fear Jehovah, and serve him, and obey his voice, and rebel not against the commandment of Jehovah; then shall ye "live", both ye and also the king who reigneth over you, besides ¹⁵ Jehovah your God. But if ye will not obey the voice of Jehovah, but rebel against the commandment of Jehovah, then shall the hand of Jehovah be against you, "and against your king".

Now, therefore, stand and see this great thing, ¹⁶ which Jehovah will do, before your eyes. Is not ¹⁷ this the time of wheat harvest? I will call on Jehovah, and he shall send thunder and rain; that ye may perceive and see, how great is the evil, which ye have done, in the sight of Jehovah, in asking for yourselves a king. Samuel then called on Jehovah; and Jehovah, that day, sent thunder and rain; and all the people greatly feared Jehovah and Samuel. And all the people said to Samuel, "Pray for thy servants to Jehovah thy God, that we may not die: for we have added this evil, in asking for ourselves a king, to all our other sins."

And Samuel said to the people, "Fear not, ²⁰ although ye have done all this evil; only turn not aside from following Jehovah; but serve Jehovah with your whole heart; And turn not ²¹ aside after vain idols, which cannot profit or deliver; for vain they are. Then indeed, Jehovah ²² will not, on account of his great name, forsake his people; because it hath pleased Jehovah to make you his people. As for me, God forbid ²³ that I should sin against Jehovah, by ceasing to pray for you. I will also teach you the good and the right way: Only fear Jehovah, and ²⁴ serve him in truth with your whole heart: for consider how great things he hath done for you. ²⁵ But if ye will still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed, both ye and your king."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XI XII. 1. We may learn, what gives courage, and rouses a people to defend their property and maintain their honour and freedom. His spirit came upon Saul, and his fear fell on all the people, so that they came forth as one man. No men are so fit to fight, as those, who are in some degree fit to die; but alas! how often are those who enter the field of slaughter and death, wholly unprepared for another world. It is wisdom in all men to prepare to meet their God.

2. We are also taught how fickle the disposition of mankind is, what little dependence is to be placed on their applause, and how little we should be affected by their contempt. Many despised Saul, and many of those who adhered to him saw him despised without resenting it. But great success made great alterations in the affections of the people; no sooner was he victorious, than every one was for Saul, and against his enemies; every one was the friend of him who prospered in his way. This instance,

16, 17. The time of wheat harvest. This thunder and rain must have been unusual, or the intention of Samuel in praying for it would not have been answered. The wheat harvest is over by the end of May, or early in June; and it is clear that the latter rain was over before harvest. Compare Deut. xi. 14, and the note there. In asking for yourselves a king,

CHAPTER XIII.

B. C. 1095. Saul selecteth three thousand men; assembleth the people against the Philistines; weary of waiting for Samuel, he offereth sacrifices.

- 1 SAUL, when he began to reign, was ^a thirty years old; and when he had reigned two years
2 over Israel, Saul chose for himself three thousand men of Israel; two thousand were with Saul, in Michmash and in mount Bethel, and a thousand were with Jonathan, in Gibeah of Benjamin: and the rest of the people he sent,
3 every man to his own home. Now Jonathan smote a garrison of the Philistines that was in Gibeah, and the Philistines heard of it. And Saul caused the trumpet to be blown throughout all the land, saying, "Let those beyond the Jordan
4 hear." And all Israel heard that Saul had smitten a garrison of the Philistines, and that Israel also had become detestable to the Philistines; then the people flocked together after Saul to Gilgal.
5 And the Philistines assembled to fight with Israel, with ^v three thousand chariots, and six thousand horsemen, and people as the sand which is on the sea-shore for multitude: and they came and many others in the holy scriptures, teach us to cease from man, and never to lay any stress on the enjoyment or want of popular applause, for it is easily gained, and as easily lost. Let it be our ambition to secure the honour which cometh from God, for 'his loving kindness is better than life.'

3. We may also learn from Samuel, that it is our duty to be have in such a manner, as that we may be able to appeal to God and men for the integrity and unblameableness of our conduct. This should be the care of all, more especially of those in superior stations, as magistrates, ministers and parents. Let us 'herein exercise ourselves, to keep a conscience void of offence;' and when we come to review life, we shall have comfort in ourselves and the approbation of others. Let our whole conduct be such, that we may be able at the close of life to say, with the apostle, "Ye are witnesses, and God also is my witness, how unblameably I have walked among you."

The evil of this request arose from the peculiar relation of God to them, as their civil governor, as it manifested ingratitude for what he had done, and want of confidence in his power and goodness.

CHAP. XIII. 1. Saul was thirty. I have followed Houbigant in admitting the reading of one Greek copy. Geddes leaves a blank: "Saul was . . . years old when he was made king; and he reigned over Israel . . . years."

When the men of Israel saw what 6 distress they were in, because the Philistine people approached, they then hid themselves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in towers, and in pits; And those who dwelt beyond 7 the Jordan, went back to the land of Gad and Gilead: but Saul as yet abode in Gilgal, and all the people followed him, trembling. And 8 he tarried seven days, according to the time which Samuel had mentioned; but Samuel had not come to Gilgal; and the people were scattered from him. And Saul said, "Bring hither 9 to me a burnt-offering, and feast-offerings." And he offered the burnt-offering. But when he 10 had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, behold, Samuel came; and Saul went forth to meet him, that he might salute him. And Sa- 11 muel said, "What hast thou done?" And Saul said, "Because I saw that the people were scattered from me, and that thou camest not within the days appointed, and that the Philistines had assembled at Michmash; I, therefore said, 'The 12 Philistines will come down upon me, to Gilgal; and I have not made supplication to Jehovah:'

4. We have, in this conduct of Samuel, an example of humility, disinterestedness, and piety; and in his exhortation, we are taught what brings and secures the prosperity of a people. He assumes no airs, nor discovers any discontent, that they had preferred another to him. They give a public testimony to his uprightness; and he avows his determination to pray for Israel. To neglect prayer for ourselves is our sin; and to neglect praying for others, especially for our country and the church, would witness against us, as being without benevolence and public spirit. Let us ever remember, that obedience is better than sacrifice; and that if a people would prosper, they must 'serve the Lord in truth and righteousness.' This, in the natural course of things, secures prosperity, and obtains the blessing of heaven. Let us, therefore, cultivate practical religion, and serious godliness, as the only way to secure the continuation of national blessings and the salvation of our own souls.'

hear.' Michaelis, Dathe and others render as I have done; and the use of the word in the 7th verse, supports this rendering. Saul collected troops from all the tribes, as the Philistines seemed to resent the insult offered in the slaughter of their garrison, most highly, and prepared to avenge it.

5. Three thousand. The common reading is improbable; and the error might easily be made.

6. Because the Philistine people, &c. If the words be retained, they must be so rendered, as Oslander long ago remarked; and they afford a hence I forced myself, and offered a burnt-offering." And Samuel said to Saul, "Thou hast done foolishly; thou hast not kept the commandment of Jehovah thy God, which he commanded thee: for hadst thou done so, now would Jehovah have established thy kingly power over Israel for ever. But now thy kingly power shall not continue: Jehovah hath sought for himself a man after his own heart; and Jehovah hath commanded him to be chief over his people, because thou hast not observed what Jehovah commanded thee." And Samuel arose, and went from Gilgal.

"But the remainder of the people went up after Saul" to Gibeah of Benjamin; and Saul numbered the people with him, and found them to be about six hundred men. And Saul, and Jonathan his son, and the people with them abode in Gibeah of Benjamin; but the Philistines encamped in Michmash. And foragers came out from the camp of the Philistines, in three companies: one company turned by the way of Ophrah, to the land of Shual: And another company turned the way to Beth-horon: and another company turned towards the wilderness, by the way of that district which lieth opposite the valley of Zeboim.

Now there was no smith found in the whole land of Israel; for the Philistines said, "We must take them away lest they should make swords or spears." But all the Israelites went to the stations of the Philistines to sharpen every man his plough-share, and his spade, and his ax, and his mattock; And, now had the edge of their plough-shares, and their spades, and their mattocks, and their axes, and the paddles of their goads, become blunt. So it was on the day of battle, that there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people who were with Saul and Jonathan: only with Saul and with Jonathan his son, such weapons were found.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. We may learn from what is here recorded, that the very methods we sometimes adopt to extricate ourselves from difficulties, increase and aggravate them. The Israelites would have a king to govern them; and they expected that he would save them from all their enemies. Now they found themselves in a worse condition than ever. Fear and dread universally prevailed. Without arms, without confidence and courage, they found they had as much need as ever of God's assistance and gracious interposition. May we learn, that without him we can do nothing; that our help is in the Lord, and ever look and trust to him for it; and then we may hope to triumph over our enemies.

2. We learn, that all breaches of the divine commands are reason for the fear and conduct of the Israelites.

7. And those who dwell, &c. So the Sept. and Symmachus render; and the connexion requires and justifies it. Literally, 'the trans-jordanites repassed the Jordan, to the land of Gad.'

8-13. Samuel had expressly appointed to meet Saul at Gilgal, to offer public sacrifices, and to show him what he should do, Chap. x. 8. Saul impatient at Samuel's delay, by his own authority, orders sacrifices to be offered; and thus gives proof that he would not be governed by the law, but would act according to his own will and caprice. The Apology he makes, under pretence of religion, shows but too plainly his hasty, tyrannical temper; and justifies God's rejection of him and his family from the throne.

14. A man after his own heart. This phrase, as applied to David, has afforded matter to many infidel writers, of reproach and sarcasm. The private vices of David have been swelled and blazoned to prove that he could not be a man after God's own heart. But as Warburton has observed, this character is given him, not so much for his private, as for his public folly, and such as nothing will excuse for. Saul would be thought very prudent in securing his soldiers from division, and very pious in sacrificing before he went out to battle; but his conduct was wicked, for he disobeyed God's commandment. Men sometimes think themselves wise and politic, while they act contrary to the law of God; but it is the height of folly, especially in those who substitute prayer, or any external performances, or ceremonial observances, instead of obedience to the weightier matters of the law. Nothing is more foolish than to imagine that God will be pleased with services directly contrary to his orders, and in disobedience to his commands. "A good understanding have all they, and only they, who fear the Lord, who do his commandments, hearkening to the voice of his word."

spirit and conduct. His knowledge of, and zeal for, the Law, were uniform; and he never fell into idolatry. The phrase itself is best explained by the case of Samuel. Eli was rejected, and Samuel chosen in his place, just as David superseded Saul. On this occasion God said, "I will raise up for myself a faithful priest, who shall do according to what is in my heart." Chap. ii. 35. And is not he, who does according to what is in God's heart, 'a man after God's heart?'

15. But the remainder, &c. The clause retained in the two versions noticed gives light to the passage. Samuel being displeased at Saul's disobedience leaves him; and Saul returns to his own city, to defend that as long as possible.

19. We must take them away. So Poole and others. This was also the policy of the Chaldeans, 2 Kings, xxiv. 14, Jerem. xxiv. 1.

22. Neither sword nor spear. It is singular that among those brave men who abode with Saul, none had these weapons of war. This was suffered that the glory of the following victory might be given to God. In those times they had other weapons, such as bows and arrows; and

CHAPTER XIV.

B. C. 1087. Jonathan, with his armour-bearer attacketh the garrison of the Philistines; confusion ensues in their camp; and Saul and other Israelites pursue them; Saul's mad adjuration, &c.

23 AND the garrison of the Philistines went out
1 to the passage of Michmash, When, one day, Jonathan, the son of Saul, said to the young man who bore his armour, "Come, and let us go over to the Philistine garrison, which is op-2 posite to us;" but he told not his father. And Saul tarried in the uttermost part of Gibeah, under the pomegranate tree, which is by Mi-giron: and the people with him, were about six 3 hundred men. And Ahiah, the son of Ahitub, Ichabod's brother, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eli, Jehovah's high-priest, in Shiloh, wore the ephod. Now the people knew not that Jonathan was gone.
4 And between the passages, by which Jonathan sought to go over to the Philistine garrison, there was a sharp rock on the one side, and a sharp rock on the other side: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other 5 Seneh. The sharp point of the one looked northward, over against Michmash; and of the 6 other southward, over against Gibeah. And Jonathan said to the young man who bore his armour, "Come, and let us go over to the garrison of these uncircumcised: it may be that Jehovah will work for us: for, with Jehovah
there is no restraint, to save by many or by 7 few." And his armour-bearer said to him, "Do all that is in thy heart; march on; behold, I 8 am with thee according to thy desire." Then said Jonathan, "Behold, we will pass over to these men, and we will discover ourselves to 9 them. If they say thus to us, 'Stop until we even their goads served the purpose of pikes.

CHAP. XIV. 4. Bozez and Seneh. They received these names from what grew upon them. The former signifying flower; and the other thorn. Some, from the Arabic, explain the first to denote whiteness; and the second a sharp point.

6. To save by many or by few. Doubtless Jonathan was divinely excited to this deed of valour, that he might be the instrument of saving Israel.

7—10. Jonathan desired a token of divine favour in this enterprise; and he received it. His armour-bearer was ready to second him in what-

come to you;' then we will stand in our place and not go up to them. But, if they say thus, 10
'Come up to us;' then we will go up: for this shall be a token to us that Jehovah hath delivered them into our hands." And they both 11 discovered themselves to the garrison of the Philistines; and the Philistines said, "Behold,
the Hebrews are coming forth out of the holes
where they had hid themselves." And the men 12 of the garrison addressed themselves to Jonathan and his armour-bearer, and said, "Come up to us, and we will teach you something."
And Jonathan said to his armour-bearer, "Come up after me: for Jehovah hath delivered them into the hand of Israel." And Jonathan climb- 13 ed up, upon his hands and upon his feet, and his armour-bearer followed him: and they fell before Jonathan; and his armour-bearer gave the death-stroke after him. And this first 14 slaughter, which Jonathan and his armour-bearer made, 'with spears, pebbles, and flints of the field', was of about twenty men. And 15
there was terror in the camp in the field, and among all the people of the garrison; and the foragers were also struck with terror, and the land quaked; so very great was the terror.
And the watchmen of Saul, in Gibeah of Ben- 16
jamin, looked; and, behold, the multitude melted away, and were going 'hither' and thither. Then said Saul to the people who were 17 with him, "Number now, and see who is gone from us." And when they had numbered, 18 behold, Jonathan and his armour-bearer were not there. And Saul said to Ahiah, "Bring hither the ephod;" for he at that time wore the ephod among the children of Israel. But while 19 Saul talked to the priest, the tumult in the ever he undertook.

14, 15. I have followed the Greek text; the Hebrew is unintelligible. It is literally, 'as in the half of a furrow of a yoke of a field.' It is probable that some of the garrison flying to the army which lay encamped on the side of the hill, threw them into great confusion, thinking that an army was coming against them. The circumstances were aggravated beyond the truth, as is usual in such cases; and they suspected treachery among themselves.

18. Ephod. The common text has ark; but this is highly improbable. The Israelites could not forget what had happened in the time of Eli. We camp of the Philistines went on and increased :

 and Saul said to the priest, "Withhold thy 20 hand." And Saul, and all the people who were with him, shouted and came to the battle : and,
 behold, every man's sword was against his fel-21 low ; and very great confusion. Moreover, the Hebrew "slaves", who were before that time with the Philistines, and had come up with them into the camp ; even they also turned to be with the Israelites who were with Saul and Jonathan.
 22 Likewise all the men of Israel who had hidden themselves in mount Ephraim, when they heard that the Philistines fled, even they also pursued them in the battle ; so that the whole people,
 now with Saul, were about ten thousand men".
 23 Thus Jehovah, that day, saved Israel : and the battle passed on to Beth-aven.
 24 And the men of Israel were that day distressed ; for Saul had adjured the people, saying,
 "Accursed be the man that eateth food until evening, that I may be avenged of mine enemies." So none of the people tasted food "until 25 the evening". For although the whole people had to come to a wood, where was honey drop- 26 ping upon the ground ; Yet when the people came into the wood, and, behold, the honey dropped, no man ate of it : for the people fear-27 ed the oath. But Jonathan had not heard when his father charged the people with the oath :
 he, therefore, put forth the end of the staff
 which was in his hand, and dipped it in a honeycomb, and eat of it ; and he was much 28 refreshed. Then one of the people addressed him, and said, "Thy father strictly charged the people with an oath, saying, "Accursed be the man that eateth food this day.' Hence the learn that it was usual to consult God by the Ephod from the whole history of David, Compare Ch. xxiii. 9 and xxx. 7, in what manner this was done, is not certainly known ; but it was most probably by casting lots.

24. Had that day adjured. This was a rash oath, as destitute of prudence as it was of piety. Had the people received food, they might have accomplished a complete victory.

27. And he was much refreshed. After his exertions and fatigue, any thing to quench thirst or satisfy hunger would be grateful. As Jonathan was ignorant of his father's oath, he could not be criminal in tasting the honey. The literal version, 'and his eyes were enlightened,' may be misunderstood ; and for this reason I have given the sense.

people are faint." Then said Jonathan, "My 29
 father hath troubled the people : see, I pray, how much I have been refreshed, by having tasted a little of this honey ! How much 30 better, if the people had to day freely eaten of the spoil of their enemies, which they found ?
 for had there not been now a much greater slaughter among the Philistines ?"

And they smote the Philistines that day from 31
 Michmash to Aijalon : and the people were very faint. And the people flew upon the spoil, and 32 took sheep, and oxen, and calves, and slew them on the ground : and the people ate the flesh with the blood. They told Saul, saying, 33
 "Behold, the people are sinning against Jehovah by eating flesh with the blood." And he said, "Ye are transgressing : roll now to me a great stone." And Saul said to the officers, 34
 "Disperse yourselves among the people, and say to them, 'Bring hither every man his ox,
 and every man his sheep, and slay them here,
 and eat ; and sin not against Jehovah, by eating flesh with the blood." And all the people brought every man his ox with him that night, and slew them there. And Saul built an altar 35 to Jehovah : this was the first altar which he built to Jehovah.

And Saul said, "Let us go down after the 36 Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light, and let us not leave a man of them." And they said, "Do whatsoever seemeth good to thee." Then said the priest, "Let us draw near hither to God." And Saul asked 37 counsel of God, "Shall I go down after the Philistines ? wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Israel ?" But he answered him not

24. *Arab.

31—35. The consequence of Saul's rash oath was the transgression of the people, flying on the spoil and devouring flesh with the blood. Moses had repeatedly prohibited this ; and they could not be ignorant of the law. Their sin was therefore committed knowingly and wilfully.

35. This was the first altar. Houbigant renders, 'And when he had begun to build an altar, &c. Saul said, Let us go, &c.' The former part of the verse expressly asserts that he built an altar ; and as we are not informed that he had done this before, I prefer the common version.

37. He answered him not. Either because Saul had offended by his adjuration, or rather to show, that however improper this was, yet when made, God would have it observed.

38 that day. And Saul said, "Draw near hither, all ranks of the people; and know and see 39 wherein hath been this day our sin. For, as Jehovah liveth, who hath saved Israel, though it be in Jonathan my son, he shall surely die." But there was not a man among all the people 40 that answered him. Then said he to all Israel, "Be ye on one side, and I and Jonathan my son will be on the other side." And the people said to Saul, "Do what seemeth good to thee."
41 Therefore Saul said, "O Jehovah", the God of Israel, give a just lot." And Saul and Jonathan were taken; but the people escaped.
42 And Saul said, "Cast lots between me and Jonathan my son." And Jonathan was taken.
43 Then Saul said to Jonathan, "Tell me what thou hast done." And Jonathan told him, and said, "I certainly tasted a little honey with the end of the staff which was in my hand; here
44 I am; let me die." And Saul answered, "May God do so and more also to me, if thou Jonathan, 45 than, do not assuredly die." And the people said to Saul, "Shall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? God forbid: as Jehovah liveth, there shall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; for with God he hath wrought this day." So the people rescued Jonathan* that he died not. Then Saul 46 went up from following the Philistines; and the Philistines went to their own place.

Saul now obtained the kingly power over Israel 47 and fought against all his enemies on every side; against Moab, and against the children of Ammon, and against Edom, and against the kings of Zobah, and against the Philistines: and whithersoever he marched, he harrassed the enemy. And he acted with valour, and smote the Amalekites, and delivered Israel out of the hands of those who plundered them.

Now the sons of Saul were Jonathan, and 49 Ishui, and Melchi-shua: and the names of his two daughters were these; the name of the first-born Merab, and the name of the younger Michal. And the name of Saul's wife was 50 Ahinoam, the daughter of Ahimaaz: and the name of the captain of his host was Abner, the son of Ner, Saul's uncle. For Kish, the father 51 of Saul, and Ner, the father of Abner, were the sons of Abiel. And there was vigorous war 52 with the Philistines all the days of Saul: and when Saul saw any strong or any valiant man, he took him into his service.

41. *So Sept. Syr. Arab.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. From the spirit and confidence which Jonathan displayed, we may learn, that however discouraging our circumstances may be, we should not give way to unnecessary fear and despondency. Had Jonathan done so, Israel would not have achieved so glorious a victory. He confided in Jehovah, fully assured that he could save by few as well as by many. Let the christian act in the same noble manner. When called to contend not only with flesh and blood, but with principalities, powers and spiritual wickednesses in high places, let him trust to him, who has said, 'my grace shall be sufficient for thee.'

2. We are also taught to consult God in all our undertakings. It is surely proper to address ourselves to him in prayer, and ask his direction and guidance, in every affair of importance, as he only has the disposal of all events. How suitable then was the advice of the priest, 'Let us draw nigh hither to God.' Even Saul now complied with this advice; but to his great mortification, received no answer. This ought to have led him to repent of his rash oath, by which he had brought guilt on the people, and prevented their complete triumph! When we find God displeased with us, let us be assured our sin is the cause; and by humiliation and application to the blood of atonement, let us seek forgiveness and reconciliation.

3. We may here see, what misery and mischief an ungoverned spirit produces. Whatever may be our rank or dignity, if we are under the dominion of our passions, we shall disgrace our-

41. Give a just lot. The Vulg. and partly the Sept. has an addition here: "O Jehovah, the God of Israel, [show to us why thou hast not answered thy servant Saul this day. If this iniquity be in me, or in Jonathan my son, discover it by Urim; or if this iniquity be in the people] discover it by Thummim." Houbigant adopts and defends this as genuine. The word I have rendered just, is Thummim; and from the use of this term here, Michaelis conjectures, that what are called Urim and Thummim, were three sacred lots contained in the high priest's breast plate. See Introduction, Part iii. Ch. 3, § 3.

43. Here I am; let me die. The common version represents Jonathan as complaining of his lot, 'and lo! I must die. I am satisfied they contain a sentiment more becoming the spirit and patriotism of Jonathan. 'Here am I, let me die:' that is, since my country is saved, and her enemies vanquished I am content to die.

45. And the people said to Saul, &c. Saul makes no inquiry, whether Jonathan had done this knowingly; but at once resolves on his death. The people interpose, and determine not to suffer the death of one whom God had honoured as the instrument of their deliverance.

48. Acted with valour. Matthews, 'played the man,' demeaned himself valiantly. Becket and Margin, 'wrought mightily.'

CHAPTER XV.

B. C. 1079. Saul sent to destroy Amalek; he spares Agag and the best of the spoil; Samuel denounceth his rejection, and killeth Agag.

- 1 SAMUEL now said to Saul, "Jehovah sent me to anoint thee king over his people, over Israel: now, therefore, hearken thou to the words of 2 Jehovah. Thus saith Jehovah, the God of hosts, 'I remember what Amalek did to Israel, how he opposed him in the way, when he
3 came up from Egypt. Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep,
4 camel and ass." And Saul assembled the people, and numbered them in Telaim, two hundred thousand men, of whom were ten thousand
5 men of Judah. And Saul came to a city of Amalek, and laid wait in the valley.
6 And Saul said unto the Kenites, "Depart and get away from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them: for ye showed kindness to all the children of Israel, when they came up out of Egypt." So the Kenites departed
7 from among the Amalekites. And Saul smote the Amalekites from Havilah, until one cometh
8 to Shur, which is opposite Egypt. And he took Agag, the king of the Amalekites, alive; and all the people he utterly destroyed with the 9 edge of the sword. But Saul and the people

selves and injure others. How despicable does Saul appear, when acting under the influence of an impetuous temper! Asking counsel of God, then restraining the priest in the midst of the service; making a rash oath and keeping it; swearing without consideration, and then, under pretence of religion, ready to sacrifice his own son! Who but must see while contemplating

3. And utterly destroy. The command to Saul is express, that he must destroy all their goods by consuming them; and kill all the persons, and cattle. Nothing is to be rescued. They seem to have lived by plundering; and it became necessary to exterminate them.

6. To the Kenites. The descendants of Jethro, who formerly lived in caves and rocks, near to the Amalekites. Numb. xxiv. 21. Some of them afterwards removed and lived in Judah, Judg. i. 16; and it is probable that on the subjection of the Israelites to the neighbouring nations, they had retreated to their old abode for their safety.

spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the 'full grown' camels, and the camel-pillions; even all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them: but whatsoever was vile and refuse, they utterly destroyed.

Then came the word of Jehovah to Samuel, 10 saying, "I repent that I have made Saul king: 11 for he hath turned away from me, and hath not performed my commandments." And this grieved Samuel; and he cried to Jehovah all that night. And when Samuel rose early in the 12 morning to meet Saul, it was told Samuel, saying, "Saul came to Carmel, and, behold, he set up for himself a monument, and then passed away, and went down to Gilgal." And Samuel 13 came to Saul; and Saul said to him, "Blessed be thou of Jehovah! I have performed the commandment of Jehovah." And Samuel said, 14 "What meaneth then this bleating of sheep, and this lowing of oxen, which I hear with mine ears?" And Saul said, "They have brought 15 them from the Amalekites: for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice to Jehovah thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed." Then Samuel said 16 to Saul, "Suffer me to tell thee what Jehovah said to me this night." And he said to him, "Speak." And Samuel said, "When thou wast 17 little in thine own eyes, wast thou not made chief of the tribes of Israel? and did not Jeho-

such a picture, the truth of Solomon's remark! "He that is slow to anger, is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city." Reader, art thou warm and passionate? Be always on thy guard; and as thou lovest peace of mind, be not easily provoked. Remember that self-government is an essential part of christian excellence.

xxi. 34; and the word here is regularly the plural, camel-pillions. This fixes the sense of the preceding term, rendered in the common version fatlings; and it is probable that (כֶּמֶל) may have dropped from the text. The common version is tautological, as fatlings are implied in the term sheep, or flocks, and fatlings in that of oxen. Junius adheres to the textual reading, and renders, of the second sort. He supposes they divided the herds and flocks into three kinds; and the best and the second, they preserved; but the third or worst they destroyed. I have followed the correct reading of the versions noticed.

12. Set up for him a monument. 'To set up a place,' is a singular combination of words; and however explained, improper. There is no doubt, but (יָד) signifies a monument: (Compare 2 Sam. xviii. 18); and Saul seemed anxious to erect a trophy of his victory, before he had made

- 18 vah anoint thee king over Israel? And Jehovah sent thee on a journey, and said, 'Go and utterly destroy these sinners, the Amalekites; and fight against them until they be consumed.'
- 19 Why then didst thou not obey the voice of Jehovah, but didst fly upon the spoil, and do evil in the sight of Jehovah?" And Saul said to Samuel, "Yea, I have obeyed the voice of Jehovah, and have gone the way which Jehovah sent me, and have brought Agag, the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites."
- 21 But the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the choice of the things, which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice to Jehovah thy God, in Gilgal." And Samuel said, "Hath Jehovah delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices,
- As in obeying the voice of Jehovah?
Behold, to obey, is far better than sacrifice,
And to hearken, than the fat of rams.
- 23 For rebellion is as sinful as divination,
And stubbornness as wicked as idolatry:
Since then thou hast rejected the word of Jehovah,
'Jehovah' hath rejected thee from reigning."
- 24 And Saul said to Samuel, "I have sinned: for I have transgressed the commandment of Jehovah, and thy words: because I feared the
- 25 people, and hearkened to their voice. Now, therefore, I pray thee, pardon my sin, and turn any acknowledgment to God.

13-15. Saul boasts of his compliance with the divine will, and his performance of it. Samuel had, from what Jehovah had said to him, reason to question the truth of his declaration; and when he heard the bleating of the flocks, he was certain of his transgression.

21. Yea I have obeyed, &c. Saul persists in defending his own conduct; and pretends that what they had preserved was for the purpose of religion. It is probable this was only pretence, and that covetousness had prompted Saul and the people to seize the spoil.

22. Hath Jehovah delight, &c. Obedience to God is a moral duty, constantly and invariably necessary; but sacrifice is only a ceremonial institution. Gross disobedience is not to be compensated by offering sacrifices. Compare Hos. vi. 6; Math. v. 24, and ix. 13, and xii. 7.

23. Is as sinful, &c. The noun, in Hebrew, is often used adjectively; and is obviously so used in each of these lines. Rebellion against God is as sinful as divination; they are alike forbidden, and in consequence violations of the divine command.

24. I feared the people. He excuses his sin, by laying it to the charge of the people. There is reason to suspect this was not the cause. Compare Chap. xi. 7, xiv. 24.

again with me, that I may worship Jehovah 'thy God'." And Samuel said to Saul, "I will not return with thee, for thou hast rejected the word of Jehovah, and Jehovah hath rejected thee from being king over Israel." And as Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold on the skirt of his mantle, so that it was torn off. And Samuel said to him, "So hath Jehovah torn from thee this day, the kingdom of Israel, and given it thy neighbour who is better than thou. Nor will He who gives victory to Israel, lie or repent: for he is not a man that he should repent." Again 'Saul' said, "I have sinned: yet honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel, and turn back with me, that I may worship Jehovah, thy God." So Samuel turned back with Saul; and Saul worshipped Jehovah.

Then said Samuel, "Bring ye hither to me Agag, the king of the Amalekites." And Agag came to him pleasantly: for Agag said to himself, "Surely the bitterness of death is past." But Samuel said, "As thy sword has made women childless, so among women shall thy own mother be childless." And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before Jehovah, in Gilgal.

Then Samuel went to Ramah; and Saul went up to his own house, to Gibeah of Saul. And Samuel came no more to see Saul unto the day of his death; nevertheless Samuel mourned for 30. *Sept. Syr. Arab.

26. I will not return with thee. Samuel, no doubt, spoke what he intended, but afterwards saw reason to change his mind; nor in such cases is any man guilty of lying or prevarication. Compare Gen. xix. 2.

28-29. Samuel strongly asserts God's rejection of Saul; his house is not to be established on the throne of Israel.—He who gives victory. The various significations of the original term (נִצָּחַן) has occasioned different versions. Bates renders, 'the Eternal one'; Houbigant, 'He who presides over Israel'; and Geddes, 'the true God of Israel.' I have followed Matthew's version, and the Vulg. Luther renders to the same purpose, 'the Hero of Israel.' Parkhurst explains the term in the sense I have given. The context I conceive supports the sense. Saul had obtained a victory, and built, in commemoration of it, a monument to himself. Samuel tacitly reproves his ingratitude, and points out to whom the honour of the victory was due. By this language, he also intimates, that though Saul should be removed from the throne, God would still give victory to Israel.

32. Pleasantly. So the Geneva version, and most modern critics render. Saul having spared his life, he now thought himself secure.

33. The conduct of Samuel has been thought indecorous; and he has been charged with cruelty. It should seem, that Agag deserved the punishment inflicted for his cruelty towards others. Harmer has shown, that Saul: but Jehovah had repented that he had made Saul king over Israel.

CHAPTER XVI.

B. C. 1063. Samuel sent to Bethlehem; he is directed to anoint David; David is influenced by the Holy Spirit; Saul sends for him.

- 1 AND Jehovah said to Samuel, "How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, seeing I have rejected him from reigning over Israel? Fill thy horn with oil, and go, (for I send thee) to Jesse the Bethlehemite: for among his sons I have provided for myself a king." And Samuel said, "How can I go? If Saul hear, he will kill me." And Jehovah said, "Take a heifer with thee, and say, 'I am come to sacrifice to Jehovah.'"
- 3 And call Jesse to the sacrifice, and I will show thee what thou shalt do: and thou shalt anoint
- 4 for me him whom I name to thee." And Samuel did what Jehovah commanded, and came to Bethlehem. And the elders of the town trembled at his coming, and said, "Comest thou peaceably?" And he said, "Peaceably: I am come to sacrifice to Jehovah: sanctify yourselves, and come with me to the sacrifice." And he sanctified Jesse and his sons, and called them to the sacrifice.

And when they had come, he looked on Eliab and said to himself, "Surely Jehovah's anointed is before him." But Jehovah said to Samuel, "Regard not his countenance, nor the height of his stature: since I have rejected him; for Jehovah doth not see as man seeth; for man looketh at the outward appearance, but Jehovah looketh at the heart." Then Jesse called Abinadab, and made him pass before Samuel: but he said, "Neither hath Jehovah chosen

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. Though God bear, with much long-suffering, the conduct of sinners, he will at length execute righteous judgment. The Amalekites had unjustly opposed Israel when delivered from Egypt; the descendants imitated the conduct of their fathers, and now God determines their ruin. The measure of their iniquity was full, and the day of retribution was come. Saul is divinely commissioned to this work; and he hastes to accomplish it. Let every sinner be assured, that, without repentance and reformation, there will be no safety; and that reprieve is not pardon. Justice may sometimes be slow, but it is always sure.

2. The conduct of Saul indicates gross hypocrisy. He boasted of what he had done, and by justifying himself, hoped to escape being judged. The prophet brings evidence of his guilt: 'What meaneth this bleating of the sheep?' While men make pretensions to piety, how often do their spirit and practice refute their pretensions! What mean their indulgence, their love of the world, their neglect of holy duties? Saul vindicates himself by laying the blame on the people. They spared the sheep and oxen; and they did it with a good intention, to sacrifice to Jehovah. Had he not authority to command the people? And did he not receive a command to sacrifice them by the sword, and not on the altar? The obedience of hypocrites is partial. They serve God so far as it suits their designs; and they vindicate their own way; but God at length will expose them.

3. Insincere professors often lay great stress on ceremonial observances, while they neglect moral duties. They are ready to offer sacrifice, but unwilling to yield obedience to moral precepts and commands. Be it remembered, that obedience is better than sacrifice. That is enjoined by the law of nature; this is only a positive institute: that was required in innocence; this supposes sin come into the world, and shows only God's design of mercy. God is more glorified by obedience than sacrifice. It is much more easy to offer sacrifice, than to bring every thought and affection into subjection to the will of God. Obedience is the end of sacrifice. When properly offered, it contains an acknowledgment of sin, and is the means of obtaining pardon and reconciliation, that we may serve God in holiness all the days of our lives. Rebellion and obstinacy, are as bad as divination or idolatry, however they may be accompanied with offerings. All disobedience is idolatry, as it sets up the will of the creature above the will of God.

4. Samuel assures Saul, that God for his disobedience had rejected him; yet he seems little affected. Knowing the influence of Samuel as a prophet, he is anxious to retain his favour; and begs that he would honour him before the people. Alas! what could Samuel do for him. He, however, complied so far as to attend the public sacrifice, and punish Agag. Samuel mourned for Saul; for his disobedient, haughty and tyrannical spirit, and for that mischief he would occasion to Israel. Thus faithful ministers mourn for the sins of their people; and if some are their joy and crown of rejoicing, others cause them to go sorrowing. Let us take heed, lest like Saul we be rejected for disobedience, or like Agag cut off for our crimes. Bitter is the death of the sinner; to him the sting is not removed; and when he thinks death remote, all dangers are past, and pleasantly says to himself, 'surely the bitterness of death is past,' lo! it is at hand. It is only the humble believer who will realize those expressions! To him indeed, the bitterness of death is past; the sting is taken away, the monster conquered.

it is common in the East, for the greatest Emperors sometimes to put to death with their own hands, those who have merited such punishment. See vol. iv. p 230.

CHAP. XVI. 1. For myself a king. That is, one who will do all my pleasure; who will make it the study of his life, not only to conquer his enemies, but to honour me.

2. He will kill me. This shows the spirit of Saul. He made his will the law; without any regard to God, or his institutions.

4. Comest thou peaceably? Is all well? Hath God sent thee to announce his displeasure, or Saul for some sanguinary purpose?

9 this. Then Jesse made "Shimeah" to pass by; but he said, "Neither hath Jehovah chosen this."
 10 Thus Jesse made seven of his sons pass before Samuel; but Samuel said to Jesse, "Jehovah
 11 hath not chosen these." And Samuel said to Jesse, "Are all thy sons here?" And he said, "The youngest yet remaineth; and lo! he tendeth the flock." And Samuel said to Jesse, "Send and fetch him: for until he come hither, 12 we will not sit down to eat." And he sent, and brought him in. Now he was ruddy, with beautiful eyes, and a goodly appearance: and Jehovah said to Samuel, "Arise, anoint him: for 13 this is he." Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midst of his brethren: and from that day forward, the Spirit of Jehovah came upon David. Samuel then arose and went to Ramah.
 14 But the Spirit of Jehovah had departed from Saul; and an evil Spirit from Jehovah troubled 15 him. And Saul's servants said to him, "Behold now, an evil spirit, from God, troubleth thee.
 16 Let our lord now command his servants who wait on him, to seek out a man, a skilful player on the harp: so that when the evil spirit, from God, is upon thee, he may play with his hand on his harp", and thou mayest be well." And Saul 17 said to his servants, "Look out, I pray, for a man, who can play well, and bring him to me." Then answered one of the servants, and said, 18 "Behold, I have seen a son of Jesse, the Bethlehemite, and a skilful player, a man of valour, and a warlike man; and prudent in conduct, and comely in person; and Jehovah is with him." Saul now sent messengers to Jesse, and said, 19 "Send to me David thy son, who tendeth the flock." And Jesse took a homer of bread, and 20 a skin-bottle of wine, and a kid, and sent them, to Saul by David his son. And David came to 21 Saul, and stood before him; and he loved him greatly; and he became his armour-bearer. And Saul sent to Jesse, saying, "Let David, I 22 pray thee, attend on me; for he hath found favour in my sight." Now, when the evil spirit, 23 from God was upon Saul, David took the harp and played with his hand: and Saul was relieved, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him.

CHAP. XVI. v2 Samuel xiii. 3, and 1 Chron. ii. 13.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. Samuel, the judge and prophet of Israel, after denouncing God's judgments to Saul, had retired to Ramah, to superintend the school of the prophets, and to end his days in privacy. He there continued to mourn for Saul, and doubtless to pray for him; and thus set an example to us, to pray for kings and those in authority, that we may live peaceably, in all honesty and godliness. His grief for Saul became excessive and he is reproved for not acquiescing in the divine will. Thus our passions are often sinful by their excess. Let us learn to moderate them, as not only a duty to God, but to ourselves.

5. He sanctified; that is, ordered to be sanctified; for a prophet is often said to do what he orders to be done, or predicts shall be done.—Called them to the sacrifice. Most suppose, that the feast of the sacrifice is here intended; to which Samuel only invited Jesse and his sons, that he might secretly anoint him whom the Lord should name.

9. Shimeah. So we have this name in the places noted; and the (v) might easily be omitted. It is certainly proper to write the same name in the same manner.

11. Sit down to eat. Samuel would not enjoy the feast, until he had done what the Lord had commanded.

13. The spirit of Jehovah. God not only appointed him to rule his people, but gave him suitable qualifications. By his spirit, he gave him wisdom, prudence and courage.

14. An evil spirit from Jehovah. Saul, by his disobedience, had provoked God, so that he no longer directed and prospered him; but left him a prey to his own gloomy mind. Conscious guilt, foreboding the loss of

16. *So the versions.

2. Samuel, who mourned so much for Saul, had relinquished the reigns of government without expressing any regret for himself or his family. He was sent as the last act of his public and virtuous life, to anoint a successor to Saul. Though commissioned by the highest authority, he knew the temper of Saul was too impetuous to be restrained, should he know of this transaction. He was directed how to act, and he made no delay. He took his horn and went to Bethlehem. Let us not only admire his prudence, spirit and ready obedience, but let us imitate them. When called to any duty, let us not consult with flesh and blood; our ease, self-interest or reputation, his dominion, and perhaps the destruction of his house, made him jealous, sanguinary, and irritable; and occasionally melancholy. This was the evil spirit which troubled him; and his courtiers properly advised music to sooth his mind, and mitigate his complaint. Had he been possessed by a demon, music would have had no effect.

18. Behold, I have seen a son. David being anointed, providence opens the way for his advancement. His skill on the harp introduces him to court; and his prudence and valour gain the affection of Saul and the people. Some, to support the narrative, in the next chapter, contend that what is related here must have occurred after David had killed Goliath; but this to me is highly improbable.

20. A homer of bread, &c. So the Sept. others, an ass loaded with bread. These different versions depend on the points; and I am satisfied the Greek translators were as likely to understand the text as the Masorets. The homer, as a measure of capacity, was more likely to be mentioned, than the ass, which carried the bread. To appear before the king without

§. We are taught to reverence and fear that God who looketh into the heart, and discerns the temper and principle, the affections and thoughts. Samuel, though a wise and good man, was deceived in Jesse's elder sons. If we trust to outward appearances, we shall often be deceived. But let us always remember, that God searches the heart; he knows who will best fill up particular stations, and often fixes on those persons who to us seem most unfit; and rejects others, who appear most likely; but at length it will appear that we were mistaken. Let this be a caution to us to guard our hearts; to see that we act upon right principles, and for good ends, for God cannot be deceived. Let us also learn to judge of others by their tempers and souls, and not by outward appearances; to value those most, whose minds are most holy, and whose tempers are kind and obliging.

CHAP. XVII. 4. A champion, named Goliath. When Joshua conquered the Anakites, some of them fled to the city of Gath. Josh. xi. 22, 23. Goliath might be of this race. There have been in most ages, some men of gigantic size; nor have we any reason to doubt the truth of what is here said.

5. Five thousand shekels. About seventy-eight pounds weight; and the weight of his spears' point, about nine pounds.

8. He stood and cried. History furnishes many instances of single combat. Thus Paris and Menelaus in Homer, and the Horatii and Curiatii in Livy, are said to fight at the head of the army, upon condition, that the party of the vanquished, should receive laws from the party con-

of the coat was five thousand shekels. And he 6 had greaves of brass on his legs; and a lance of brass between his shoulders. And the staff of 7 his spear was like a weaver's beam; and his spear's iron point weighed six hundred shekels, and one bearing a shield went before him. And 8 he stood and cried to the hosts of Israel, and said, "Why are ye come out to set your battle in array? Am not I a Philistine, and ye servants to Saul? Choose you a man for yourselves, and let him come down to me. If he be able to fight 9 with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants; but if I prevail against him and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us." The Philistine also said, "Lo"! I this day defy 10 the host of Israel; give me a man, that we may fight together." When Saul and all Israel heard 11 those words of the Philistine, they were dismayed, and greatly afraid.

David now said to Saul, "Let no man's heart 32

4. How miserable is that person from whom the Lord is departed, and his spirit withdrawn! There is not a more pitiable creature on this side hell, than the man who is forsaken of God, and given up a prey to his own hearts' lusts. No one needs a worse punishment, than to have his own passions let loose upon him, and the restraints of divine grace taken away. May we learn therefore highly to value, and diligently to seek and cherish, the influences of the good spirit of God; to guard against every iniquity, especially wilful rebellion and disobedience; for this will provoke God to take away his holy spirit; and no dignity or power can secure the possession of it. May we learn to consider the displeasure of God, and the absence of his good spirit, as the greatest of all evils; for thus saith the Lord, Hos. ix. 12. 'Wo also to them when I depart from them!' If in his favour there be life, in his frowns there must be death.

quering. Goliath might be brave, but the language is intended to insult, and strike fear, into the Israelites.

12-32. In these verses we have a strange and incoherent narrative; which so far from deserving to be regarded as a part of sacred writ, scarcely merits the notice of a common legend. That it formed no part of the original, has been proved by arguments unanswerable. It is obvious to remark upon this passage, 1st that after David had been of so much service to the king, in causing the evil spirit to depart from him: after its being recorded how greatly Saul loved him, and that he had made him his Armour-bearer: after the king had sent to Jesse, to signify his intention of keeping his son with him: all which are particularly mentioned, in the latter part of the preceding chapter: The account of keeping his father's 33 fight with this Philistine." And Saul said to David, "Thou art not able to go against this Philistine and to fight with him: for thou art

 only a lad; but he a man of war from his youth." 34 And David said to Saul, "Thy servant tended his father's flock, and if there came a lion or a 35 bear, and took a lamb out of the flock, Then
 I pursued him, and smote him, and snatched
 it from his mouth: and if he arose against me,
 I caught him by his beard, and smote him and 36 slew him. Both lions and bears hath thy servant smitten; and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be like one of them: ^alet me go then,
 and smite him, and take away the reproach
 from Israel; for who is that uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the hosts of the living 37 God?" David said moreover, "Jehovah who delivered me from the power of lions and bears, will deliver me from the hand of this Philistine."
 And Saul said to David, "Go; and may Jehovah be with thee."
 38 Saul would now clothe David with his armour;
 and he put on his head a helmet of brass; and 39 clothed him with a coat of mail; And over his armour ^vhe girded his own sword. ^aOnce and again" David attempted to go, but could not;

 for he had not been accustomed to them. And David said to Saul, "I cannot go with these;
 for I have not been accustomed to them." And David put them off him; And took his staff in 40 his hand, and chose five smooth stones out of the brook, and put them in a shepherd's bag which he had with him; thus with a scrip, and his sling in his hand, he drew near to the Philistine.
 And when the Philistine looked, and saw David, 42
 he disdained him; for he was but a youth, of a ruddy, and of a fair countenance. And the Phi- 43
 listine said to David, "Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves, ^aand with stones?"
 And the Philistine cursed David by his god.
 The Philistine also said to David, "Come to 44 me, and I will give thy flesh to the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field." Then said 45 David to the Philistine, "Thou comest to me with a sword and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee in the name of Jehovah, the God of hosts, the God of the hosts of Israel, whom thou hast defied. This day will Jehovah deliver 46

cheeses unto the captain of their thousand, and look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge. 19 Now Saul, and they, and all the men of Israel, were in the valley of Elah, fighting with the Philistines.

20 And David rose up early in the morning, and left the sheep with a keeper, and took, and went, as Jesse had commanded him; and he came to the trench, as the host was going forth to the fight, and shouted for the battle. 21 For Israel and the Philistines had put the battle in array, army against army. 22 And David left his carriage in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, and ran into the army, and came and saluted his brethren. 23 And as he talked with them, behold there came up the champion, the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name, out of the armies of the Philistines, and spake according to the same words: and David heard them. 24 And all the men of Israel, when they saw the man, fled from him, and were sore afraid. 25 And the men of Israel said, Have ye seen this man that is come up? surely to defy Israel is he come up: and it shall be, that the man who killeth him, the king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter, and will make his father's house free in Israel. 26 And David spake to the men that stood by him, saying, What shall be done to the man that killeth this Philistine, and taketh away the reproach from Israel? for who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God? 27 And the people answered him after this manner, saying, So shall it be done to the man that killeth him.

28 And Eliab his eldest brother heard when he spake unto the men; and Eliab's anger was kindled against David, and he said, Why comest thou down hither? and with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? I know thy pride, and the naughtiness of thine heart; for thou art come down that thou mightest see the battle. 29 And David said, What have I now done? Is there not a cause?

30 And he turned from him toward another, and spake after the same manner: and the people answered him again after the former manner. 31 And when the words were heard which David spake, they rehearsed them before Saul: and he sent for him.

sheep, afterwards, and being sent to his brethren upon this occasion, must appear to be somewhat improbable. 2dly That what is here said of the premium that Saul had first offered, to him who should conquer the Philistine, is not very consistent with the accounts afterwards given; of which we shall have occasion to take particular notice. 3dly That Eliab's behaviour, as here represented, is not only remarkable, but unaccountable and absurd. And 4thly That the inquiries of a young man, who is not said to have declared any intentions of accepting the challenge of the Philistine, would scarcely have been related to the king.—But now, if this passage be supposed to have been interpolated, we must see how the connexion stands, upon its being omitted. The Vatican copy of the Sept. contains none of these verses, and Kennicott has shown, that the Alex. did not, till Origin inserted them. See Gen. Diss. p 9. Michaelis, Dathe, Houbigant, and the best modern critics consent, that the whole passage is interpolated.

36. The addition to the text here is so suitable to the narrative, that its own evidence supports its right to a place in the text.

50. The next passage omitted in the Vatican copy, is the 50th verse of this chap. which is a sort of recapitulation, that is entirely needless; the

 47 there is a God in Israel. And all this assembly shall know that Jehovah can save without sword or spear: for the battle is Jehovah's, and he 48 will give you into our hands." And the Philistine arose, and came forward to meet David; and David ran with speed towards the list to 49 meet the Philistine. And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slung it, and smote the Philistine on his forehead with such force, that the stone sunk into his forehead;
 51 and he fell on his face to the earth. David then ran, and stood upon the Philistine, and took his sword and drew it from its sheath, and with it slew him, and cut off his head. And when the Philistines saw that their champion was dead,
 52 they fled. And the men of Israel and of Judah arose, and shouted, and pursued the Philistines, unto the entrance to Gath, and to the gates of Ekron. And on the way to Gath and Ekron, 53 lay the smitten Philistines. And the children of Israel returned from chasing the Philistines, and plundered their camp.

Now the women came from all the cities of 6 Israel, singing joyfully, with tabors, and flutes, and stringed instruments. And as they played, 7 they sung responsively and said,

"Saul hath smitten his thousands,

But David his ten thousands."

And Saul was very wroth, (for the saying displeased him); and he said, "They have ascribed to David ten thousands; and to me they have ascribed but thousands: what more can he have but the kingdom?"

And Saul was afraid of David. Hence Saul ¹²₁₃ removed him from himself, and made him captain over a thousand people, whom he conducted out and in. And David behaved wisely in all ¹⁴₁₅ his ways; and Jehovah was with him. Wherefore when Saul saw that he behaved wisely, he was the more afraid of him. But all Israel and ¹⁶₁₇ Judah loved David, because he conducted them out and in. Michal also, Saul's daughter loved ²⁰

50. So David prevailed over the Philistine with a sling and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; but there was no sword in the hand of David.

52. So Sept. Josephus.

54. And David took the head of the Philistine, and brought it to Jerusalem, and he put his armour in his tent. 55 And when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said unto Abner, the captain of the host, Abner, whose son is this youth? And Abner said, As thy soul liveth, O king, I cannot tell. 56 And the king said, Enquire thou whose son the stripling is. 57 And as David returned from the slaughter of the Philistine, Abner took him, and brought him before Saul, with the head of the Philistine in his hand. 58 And Saul said to him, Whose son art thou, thou young man? And David answered, I am the son of thy servant Jesse the Bethlehemite.

CHAP. XVIII. 1. And it came to pass when he had made an end of speaking unto Saul, that the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul. 2 And Saul took him that day, and would let him go no more home to his father's house. 3 Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul. 4 And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle. 5 And David went out whithersoever Saul sent him, and behaved himself wisely: and Saul set him over the men of war, and he was accepted in the sight of all the people, and also in the sight of all Saul's servants.

9. And Saul eyed David from that day and forward. 10 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the evil spirit from God came upon Saul, and he prophesied in the midst of the house: and David played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand. 11 And Saul cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. And David avoided out of his presence twice.

17. And Saul said to David, Behold my elder daughter Merab, her will I give thee to wife: only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles. For Saul said let not mine hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philistines be upon him. 18 And David said unto Saul, Who am I? and what is my life, or my father's family in Israel, that I should be son in law to the king? 19 But it came to pass at the time when Merab Saul's daughter should have been given to David, that she was given unto Adriel the Meholahite to wife.

sense is complete, and the connexion regular; without it. The connexion, in the Vatican copy, stands thus; "The Philistine fell upon his face to the earth; and David ran and stood upon him, and took his sword, &c." When this is mentioned, was it at all necessary, was it at all proper, to say, in the preceding verse, that there was no sword in the hand of David; after the particulars of his accoutrements had been given us in the 40th verse? And when we are told in the 39th, that after he had girded on his sword upon his armour and assayed to go, finding them inconvenient, he put them off from him?

54. From the 54th verse of the 17 Chap. to the 6th of the 18th, we have an account, 1st that when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, neither he, nor Abner, the captain of the host, knew who the young man was. 2dly, that Jonathan, Saul's son, instantaneously conceived a violent affection for him, loved him as his own soul, and stripped himself of all his armour, and his garments, to give them to David. And 3dly, that Saul set him over the men of war. Accounts, which, when examined, will neither appear probable, nor consistent with the other parts of this history. There are no traces of them in the Vatican copy of the Greek version; and, leaving them out, the connexion is entire, and the whole account altogether probable and consistent.

CHAP. XVIII. 9. The Vatican copy omits all this com. to the 11th inclusive, and thus both the sense and connexion are clear; and Saul's conduct represented to be such as might naturally be expected. But, there would be some difficulty in endeavouring to make it appear consistent; should we suppose that Saul, after he had made two attempts to slay David, should immediately give him the command of a thousand men, or advance him to any post of honour. The truth seems to be, that Saul had yet thrown no javelin at him; nor did he do so, till after some attempts to destroy David; and they told Saul, and the thing pleased him. And Saul said, "I will give her to him, that she may be to him a snare, and that the hand of the Philistines may be against him."

And Saul commanded his servants, saying, "Speak with David secretly, and say, 'Behold, the king delighteth in thee, and all his servants love thee: now therefore, be the king's son-in-law.'" And Saul's servants spoke those words in the hearing of David: but David said, "Is it in your eyes an easy thing, for one so poor as I am, to become the king's son-in-law?" And the servants of Saul told him, saying, "On this manner spoke David." And Saul said, "Thus shall ye say to David, 'The king desireth not any dowry, but a hundred foreskins of the Philistines, to be avenged of the king's enemies: for Saul thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines. And when his servants told David these words, it pleased David well to be the king's son-in-law; and after a few days, David arose and went, he and his men, and slew of the Philistines a hundred men; and David brought their foreskins; and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might become the king's son-in-law. And Saul gave to him, Michal, his daughter, for a wife. And Saul saw and knew that Jehovah was with David, and that Michal his own daughter, and all Israel loved him; Then Saul was yet the more afraid of David; and Saul became, at all times, David's enemy. But, whensoever the princes of the Philistines came forth, David behaved himself more wisely than all the other servants of Saul; so that his name was greatly renowned.

CHAPTER XIX.

B. C. 1063. Saul's further jealousy and persecution of David; his design to put him to death defeated by Michal, and then by a divine influence on his mind.

AND Saul spoke to Jonathan his son, and to all his servants, that they should put David to death. But Jonathan, Saul's son, delighted much in David; and Jonathan told David, saying,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XVII XVIII. 1. The Philistines doubtless thought themselves secure of victory, when they had such a champion as Goliath on their side. They relied on his strength, and he seems confident, that no one could be found to equal him in courage or might. How vain was their confidence, and how groundless the fears of Israel. Let us learn not to trust in man and make flesh our arm; for whereof is he to be accounted? 'In his best estate,' said David feelingly, 'he is altogether vanity.'

2. The servants of God ought to take encouragement from former appearances of providence in their favour. How wisely and piously did David argue, that God would deliver him, because he had done so out of the paw of the lion and the bear. He recollected what he had done, that he still had the same power, and therefore trusted that he would do it. So St. Paul reasons, (some think with allusion to this history) "I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion; and the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom."

3. We see here an affecting instance of the vanity of the world. Who so seemingly happy as David! He returned in triumph, Saul caressed and advanced him, Jonathan the king's son, became his friend, the king's daughter fell in love with him, the courtiers and soldiers esteemed him, and he was beloved by all the people; yet this was the beginning of his sorrows; and innumerable artifices were made use of to destroy him. See what slippery places great men stand in; and what little reason there is to envy their condition. David was much happier when a shepherd, than now. Let us learn contentment in a low condition, and check the risings of ambition. The greater height, the greater danger.

4. If David reckoned it such an honour to be Saul's son-in-law, what an honour is it to be 'the sons and daughters of the Most High, the King of Kings!' David speaks of the alliance with great respect, though he himself had many deserving qualities. How great an honour then, have the saints, to call God their father, and to receive the tokens of his love and care, and an heavenly inheritance! If this is a light matter to any of us, we know not the dignity and happiness resulting from it. But every good man will say with John, "Behold, what manner of love the father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God."

him had proved ineffectual: (see xix. 9.) And that the ancient and original Hebrew copies contained no more than what we find translated in the Vatican is, I think, certain. See Note H. B.

17-19. The Vatican copy of the Sept. omits this and the two following verses; in which we have an account, 1st Of a proposal made by Saul to David to give him his eldest daughter Merab to wife; and, at the same time, encouraging him to valour, in hopes that he might fall by the hands of the Philistines. 2dly Of David's modesty in declining the honour of being the king's son in law. And 3dly That when this marriage seemed, on all parts, to be concluded upon, Merab was given to Adriel the Meholathite to wife. The inconsistencies that must arise from supposing this, and the other passages we have been examining, to be any part of the original text, will be evident to every attentive reader.

CHAP. XIX. 1. Saul spoke to, &c. What he had before proposed, he now openly avowed. His jealousy and fear excited him to this outrageous conduct.

Saul my father seeketh to put thee to death: now, therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself until the morning, and abide in some secret place, and hide thyself, And I will come out and attend my father in the field where thou art; and I will speak of thee to my father; and what I see, that I will tell thee."

4 And Jonathan spoke well of David to Saul his father, and said to him, "Let not the king sin against his servant, against David; because he hath not sinned against thee, and because his works for thee have been very good. For he exposed his own life, and slew the Philistine; and Jehovah, by him, wrought a great salvation for all Israel; which thou sawest, and didst rejoice. Why then wouldst thou sin against innocent blood, in putting David to death without a cause?" And Saul hearkened to the voice of Jonathan; and Saul swore, "As Jehovah liveth, he shall not be put to death." And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan told him all these things. And Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his presence, as in time past.

8 And again there was war; and David went out, and fought with the Philistines, and slew them with a "very" great slaughter; for they fled from him. And an evil spirit from Jehovah was upon Saul, as he sat in his house with his javelin in his hand; and David played with his hand upon his harp. And Saul sought to smite David to the wall with the javelin; but he slipped away from Saul's presence, and he smote the javelin into the wall; but David fled and escaped. Saul also, on that night, sent messengers to David's house, to watch him, and to put him to death in the morning; and Michal David's wife told him, saying, "If thou save not thy life to night, to morrow thou wilt be put to death." Michal then let David down through a window; and he fled away, and escaped. And Michal took the teraphs, and put them in David's bed, and put a net of goat's-hair at their head, and covered them with a cloth. And when Saul sent messengers to take David, she said, "He is sick." Again Saul sent messengers to see David, saying, "Bring him up to me, in the bed, that he may be put to death." But when the messengers went in, behold! the teraphs were in the bed, with a net of goat's hair at their head. And Saul said to Michal, "Why hast thou thus deceived me, and sent away mine enemy, so that he is escaped?" And Michal answered Saul, "He said to me, 'Let me go; why should I put thee to death?'"

And David fled, and escaped; and came to Samuel to Ramah, and told him all that Saul had done to him. And he and Samuel went and dwelt at Naioth. And it was told Saul, saying, "Behold, David is at Naioth of Ramah." And Saul sent messengers to take David; but when they saw the company of the prophets prophesying, (over whom Samuel presided), the Spirit of God was upon the messengers of Saul, and they also prophesied. And when it was told Saul, he sent other messengers, and they prophesied likewise. Again Saul sent messengers, and they prophesied also. And Saul's anger was kindled, and he also went to Ramah; and came to the great well that is in Sechu: and 4-7. The steady friendship of Jonathan saved the life of David; and his just eulogium on David, for once, softened the obdurate heart of Saul.

8, 9. David's success against the Philistines awakened the fears of Saul; and instead of rejoicing at the event, his gloomy soul determined to destroy the chief instrument of it.

11. To put him to death in the morning. Why in the morning? It appears to have been a custom, not to execute persons by night, even when they executed them without any just cause. Compare Judg. xvi. 2.

13. A net of goat's hair. According to Dr. Shaw, something of this kind is still usual, to keep off the guats during sleep, both in Judea, Egypt, and other parts of the east. This net was to show that some one was in bed; and as it was the custom to sleep with the head covered, Michal covered the head of the teraphs, with a cloth, or the usual bed-covering, to render the deception more complete. The women had a strange propensity to the worship of teraphs; and from this account some infer, that these idols were half as big as a man, and probably made in the human form. Geddes adopts the reading of the Sept. and Josephus, and placed a goat's liver at their head, and supposes it might be an entire pluck, which by its motion, might make Saul's messengers imagine David was really in bed. I prefer the text, in the sense given, as more probable.

17. Why hast thou deceived me? The conduct of Michal deserves praise, in thus saving her innocent husband, from the cruelty and injustice of her father. Other women have imitated her, and received the applause of all, who regard nuptial fidelity and virtue.

24 until he came to Naioth of Ramah. And he stripped off his upper garments and continued to prophesy before Samuel; and lay unclothed, all that day and night. Wherefore it is said, "Is Saul also among the prophets?"

CHAPTER XX.

B. C. 1062. David consulteth with Jonathan; their mutual covenant; Saul missing David attempteth to kill Jonathan.

1 AND David fled from Naioth of Ramah, and came and said to Jonathan, "What have I done? what is mine iniquity? and what is my sin before
2 thy father, that he seeketh my life?" And he said to him, "God forbid; thou shalt not die: behold, my father will do nothing, either great or small, without informing me: and why should my father hide this thing from me? it cannot
3 be." And David swore moreover, and said, "Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found favour in thine eyes; and he saith, 'Let not Jonathan know this, lest he be grieved.' but

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIX. 1. We may observe, that no dependence ought to be placed on a man of ungoverned passion. David possessed every quality likely to secure him from violence; goodness, merit, great services, affinity; Saul's reason was on his side; he had bound himself by an oath not to hurt him; yet he overlooked and broke through all. There is no trusting to a man's honour, his word, or even his oath, if he has no command over his passions. How proper then, the advice of Solomon, "Make no friendship with an angry man; and with a furious man thou shalt not go; lest thou learn his ways, and get a snare to thy soul."

2. How detestable are the passions of jealousy, envy, and prophesy; hence some modern translators render the word Naioth appellatively, the cells. So Dathe renders. I conceive the Sept. and Vulg. right in rendering as a proper name. The Chald. paraphrases, 'in the house of doctrine.'

19—24. How wonderful the influence, which God has occasionally, exercised over the mind. Had Samuel or David intended to have cut off Saul, how easily might they have done it, when he lay exposed and defenceless? He was detained by a divine influence, until David had made his escape.

CHAP. XX. 1. And came and said to Jonathan. He came to Gibeah, where Saul resided, and where Jonathan then was. Compare verse 5, 35 and 40.

truly, as Jehovah liveth, and as thyself livest, there is but a step between me and death." Then said Jonathan to David, "Whatsoever 4 thou desirest, I will even do for thee." And 5 David said to Jonathan, "Behold, to morrow is the new moon, when I should not fail to sit with the king at table: but let me go and hide myself in the field until the evening of the third day. If thy father at all miss me, then say, 6 'David earnestly asked leave of me to run to Bethlehem his own city: for there the whole family have an annual sacrifice.' If he say thus, 7 'It is well;' thy servant shall have peace: but if he be very wroth, then be sure that evil is determined by him. Therefore thou shalt deal 8 kindly with thy servant; for into a covenant of Jehovah hast thou caused thy servant to enter with thee; yet, if there be in me iniquity, slay me thyself: for why shouldst thou bring me to thy father?" And Jonathan said, "Far be 9 it from thee: for if I certainly knew that my father were determined to bring evil upon thee, should I not then tell thee?" Then said Da- 10 vid to Jonathan, "Who shall tell me whether thy father answer thee roughly?"

And Jonathan said to David, "Come, and 11

rage! They are the torment of the persons who indulge them; and they lead to acts the most flagitious. Jealousy fires at the merit of another, as if the merit of another detracted from our own. Envy pines at achievements and successes, which ought to excite every noble, generous feeling of the heart. Under the dominion of these passions, Saul lost his patriotism, persecuted his best general, and his most faithful servant. Let us hate a temper like Saul's, and take Christ's yoke upon us, and learn of him who was meek and lowly in heart.

3. We see how easily God can control the minds of men. Saul's messengers, doubtless, intended to seize David; but under the influence of the spirit, they were detained prisoners. Saul goes

2. It cannot be. Was Jonathan ignorant of his father having sent to Naioth, to take David? or did he impute his late conduct to his disordered state of mind? I suspect that Saul hid his design from Jonathan, knowing his partiality to David; and he expected that David, having returned to Gibeah, would again appear as usual at court, when he might without failure, accomplish his purpose.

5. The new moon. Which was observed by offering sacrifices, and keeping a feast. Compare Numb. x. 10, and xxviii. 11; Ps. lxxxi. 5. David, as one of the family, was accustomed to eat with Saul on these festival days.

let us go into the field." And they both of them
 12 went into the field. And Jonathan said to David, "Jehovah, the God of Israel, *be witness," if when I have sounded my father sometime to morrow, or the next day, and, behold, there be good-will towards David, and I then send not 13 to thee, and show it thee; Jehovah do so and much more also to Jonathan: but if it please my father to do thee evil, then I will show it to thee, and send thee away, that thou mayest go in peace. But when Jehovah shall be with thee
 14 as he hath been with my father, Then thou, if I be *yet alive", shalt show me the kindness of 15 Jehovah, that I die not: Nor shalt thou ever withdraw thy kindness from my house: n o not when Jehovah hath cut off all the enemies of 16 David, from the face of the earth. But should Jonathan cut off any of the house of David, may Jehovah require it at the hand of David's enemies." Again Jonathan swore to David, because he loved him: for he loved him as he loved 18 himself. Then Jonathan said to David, "To morrow is the new moon: and, because thy seat 19 will be empty, thou wilt be missed. And on the third day, still more wilt thou be missed" Go then to the place where thou didst hide thyself on the day of thine escape, and remain by *that"

himself, perhaps in the greatest rage, to kill David; but he too is influenced and prophesies. He came dressed as a king, perhaps with his weapons of war in his hand; but they are laid down and forgotten, his robes put off, and he appears as poorly dressed as the prophets. While the lion is thus chained, David escapes. How many have come into the assemblies of God's people to mock, and have been constrained to pray.

4. Extraordinary gifts are no proof of true grace. A man may have excellent abilities, both natural and acquired, yea, to other officers.

8 Covenant of Jehovah. To the stipulations of which his name has been appealed to; it has been made before him.

14. If I be yet alive. I have followed the versions noticed in this rendering; and the context requires it. The meaning is, 'If I be alive, when thou art made king, then preserve my life; but if I be dead, show kindness to my family.'—Kindness of Jehovah. Which he shows in sparing and preserving us.

16. The version given is the literal one; and without any supplement is both perspicuous and coherent.

17. Again swore to David. So our old translators after the ancient versions; and the following words support this sense. For because Jona-

If I expressly say to the lad, 'Behold, the arrows are on this side of thee, take them; then come thou: for as Jehovah liveth, there is peace to thee, and no harm; But if I say thus to the 22 young man, 'Behold, the arrows are beyond thee;' go thy way; for Jehovah sendeth thee away. And as to the matter which thou and I 23 have spoken of, behold, Jehovah shall for ever be witness between thee and me."

So David hid himself in the field: and when 24 the new moon was come, the king sat down to the feast to eat. And the king sat on his 25 seat, as at other times, on a seat by the wall: and Jonathan *sat on one side", and Abner sat on the other side of Saul; but David's place was empty. Nevertheless Saul spoke not 26 any thing that day: for he thought, "Something may have befallen him; or he may not be clean; because he *hath not purified himself". But 27 when, on the morrow, the second day of the month, David's place was empty, Saul said to Jonathan his son, "Why cometh not the son of Jesse to the feast, neither yesterday nor to day?" And Jonathan answered Saul, "David earnestly 28 supernatural endowments, and yet continue ignorant of God and religion. Though Saul prophesied, his heart continued corrupt and unchanged. Hence we learn, not to trust to any gifts whatever, for thus saith the apostle Paul, "Though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains; though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, or give my body to be burned, and have not love, I am nothing." Gifts were for a sign to others, but grace is a personal blessing.

than loved David he gave him the most solemn assurance of his readiness to serve him.

19. I have followed the versions noticed in the first part of this verse. The common text is, 'and the third thou shalt go down much,' which is scarcely sense. In the latter part I have followed a conjectural reading. From the connexion Jonathan seems to refer to some past transaction; and to a place well known to David, and where he had before concealed himself. We have an account of David concealing himself in some place in a field in the preceding ch. ver. 2, 3. On these grounds I would propose to read ביום השלישי. The text is, 'on the day of the work,' which is assuredly an error.

27. David's place was empty. From this account it appears that Saul

29 asked leave of me to go to Bethlehem. For he said, 'Let me go, I pray thee; for our family hath a sacrifice in the city; and my brother, hath commanded me to be there: and now, if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me go I pray thee, and see my brethren.' Therefore 30 he cometh not to the king's table." Then Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he said to him, "Thou perverse, rebellious man, do I not know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own confusion, and to thy mother's 31 shame? For as long as the son of Jesse liveth upon the earth, neither thou nor thy kingdom can be secure. Therefore, send now, and fetch 32 him to me that he may be put to death." And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said to him, "Why should he be put to death?
 33 what hath he done?" And Saul cast a javelin at him to smite him; so Jonathan knew that his father had determined to put David to 34 death. Jonathan then arose from the table, in fierce anger; and he ate no food on the second day of the month: for he was grieved for David, and because his father had disgraced him.
 35 Now the next morning, Jonathan went out into the field, at the time appointed with David,
 36 and a little lad with him. And he said to his lad, "Run, find out now the arrows which I

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. In Jonathan we see a noble instance of faithful friendship. "A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity." He loved one who was to supplant him, and one who was in adversity. This was an extraordinary friendship, built on the purest principles. This example of candour, integrity and steadiness in friendship, deserves our imitation. He that hath such a friend, should show himself friendly, and make all possible returns. It was great kindness in Jonathan to hazard his own life in the service of his friend. "Greater love hath no man than this, to lay down his life for his friend; but God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us;" and after his example, we are commanded to be willing to lay down our lives for the brethren.

shoot." And as the lad ran, he shot an arrow beyond him. And when the lad had come to 37 the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and said, "Is not the arrow beyond thee?" And Jonathan cried 38 after the lad, "Make speed, haste, stay not." And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and brought them to his master. But the lad knew 39 not any thing: only Jonathan and David knew the matter. And Jonathan gave his weapons 40 to his lad, and said to him, "Go carry them to the city."

And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose 41 from behind the stone, and fell on his face to the ground, and three times did obeisance: and they kissed each other, and wept one with another, with great lamentation". And Jonathan 42 said to David, "Go in peace, forasmuch as we have sworn both of us in the name of Jehovah, saying, 'Jehovah be witness between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed for ever.'" And he arose and departed; and Jonathan went into the city.

the influence of ungoverned passions. Few are more hard to be convinced and reformed, than men of strong passions and ungoverned spirits. In the example of Saul they may see, as in a glass, their own features. What a violent passion was he in with his dutiful, valiant and pious son. Saul vented all the scandalous, ill natured words he could think of, and then attempted to kill him. Let persons of hot and hasty tempers recollect this instance, and read this story again and again; let masters of families and parents often reflect upon it; that seeing the odiousness of anger and passion, they may treat their servants with mildness, and their children with tender affection. "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath; but, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, put on bowels of affection, compassion, and gentleness; forbearing and forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

ing David, and said to him, "Why art thou 2 alone, and no man with thee?" And David said to Ahimelech, the priest, "The king hath commanded me a business, and said to me, 'Let no man know any thing of the business about which I send thee, and which I have commanded thee:' and I have appointed my servants to 3 meet me at such and such a place. Now, therefore, give what thou hast at hand, be it only five loaves of bread, or what else is present."
4 And the priest answered David, and said, "I have no common bread at hand, but hallowed bread there is at hand: if the young men have 5 indeed abstained from women." And David answered the priest, and said, "From women truly, we have been restrained these three days since I came out; and 'all' the young men were holy; but if by the way, they have become unclean, they may all, this day, be hallowed." 6 So the priest gave him hallowed bread: for there was no bread there but the presence-bread, which was taken from before Jehovah, to put hot bread in its place, when it was taken away.
7 (Now one of the servants of Saul was there that day, detained before Jehovah; and his name was Doeg, an Edomite, the chief of Saul's 8 herdsmen.) David also said to Ahimelech,
"Hast thou not here either spear or sword? for I have neither brought my sword, nor my weapons with me, because the king's business re-9 quired haste." And the priest said, "The sword of Goliath, the Philistine, whom thou slewest in the valley of Elah, behold, it is here wrapped in a cloth behind the ephod; if thou wilt take that, take it: for save that, there is no other here." And David said, "There is none like that; give it me."

And David arose, and fled that day for fear 10
of Saul, and went to Achish the king of Gath.
And the servants of Achish said to him, "Is not 11
this David, the king of the land? did they not sing of him in alternate Choirs?"
"Saul hath slain his thousands!"
But David, his ten thousands!"
And David laid up these words in his heart; 12
and was greatly afraid of Achish, the king of Gath. And he changed his behaviour before 13 them, and feigned himself mad among them, and made marks on the doors of the gate, and let his spittle fall down upon his beard. Then 14 said Achish to his servants, "Lo, ye see the man is mad; why have ye brought him to me?
Have I need of mad-men, that ye have brought this one to play the madman in my presence?
shall such a one come into my house?"
David therefore departed thence, and esca- 1
ped to the cave of Adullam: and when his brethren and all his father's house heard, they went thither to him. And every one in distress, and 2 every one in debt, and every one discontented,
flocked to him; and he became chief over them:
and there were with him about four hundred men.
And David went thence to Mizpeh of Moab; 3
and he said to the king of Moab, "Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, 'dwell with you, till I know what God may do for me."
And he brought them before the king of Moab; 4
and they dwelt with him all the time that David was in the hold. But the prophet Gad said to 5 David, "Abide not in the hold; depart, and logy. One word has been omitted in the text. See Note, Heb. Bible.

CHAP. XXI. 1. Went to Nob. This was in the tribe of Benjamin, about 12 miles from Gibeah, and not far from Anathoth and Jerusalem.
It was a city of the priests; and the Tabernacle was here for some time.
Compare Ch. xxii. 11—12; Nehem. xi. 32, and Isa. x. 32.
2. Said to Ahimelech. This pretence of David was certainly false; and if any thing could excuse this, it was the circumstances in which he was placed. Ahimelech was brother to Ahiah, and had most probably succeeded as High-priest. Compare xiv. 3, and xxii. 11.
4. No common bread. The presence-bread, was appropriated to the priests; but in a case of necessity, this ceremonial law was superseded.
Levit. xxiv. 5; Mark ii. 25.
10. Fled to Achish, &c. How often have brave commanders been obliged, from injustice, to fly to those for safety, whose attacks they have repulsed, and whom they have conquered.

13—15. This conduct of David must have taken rise from well-grounded apprehensions of treachery. The device succeeded, and he fled to a more secure retreat.
CHAP. XXII. 2. Every one in distress, &c. Or oppressed, those subject to unrelenting creditors, and those aggrieved by unjust exactions, or in other ways. They were not a lawless banditti, but a number of brave men, who suffered under the tyranny of Saul and others.

is now found in many copies, and the text before com. 1, 2, contains it..

CHAPTER XXII.

B. C. 1062. Saul complaineth of his people; Doeg accuseth the priests, and at Saul's command slayeth them.

- 6 WHEN Saul heard that David was discovered, and the men that were with him, (now Saul was sitting on a hill, in Gibeah, under a tamarisk tree, having his spear in his hand, and all his 7 servants were standing about him); Then Saul said to his servants who stood about him, "Hear now ye Benjaminites! will the son of Jesse give every one of you fields and vine-yards? will he
8 captains of hundreds? That all of you should conspire against me; and no one inform me that my son hath made a league with the son of Jesse! Yet none of you is sorry for me, or informeth me that my son hath stirred up my servant against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?"
9 Then answered Doeg, the Edomite, (who was standing among the servants of Saul,) and said, "I saw the son of Jesse coming to Nob, to 10 Ahimelech, the son of Ahitub. And he inquired of Jehovah for him, and gave to him victuals; and he also gave to him the sword of Goli-11 ath, the Philistine." Then the king sent to REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. We hence learn, that mercy is to be preferred to sacrifice, and that ritual observances must give way to moral duties. Many things may be done in cases of urgent necessities, which would otherwise be improper; and this vindicates doing acts of necessity and mercy on the Lord's day. But we should be careful on the other hand, that we do not run into unjustifiable liberty, which seems to be more peculiarly the fault of the present day. Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy.

2. When providence reduces us to straits and difficulties, we have great need to watch over our own hearts. When David was driven out, and wanted provision, what sins did he run into! What mean artifices did he use to secure himself! Such as were unbecoming a good man, and one that knew better. He afterwards severely repented of his folly. The greatest straits will not justify stealing, lying, and such evil practices. It is better to throws is proper, 'on a high bank.'

8. A league with the son of Jesse. Saul pretends that David had drawn Jonathan into a league against him, than which nothing could be more false. They neither stipulated any thing against him, nor ever did any thing. He was the offender, and sought David's life without cause.

Ahimelech the priest, the son of Ahitub, and all his father's house, the priests who were in Nob: and they all of them came to the king. And Saul said, "Hear now, thou son of Ahitub." And he answered, "Here I am, my lord." And Saul said to him, "Why have ye 13 conspired against me, thou and the son of Jesse! to him thou hast given bread, and a sword, and hast inquired of God for him, to excite him to lie in wait against me, as at this day." Then 14 Ahimelech answered the king, and said, "And who is so faithful among all thy servants, as David, who is the king's son-in-law, and goeth at thy bidding, and is honourable in thy house? Did I then begin to inquire of God for him?
15 be it far from me; let not the king impute any thing to his servant, nor to all the house of my father: for thy servant knew nothing of all this, less or more." And the king said, "Thou 16 shalt surely die, Ahimelech, thou, and all thy father's house."

And the king said to the men who stood about 17 him, "Turn, and slay the priests of Jehovah; because they have assisted David; and because they knew when he fled, and did not inform me." But the servants of the king would not put forth their hand to attack the priests of Jehovah. And the king said to Doeg, "Turn thou, and want bread than grace; better to starve, than sin against God. We may all learn the suitableness of Agur's prayer, "Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me; lest I be full and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain."

3. From David's example we may infer, that the care of aged parents is a great duty in youth, and highly commendable. When they are in sickness or old age, it is but justice to make a return for their care and kindness. They should never be suffered to want any thing that will conduce to their comfort. "If any widow have children, or nephews, let them learn first to show piety at home; and to requite their parents; for that is good and acceptable before God." They must do this, as they hope to have the same returns of love when they grow old; or, as David expresses it in the twenty seventh psalm, composed on this occasion; when father and mother forsake them, Jehovah may take them up.

9. Was standing among, &c. Noldius thus renders, and I think justly; for it is certain that Doeg was not set over the servants, who attended Saul, but over his herdsmen.

10—16. The charge brought against Ahimelech he properly repels. He knew nothing of any difference between David and Saul; and he had attack the priests." And Doeg, the Edomite, turned, and attacked the priests, and slew on that day, eighty-five persons, who wore sacred ephods. And Nob, the city of the priests, he smote with the edge of the sword; both men and women, children and sucklings, and oxen, and asses, and sheep, he smote with the edge of the sword.

20 And one of the sons of Ahimelech, the son of Abitub, named Abiathar, escaped, and fled after David. And Abiathar told David that 21 Saul had slain Jehovah's priests. And David said to Abiathar, "I knew it that day, when Doeg, the Edomite was there, that he would surely tell Saul. I have caused the destruction 22 of all thy father's house. Abide thou with me, fear not: for he that seeketh my life, seeketh thy life: but with me thou shalt be safe."

CHAPTER XXIII.

B. C. 1062. David rescueth Keilah; Saul pursuing him, he flieth to the wilderness of Ziph; the Ziphites discover him to Saul; but he is delivered from him.

1 THEN they told David, saying, "Behold, the Philistines fight against Keilah, and they rob 2 the threshing-floors." David, therefore in-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXII 1. How much to be pitied is the man who is troubled with a suspicious, jealous temper. Had we not such flagrant proofs of the wickedness of Saul's heart, we could scarcely help pitying him; though he had all his guards and courtiers about him, he was racked with envy and tormented with jealousy. Such burdens are they to themselves, who suspect and are jealous of all around them; they fear their enemies when they have no reason; and suspect their friends without cause. Such persons are their own tormentors; and one need not wish a man worse, than to have his eye evil towards all about him. "Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy?"

2. How soon was that power, which the Israelites had given to one man, turned against themselves! They found in the first king, the words of their venerable prophet, Samuel, but too true. Having established a standing army, Saul was able to act as he only done what was proper to the king's son-in-law.

17-19. It reflects some honour on the attendants of Saul, that they would not obey his unjust order. How miserable the country, subject to such a cruel tyrant, who condemns without proof of guilt, and exterminates without mercy. By this act of cruelty the threatening against Eli's house was fulfilled.
CHAP. XXIII. 1. Rob the threshing floors. These were usually without the cities, on high ground.

quired of Jehovah, saying, "Shall I go and smite these Philistines?" And Jehovah said to David, "Go and smite the Philistines, and save Keilah." And David's men said to him, "Be- 3 hold, we are afraid here, in Judah; how much more then if we come to Keilah, against the hosts of the Philistines?" Again David in- 4 quired of Jehovah. And Jehovah answered him and said, "Arise, go down to Keilah; for I will deliver the Philistines into thy hand." So David and his men went to Keilah, and 5 fought against the Philistines, and smote them with a great slaughter, and brought away their cattle. So David saved the inhabitants of Keilah.

And it was told Saul that David was come to 7 Keilah. And Saul said, "God hath delivered him into my hand; for he is shut in, by entering into a town, which hath gates and bars." And 8 Saul called all the people together to war, to go down to Keilah, to beseige David and his men.

And David knew that Saul secretly practised 9 mischief against him; and he said to Abiathar the priest, "Bring hither the ephod." For 6 Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech, who had fled to David, went down with David to Keilah, and had the ephod with him. Then said David, "O 10 thought proper; and he found those, raised to honour, and living under his smiles, ever ready to second his measures. No wonder, that many fled to David for their security. How true respecting this king, the words of a prophet; "God gave them a king in anger." Hosea xiii. 11.

3. See what a sad thing a tyrannical government is. In what a mad, arbitrary manner, did Saul give his orders; and how soon did he find some so wicked as to execute them. Innocent actions may have very ill constructions put upon them; no defence however is to be heard; right or wrong, the king's pleasure must be obeyed. Let us earnestly pray, that kings and rulers may have sound minds; and give thanks to God, that our lives and fortunes are not at the mercy of capricious and tyrannical men; and that we live under a good government and the favour of heaven. Blessed be God, "that the lines are fallen to us in pleasant places, and that we have a goodly heritage."

2. And smite these Philistines. This is one of the noblest actions in David's life. Though he had only so few men, such was his regard to his country, that he was ready to risque all for its safety; and at the very time when Saul was seeking his destruction.

6. I have followed Geddes in transposing this verse. Most critics admit that it is out of its place. As it stands, it represents Abiathar as first coming to David at Keilah; when this historian had already related his arrival, before David undertook the expedition. In rendering the verse

Jehovah, the God of Israel, thy servant hath heard for certain, that Saul seeketh to come to 11 Keilah, to destroy the city for my sake. Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hands? will Saul come down, as thy servant hath heard? O Jehovah, the God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant." And Jehovah said, "He will 12 come down." Then said David, "Will the men of Keilah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul?" And Jehovah said, "They will deliver thee up."
 13 Then David and his men, who were about six hundred, arose and departed from Keilah, and went whither they could go. And it was told Saul, that David had escaped from Keilah; so 14 he gave up his expedition. And David abode in the wilderness in strong holds; and remained on a mountain in the wilderness of Ziph; and though Saul sought him daily, yet God deliver-15 ed him not into his hand: For David saw that Saul had come out to seek his life.

While David was in the wilderness of Ziph,
 16 in a wood, Jonathan, Saul's son, arose, and went to David into the wood, and encouraged
 17 him to trust in God. And he said to him, "Fear not: for the hand of Saul my father shall not find thee; and thou shalt be king over Israel, and I shall be next to thee; and that also Saul 18 my father knoweth." And they two made a covenant before Jehovah; and David abode in the wood, but Jonathan went to his own house.
 19 Now the Ziphites had come to Saul to Gibe-ah, saying, "Doth not David hide himself with us in strong holds, in the wood, on the hill of Hachilah, which is on the south of Jeshimon? Now, therefore, O king, come down, according to 20 to all the desire of thy soul to come down; and be it our part to deliver him into the king's hand." And Saul said, "Blessed by Jehovah: 21 be ye; for ye show compassion to me. Go, I 22 pray you, and learn, and know, and see the place which he haunteth; and who hath seen him there: for I am told that he acteth with great subtlety. See, therefore, and endeavour 23 to know all the lurking-places where he is wont to hide himself; and come again to me with certainty, and I will go with you; and if he be in the land, I will search for him throughout all the thousands of Judah." And they arose, and 24 went to Ziph before Saul; but David and his men were in the wilderness of Maon; in the plain, on the south side of Jeshimon. For it 25 was told David, that Saul and his men had gone to search for him; he, therefore, went down and abode in the wilderness of Maon. And when Saul heard this, he pursued David to the wilderness of Maon. And Saul "and his men" 26 went on the one side of the mountain, and David and his men on the other side of the mountain. And when David hastened to get away from Saul, and Saul and his men had surrounded David and his men to take them; A mes- 27 senger then came to Saul, saying, "Haste, and come; for the Philistines are plundering the land." Wherefore Saul returned from pursuing 28 David, and went against the Philistines. Therefore that place was called Sela-hammahlekoth, [THE DIVIDING-ROCK].

CHAP. XXIII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIII. 1. The magnanimity, patriotism and piety of David, deserve our imitation. Like his friend Jonathan, he knew God could save by few as by many; and though ill-treated by his country, he exposed himself, to save it from its enemies. He did not enter on the enterprise, without thought; but sought divine direction and aid; and being assured of these he delayed not. What is begun in the fear of God, and prosecuted according to his will, must succeed. He that begins an undertaking with fervent prayer, will often accomplish it with the voice of praise and thanksgiving.

2. We learn, what intimate acquaintance God has with the hearts of men. David did not know what the men of Keilah would do; perhaps they did not know themselves how in general they should determine, which way the magistrate would incline;

15—18. This private visit of Jonathan shows that his love to David was unabated, and his remark, that he should be next to him, shows pious submission to the will of God.

23. The thousands of Judah. Most probably the phrase means the districts, which were so called from the number of inhabitants they con-

CHAPTER XXIV.

B. C. 1061. David's generosity to Saul; he sheweth his innocence; Saul acknowledges his sin; and, having taken an oath of David, departeth.

29 AND David went up thence, and dwelt in the 1 strong-holds of En-gedi. And when Saul had returned from following the Philistines, it was told him, saying, "Behold, David is in the 2 wilderness of En-gedi." Then Saul took three thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and went to seek David and his men, among the rocks of 3 the wild-goats. And he came to the sheep-cotes, on the way, where was a cave; and Saul went in to repose himself. Now, in the sides of that 4 cave, abode David and his men. And David's men said to him, "Behold the day of which Jehovah said to thee, 'Lo! I will deliver thine enemy into thy hand, that thou mayest do to him as it shall seem good to thee.'" Then David arose, and secretly cut off the skirt of Saul's 5 mantle. But afterward, David's conscience smote him, because he had cut off the skirt of 6 Saul's "mantle". And he said to his men, "Jehovah forbid that I should do this thing to my master, Jehovah's anointed, to stretch forth my hand against him; for the anointed of Jehovah 7 is he." Thus David, with these words, restrained his servants, and suffered them not to rise up against Saul. But when Saul had risen from the cave, and gone his way; Then afterward, 8

David arose and went out of the cave, and cried after Saul, saying, "My lord, the king."
And when Saul looked behind him, David stooped with his face towards the earth, and bowed himself.

And David said to Saul, "Wherefore heark- 9
enest thou to men's words, saying, 'Behold, David seeketh thy hurt?' Behold, this day 10 thine eyes have seen how Jehovah had delivered thee into my hand, in the cave; when some bade me kill thee, but I spared thee; and I said, 'I will not put forth my hand against my lord; for the anointed of Jehovah is he.'
Moreover, my father, see, yea, see the skirt of 11
thy mantle in my hand; hence, know and see, that as I cut off the skirt of thy mantle, and killed thee not, with me there is no evil or rebellion. Yea, against thee I have not sinned;
yet thou huntest me to take away my life. Je- 12
hovah judge between me and thee; and Jehovah avenge me of thee: but my hand shall not be upon thee. As saith the ancient proverb, 'From 13
the wicked let wickedness proceed;' but my hand shall not be upon thee. After whom is 14
the king of Israel come out? whom dost thou pursue? a dead dog, a flea! Jehovah there- 15

selves, and what they will do in such and such circumstances.
We should therefore reverence him who knows the secret dispositions and inclinations of men's hearts, and beholds the thoughts afar off.

3. In Jonathan's private interview with David, we see both the strength of friendship, and the duties of it. Had Saul known of this, he would have been ready to have put Jonathan to death:
how strong therefore was the love of Jonathan to his friend! He showed himself a friend, by consoling him in his sufferings, and encouraging him to trust in God. His language to David's tained, as our hundreds originally were.

3. To repose himself. Compare Jud. iii. 24, and Note there.— And David and his men, &c. Dr Pococke informs us, that some of the caves in Palestine are very large; and that he visited one, in which David jectures that it was the very cave in which the transactions here recorded occurred.

mind must have been like a reviving cordial to a fainting heart.

4. We see that providence is never at a loss to deliver good men out of their adversity. David wandered about from place to place, but was still safe. God diverted Saul from the pursuit, just when he thought he had David in his hand. The Philistines intended no kindness to David, but God meant it so. Man's extremity is God's opportunity. "In the mount of danger Jehovah will provide for the safety of the virtuous." This should teach us to make God our confidence, and prevent the fear of man, which bringeth a snare. "Trust in him therefore at all times, ye people;
and pour out your hearts before him."

4. Behold the day, &c. God had promised to David the throne of Israel; and they infer that this gave him a right to cut off Saul, when he had an opportunity. In this instance David acted with more piety and wisdom; he would not do evil that good might come.

10. And some bade me kill. Our translators here deserted the text; and adopted the proper reading of the Syr. Chald. and Arab.

13. From the wicked, &c. I consider the proverb as confined to these words; and the next to be only a repetition of David's resolution not to injure Saul. The meaning is, 'Had I intended thy death; had I really risen up against thee, I should have killed thee as certainly as wickedness

Saul goes home.

fore be judge; and judge between me and thee, and see, and plead my cause, and deliver me out of thy hand."

- 16 And when David had made an end of speaking these words to Saul, Saul said, "Is this thy voice, my son David?" And Saul raised his voice, and wept. And he said to David, "Thou art more righteous than I; for thou hast rendered to me good, when I had rendered evil to thee. And thou hast shown this day, how kind thou art to me: for when Jehovah delivered me into thy hand, thou killedst me not. For if a man find his enemy, will he let him go away well? May Jehovah, then, render good to thee, for what thou hast done unto me this day.
- 20 And now, behold, I know well, that thou wilt surely be king, and that the kingdom of Israel will be established in thy hand. Swear now, therefore, to me by Jehovah, that thou wilt not cut off my seed after me, and that thou wilt not destroy my name out of my father's house."
- 22 And David swore to Saul. And Saul went home; but David and his men went up to the strong-holds.

CHAP. XXV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. 1. We may observe the good effects of generosity and kindness. David here exhibits a remarkable instance of both. His men wanted him to put an end to their troubles and his own, by putting Saul to death; but he bravely refused. His kindness not only overcame his own men, but made the savage Saul tame, and turned the lion into a lamb. What an honour and a pleasure to him to triumph thus gloriously over his enemies; to see his prince his petitioner, and his enemy intreating his mercy! We learn from this example how to treat our enemies. Such conduct as this may reclaim them; but if not, it will secure pleasure and peace to ourselves. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in doing this, thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

2. We have also an example of prudence in David's vindication of himself. Every man has a right to vindicate himself, when unjustly accused; or when his character is wickedly and maliciously aspersed; but to do this effectually, prudence must be used.

ceedeth from the wicked.

14. A dead dog, a flea? David, by these expressions, represents his own comparative insignificance; and how little becoming the duty of a king it was, to spend his life and harass his troops in marching after him.

19. When a man finds, &c. This is the usual practice of men; but David did not follow the conduct of men, but obeyed the call of duty and benevolence.

CHAPTER XXV.

B. C. 1060. Samuel dieth; Nabal insulteth David's messengers; Abigail prudently prevents the bad consequences of his behaviour

SAMUEL now died; and all the Israelites assembled, and lamented him, and buried him in his own house at Ramah. And David arose, and went down to the wilderness of Paran.

And there was a man of Maon, whose possessions were in Carmel; and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep, and a thousand goats: and he was shearing his sheep in Carmel. Now the name of the man was Nabal; and the name of his wife Abigail. And she was a woman of good understanding, and beautiful in form; but the man was churlish and evil in all his manners; yea he was irritable as a dog.

And David had heard, in the wilderness, that Nabal was shearing his sheep. And David sent out ten young men; and he said to the young men, "Go up to Carmel, and when ye have come to Nabal, greet him in my name: And thus shall ye say to him, 'Peace be to thee 'through life', and peace be to thy house,

6. Mayest thou live. Syr. Arab.

David addressed Saul with the greatest respect, 'my lord the king.' He prudently laid the blame of Saul's conduct on the courtiers, rather than on himself; and doubtless, there were many like Doeg, around him, who persuaded him that David sought his hurt. David adduced the strongest proof of his innocence, that he had not done Saul any harm, and did not then harbour any evil intention towards him. His actions proved it.

3. What a happy thing is it to have a tender conscience! David's heart smote him for cutting off the skirt of Saul's mantle. A tender conscience is afraid of the least sin; often regrets those actions which others pass over with ease, and which give them but little or no concern. Let us then endeavour to keep our hearts open to conviction, and our consciences ready to take the alarm. Happy is he that feareth always; for presumption is dangerous. The surest way to prevent great evils, and avoid great wickedness, is to be afraid of the very appearance of evil; for he who dallies with temptation, and commits smaller offences will be induced to commit greater.

7 and peace be to all that thou hast. I have just now heard that thou hast sheep-shearers. Now, thy shepherds who were with us, we hurt not, neither was there aught missing to them, all the while they were in Carmel. Ask thy young men, and they will tell thee. Therefore let the young men find favour in thine eyes: (for we come in a good day:) give, I pray thee, whatsoever thou hast at hand to thy servants, and to thy son David." And when David's young men came, they spoke to Nabal according to all those words, in the name of David.

10 But when they had ceased, Nabal answered David's servants, and said, "Who is David? and who is the son of Jesse? In these days many servant men break loose from their masters. Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my flesh which I have killed for my sheep-shearers, and give it to men whom I know not, whence they are?" So David's young men turned away, and went back, and came and told him all those words. And David said to his men, "Gird ye on every man his sword." And they girded on every man his sword; and David also girded on his sword: and there went up after David about four hundred men; and two hundred abode with the baggage.

14 But one of Nabal's young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, saying, "Behold, David sent messengers out of the wilderness to salute our master; and he railed on them. But the men were very good to us, and we were not hurt, neither missed we any thing, as long as we were conversant with them, when we were in the fields. They were a wall to us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep. Now, therefore, know and consider what thou wilt do; 17 for evil is determined against our master, and against his whole house. As for him, he is so ungodly that one cannot speak to him."

Then Abigail made haste, and took two hundred loaves, and two skin-bottles of wine, and five sheep ready dressed, and five measures of parched corn, and a hundred clusters of raisins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and laid them on asses. And she said to her servants, "Go on before me; behold, I come after you." But she told not her husband Nabal. And she having mounted the ass came down by the covert of a hill; and, behold, David and his men came down opposite to her; and she met them. Now David had said, "Surely in vain have I kept all that this man hath in the wilderness, so that nothing hath been missed of all that belonged to him, if he thus return to me evil for good. So and more also may God do to David, if I leave of all that belong to him, by morning light, so much as a single dog." Now when Abigail saw David, she made haste, and alighted off the ass, and fell before David, and bowed herself with her face to the ground. And she took hold on his feet, and said, "Upon me, my lord, upon me, be the blame! yet let thy handmaid, I pray thee, speak in thy hearing, and hearken to the words of thy handmaid. Let not my lord, I pray thee, regard this worthless man Nabal; for according to his name is he; Nabal [fool] is his name, and folly is with him: but I, thy handmaid, saw not my lord's young men, whom thou sentest. Now therefore, as Jehovah liveth, and as thyself livest, it is Jehovah who withholdeth thee from coming to shed blood, and from prefer the sense of the oldest translators.

6. Peace be to thee through life. Geddes renders, 'Prosperity through life to thee, &c.' Some mss. omit the (1) before the pronoun, which renders the text clear.

7-14. David and his men had been a guard to the property of Nabal, and gratitude should have led him to have made some return. His answer showed his disposition.

17. Know and consider what, &c. This servant's advice was founded on just grounds, and was the means of saving the house of Nabal.

22. So much as a single dog. Most critics consider this the sense of the text; and as David uses the phrase when speaking to Abigail, verse 34, delicacy forbids us to think he would have done so, had it signified what our version implies. As De Dieu observes, this may be agreeable to European habits, but is foreign to those of the east. Compare 1 Kings

xiv. 10; xxi. 21; and 2 Kings ix. 8.

24. Took hold on his feet. Literally, 'fell upon his feet.' If David rode, the version I have given is proper; if he were on foot, we might render, 'And when she lay at his feet she said.' As I think it most probable, that David rode, I have preferred the former.

28. Forgive me this trespass. This breach of decorum in a female, in thus publicly coming forth to thee. Others apply it to the blame, which she had taken on herself, verse 24.—And when my Lord, &c. Castalio thus renders; and this best agrees with the context. She expresses her confidence, that God would make him a firm house, that is, establish him and his family on the throne; and when as a king he fighteth the battles of Jehovah, she prays that no evil may befall him. This seems natural; but the common version referring it to David's past conduct, destroys the connexion.

 I pray thee, the trespass of thy handmaid.
 For Jehovah will certainly make my lord a firm house; and when my lord fighteth the battles of 29 Jehovah, may no evil ever befall thee. And should man rise up to persecute thee, and to thou hadst come so speedily to meet me, surely there had not been left to Nabal, by the morn-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXV. 1. Let us review the conduct of Samuel, and we shall find an example of fervent piety, public spirit, and unfeigned humility and submission. He was the child of prayer, and devoted to God from the womb; his early days were spent in the tabernacle, and his latest in superintending the schools of the

29. And should man rise up, &c. I have followed Junius, Geddes and others, in rendering conditionally and in referring to a future, and not to a past event; and the latter part of the verse requires this sense. The metaphor is derived from common usage. What things are valuable are collected and carefully preserved. Thus may God preserve thy life, is ceived from her hand what she had brought him, and said to her, "Go in peace to thy house; see, I have hearkened to thy voice, and have accepted thy person."

And Abigail came to Nabal; and, behold, ³⁶ he held a feast in his house, like the feast of a king; and Nabal's heart was merry within him, for he was very drunk: therefore she told him nothing, less or more, until the morning-light. But when, in the morning, Nabal had become ³⁷ sober, and his wife told him these things, his heart died within him, and became like a stone. And in about ten days Jehovah so smote Nabal, ³⁸ that he died.

And when David heard that Nabal was dead, ³⁹ he said, "Blessed be Jehovah, who hath avenged the reproach cast on me by Nabal, and hath withheld his servant from evil: for the wickedness of Nabal hath Jehovah returned upon his own head." David then sent and communed with Abigail, about taking her for a wife to himself. And when the servants of David had ⁴⁰ come to Abigail, to Carmel, they spoke to her, saying, "David hath sent us to thee, to take thee to him for a wife. And she arose, and ⁴¹ bowed herself, with her face to the earth, and said, "Behold, let thy handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my lord." And Abigail made haste, and arose, and rode ⁴² upon an ass, and five of her damsels attended her; and she went after the messengers of David, and became his wife. And David also took ⁴³ Ahinoam, of Jezreel; and they were both of them his wives. For Saul had given Michal, ⁴⁴ his daughter, David's former wife, to Phalti, the son of Laish, who was of Gallim.

prophets. Descended from prophets, he was himself also one of the greatest—When raised to judge Israel, he acted without partiality, and was neither guilty of oppression nor avarice. When called to resign his power to another, he did it without reluctance; and though he saw the misconduct of Saul, he lamented and prayed for him. His her prayer; but may those of thine enemies, be like stones put into a sling, to be cast away.

36—38. Nabal appears not only weak but wicked; and while Abigail's conduct and speech show her to be a woman of good understanding, his intemperance and stupidity justify the character given him.

CHAPTER XXVI.

B. C. 1060. Saul again persecuteth David, who again refuseth to kill him, when he had it in his power; Saul confesseth his folly, and departeth; David goeth to Achish.

1 AGAIN the Ziphites came to Saul, to Gibeah, saying, "Doth not David hide himself among us", in the hill of Hachilah, which is opposite 2 Jeshimon?" Then Saul arose, and went down to the wilderness of Ziph, having three thousand chosen men of Israel with him, to seek 3 David in the wilderness of Ziph; And Saul encamped on the hill of Hachilah, which is by the way, opposite Jeshimon. Now David abode in the wilderness; and he saw that Saul had 4 come after him to the wilderness. (For David had sent out spies, and understood that Saul 5 had indeed come.) Then David arose and came towards the place where Saul was encamped. And David saw the place where Saul lay, and Abner, the son of Ner, the captain of his host: and Saul lay among the baggage, and the people were encamped round about him. Then 6 David addressed himself to Ahimelech, the Hethite, and to Abishai, the son of Zeruiah, brother to Joab, saying, "Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp?" And Abishai 7 said, "I will go down with thee." So David and Abishai came to the people by night; and, behold, Saul lay sleeping among the baggage; and his spear was stuck in the ground, at his head, and Abner and the people lay round about him. Then said Abishai to David, "God hath 8 this day delivered thine enemy into thy hand; now therefore, let me, I pray thee, at once smite him with the spear, even to the earth; and I shall not need to smite a second time." And 9 David said to Abishai, "Destroy him not; for who can stretch forth his hand against Jehovah's anointed, and be guiltless?" David moreover 10 said, "As Jehovah liveth, Jehovah shall smite him; or his day to die shall come; or he shall descend into battle, and perish! Jehovah 11 keep me from stretching forth my hand against Jehovah's anointed; but, I pray thee, take now the spear which is at his head, and the water-jug, and let us go." So David took the spear 12 and the water-jug from Saul's head; and they went away, without any one's seeing, knowing, or awaking: for they were all asleep; a deep sleep from Jehovah having fallen upon them.

Then David went over to the other side, and 13 stood on the top of a distant hill; a great space being between them: And David cried to the 14 people, and to Abner the son of Ner, saying, "Answerest thou not, Abner?" Then Abner answered and said, "Who art thou that criest to ambition (if it be lawful so to use this word) was to serve and please God; and it was his glory to do so. All bore testimony to Samuel, and he was generally lamented.

2. What a contrast have we to Samuel in churlish Nabal! A man of wealth but of an unkind disposition; spending what he had on himself and favourites, and refusing any thing to the call of charity. No sooner was Nabal asked a favour, in a very civil and respectful manner, than he fell into a passion, and abused the petitioner. There are those who abuse the poor, that they may be excused from relieving them; who give surly answers, when asked for contributions for public and useful services, and plead their own necessity and inability, with as much earnestness and as little justice as Nabal did. Though he had nothing to spare, Abigail could find a handsome present, and he could find enough to make himself and his servants drunk. It is thus that men often spend on their own dress, their tables, or their furniture, that which they ought to do good with; and plead inability when it is really owing to nothing but luxury and extravagance.

3. We may hence infer what a great blessing a wife of prudence and good understanding is to a family. Solomon says, "A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband." Abigail rescued her family from ruin, by her prudence and good sense. Her husband's foibles set her virtues in a more beautiful light. Let those who consult their own safety, honour and happiness, and the regularity and comfort of their families, endeavour to choose such wives; esteem good sense, good temper, and piety, the first things to be sought for in the choice. "The heart of a husband may safely trust in such a wife, and he will have no fear of spoil." How necessary the Apostle's caution, 'be not unequally yoked.'

CHAP. XXVI. 1. The hill of Hachilah. Jerom places this, about eight miles east of Hebron.

5. Lay among the baggage. Purver, 'among the carriages,' after our marginal version. Geddes, 'in the waggon-path.' I have followed Purver in sense; and from Harmer we learn, that it is yet the custom for the Arabs to encamp as is here stated, among the baggage, the king or leader in the midst and the people around him, with their spears stuck at their heads.

8-12. This circumstance proves either that Saul's troops as well as himself, were exhausted by fatigue; or that God so ordered it, to convince Saul, and again to show David's innocence.

15 the king?" And David said to Abner, "Art not thou a valiant man? and who is like to thee in Israel? wherefore then hast thou not kept thy lord the king? for there came one of the 16 people in to destroy the king thy lord. This thing which thou hast done is not good. As Jehovah liveth, ye are worthy of death, because ye have not kept your master, Jehovah's anointed. And now see where the king's spear is, and 17 the jug which was at his head." And Saul knew David's voice, and said, "Is this thy voice, my son David?" And David said, "It is my voice, 18 my lord, O king." And he said, "Why doth my lord thus pursue his servant? for what have 19 I done? or what evil is in my hand? Now, therefore, I pray thee, let my lord the king hear the words of his servant. If Jehovah have stirred thee up against me, let him be appeased with an offering: but if they be men only, accursed be they before Jehovah; for they now drive me out from abiding in the inheritance of Jehovah, saying, by this deed, 'Go, serve other gods.'
20 Now therefore, let not my blood fall to the earth in the presence of Jehovah. Surely the king of Israel is come out to seek a flea; as when one hunteth a partridge among the mountains."
21 Then said Saul, "I have sinned: return, my son David: for I will no more do thee harm, because my life was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have acted foolishly, and have 22 erred exceedingly. And David answered and said, "Behold the king's spear! and let one of 23 the young men come over and fetch it. May Jehovah render to every man according to his righteousness and his faithfulness: for although Jehovah this day delivered thee into my hand, yet I would not stretch forth my hand against 24 Jehovah's anointed. And, behold, as thy life was this day of great value in mine eyes, so may my life be of great value in the eyes of Jehovah, and may he deliver me out of all tribulation."

19. Let him be appeased, &c. This advice was proper; and it would have been well if Saul had sought reconciliation first with God, and then with David.

25. Whatever thou undertakest, &c. So Houbigant and others render, which is the sense of the text without any addition.

CHAP. XXVII. 1.—4. David, continually harassed and exposed to danger, begins to fear, and flies to Gath for safety; where, as the supposed

Then Saul said to David, "Blessed art thou my son David! also whatever thou undertakest to do, thou shalt be able to accomplish." Then David went on his way, and Saul returned to his own place.

David now thought in his heart, "I shall one day perish by the hand of Saul: nothing can be better for me than speedily to escape into the land of the Philistines; and Saul despairing of me, will cease to seek me in any of the districts of Israel: so shall I escape from his hand." And David arose, and, with the six hundred men who were with him, passed over to Achish, the son of Maoch, king of Gath. And David dwelt 3 with Achish at Gath, he and his men, every man with his household; David with his two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail the Carmelitess, formerly Nabal's wife. And 4 it was told Saul that David had fled to Gath; and he sought no more after him.

And David said to Achish, "If I have now 5 found favour in thine eyes, let there be given to me a place in some town in the country, that I may dwell there: for why should thy servant dwell in the royal city with thee?" So Achish 6 gave to him that day Ziklag: hence Ziklag, to this day, belongeth to the kings of Judah.

And the time that David dwelt in the country 7 of the Philistines was a full year and four months. And David and his men went up, and invaded 8 the Geshurites, and the Gezerites, and the Amalekites: for these were of old the inhabitants of the land, as one goeth to Shur, and unto the land of Egypt. And David smote the land; 9 and left neither man nor woman alive; and he took away the sheep, and the oxen, and the asses, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned, and came to Achish. And Achish said, 10 "Whither have ye made an inroad to day?" And David said, "Against the south of Judah, and against the south of the Jerahmeelites, and enemy of Saul, he is kindly treated.

8. And invaded the Geshurites, &c. These were not Philistines, not even in league with them; so that David's conduct was no breach of hospitality. He thought it prudent to conceal his attacks on these enemies of Israel, lest Achish should suspect he made them to obtain the favour of Saul.

11. And this was his custom, &c. I follow the punctuation and rendering of Piscator, Junius, Houbigant and others; and this is doubtless the sense:

11 against the south of the Kenites." For David had saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, "Lest they should tell of us, saying, 'So did David.'" And this was his custom all the time he dwelt in the country of the Philistines. And Achish trusted David, saying, "He hath made himself so detested by his own people, Israel, that he will be for ever my servant." Hence, when, in those days, the Philistines assembled their hosts for war, to fight with Israel, Achish said to David, "Know thou for certain, that thou shalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men." And David said to Achish, "Surely thou shalt know what thy servant can do." And Achish said to David, "Truly I could make thee keeper of my head for ever."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

B. C. 1056. Saul forsaken of God, seeketh to a necromancer; Samuel's appearance, and address to him; Saul's fear.

3 SAMUEL was now dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, in his own city. And Saul had removed from the land, necromancers and prognosticators. And the Philistines assembled, and came and encamped in Shunem; and Saul assembled all Israel, and they encamped in Gilboa. And

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XXVI XXVII. 1. Though Saul had been hitherto disappointed in his designs, he hopes to be more successful, and still pursues David. He forgets his convictions, breaks through his promises, and hurries on in the same career of folly and sin. When melted by David's kindness to him, so that he acknowledged his own iniquity, who would have thought that he would so soon have returned to persecution? It is too common for men to be impressed with the folly of their ways; to see the sinfulness of their conduct, and resolve to be better; yet return to sin, like the dog to his vomit. What need have we, not only to watch over ourselves, and to form deliberate resolutions, but to pray that God would keep us, and be surety to his servants for good.

2. We again see David triumph over his temptation to cut off his enemy; and display the same fear of God as before. Saul acknowledges that he had acted foolishly; invites David to court, and pro-

12-2. I join the two next verses to this Chapter as closely connected with it. Achish thinking David made attacks on the Israelites, trusted in him; and determined that he should accompany him in the approaching war.

CHAP. XXVIII. 4. Shunem-Gilboa. The first of these places was on the border of Issachar. Josh. xix. 18. Compare 2 Kings iv. 12, &c. Gilboa lay north of Bethshan, and east of Jezreel.

when Saul saw the host of the Philistines, he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled. And when Saul inquired of Jehovah, Jehovah answered him not, either by dreams, or by Urim, or by prophets.

Then said Saul to his servants, "Seek out 7 for me, a woman skilful in necromancy, that I may go to her, and inquire of her." And his servants said to him, "Behold, there is a woman skilful in necromancy, at Endor." And Saul 8 disguised himself, and put on other garments, and went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night; and he said, "Divine, I pray thee, for me, by necromancy, and bring up to me, the person whom I shall name to thee." And the woman said to him, "Behold, 9 thou knowest what Saul hath done; how he hath cut off necromancers and prognosticators from the land; why then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to be put to death?" And 10 Saul swore to her by Jehovah, saying, "As Jehovah liveth, no punishment shall happen to thee for this thing." Then said the woman, 11 "Whom shall I bring up to thee?" And he said, "Bring up to me, Samuel." And the 12 woman saw Samuel, and she cried with a loud voice; and the woman spoke to Saul, saying, "Why hast thou deceived me? for thou art mises him security. How could David trust to one so fickle, so malicious, and blood-thirsty? David trusts not to Saul, but to God, and piously hopes that God would be his preserver, and render to him according to his righteousness. When we are governed by a prevailing regard to God, we may assuredly hope for his protection. He will encompass such men with his favour as a shield.

3. Nothing is more dear to a good man than the house and ordinances of God. To be banished from these is a source of the bitterest grief to a devout mind; and David complained of this more than of leaving the court, or his family, or his friends, or even his native country. To lose the means of grace, and the privileges of God's house, is the greatest of all losses. That this may not be our case; let us highly value them, and carefully improve them while they are continued; and esteem 'a day in God's court better than a thousand' spent in sin and vanity.

6. By dreams, or Urim, or Prophets. In all these ways God was accustomed to answer his people; but Saul having slain the priests, there was neither Urim nor prophet with him. And how could a man so wicked, expect God to admonish him by dreams?

7. Skilful in necromancy. See Introduction, Part iii, Ch. 6, § 8.

13 Saul." And the king said to her, "Be not afraid; for what seest thou?" And the woman said to Saul, "I see a chief ascending from the earth." And he said to her, "What form hath he?" And she said, "An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle." And Saul knew that it was Samuel, and he inclined his face to the ground, and bowed himself.

15 Then Samuel said to Saul, "Why hast thou disturbed me, by bringing me up?" And Saul answered, "I am greatly distressed; for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me not, either by prophets, or by dreams: therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known to me, what I shall do." Then said Samuel,

16 "Why then dost thou consult me, when Jehovah is departed from thee, and is with thy neighbour? For Jehovah will do to thee as he spoke by me; and Jehovah will rend the kingdom from thy hand, and give it to thy neighbour David. Because thou obeyedst not the voice of Jehovah, nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore, Jehovah, this sons shall be among the dead, with me: Jehovah shall also deliver the camp of Israel into the hand of the Philistines." Then Saul fell suddenly, his whole length, on the earth; so greatly did he fear, on hearing the words of Samuel. Besides, there was no strength in him; for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night.

And the woman came to Saul; and she saw that he was greatly troubled, and said to him, "Behold, thy hand-maid hath obeyed thy voice, and I have exposed my life, and have hearkened to thy words, which thou spakest to me. Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou also to the voice of thy hand-maid, and let me set a morsel of bread before thee; and eat, that thou mayest have strength, when thou goest on thy way." But he refused, and said, "I will not eat." But his servants, together with the woman, compelled him; and he hearkened to their voice. So he arose from the earth, and sat upon the bed. And the woman had a fat calf in the house; and she made haste, and killed it; and took flour, and kneaded it, and baked of it unleavened bread: And she set it before Saul, and before his servants; and they ate. Then they rose up, and that night, went away.

CHAP. XXVIII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVIII. 1. We here see, that they who forsake God, will be at last forsaken of him. Saul had wilfully transgressed the divine commands, slaughtered God's priests, and persecuted his brave and affectionate son-in-law David; and is it matter of surprise that God should not answer him? He had long neglected prayer, and apparently despised religion; and it was not from any regret for his sins, but only from his fears, that he now wished to consult God. Miserable is the man who is given up of God; from whom he is departed! Tremble, O sinner, to think on the day, when God will thus leave thee a prey to thine own guilt. "To day hearken to his voice, and harden not thy heart."

17. Sept. Vulg. 5 mss.

2 We here see that the methods ungodly sinners take in their troubles only increase them. What did Saul get by going to a necromancer? By so doing he transgressed the divine law; and instead of finding relief, his anguish and fears were redoubled. There is no peace to the wicked; nor can it be expected that they should find it are divided in opinion, on the nature of what is here recorded. Some suppose, that the woman knowing the king and Samuel, personated the latter; and by her art as a ventriloquist, held the conversation which follows. It is doubtful from the text, whether the king himself saw any thing. The woman saw Samuel; she describes his form, his dress, &c. It must be recollected that this occurred in the night; when imposition might be more easily practised. Supposing the woman spoke in the name of Samuel, it would be proper for her to use much such language as he would have used. And it must have been generally known, that Samuel had asserted that Saul was rejected, and David anointed to succeed him. Hence she might infer from his fears, from the distracted state of Israel, and from the numbers of the Philistines, that Saul and his army would be defeated; and from his known courage conclude, that he and his sons would perish. She might tell him these things, to render him unhappy, for having persecuted those who practised her own art—Others think, that God sent either Samuel, or some appearance of him, not at the will of this necromancer, but without her art, and contrary to her expectation, to reprove Saul for his sin in consulting such a character; and to repeat the denunciations, which he had before made. Hence they lay stress on the expression, 'the woman saw Samuel and cried out, thou &c; and also on the prediction that Saul and his sons should be with him. It may be observed, that all Saul's sons did not perish; as Ishbosheth reigned for some time. I leave my reader, to choose which of these opinions he deems most probable; for it is impossible to decide absolutely which may be right.

20. Fell his whole length, &c. What an effect had the words which Saul had heard from him! He had lost his reason, when he went to consult this necromancer; and now he lost his courage. How unfit was he to lead the army.

CHAPTER XXIX.

B. C. 1056. David sent back from the Philistine army; Achish commends him; he finds Ziklag burnt, and the people and property carried away by the Amalekites; he pursues them, and recovers all, and obtains great spoil.

1 Now the Philistines had assembled all their hosts at Aphek; and the Israelites were encamp-2 ed by a fountain, which is in Jezreel. And the lords of the Philistines passed on by hundreds,
and by thousands; but David and his men pas-3 sed on in the rear with Achish. Then said the princes of the Philistines, "Who are these that pass on?" And Achish said to the princes of the Philistines, "Is not this David, the servant of Saul, the king of Israel, who hath been with me some days and years; and I have found no fault in him, since the day of his defection 4 to this day?" And the princes of the Philistines were wroth with him; and the princes of the Philistines said to him, "Make this man return; and let him go back to his place which thou hast appointed for him; let him not go down with us to battle, lest in the battle he become our adversary; for in what way can he reconcile himself to his master? is it not with 5 the heads of these men? Is not this David, of whom they sang in alternate choirs,

'Saul hath slain his thousands!

But David, his ten thousands?"

6 Then Achish called David, and said to him,
"Surely, as Jehovah liveth, thou hast been upright; and thy going out and thy coming in with me in the camp, is good in my sight: for I have not found evil in thee, since the day of thy coming to me, unto this day: yet the lords favour thee not. Therefore, now return, and go 7 in peace, that thou displease not the lords of the Philistines."

And David said to Achish, "But what have I 8 done? and what hast thou found in thy servant
so long as I have been with thee to this day, that I may not go and fight against the enemies of my lord the king?" And Achish answered 9 and said to David, "I know that thou art good in my sight, as an angel of God; yet the lords of the Philistines have said, 'He shall not go up with us to the battle.' Therefore, now rise up 10
early in the morning, with thy master's servants, who have come with thee; and, as soon as it is light in the morning, depart." So David and 11 his men rose up early in the morning, to depart;
to return into the land of the Philistines; but the Philistines went on to Jezreel.

And when David and his men came to Zik- 1
lag, on the third day, they found that the Amalekites had invaded the south of Judah and Ziklag, and smitten Ziklag, and burned it with fire; And had taken the 'men and the' women 2 who were in it, captives: they slew not any, either great or small, but carried them off, and had gone on their way.

So David and his men came to the city, and, 3
behold, it was burned with fire; and their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, were taken captives. Then David and the people who were 4 with him, raised their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep. And David's two 5 wives were taken captives, Ahinoam, the Jezimproper remedies; but all ungodly men do but heap up wrath against the day of wrath.

3. How dreadful is it for a man to be left to the horrors of a guilty conscience! Saul was now a terror to himself: the recollection of past sins, the dread of approaching vengeance; the anticipation of death and misery, all conspired to create a hell within him, and 'to 11 four hundred men, still pursued. And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, and gave him bread, and he ate; and 12 they gave him water to drink. They also gave him a piece of a cake of figs, and two clusters of raisins; and when he had eaten, he was revived: for he had neither eaten bread, nor drunk water, for three days and three nights.

 13 And David said to him, "To whom belondest thou? and whence art thou?" And he said, "I am a young man of Egypt, servant to an Amalekite; and my master left me, because three of this calamity. David had only one refuge, on this occasion, but it had never failed him; he had God for his friend, and he encouraged himself in him.

9, 10. The text in these verses has suffered in its order. As the connexion and sense points out the order, I have not hesitated to adopt it.

And when he had brought him down, behold, 16 they were spread abroad over the whole country, eating and drinking, and dancing, because of all the great spoil which they had taken out of the land of the Philistines, and out of the land of Judah. And David "came upon them", 17 and smote them from the twilight even unto the evening of the next day; and there escaped not a man of them, save four hundred young men, who rode upon camels, and fled. And David 18 recovered all that the Amalekites had taken away; his two wives also, David rescued. And 19 there was nothing wanting to them, either small or great, either sons or daughters, either spoil, or any thing that they had taken with them: David recovered all. And David took all the 20 flocks and the herds of the Amalekites; which they drove before the recaptured cattle, and said, "This is David's spoil."

And David came to the two hundred men, 21 who were so faint that they could not follow David, whom they had also made to abide at the brook Besor. And they went forth to meet David, and to meet the people who were with him: and when David came near to the people, he saluted them. Then answered all the wicked and worthless men, of those who went with David, and said, "Because they went not with us, we will not give them aught of the spoil that we have recovered, save to every man his wife and his children, that they may lead them away and depart. Then David said, "Ye shall not 23 do so, my brethren, with that which Jehovah hath given to us, who hath preserved us, and delivered the horde which came against us into our hand. 29 And to those who were in Hormah, and to those who were in Chorashan, and to those who were in Athach, And to those who were in Hebron, and to all the places where David himself and his men were wont to haunt.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XXIX XXX. 1. We may here see how a good man's steps are ordered by the Lord. David, by flying to the Philistines, had involved himself in difficulties. On the breaking out of a fresh war, he could not refuse to go with Achish, without manifesting ingratitude, cowardice, or treachery; and he could not fight against his country, without incurring the hatred of those whose affection he ought to conciliate. In these embarrassments, his own bravery, through the direction of God, became the occasion of his deliverance. The lords of the Philistines suspected him, recollecting what had been said concerning him, and he was honourably dismissed. Let it be our care in all our ways to acknowledge God, and he will direct our steps.

2. We have before us also a striking instance of the uncertainty of all created comfort. Little did David and his men think of so melancholy a sight. Being dismissed from the army, they were highly delighted with the thoughts of rejoicing with their families and friends. But what a dreadful scene opened to their view! When we go abroad, we know not what occurrence may happen before we return; we may go out cheerful, and return doleful. Those who have often gone out and come in, and found their families in peace at their return, should be thankful to God for his preserving care. Let us always consider such enjoyments as precarious; and "boast not of to-morrow, since we know not what a day may bring forth." To-morrow may deprive us of all that we hold dear.

Now the Philistines fought against Israel; and 1
the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and they lay slaughtered on mount Gilboa.
And the Philistines closely followed Saul and 2
his sons; and the Philistines slew Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Melchi-shua, Saul's sons. The 3 battle was then wholly against Saul, and the archers hit him; and he was grievously wounded by the archers. Then said Saul to his armour- 4 bearer, "Draw thy sword, and thrust me through bearer would not; for he was greatly afraid.

Saul, therefore, took a sword, and fell upon it.
And when his armour-bearer saw that Saul was 5

3. Let good men learn from David, to encourage themselves in the Lord their God, in the most distressing circumstances. His grief was as great as that of his attendants, and additional troubles fell upon him through their outrage. He was charged as the author of all this mischief; but he encouraged himself in the power and providence of God, who had often appeared for him, and had promised to bring him to the throne; the recollection of this kept up his spirits. Let us all seek an interest in God as our God, then shall we have a sure refuge when trouble comes. Good men should not be cast down, but hope in God. "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings whose heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord."

4. We see how soon destruction may come upon those who seem most secure. The Amalekites were all cheerful, and merry, eating, drinking and dancing; they feared no danger, when destruction came upon them. Such is the case of sensual sinners; they apprehend no danger, and put far off the evil day. Eating, drinking and dancing, have been the soft and pleasant ways by which multitudes have gone down to the grave; and when they said 'peace and safety, lo! sudden destruction came upon them.' Let us then always be upon our guard, for while we indulge sensual inclinations, our spiritual enemies will gain an advantage over us. "Let us take heed to ourselves, lest our hearts be at any time overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, or the cares of this life, and that awful day come upon us unawares."

all his other evil deeds. Pride led to it; and no circumstance can justify self-murder. Had he rushed into the midst of the enemy, and fallen like Jonathan it would have been more honourable.

dead, he likewise fell upon his sword, and died

his armour-bearer, and all his men, that same day together.

7 And when the men of Israel, who were on the other side of the valley of Jezreel, who were on the other side of the Jordan, saw that the men of Israel fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, they forsook the cities and fled;
and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

to strip the slain, they found Saul and his

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXI. 1. We here see the end of an obstinate sinner. Every aggravating circumstance attended it; full of horror and despair, Saul basely and cowardly destroys himself, and all to keep his body from being abused by the Philistines. There was no sign of care about his soul; he died as he had lived, a terror to himself and all about him. Now his many sins find him out. See here the consequence of disobedience to God's commandments, and his righteous judgments upon one of the greatest of men, when he proved profligate and perverse. It is a warning to us, that we may 'fear the Lord and walk in the way of his commandments.'

2. Victory and success should always be ascribed to God.
So the Philistines thought, and they sent to publish their victory in all their idol temples. This shows the sense men have of the reasonableness of acts of public homage to their supposed deliverers. To the shame and reproach of Israelites, blind idolaters often showed more dependence on, and gratitude to, their stocks and stones, than the Israelites did to the living God! Surely

12. And they took their bones. If they burned the bodies, how, afterward, were the bones burned? The Hebrew word which we render, burnt, means more properly to scorch than consume. Perhaps, they waited until the sun had dried up the flesh and exhaled the stench; and then buried the

and sent messengers through the whole land of the Philistines, to publish it in the temples of their idols, and among the people.
And they put his armour in the temple of 10
Ashtaroth; and they fastened his body to the wall of Beth-shan.

But when the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead 11
heard what the Philistines had done to Saul,
All the valiant men arose, and went all night, 12 and took the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, from the wall of Beth-shan, and came to Jabesh, and burnt them there. And they took 13 their bones, and buried them under a tamarisk tree at Jabesh, and they fasted seven days.

such will rise up in the day of judgment to condemn them.

3. Saul was guilty of self-murder to avoid insult; but see how it falls upon his corpse. His head is cut off, and sent as a trophy to the temple of Ashtaroth; his body, with those of his sons, affixed to the walls of their city. The very thing he feared came upon him; and thus will it be with all impenitent sinners. Their sin is their folly, and the end of it is death and disgrace. Fools shall be exposed to shame.

4. The men of Jabesh-Gilead, discover both valour and gratitude. Saul had once saved them, and they boldly go and take his corpse, and inter it with becoming sorrow. We should never be unmindful of favours; and respect is due to kings from their office. Any disgrace they suffer reflects on the nation; and every just and generous principle, should excite a people to prevent or remove it—Thus terminated the reign and life of Saul; and with these events, closes the first book of Samuel. The sun of Israel sets in blood, and darkness and despair cover the land; but it is only the prelude of a brighter day of victory, glory and triumph.

body; which might properly then be called bones. Others think, that by burning is here meant only burning aromatics on them.—I think the word rendered bone, might be translated remains, or burned substance; which they might put into an urn. Compare Gen. i. 25, 26, and Exod. xiii. 20.

II. SAMUEL.

INTRODUCTION.

If we admit the opinion of the Talmudists, this book was written by the prophets Gad and Nathan, as a continuation of what Samuel had begun; and for that reason called the Second Book of Samuel. This opinion is highly probable in itself; and it must be evident, that Samuel could not write a history of events which happened long after his death.

The book contains the history of about forty-years; and has not improperly been divided into three parts. In the first the author describes the happy beginning and glorious success of the kingdom of David, Chap. i—x. In the second, he relates his sin and fall, and the misfortunes and troubles which followed, notwithstanding the repentance of this monarch, ch. xi. 18. In the third he gives an account of David's re-establishment, and the events which distinguished the last period of his glorious reign. The most interesting events of David's life are here recorded, and point out his typical relation to Christ; and also illustrate many of the Psalms.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1056. David informed of the death of Saul sincerely grieves, and composes a beautiful elegy.

- 1 Now after the death of Saul, when David was returned from the slaughter of the Amalekites, 2 and David had abode two days in Ziklag; It came to pass on the third day, that, behold, a man came from the camp, from Saul, with his clothes rent, and earth upon his head; and so it was, when he came to David, that he fell to the 3 earth, and did obeisance. And David said to him, "Whence comest thou?" And he said to him, "From the camp of Israel I have escaped. 4 And David said to him, "How went the matter? I pray thee, tell me." And he answered, "The people are fled from the battle, and many of the people also are fallen and dead; and Saul and 5 Jonathan also are dead. And David said to the young man who told him, "How knowest thou that Saul, and Jonathan his son, are dead?" 6 And the young man who told him, said, "As I happened to be by chance upon mount Gilboa, behold, Saul leaned upon his spear; and, lo, the chariots and horsemen closely followed him.

And when he looked behind him, he saw me, 7 and called to me; and I answered, "Here am I." And he said to me, "Who art thou?" And I 8 answered him, "I am an Amalekite." He said 9 to me again, "Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and slay me: for convulsion hath seized me, so that there is scarcely life in me." So I stood 10 upon him, and slew him, because I was sure that he could not live, after that he was fallen: and I took the crown which he had upon his head, and the bracelet which he had on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord." Then 11 David took hold on his clothes, and rent them; and so did all the men who were with him: And 12 they mourned, and wept, and fasted until the evening, for Saul, and for Jonathan his son, and for the people of Jehovah, and for the house of Israel; because they had fallen by the sword.

And David said to the young man who told 13 him, "Whence art thou?" And he answered, "I am the son of a stranger, an Amalekite." And David said to him, "How wast thou not 14 afraid to stretch forth thy hand, to destroy Jehovah's anointed?" And David called one 15

CHAPTER I. 6. As I happened by chance to be, &c. There are always numerous strollers who follow camps; and their business is to pilage, and strip the dead. This young Amalekite was most probably one of this kind.

9. For convulsion hath seized me, &c. I have followed an ingenious conjectural emendation of the text, reading (ל) for (ל). The common reading is at variance with the next verse, where the Amalekite says, 'he was sure he could not live, and yet he here tells us, according to the text, that Saul said, 'my life was yet whole in me.' Now, though we know that this account was partly invented, yet surely he would not so contradict himself. Did the Amalekite thus smite Saul? It is not improbable, that he might find him before he was wholly dead, and put thus an end to his existence, that he might obtain the spoil and carry it to David, in hope of ample reward.

10. I took the crown, &c. This was probably one of those diadems, made of a bandage of linen, and ornamented sometimes with jewels, which the eastern monarchs wear, and which Saul might conceal with his helmet.

13—16. From his account David supposed the Amalekite the mur-of the young men, and said, "Go near, and fall on him," And he so smote him that he 16 died. And David said to him, "Thy blood be upon thy head; for thy mouth hath testified against thee, saying, 'I have slain Jehovah's anointed.'"

17 David now lamented over Saul, and over Jonathan his son, with this lamentation. And he commanded 'it to be taught' the children of Judah. Behold, it is written in the book of Jasher.

19 O, ANTELOPE of Israel!
Pierced on thine own mountains!
How have the mighty fallen!

20 Tell it not in Gath:
Publish it not in the streets of Askelon;
Lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice!
Lest the daughters of the uncircumcised exult!

21 Ye mountains of Gilboa,
On you be neither dew nor rain,
Nor fields affording oblations:
Since there hath been vilely cast away,
The shield of the mighty, the shield of Saul!

CHAP. I.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. We may observe, that worldly minded men are ready to think all others like themselves. This Amalekite thought David would be glad to be informed that he had killed Saul, his inveterate enemy, with his own hand; but more especially to see the crown which he brought with him, and expected that he would have amply rewarded him. Thus men of base and sordid minds, think others are like themselves; and those who are most ready to cast reflections on the temper or conduct of others, have often most of the very temper and conduct which they censure so freely.

2. We learn from the example of David, to conceal the faults

derer of Saul; and perhaps suspecting that he had acted treacherously, he ordered him to be put to death. This was necessary to vindicate his own innocence; for had he rewarded him, or suffered him to go unpunished, it might have been said that he had employed him. It was necessary to ingratiate himself with the people, and deter others from such practices, and to secure respect to the person of kings, especially the Lord's anointed. It is remarkable, that an Amalekite should bring that crown, which Saul had forfeited by sparing the Amalekites.

18. He commanded it to be taught, &c. I have followed the Sept. in this version, and consider (רנן) as probably introduced into the text, from standing as a title to the elegy. Michaelis and Geddes retain the word, and give it the Arabic sense, measure. The latter renders, the measure of which he ordered to be taught; and explains, 'measure,' to mean the air, or musical modulation. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

19. O Antelope of Israel. So both the Syr. and Arab. render; and it is well known, that the antelope, is, throughout the east, regarded as the emblem of beauty and agility; and has always afforded an ample field of metaphor to the oriental bards.—Pierced on thine own mountains. I believe of others, especially of those who are dead. In this elegy we meet not with the least trace of Saul's cruelty to him; he remembered nothing but the brave man, the valiant commander, and the magnificent prince. He said nothing of his disobedience, or his acts of tyranny. He did not insult him now his honour was laid in the dust, and his crown fallen from his head. Thus acted the man after God's heart; and charity should teach us to say the best of every one. If we know no good, let us say nothing; but cover the faults of others with a mantle of love. We must 'speak evil of no man.'

3. Pity and tender affection is no way inconsistent with true

22. Warriors. For this sense of (ללח) I am indebted to Kennicott. The parallelism is inverted, the last line corresponding with the first, and the third with the second. Lowth has produced many instances of this kind. See his Praelectiones.

23. In their lives, &c. I have with Houbigant given the sense rather than the idiom; and the next line supports the version—They were swifter, &c. Swiftness, in those days, was considered as one chief quality in a warrior. So, among the Greeks, Achilles is particularly distinguished by the epithet swift-footed.

CHAPTER II.

B. C. 1055. David goeth to Hebron, where he is anointed king over Judah; his message to the men of Jabesh-Gilead; battle between his troops and those of Ishbosheth.

1 Now after this, David inquired of Jehovah, saying, "Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah?" And Jehovah said to him, "Go up." And David said, "Whither shall I go up?"
2 And he said, "Unto Hebron." So David went up thither, and his two wives also, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail, formerly the wife of 3 Nabal, the Carmelite. And his men who were with him did David bring up; every man with his household: and they dwelt in the city of 4 Hebron. And the men of Judah came, and there they anointed David king over the house of Judah.
When some told David, saying, "Jabesh-gilead were they who buried Saul;" David then sent messengers to the men of Jabesh-gilead, and said, "Blessed be ye by Jehovah; who have shown this kindness to your lord, to Saul; and have buried him, and Jonathan his son."

courage and firmness of mind. David's heart melted within him; all the tender passions of his soul were affected at once, and burst forth into these elegant and melancholy strains; and while he shows a heart impressed with the strongest emotions of affection and grief, he displays a most martial and courageous spirit. A compassionate temper is not a contemptible weakness; the poem

this inimitable stanza; which I could never read without rapture. Indeed, the whole composition is admirable, whether we consider it as a singularly fine piece of lyric poetry, or as a powerful engine to move to reconciliation even the most bitter adversaries of the royal author. Though Jonathan is evidently the chief object of his lamentation, yet he interweaves so artful and fine a panegyric of Saul, his avowed enemy, as must have greatly tended to destroy prejudices; and was, doubtless, highly contributive to that purpose. His ordering it to be taught and sung by those of his own tribe, could not fail to have a strong effect on the other tribes; and this, with the lenity of his government, and his known valour and piety, at length triumphed over the feeble remains of Saul's party. On the whole, I will venture to say, without any fond partiality for my author, that all antiquity affords not a more precious relic of genuine elegiac poetry than this ode." Geddes.

CHAP. II. 1. David inquired, &c. Doubtless this inquiry was made by Uriah through the High Priest. Compare 1 Sam. xxiii. 6, 9. David acted wisely and piously in seeking divine direction; and the answer he

But Abner the son of Ner, captain of Saul's 8 host, took Ishbosheth the son of Saul, and brought him over to Mahanaim; And made 9 him king over Gilead, and over Asher, and over Jezreel, and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin; even over all Israel. Ishbosheth, Saul's 10 son, was forty years old when he began to reign over Israel, and reigned two years. But the house of Judah followed David. And the whole 11 time that David was king in Hebron, over the house of Judah, was seven years and six months.

And Abner the son of Ner, and the servants 12 of Ishbosheth, the son of Saul, went out from Mahanaim to Gibeon. And Joab, the son of 13 Zeruah, and the servants of David, went out, and met together by the pool of Gibeon: and they sat down, the one on the one side of the pool, and the other on the other side of the pool. And Abner said to Joab, "Let the young men 14 now arise, and play before us." And Joab said, "Let them arise." Then there arose and went 15 over by number twelve of Benjamin, who belonged to Ishbosheth, the son of Saul, and twelve of the servants of David. And each seizing his adversary by the head, plunged his before us, compared with the whole of David's conduct, shows it. We should all cultivate a tender and an affectionate disposition in ourselves, and especially in our children; for without this we cannot possibly be happy in relative life. A greater than David hath set us an example of this, even the son of God, whom it is our glory, and will be our highest happiness, to resemble.

received should encourage us to go and do likewise.

3. City of Hebron. The common text has cities; but we never find elsewhere any mention of the cities of Hebron. And indeed this form of speaking is wholly improper. The Arabic omits the word, And they dwelt in Hebron. I have retained the word, omitting the plural termination.

6. True kindness to you. Literally, 'kindness and truth;' but the version given is the sense. David's message to the brave men of Jabesh-Gilead, showed both his generosity and wisdom. It was calculated to win the friends of Saul, and to strengthen him in his kingdom.

7. The house of Judah. This was David's own tribe; and now began to be fulfilled the predictions of Jacob and Moses. Become the leading tribe, the royal tribe, a sceptered chief was not to depart until the Shiloh, the Messiah, came.

9. Asher. I have followed the reading which is most probable. The tribe of Judah was distinguished from the other tribes long before the separation of the two kingdoms in the reign of Rehoboam.

sword into his adversary's side; so that they all fell together; wherefore that place was called Helkath-hazzurim, [THE FIELD OF GRAPPLERS] which is by Gibeon. And there was a furious battle on that day; but Abner was beaten, and the men of Israel, before the servants of David. Now three sons of Zeruiah were there; Joab, and Abishai, and Asahel: and Asahel was swift of foot, as any antelope of the field. And Asahel pursued Abner; and in going after Abner he turned neither to the right hand nor to the left. Then Abner looked behind him, and said, "Art thou Asahel?" And he answered, "I am." And Abner said to him, "Turn aside, to thy right hand or to thy left, and seize one of the young men, and take to thyself his armour." But Asahel would not turn aside from following him. And again Abner said to Asahel, "Turn aside from following me: why should I smite thee to the ground? how then could I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?" Still he refused to turn aside: Abner therefore, with the reverted point of the spear, smote him in the groin, so that the spear came out behind him; and there he fell down, and died in the same place. And so it was, that all who came to the place where Asahel fell down and died, stood still. But Joab and Abishai pursued Abner; and the sun went down when they had come to the hill of Ammah, which is opposite to Giah, by the wilderness of Gibeon.

And the children of Benjamin had gathered together after Abner, and had become one troop, and stood on the top of a hill. Then Abner called to Joab, and said, "Shall the sword devour for ever? knowest thou not that it may be bitterness in the end? how long shall it be then, ere thou bid the people return from following their brethren?" And Joab said, "As God liveth, if thou hadst so spoken, surely from the morning the people had gone up every one from following his brother." So Joab blew a trumpet, and all the people stood still; and they pursued Israel no further, nor fought they more. And Abner and his men marched all that night through the plain, and passed over the Jordan; and they went through all Bithron, and came to Mahanaim. And Joab returned from following Abner; and when he had gathered all the people together, there were wanting of David's servants nineteen men, and Asahel. But the servants of David had smitten to death of Benjamin, and of Abner's men, three hundred and sixty men.

And they took up Asahel, and buried him in the sepulchre of his father, which was in Bethlehem. And Joab and his men marched all night; and they came to Hebron at break of day.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. We here see the wisdom and piety of David. He had been solemnly anointed to be king over Israel; and now when Saul was dead, it might have been thought just for him to have seized the government. David did not act in this critical state of things from political motives and expediency; but as God had, of his own free will, appointed him to the kingdom, he sought his direction as to the time of his obtaining the possession. Let us learn from his example, 'to acknowledge God in all our ways, and he will not fail to direct our steps.'

2. "The race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." Abner's confidence was soon defeated, nor could Asahel's swiftness save him. Let this abate our confidence in any accomplishment; for many are betrayed by those excellencies nor versions enable us to correct. Houbigant conjectures the true reading is six years, and the other year which David is said to have reigned over the house of Judah only, he fills up, by supposing that Ishbosheth was not established king over Israel, till a year after the death of his father Saul. That Ishbosheth reigned longer than two years, seems evident from what follows, Chap. iii. 1.

14. And play before us. Dathe, whom Geddes follows, renders, and prelude the engagement. Before a general battle, in those times, this was a common custom; and indeed skirmishing generally now precedes the battle.

16. The field of grapplers. Purver is here unintelligible, the part of edges. The marginal version 'is the field of strong men.' I follow the Sept. who read (צורים) as a participle. Dathe considers it a noun and explains the field of swords.

22. Abner seems to have been of a mild pacific disposition; who wished to avoid a civil war, and a quarrel with the opposite commander. He knew the bloody disposition of Joab; and dreaded his resentment: not without reason, as we shall soon see. Compare iii. 27.

23. With the reverted point, &c. He thrust his spear backward, without turning his face to Asahel.

26. It may be bitterness in the end? Abner insinuates, that though they were routed, yet if driven to despair, they might still cause such a slaughter as would lead Joab to repent.

27. If thou hadst so spoke, &c. I have followed the Vulg. Houbigant and others reading (כי לא) and not (כי למה). Others however would render, 'Unless thou hadst provoked us, (by desiring the young men to play before us) we had from, &c.' I prefer the version given as more agreeable to the context.

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 1053. David groweth strong; his sons; Abner revolteth to him, on certain conditions, and is slain by Joab; David lamenteth Abner.

- 1 Now there was a long war between the house of Saul and the house of David; but, while David grew stronger and stronger, the house of Saul grew weaker and weaker.
- 2 And unto David were sons born in Hebron: and his first-born was Amnon, by Ahinoam,
- 3 the Jezreelitess; And his second, Chileab, by Abigail, formerly the wife of Nabal, the Carmelite; and the third, Absalom, the son of Maachah, the daughter of Talmai, the king of
- 4 Geshur; And the fourth, Adonijah, the son of Haggith; and the fifth, Shephatiah, the son of
- 5 Abital; And the sixth, Ithream, by Eglah, David's wife. These were born to David, in Hebron.
- 6 And it happened, during the war between the house of Saul and the house of David, that Abner exerted himself for the house of Saul.
- 7 Now Saul had a concubine, whose name was Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah; and Ishbosheth said to Abner, "Why hast thou gone in
- 8 to my father's concubine?" Then was Abner very wroth on account of the words of Ishbo-which they are most fond of; and their defeats and disappointment are grievous in proportion to their pride and vanity. May we cultivate humility and moderation, and not depend too much upon any advantage we may have above others." Let not any man think more highly of himself than he ought to think; let not the young man glory in his youth, nor the strong man in his strength; but let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord."

3. It is a maxim of true wisdom, not to begin any important affair, without considering the consequences which may ensue. Had Abner attended to this, he had not been defeated; but he saw his folly when it was too late. He might have known, that it would be bitterness in the end, and therefore should not have given

CHAP. III. 3. King of Geshur. This name both in Arabic and Syr. denotes a bridge; and Michaelis contends the people were so called from residing near one. There were three different people so called; some who dwelt on the east of the Jordan, Josh. xii. 5, and xiii. 13, and 1 Chron. ii. 23; and some who dwelt south of the tribe of Judah, Josh. xiii. 2, and 1 Sam. xvii. 8, 10. The Geshur here mentioned was in Syria, most probably situate beyond Hamath on the Orontes. Compare Ch. xiii. 37; 1 Chron. xiii. 2.

7. Gone in to my father's concubine. According to the custom of the east, the concubines of a deceased king became the property of his successor; and had Abner been guilty of the deed laid to his charge, Ishbosheth

sheth, and said, "Am I, who in opposition to Judah, have, to this day, shown kindness to the house of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, such a dog's head, that thou chargest me to day with a fault concerning this woman? So do God to Abner, and more also; if, 9 as Jehovah hath sworn to David, I do not so to him; By transferring the dominion of the house 10 of Saul, and by setting up the throne of David over Israel, and over Judah, from Dan even to Beer-sheba." And "Ishbosheth" could make 11 no answer to Abner, because he feared him.

Abner then sent messengers to David, on his 12 behalf, saying, "Whose is the land?" saying also, "Make thy covenant with me; and, behold, my hand shall be with thee, to bring over all Israel unto thee." And "David" said, 13 "Well: I will make a covenant with thee; but one thing I require of thee, 'That thou shalt not see my face, when thou comest to me, unless thou bring Michal, Saul's daughter.'" And David sent messengers to Ishbosheth, Saul's 14 son, saying, "Deliver up to me my wife Michal, whom I espoused to myself with a hundred fore-skins of the Philistines." And Ish- 15 bosheth sent, and took her from her husband, the challenge. The event of things often alters men's opinions. This may be applied to civil war, and to all contentions and differences; when once begun we know not where they will end, but they will certainly produce bitterness. This is true of every sin, if men would consider the remorse of conscience which attends it, the loss of reputation and comfort, and what is of infinitely greater consequence, the loss of their souls, they would, surely not be led so easily to the commission of it. Let us then always remember that sin "will be bitterness in the end; that at the last it will bite like a serpent, and sting like an adder." May we therefore stand in awe and sin not, as the only way to preserve our peace, and secure a happy end.

might justly suspect, that he was aspiring to the throne. It doth not appear from what follows, whether Abner was guilty or not.

8. Such a dog's head. This phrase David considers as denoting what is vile and abject. 'Am I become so abject, &c.'

9, 10. From what is here said, however we may admire Abner as a brave man and distinguished Commander, in supporting the house of Saul, he had acted against the dictates of his own conscience, and as far as was in his power opposed the will of heaven. Compare verse 18.

15. Ishbosheth sent and took, &c. David had a right to demand his wife, who had been torn from him unjustly; and he doubtless did it to

- 16 from Phaltiel, the son of Laish. And her husband went along with her, weeping behind her, to Bahurim. Then said Abner to him, "Go, return." And he returned.
- 17 Then Abner spoke with the elders of Israel, saying, "Ye sought for David, in times past, to be king over you: Now then, make him king. For Jehovah hath spoken of David, saying, 'By the hand of my servant David, I will save my people Israel out of the hand of the Philistines, and out of the hand of all their enemies.'"
- 18 Thus also Abner spoke in the ears of Benjamin. Abner then went to inform David, in Hebron, all that had seemed good to Israel, and that had seemed good to the whole house of Benjamin.
- 19 So Abner came to David, to Hebron, and twenty men with him. And David made a feast for
- 20 Abner, and the men who were with him. And Abner said to David, "I will arise and go, and will gather all Israel to my lord, the king, that they may make a covenant with thee, and that thou mayest reign over all that thy heart desireth." And David sent Abner away; and he went in peace.
- 21 And, behold, the servants of David, with Joab, came from pursuing a horde, and brought with them a great spoil; but Abner was not with David in Hebron; for he had sent him away,
- 22 and he was gone in peace. When Joab and all the host that was with him had come, they told Joab, saying, "Abner, the son of Ner came to the king; and he hath sent him away, and he is
- 23 gone in peace." Then Joab came to the king, and said, "What hast thou done? behold, Abner came to thee; why hast thou thus sent him away, so that he is clear gone? Thou must know, that Abner, the son of Ner, came to deceive thee, and to know thy going out and thy coming in, and to know all that thou doest." And when Joab had gone from David, he sent 26 messengers after Abner, who brought him back from the well of Sirah: but David knew it not. And when Abner had returned to Hebron, Joab 27 took him aside, in the gate, to speak with him secretly; and he smote him there, in the groin, for the blood of Asahel, his brother, so that he died.

And when afterwards David heard, he said, 28 "I, and my kingdom are guiltless for ever, before Jehovah, of the blood of Abner, the son of Ner: Let it rest on the head of Joab, and 29 on all his father's house; and let there not fail to be, in the house of Joab, one that hath an issue, or that is a leper, or that leaneth on a staff, or that falleth by the sword, or that wanteth bread." Thus Joab, and Abishai his brother, 30 slew Abner, because he had slain their brother Asahel, in the battle at Gibeon.

And David said to Joab, and to all the people 31 who were with him, "Rend your garments, and gird yourselves with sackcloth, and mourn for Abner." And king David followed the bier. And they buried Abner in Hebron: and the 32 king raised his voice, and wept at the grave of Abner; and all the people wept also. And the 33 king lamented and said,

"Died Abner, as a criminal dieth?
Thy hands were not bound;

strengthen his dominion, and reconcile the friends of Saul to his person and government.

17—21. Abner soon put his threat in execution. He doubtless knew the inclinations of the leading persons; and in the unsettled state of the kingdom, he and the elders judged it best to give up a hopeless contest, and to endeavour to restore order, and establish peace. They do not propose to submit to David, but on conditions. Abner seems to have stipulated for the chief command; and he engages to bring over the people on certain terms. So that David was not an absolute king; he reigned over a free people; a people who knew their rights and who defended them when necessary.

22—27. Joab who had been clearing the country of a horde of those plunderers who often infested it, returned and was informed that Abner had been with the king. He pretended that Abner was deceiving him; that his real design was to ascertain the force and plans of David. Joab even insinuated that David ought to have secured him, and not sent him away in peace. Unknown to his royal master he sent for Abner back, and treacherously murdered him. I have followed Piscator in rendering (בגל) secretly; and so Coverdale and Cranmer rendered.

28, 29. David might justly maintain his own innocence; but did he not transgress the law, Deut. xxiv. 16, in imprecating a curse on the family and children of Joab for ever? His abhorrence of so foul and base a murder might prompt him to speak thus unadvisedly.

30. Had slain their brother. This was in the war, and on the part of Abner with reluctance, and could be no just cause for this treacherous deed. It appears Abishai aided and abetted Joab in the crime; and he is considered as also guilty.

31. Said to Joab. The king commands him especially to mourn for Abner, and doubtless for his crime.

33. As a criminal dieth. To render (בגל) fool, does not convey the sense. I have followed several modern critics in rendering a criminal; and the next verse justifies this sense. Though this elegy is short, it is in David's usual strain of eloquence.

CHAP. IV. 4. I have transposed with Geddes this verse hither for

Thy feet were not put into fetters:
As one falleth, before wicked men—
So Abner, fellest thou!

35 And all the people again wept over him. And when all the people came to persuade David to eat bread, while it was yet day, David swore, saying, "So may God do to me, and more also, if I taste bread, or aught else, until the sun go 36 down." And all the people took notice of this, and it pleased them, as whatsoever the king did 37 pleased the people: For all the people, and all Israel, understood, that day, that it was not by the king's order that Abner, the son of Ner, 38 had been slain. Again the king said to his servants, "Know ye not that a prince and a great 39 man hath this day fallen in Israel? And I am this day, weak, though anointed king; and these men, the sons of Zeruiah, are too stubborn for me: Jehovah will reward the evil-doer according to his evil deeds."

B. C. 1048. Ishbosheth is slain, his head cut off and brought to David; who causeth his murderers to be slain and his head to be buried.

CHAP. IV. 1. *Sept. Syr. Vulg. Arab.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. In Abner we see the fatal effects of pride and ambition. It was these that tempted him to revolt; he could not bear reproof. Pride also tempted Joab to murder Abner; he could not bear a rival. To what treachery, and often villany, do the pride and ambition of men lead them! Let it be our endeavour to cultivate an humble spirit, and not to mind high things. "Seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not; for with the lowly is wisdom," and safety and happiness.

2. How odious is it to make religion the tool of policy! Abner had no more religion than most ministers of state have; yet how godlily does he talk when he would gain over Israel. He had no regard to the oracle of God before; but when it would serve his turn, he quoted it, and urged upon the people a regard to it. Who would have expected to hear such good words out of Abner's mouth. He showed no signs of godliness, till his ambition and the sake of connexion. He justly observes that this is its proper place: "They had now lost Abner; Ishbosheth was a weak pusillanimous prince; and the son of Jonathan, the next hope of the royal family, was lame. The fourth verse, which mentions this circumstance, comes, therefore, naturally in here; which it does not after v. 3, as every common reader must perceive.

2. Chiefs of hordes. These had been engaged to support and strength-discouraged, and all the Israelites were in a state of confusion. For, though Jonathan, Saul's 4 son, had a son, he was lame of his feet. He was but five years old when the tidings came of the death of Saul and Jonathan from Jezreel, and his nurse took him up and fled: and, in the hurry of her flight, he fell, and became lame. And his name was Mephibosheth.

Now, 'Ishbosheth', Saul's son, had two men 2 who were chiefs of hordes: the name of the one was Baanah, and the name of the other Rechab; the sons of Rimmon, a Beerothite, of the children of Benjamin; for Beeroth was now reckoned to Benjamin: As the original Beero- 3 thites had fled to Gittaim, and are sojourners there until this day. And the sons of Rimmon, 5 the Beerothite, Rechab and Baanah, went, and came about mid-day to the house of Ishbosheth, who was then lying on a bed, as it was noon: And they went into the midst of the house, as 6 if to fetch wheat; and the woman who kept the door had fallen asleep". So Rechab and Baanah his brother, went to the house, and as Ishbosheth was lying on his bed in his bed- 7 chamber, they smote him in the groin, and slew him, and took off his head, and escaped. And revenge led him to do so. O, how abominable is it to cloak selfish views with the name of God. This is the way of hypocrites in general, they have God near to their mouths, but it is far from their thoughts to honour and obey him. Men may thus be deceived, but God cannot. 'The hypocrite his soul hateth.'

3. We may justly lament the fall of great and honourable men, whatever their private characters may be. Abner had been faithful to Saul, and had great abilities for public services, had they been well employed; and David lamented his fall. Honour is due to the remains and memory of a man of valour and merit, though he feared not God. But we should especially lament the fall of those who are truly great, great in the sight of God and all good men. Considering the loss which the public will sustain, all respect is due to their remains; 'the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance.'

en the house of Saul; and like other mercenaries were ready to take the strongest side.

3. Gittaim. There was a city in the tribe of Benjamin of this name, Nehem. ii. 33; but Michaelis suspects that this was the entrance or suburbs of Gath.

6, 7. The text here is confused, and generally admitted to be erroneous. From the connexion, with the assistance of the Sept. and Vulg. I they took his head, and went all night by the way of the wilderness. And they brought the head of Ishbosheth to David, to Hebron, and said to the king, "Behold the head of Ishbosheth, the son of Saul, thine enemy, who sought thy life. Jehovah hath this day avenged my lord, the king, of Saul, and of his seed."

9 And David answered Rechab, and Baanah his brother, the sons of Rimmon, the Beerothite, and said to them, "As Jehovah liveth, who hath redeemed my soul out of every distress! 10 If, when one told me, saying, 'Behold, Saul is dead,' thinking that he brought good tidings, I took hold of him, and slew him in Ziklag, when he expected that I would have given him a reward for his tidings: How much more, when wicked men have slain a just person, in his own house, upon his own bed, shall I not now require his blood at your hand, and destroy you 11 from the earth?" David then commanded his young men, and they slew them, and cut off their hands and their feet, and hanged them up over the pool in Hebron. But the head of Ish-bosheth, they took and buried in the sepulchre of Abner, in Hebron.

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 1048. David anointed king over Israel; he takes Jerusalem, and carries on a successful war against the Philistines.

THEN came all the tribes of Israel to Hebron, 1 to David, and spoke "to him", saying, "Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh. Also, in 2 time past, when Saul was king over us, thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest back Israel. And Jehovah had said to thee, 'Thou shalt tend, as a shepherd, my people Israel, and thou shalt be ruler over them.'" Thus came all 3 the elders of Israel to the king, unto Hebron; and king David made a covenant with them in Hebron, before Jehovah: and they anointed David king over Israel.

David was thirty years old when he began 4 to reign, and he reigned forty years. Seven 5 years and six months he reigned over Judah in Hebron: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty three years over all Israel and Judah.

CHAP. V.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. The unhappy accident which happened to Mephibosheth, may remind us of the danger to which infants are exposed, and should make us thankful for the use of our limbs. His nurse apprehended the Philistines would seek for him, and she fled in a fright, and dropped her charge. To such accidents are little ones exposed; nor are the children of great and good men free from such dangers. What reason have we to be thankful for all our near escapes from death, and for the preservation of our bones; that none of them are broken, or rendered useless, or less useless than they otherwise would have been. It is God who holds us up from the womb, and preserves us through the feeble and dangerous state of infancy.

2. Let the recollection of God's kindness to us, prevent us from taking any unlawful methods for our own security and advancement, or being pleased with others who do so for us. David depended upon God, and found him kind and faithful. He would not be beholden to have attempted to restore it; and my version is, at least, coherent and perspicuous. See Note, Hebrew Bible. Harmer has shown that it was, and is, the custom for soldiers to receive a certain quantity of wheat, &c. per day; and their coming for such a supply could excite no suspicion.

10—12. Ishbosheth had done nothing to deserve death; and these wicked and unprincipled men, met with the treatment they merited. David did not seek the accomplishment of the divine promises, by encouraging such deeds of blood. In his own conduct to Saul he had shown a noble generosity, and a high regard to the life of the enemy.

any man, especially when taking such unjustifiable methods to serve him. He who has observed the divine care, and seeks deliverance from heaven, needs not the aid of treachery: 'he that believeth will not make haste.'

3. We may observe the righteous judgment of God on treachery and villany. Little did these captains think death would be the reward for their intelligence. But their evil doings were turned upon their own heads. God abhors bloody and deceitful men, and they should have no countenance from us. Such will be the case of those who think to serve the cause of Christ, by war and persecution, by fraud and rapine; who, under colour of religion, murder princes, break solemn contracts, and act deceitfully and treacherously. 'But, as Mr. Henry observes, however men may canonize such methods of serving Christ and the catholic church, Christ will let them know another day, that christianity was not intended to destroy humanity; and they who think thus to merit heaven, shall not escape the damnation of hell.'

legates: for it is not probable, that all the men came on this occasion.—Behold we are thy bone, &c. This was a reason why they should choose him, and a proof that he was qualified by law, being one of their brethren. In the next verse they assign two other reasons, his valour and conduct under Saul, and God's appointment of him to tend, as a shepherd, his people.

3. They anointed David, &c. The first anointing, was only a designation to the office, and was done privately, (1 Sam. xvi. 13.) the second only over the tribe of Judah, (ch. ii. 4.) this third over all Israel. He was probably anointed by the high priest; and we read 1 Chron. xii. that upwards of three hundred and forty thousand came together on this

6 And the king and his men went to Jerusalem against the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land; and they said, "Thou canst not come in hither, unless thou canst remove the sentinels and patrols, thinking David could not come in 7 thither. Nevertheless, David took the citadel of Zion, which is now called the city of David.
8 For David said on that day, "Whosoever first smiteth the Jebusites, and through the secret passage reacheth the sentinels and patrols, who detest the person of David, (because the sentinels and patrols had said, "Into this house he shall not come,") he shall be chief captain*.*
9 So Joab, being the first who went up, was made chief captain*.* And David dwelt in the citadel, and it was called the city of David: for David built a wall round about from Millo and inward.
10 And David went on, and grew great, and Jehovah, the God of hosts, was with him. And Hiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, with cedar trees, and carpenters, and masons;
12 and they built a house for David. And when David perceived that Jehovah had established him king over Israel, and that he had exalted his kingdom for his people Israel's sake, David took more concubines and wives at Jerusalem, after he had come from Hebron; and more occasion, and feasted before the king, with royal magnificence, for three days.

6. To Jerusalem. This was formerly called Jebus; and the fortress, from its situation, seems hitherto to have withstood the efforts of the Israelites to reduce it. If the remark of the historian, Judges i. 8, be correct, the town had been taken and burnt; but from Josh. i. 21; xiv. 10, it is clear the fortress had not been taken, and the city might have been rebuilt. —Sentinels and patrols. I follow Geddes in thus rendering הערים and המסות, in the common version rendered, the blind and the lame. The meaning given, though not supported by ancient or modern versions, is fairly deducible from the sense of the verbs, עיר and פסח; the former of which denotes to awake, to excite, or arouse, and as a participle, one who is awake, and active, which is evidently descriptive of a sentinel. The latter verb denotes to pass on, over, or upon; to hop about as birds do; and nothing can better describe the duty of a patrol. The exigence of the place supports this sense of the terms, but the usual sense admits of no explanation. Some have supposed, that by blind and lame, the idols of the Jebusites are meant; but how could these say, 'into this house he shall not come,' when it is their character, 'that they have mouths, but speak not?'

and Nathan, and Solomon, And Ibhar, and 15 Elishua, *Elipelet and Nagoh", and Nepheg, and Japhia, And Elishama, and Eliada, and 16 Eliphalet.

But when the Philistines heard that they had 17 anointed David king over Israel, all the Philistines went up to seek David; and David heard of it, and went down to the citadel. The Philistines had now come and spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim. And David inquired 18 of Jehovah, saying, "Shall I go out against the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into my hand?" And Jehovah said to David, "Go out; for I will assuredly deliver the Philistines into thy hand." And David came to Baal-perazim, 20 and David smote them there, and said, "Jehovah hath broken down mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters." Therefore he called the name of that place Baal-perazim, [BAAL OF THE BROKEN.] For there they left their idols, 21 and David and his men burned them.

Again the Philistines came up, and spread 22 themselves in the valley of Rephaim. And 23 when David inquired of Jehovah, he said, "Thou shalt not go out to meet them: make a circuit behind them, and come upon them over against the mulberry trees. And, when 24 thou hearest the sound of a motion in the tops of the mulberry trees, then thou shalt bestir thyself: for then Jehovah will go out before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines." And Others understand the words to mean, the blind and lame are sufficient to defend the place; but the narrative opposes this explanation. The version given removes all the difficulties.

9. Millo. This was a strong fortress, a royal palace, and armory. The fort was in the centre, the city within the circle, and Millo in the circumference; perhaps, on that part of the hill which was easiest to attack. It seems to be a general name for any strong fort or bulwark. The cxv psalm was composed on occasion of this victory.

11. And they built, &c. The Israelites were chiefly employed in agriculture, while the Tyrians were devoted to merchandise and the arts.

17. When the Philistines, &c. The Philistines did not stir during their civil war, hoping they would destroy one another; but when they heard that the kingdom was united, that Jerusalem was taken, and an alliance formed with Hiram, they thought it time to stir themselves, and raised all their forces to go and fight David.

18. The valley of Rephaim. As David went into the fortress of Zion, it is evident this vale lay near Jerusalem. Compare Josh. xv. 8; xviii. 16, and Isa. xvii. 5.

David did so, as Jehovah had commanded him; and smote the Philistines from Gibeah along unto Gazer.

CHAPTER VI.

B. C. 1042. David designs to bring up the ark; Uzzah smitten, and the ark left at the house of Obed-edom; at length the ark is brought to Zion with great joy.

- 1 DAVID now assembled all the chosen men of
- 2 Israel, thirty thousand. And David arose, and all the chief people who were with him, of the chiefs of Judah, and went "to Gibeah" of Kirjath-jearim to bring up thence the ark of God, at which is invoked the name of Jehovah, God of hosts, who dwelleth between the cherubs.
- 3 And they set the ark of God upon a new cart, and brought it from the house of Abinadab which was in Gibeah: and Uzzah and his brothers, the
- 4 sons of Abinadab, drove the new cart. And Uzzah walked by the Ark of God; and his brothers
- 5 went before the ark. And David and all the house of Israel sung before Jehovah "with all their might"; and played on harps, and on

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. We may here observe, that God makes kings for the sake of mankind, and not men for the sake of kings. God made David king, and exalted his kingdom for his people Israel's sake. So king David thought; and happy would it be for mankind were all kings of the same mind; would they but consider that they are ministers of God for the good of mankind; that this is the end of their appointment, and that the pursuit of this end is their great duty, and the attaining of it their true glory. How different are these from the sentiments of many kings! Let us pray, that all kings may think and act thus; and be thankful if we find that our own does so.

2. 'The counsel of God, that shall stand.' What a great many hindrances were there to David's settlement on the throne! He had some competitors, and for a long time great disaffection among the

20. Baal-perazim. Compare Isa. xxviii. 21.

CHAP. VI. 2. Of the chiefs of Judah. I have followed the Sept. and Vulg. in this version. Dathe and others render as a proper name, from Baale, or to Baale of Judah; the same as Kirjath-jearim, 1 Chron. xiii. 6. I now prefer the version given, because in the next verse, the ark is said to be in the house of Abinadab, which was in Gibeah, or the hilly part of the city; and because the reading here (בִּצְרֹן) is different from 1 Chron. xiii. 6.

3. And Uzzah and his brothers. I follow the Sept. in this version; others render as a proper name.

4. And Uzzah, &c. Nothing can be more evident than that the first part of this verse is a mere repetition of a part of the former, and which ought to be omitted. Cappellus contends that the whole verse should be psalteries, and on tabours, and on cornets, and on cymbals.

And when they came to Nachon's threshing-floor, Uzzah put forth "his hand" to the ark of God, and took hold of it; for the oxen started. And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Uzzah; and God smote him there; and there he died by the ark of God. And David was 8 grieved that Jehovah had stricken Uzzah; and the name of the place is called Perez-uzzah [THE STRIKING OF UZZAH]. And David was 9 afraid of Jehovah that day, and said, "How shall the ark of Jehovah come to me?" So David 10 would not remove the ark of Jehovah unto him into the city of David: but David carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom, the Gathite. 11 And the ark of Jehovah continued in the house of Obed-edom the Gathite three months: and Jehovah blessed Obed-edom, and all his household.

And it was told king David, saying, "Jehovah 12 bath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that belongeth to him, because of the ark of people; yet all were broken through: God determined that David should rule, and at length brought his purpose about. Faithful is he who hath promised, and able to effect whatsoever he hath foretold, however unlikely it may appear to us.

3. In any settlement or advancement, so far from being secure, let us rather expect trouble and molestation. David was rich, had a numerous army, was settled in a strong fort, had wives and children about him, was never so comfortable and happy before, and seemingly so secure. Then came the Philistines, who had taken no advantage of the distracted state of Israel before; but now, when least expected, they made a formidable attack. In every agreeable scene of life, we should expect alteration, and not indulge too much confidence; for this is a changing world, and he who expects least from it, is likely to be most happy in it.

omitted; but Houbigant ingeniously conjectures that (וְהָיָה) should begin it. —Set on a new cart. This was contrary to the law, which required them to carry it on their shoulders. The Philistines had done so, 1 Sam. vi. 11, and they thought they might do the same. Their zeal made them hasty and inconsiderate. The ark had been forty six years in obscurity, perhaps longer; and probably there was not a priest living, who had seen it removed.

5. With all their might. The present text has, on all the woods of fir, which is evidently corrupted; while the reading in Chronicles is as evidently right. The learned reader may consult the Note, Hebrew Bible. The 68 Psalm is thought to have been composed for this occasion.

7. For having put forth his hand. This shows the offence of Uzzah, who did not regard the ark with sufficient reverence, and who thought that God could not take care of that special token of his presence. He seems

God." So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness : *for there was with David seven choirs, and victims were slaughtered". And thus it was, that when they who bore the ark of Jehovah had gone six paces, an ox and a fatling were sacrificed. And David danced before Jehovah with all his might ; and David was girded with a precious ephod. So David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of Jehovah with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet. And as the ark of Jehovah came into the city of David, Michal, Saul's daughter, looked through a window, and saw king David leaping and dancing before Jehovah ; and she despised him in her heart. And they brought in the ark of Jehovah, and set it in its own place, in the midst of the tabernacle which David had pitched for it: and David offered burnt-offerings and feast-offerings before Jehovah. And as soon as David had made an end of offering burnt-offerings and feast-offerings, he blessed the people in the name of Jehovah of hosts. He then distributed among all the people, among the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a piece of roast meat, and a fritter. And all the people departed, every one to his own house. Then David returned to bless his own household. And Michal, the daughter of Saul, came out to meet David, and said to him, "How honourable, to day, was the king of Israel, who exposed himself to day, to the eyes of the handmaids of his own servants, as one of the vulgar is wont to expose himself ! " Yea, said David to Michal, in the presence of Jehovah who chose me before thy father, and before all his house, to appoint me ruler over the people of Jehovah, over Israel ! Hence in the presence of Jehovah I will still play the vulgar man ; And will be much more vulgar and base in mine own eyes than this. And as to the handmaids of whom thou hast spoken, of them shall I be had in honour. As to Michal, the daughter of Saul, she had no child unto the day of her death.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. The return of the ark from obscurity, and the reviving of God's public ordinances and worship, are occasions of great joy to all pious people. David was not easy till he had contrived and executed some scheme to bring home the ark ; all Israel cheerfully concurred, and the ceremony was performed with great joy. It is a great happiness to a nation, when the restraints of public worship are taken off, and when the civil power supports and encourages religion. We should be thankful for the revival of neglected ordinances. When religion is openly and freely professed, and had in reputation, it is deservedly matter of the greatest joy. 2. Every stroke upon others for their sin should be a warning to us to repent of our own. The death of Uzzah should teach us to reverence the Most High, to speak honourably of him and his worship, and show the greatest respect to whatever relates to him to have dropped down dead. Compare Numb. iv. 15—20. 10. The Gathite. Not a Philistine Gathite ; but an inhabitant of Gath-rimmon, a Levitical city in the tribe of Dan. Compare Josh. xxi. 24. 12—15. We have a more full and particular account of the manner of bringing up the ark in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xv. Convinced of their former error, David and the elders adhered to the law by appointing the Levites to bear the ark. 17. In the midst of the tabernacle, &c. The old tabernacle of Moses was still at Gibeon, compare 1 Chron. xvi. 39 ; xxi. 29, and 2 Chron. i. 3. So that David prepared a new one for the ark, until the temple should be built, which he now designed to build. 18. He blessed the people. Prayed for their prosperity ; and on this or his service. It is an awful illustration of that truth, "I will be sanctified in all them that draw nigh unto me, and before all the people I will be glorified." Uzzah's intention was good, but the action was bad. In all matters of worship we should keep close to our rule, reverence God's sanctuary ; and since he is holy and jealous, we should serve him with reverence and godly fear. 3. Let us learn from the example of Obed-edom, to give the ark a hearty reception into our houses, as the way to secure God's blessing. Let us set up the worship of God there, and invite him to dwell with us. He is a good guest, and all about us will fare the better for him. The greatest men should not think this below them. David acted as his own chaplain, and blessed his household. It is the highest honour to worship God ; and another day he will say to those who sincerely do so, "Well done good and faithful servants, enter ye into the joy of your Lord." occasion the 105 Psalm was composed and sung. 1 Chron. xvi. 19. And a fritter. So all the versions render. There is no authority for the common version, a flagon. 20. Who exposed himself, &c. The original never means to uncover any part of the body so as to expose it to view. What shocked the pride of Michal was to see her husband, the king of Israel, demeaning himself so ; putting off his royal robes, joining with the people, and exposing himself to every girl who went to see the procession. 21 Play the vulgar man. Dr. Chandler contends, that playing here refers to David, playing on some musical instrument, like one of the common people. The word never has this sense ; but uniformly signifies, to sport, to dance, &c. to indicate joy in any way.

CHAPTER VII.

B. C. 1042. David purposes to build a house for God; his purpose is accepted, and a blessing promised to his deed; his prayer and thanksgiving.

1 Now when the king was settled in his own house, and Jehovah had given him rest from
2 all his enemies around, The king said to Nathan the prophet, "See now, I dwell in a house of cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth within curtains." And Nathan said to the king, "Go, do all that is in thy heart; for Jehovah is with thee."
4 But on that night, the word of Jehovah came to Nathan, saying, "Go and tell my servant David, Thus saith Jehovah, 'Wouldst thou
6 build for me a house to dwell in? For I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked
7 about in a tent or tabernacle. In all the places in which I have walked with the children of Israel spoke I a word to any of the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to tend my people Israel, saying, 'Why build ye not for me a
8 house of cedar?' Now then, shalt thou say to my servant David, 'Thus saith Jehovah, God of hosts, I took thee from the sheep-cote, from following the flock, to be ruler over my people ever thou wentest, and have cut off from before thee all thine enemies. Also thy name I will make as great as the name of the great ones, who are on the earth. Moreover I will appoint 10 a place for my people Israel, and will so plant them, that they may dwell in their own place, and move no more; nor shall wicked men afflict them any more, as formerly; As from the time 11 I appointed judges over my people Israel. To thee also will I give rest from thine enemies. Moreover, I Jehovah declare to thee, that I will build up thy house. For when thy days shall 12 be completed, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will raise up thy seed after thee, the offspring of thine own body, and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build a house for my 13 name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever. I will be his father, and he 14 shall be my son. If he commit iniquity, I will chastise him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men: But my kindness 15 'I will not withdraw' from him as I did from Saul, whom I removed from before thee. And 'his' house and 'his' kingdom shall be established for ever before 'me': 'his' throne shall be established for ever." According to all 17 these words, and according to all this vision, did Nathan the prophet speak to David.
9 Israel: And I have been with thee whitherso-

4. We may learn from David to esteem the duties of religion our honour and our joy. While engaged in serving God, we are most suitably and honourably employed; and nothing should excite such emotions of joy as a sense of the divine favour. Should the wicked, like Michal, despise us, we shall have the approbation of the wise and good; and above all, the approbation of conscience and of the Lord of conscience. Ridicule, not reason, is the weapon often employed by the enemies of truth; but wisdom is justified by her children. A good man will despise calumny, and will commit himself to him who judgeth righteously. Let us remember the words of our Lord, "Happy are ye when men revile you, &c."

22. And will be yet more vulgar, &c. 'Whatever may be my condition as a king, I will always be humble in the judgment I form of myself; and I am satisfied the meanest of the people will respect me more for my familiarity and condescension, than if I assumed haughty airs.' His resolution was pious, as well as politic.

23. She had no child. God saw fit to mortify her pride in this way; so that though she was a person of the first rank, she had no son to succeed David.

CHAP. VII. 2. Dwelleth within curtains. God had promised, that when the people were settled, he would choose himself a place, where his name should be invoked, and David thought this was the time. He therefore formed the design of building a temple, but first consulted Nathan the Prophet.

7. To any of the judges. The common reading, 'any of the tribes,' is certainly improper; and it is a happy circumstance, that the parallel place, has retained the genuine word. The difference consists only in one letter. To talk of any of the tribes of Israel, feeding or tending the people of Israel, is wholly at variance with reason and propriety. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

12—16. Some would refer what is here said exclusively to Messiah; but in my opinion, this is to pervert rather than to explain scripture. The words have certainly a reference to Solomon, who was not yet born; and who actually performed what is here said. He built a house for God; and God gave him wisdom, wealth, and prosperity beyond all who were before him. He was an eminent type of Messiah, both in his person and in his works.

14. If he commit iniquity. Kennicott would render, 'Even in his suffering for iniquity;' but in this version he is singular, nor does it agree

18 Then went king David into the tabernacle, and sat before Jehovah, and said, "Who am I.
O Lord Jehovah! and what is my house that 19 hitherto thou hast so promoted me? And, as if this was but a small thing in thine eyes, O
God Jehovah, thou hast spoken also of thy ser-vant's house, for a great while to come. And is this the manner of man, O God Jehovah?
20 And what can David say more to thee? for 21 thou Lord Jehovah knowest thy servant. For thine own word's sake, and according to thine own heart, thou doest all these great things,
which thou hast made known to thy servant.
22 Wherefore thou art great, O God Jehovah: for there is none like thee, nor is there a God besides thee; according to all that we have heard with 23 our own ears. And what one nation on the earth is like thy people Israel, whom thou, O God, wentest to redeem for a people to thyself, and to make thyself a name, and to do for "them"
great and terrible things, "to drive out" before thy people, whom thou redeemedst to thyself 24 from Egypt, the nations and their gods? For thou hast confirmed to thyself thy people Israel
to be thy people for ever; and thou Jehovah 25 art become their God. And now, O God Jehovah, the word that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant, and concerning his house, establish for ever, and do as thou hast said. And 26

let men magnify thy name for ever, saying,
'Jehovah, God of hosts, is the God of Israel;'
and let the house of thy servant David be established before thee. For thou, O Jehovah, God of hosts, the God of Israel, hast revealed to thy servant, saying, 'I will build up thy house:' therefore hath thy servant been encouraged to make this prayer unto thee. And 28
now, O God Jehovah, thou art the only God,
and thy words are true, and thou hast promised this goodness to thy servant: Therefore now 29
let it please thee so to bless the house of thy servant, that it may continue for ever before thee, (since thou, O God Jehovah, hast spoken it,) and with thy blessing let the house of thy servant be for ever blessed."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. We may hence learn how good men feel for the interest of religion. When God prospers them, they show their gratitude, by forming plans to promote his glory; and are ready to honour him with their substance. They cannot see the place of his worship mean, and he satisfied when they dwell in ceiled houses! They cannot endure the thought of his worship, and his ordinances being exposed to contempt! They encourage one another in works and labours of love, for the church of God; and they know 'that their labours shall not be vain in the Lord.'

with the cont. xi!—With the rod of men; that is, with moderation and gentleness, suited to human frailty; in such a manner as men are wont to correct their children.

18. Sat before Jehovah. Dr. Pococke, in his first volume, has given us the figure of a person half sitting and half kneeling, that is, kneeling so as to rest the most muscular part of his body on his heels: this he observes is the manner in which inferior persons sit at this day before great men. In this manner, I suppose, it was that David sat before the Lord, when he went into the sanctuary to bless him for his promise concerning his family. Sitting, after this manner, was expressive of the greatest humiliation, and

CHAP. VIII. 2. "Sept. and Vulg.

2. God's promise to be with his people is very gracious, and very encouraging. What is promised concerning Solomon, is applicable to all christians. God is their father, they are his children; if they are dutiful and obedient, they shall find him kind; "if they commit iniquity, he will chasten them with the rod of men," of old men, who are remarkably tender to their children. We see here, that afflictions are articles of God's covenant, and pledges of his parental love; he corrects with all tenderness and compassion, but does not disinherit us, does not take away his loving-kindness. Let us therefore honour our therefore no improper posture for one that appeared before the ark of God.

19. And is this the manner, &c. Geddes renders, 'Such, O Lord God, is the custom of mankind.' This is the sense which Houbigant and others have given; and they suppose that David wondered that God should show the same solicitude about his posterity, that parents do about their own children. Our version considers it as denoting, that the kindness which God had shown, was far beyond what man has either the inclination, or the ability to bestow; and this I have retained because it seems as probable as any.

23. To drive out. Happily the parallel place retains the true reading, and shows in what manner, the corrupted reading, 'thy land,' has obtained put to death, and one full line-length to keep alive. Thus the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

- 3 David smote also Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of Zobah, who came to recover his 4 territory, on the river Euphrates. And David took from him a thousand chariots, and seven "thousand" horsemen, and twenty thousand foot-5 men: and David ham-strung all the chariot horses, reserving of them only for a hundred chari-

slew of the Syrians twenty-two thousand men.
7 David then put garrisons in Syria of Damascus; and the Syrians became servants to David, and brought gifts. Thus Jehovah preserved David 8 whithersoever he went. And David took the golden shields which were on the servants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.
9 And from "Tibbath", and from Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, king David took very much brass.
10 Then Toi, king of Hamath, heard that David had smitten all the host of Hadadezer. And Toi sent Joram, his son, to king David, to salute father, and be in subjection to him and live.

3. Every good man may justly wonder, when he considers his guilt, his nothingness, at God's condescension and grace towards him. Well may his mind be filled with astonishment and surprise; that God should deal so with man, a man, unprofitable, guilty creature, who deserves nothing, and has forfeited all. Is this the manner of men, O Lord God! to treat rebels and enemies so favourably? "Lord, what is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou shouldst visit him?" with such peculiar and distinguishing mercy.

ed. With the reading adopted it is plain and coherent.

CHAP. VIII. 1. Gath and her towns. This is the reading of the parallel place; and now generally admitted as what was once the reading here. The words, Metheg-ama admit no proper explication; and as a proper name, never occur elsewhere. This error is ancient, as it obtained in the old versions. The Syr. and Arab. have Ramath-gama. The Vulg. renders, "David received a bridle of tribute from the hand of the Philistines." The Chald. "David took the advantage of the revel from &c." When the text is corrupted, thus various and inconsistent are the versions.

2. One line length to, &c. So the Vulg. and equivalently the Sept. David found it necessary to cut off many to secure his conquest. We are not to imagine he killed one half of the people. He doubtless only cut off those who had been most active in promoting war, or might have power to excite new wars. The text is too general to admit a sense so particular, as some would attribute to it.

him, and to bless him, because he had fought against Hadadezer, and smitten him; for Hadadezer was at war with Toi. And Joram brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass: Which, likewise, king David dedicated to Jehovah, with the silver and gold that he dedicated of all the nations whom he had subdued; Of Syria, and of Moab; and of the children of Ammon, and of the Philistines, and of Amalek, and of the spoil of Hadadezer, son of Rehob, king of Zobah. And David on his return from smiting the Syrians, erected a monument.

*Meanwhile Abishai, the son of Zeruiah, slew of the Edomites, in the valley of Salt, eighteen thousand men. And he put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons, and all they of Edom became David's servants. Thus Jehovah preserved David whithersoever he went. And David reigned over all Israel; and David executed judgment and justice to all his people. And Joab, the son of Zeruiah, was over the host; and Jehoshaphat, the son of Ahilud, was recorder; And Zadock, the son of Ahitub, and 17

4. After the example of David, good men should be very much concerned to secure the blessing of God upon their families, and be grateful for every instance in which it is bestowed. The best entail is the blessing of God; and this should be diligently sought. Children should be instructed and prepared for it, and taught to value it, and seek it for themselves. David's prayer is a proper one for every head of a family to put up every day. It is the language of holy desire and humble faith. God's blessing is all in all to the happiness of our families; and if he blesses, we shall be blessed; for whom he blesses, is blessed indeed.

3. Zobah. This is supposed to be Nesibis. Saul had probably wrested from him, or his predecessor, a part of his territory (see 1 Sam. xiv. 47) which he now attempted to recover. By the reconquest of his territory; and the subjection of the Syrians of Damascus, the Israelites were now, and not until now, in the possession of the promised land in its full extent. Compare Gen xv. 18; Deut. i. 7; Josh. i. 4.

8. And from Tibbath, &c. In the parallel place these names are Tibbath and Chun. I have adopted the first as most probably the true reading here, as it is in the versions mentioned; and I consider that Berothai ought to be restored there for the same reason.

13. Meanwhile Abishai, &c. In the parallel account Abishai is mentioned as the commander, who obtained the victory; and as (עֲמָשִׁי) Amasai had been already conquered, it is obvious we should read (עֲמָשִׁי) Edom. The vale of salt also proves that (עֲמָשִׁי) Edom is meant, for this was on the confines of Edom.

16. Recorder. The eastern princes used to record all circumstances

Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech, were the priests; 18 and Seraiah was the scribe; And Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, was over both the Cherethites and the Pelethites; and David's own sons were chief ministers.

And the king said, "Is there yet one of the house of Saul, to whom I may show peculiar kindness?" And Ziba said to the king, "There is yet a son 4 of Jonathan, who is lame of his feet." And the king said to him, "Where is he?" And Ziba said to the king, "Behold, he is in the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, in Lo-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. See how carefully David observed the law of God. He did not multiply horses and chariots; he destroyed them. This was contrary to human policy; but he depended on Jehovah for protection. This is a worthy example for all princes, and indeed for all men, to make God's will the rule of their actions; it is the wisest and safest way.

2. We have here a noble example. David was not only a brave commander, but a just king. He not only conquered the enemies of his country, but governed his own people with equity. All Israel felt and owned his gentle sway; the meanest had free access to him; and he dispensed justice without partiality. Happy the people that have such a king! When law is the principle of government, and justice is faithfully administered, a nation of note during their reign, and keep a daily journal. This was an important office, as those who filled it were let into all the secrets of state.

17. Abiathar, the son of, &c. The common text makes Ahimelech, the son of Abiathar, in direct contradiction to 1 Sam. xxi. 1, and xx. 20. In the history of David we never read of Ahimelech being priest; but the name of Abiathar frequently occurs. This text, among many others, remains a proof of the necessity of correcting the common text.

18. Cherethites and Pelethites. These were the king's life-guards and the ready executors of his orders. It has been thought they consisted of those brave men, who fled to David in his exile, and who for their valour and attachment, were advanced to this post of honour.—Chief ministers. So Michaelis explains the word (כהנים), and this sense best suits the connexion.

debar.?' Then king David sent and brought 5 him from the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, from Lo-debar.

Now when Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, had come unto David, he fell on his face, and made obeisance. - And David said, "Mephibosheth." And he answered, "Behold thy servant!" And David said 7 to him, "Fear not; for I will surely show thee kindness, for Jonathan thy father's sake, and will restore thee all the land of Saul thy grandfather; and thou shalt continually eat bread at my table." And "Mephibosheth" bowed himself, and said, "What is thy servant, that thou shouldst regard such a dead dog as I am?" Then the king called to Ziba, Saul's servant, 9 and said to him, "I have given to thy master's son all that belonged to Saul, and to all his house. Thou, therefore, and thy sons, and thy 10 servants, (now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants) shall till the land for him, and bring in the produce, that thy master's son may have food to eat; but Mephibosheth, thy master's son, shall eat bread always at my table." Then said 11 must prosper; for the blessing of God will rest upon such people.

3. Let us learn from the example of David, to consecrate our best to God's service, and honour him with whatsoever he hath blessed us. All the spoils and presents of David were devoted to God, were preparations for the temple, to build and enrich it. He was not intent on enriching his palace, or family, and adorning his armory, but God's house. We should imitate his great zeal and devotion; and abound in works of piety and charity. "Our merchandise and hire should be holiness to the Lord; consecrating our gain unto the Lord, and our substance unto the Lord of the whole earth." Thus David did, and he was not at all the poorer for it; nay, he was the richer, and left his son on the throne, the richest prince then in the world.

CHAP. IX. 3. Peculiar kindness. Literally, 'the kindness of God;' that is great, distinguishing, peculiar kindness. Geddes renders, 'godlike kindness.' Dathé supposes there is a reference to the oath and covenant, which was between David and Jonathan, 1 Sam. xx. 8, &c. and he forms his version accordingly—'that I may show him the kindness, promised with an oath.' Houbigant, 'to whom I may show kindness, through the help of God.'

4. Lo-debar. This was beyond the Jordan; where his friends thought he would be more safe, than in any place nearer to the seat of government. Compare Chap. xvii. 27.

7. Fear not, &c. Mephibosheth seems to have been in some confusion and terror; he might not have heard of the oath, between David and Jonathan his father, and therefore was afraid that this was some contri-

Ziba to the king, "According to all that my lord the king hath commanded his servant, so will thy servant do." So Mephibosheth ate at 12 "his" table, as one of the king's sons. And Mephibosheth had a young son, whose name was Micha. And all that dwelt in the house of 13 Ziba were servants to Mephibosheth. But Mephibosheth dwelt in Jerusalem: for he ate continually at the king's table. And he was lame of both his feet.

CHAPTER X.

B. C. 1037. On the death of Nahash, king of the Ammonites, David sends messengers to comfort Hanun his son; they are shamefully treated; a war is the consequence, and the Ammonites, with their confederates the Syrians, are conquered.

1 AND it came to pass after this, that the king of the children of Ammon died, and Hanun, his 2 son, reigned in his stead. Then said David, "I will show kindness to Hanun, the son of Na-

11. v. 1 ms. Sept. table of David.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. We may learn from the example of David, to cultivate a forgiving temper. Saul had been his inveterate enemy, and for a number of years had sought his life, but he now inquires, "Is there any one of the house of Saul, to whom I may show peculiar kindness?" Henry observes, we must evidence the sincerity of our forgiving those that have been any way unjust or injurious to us, by being ready, as we have opportunity, to show kindness both to them and theirs. We must not only not avenge ourselves upon them, but we must love them, and do them good; and not be backward to do any office of love, and good-will, to those that have done us many an ill turn. This is the way to overcome evil with good, and to find mercy for ourselves and ours, when we or they need it.

2. We are taught to regard the claims, and to discharge the duties of friendship. Kindness to our friends, even to them and theirs, is one of the laws of our holy religion: He that has friends, must show himself friendly. If providence has raised us, and our friends and their families are brought low; yet we must not forget former acquaintance, but rather look upon that, as giving us so much the fairer opportunity of being kind to them; then our friends have most need of us, and we are in the best capacity to vance to ensnare and destroy him, lest he should make some pretensions to the kingdom; and therefore David says, 'Fear not.'—Restore thee all the land, &c. The property of Saul had devolved on David, either in right of his wife, Saul's sons being dead (Num. xxvii. 8,) or as belonging to the crown.

8. Such a dead dog, as me. This is the language of abasement, and expresses the low opinion he had of himself.

11. Are at his table. As the common text stands, it is Ziba, and not the king, who is made to speak. Our translators saw the impropriety of this, and inserted in italics, said the king. By adopting the reading of one hash, as his father showed kindness to me." And David sent to comfort him by his servants, on account of the death of his father. And David's servants came into the land of the children of Ammon. And the princes of the children of Ammon said to Hanun, their lord, "Doth David, in thy sight, honour thy father because he hath sent comforters to thee? Hath not David sent his servants to thee, to search, and to spy out the city, that he may overthrow it?" Hanun therefore took David's servants, 4 and shaved off the one half of their beards, and cut off their garments at the middle, at their thighs, and sent them away. And when it was 5 told to David, he sent to meet them, because they were greatly ashamed; and the king said, "Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return."

help them. Though there be not a solemn league of friendship tying us to this constancy of love; yet there is a sacred law of friendship no less obliging, that to him that is in misery, pity should be showed by his friend.

3. We learn from Mephibosheth, with what temper to receive the distinguishing favours of heaven. There is a great resemblance between his case and ours. As christians, we are adopted into God's family, and invited to his table. We have reason to receive this favour with the greatest humility, and the greatest admiration of his condescension and grace. We have greater favours conferred on us than Mephibosheth had; nobler entertainments, greater honour, and a better estate, even the kingdom of heaven. We are not only restored to the inheritance our father Adam lost, but to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. Mephibosheth was the son of Jonathan, David's friend, who behaved well. But we are children of rebellious parents, and by our personal revolt have exposed ourselves to the divine displeasure; and as the honour which God shows us is so much superior, so much the deeper should be our humility. Lord, what is thy servant? But no words are sufficient to express our meanness, or the matchless grace of God our Saviour.

ms. supported in sense by the Sept. there is no need of any addition.

CHAP. X. 2. His father showed kindness to me. Nahash had been a cruel enemy to Israel, 1 Sam. xi.; Saul had repulsed him, and it is probable he showed kindness to David, when he was at variance with Saul, out of policy. David remembers it; and determines to return it to his son.

4. One half of their beards, &c. Long beards and long robes were at this period considered as badges of honour, as they still are, through a great part of the east. The beard is much regarded. Taking hold of the beard to kiss it, is a mark of the greatest respect. Hence Harmer conceives that Joab, by taking Amasa by the beard, as if he meant to kiss it, re-

they had made themselves odious to David; and the children of Ammon sent and hired the Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thousand foot; and a thousand men of the king of Maacah, and twelve thousand men of Ish-tob. *And they went and encamped before Medeba. And when David heard of this, he sent Joab, and all the host of mighty men. And the children of Ammon came out, and formed in battle array at the entrance of the gate; and the Syrians of Zoba, and of Rehob, and of Ish-tob, and of Maacha, were posted by themselves in the field. When Joab saw that the battle was against him before and behind, he chose out all the tried men of Israel, and formed them in array against the Syrians: And the rest of the people he placed under the command of Abishai his brother, that he might form them in array against the children of Ammon. And he said, "If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me; but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will come and help thee. Be of good courage, and let us act valiantly for our people, and for the cities of our God: and may Jehovah do that which is good in his own sight." Then Joab, and the people who were with him, went on to battle against the Syrians; and they fled before him. And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fleeing, then fled they also before Abishai, and entered into the city. On this, Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jerusalem.

And when the Syrians saw that they were smitten before Israel, they assembled together. And Hadadezer sent, and brought the Syrians who were beyond the river: and they came to Helam, under the command of Shobach, the captain of the host of Hadadezer. And when it was told David, he assembled all Israel, and passed over the Jordan, and came to Helam. And the Syrians formed in array against David, and fought with him. But the Syrians fled before Israel; and David destroyed seven hundred chariots of the Syrians, and seven thousand horse, and forty thousand foot. He smote also, Shobach, the captain of their host, who died there. And when all the kings who were servants to Hadadezer, saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and served them. And the Syrians were afraid to help the children of Ammon any more.

CHAP. X. 6. *1 Chron. xix. 7.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS X. 1. We are taught, from the example of David, to be grateful for kindnesses received. Nahash was a monster of cruelty, and used the Israelites very ill; but as he was kind to David, though his motive for doing so was only to vex Saul, he was willing to show his gratitude. When we receive a kindness, we are not to inquire into the principle whence it flows, or the grounds of it. If the Pharisees gave alms through pride, the receiver was bound to be thankful. Whatever men's hearts are, we are to look to their hands; and repay, not what they meant, but what they did; return the kindness according to our ability. And if our benefactors are dead, we should do it to their children.

dered Amasa unsuspecting. See ch. xx. 9. The indignity, on the other hand, offered to David's ambassadors by Hanun, might perhaps be better illustrated by what the same author tells us, 'That it is a greater mark of infamy, among the Arabs that he visited, to cut off any one's beard, than whipping and branding with us.' Many people in that country, he tells us, would prefer death to this kind of punishment. And when they would express their value for any thing, they say, 'it is worth more than his beard.'

5. Tarry at Jericho. At this time Jericho lay in ruins; and it is probable, that only a few houses were inhabited. They might live in obscurity here, until the marks of their dishonour were done away. Compare 1 Kings xvi. 34.

8. At the entrance of the gate. From 1 Chron. xix. 7, we are inform-

18. *Josephus. Compare 1 Chron. xix. 18.

2. We may observe, that what is well meant may be ill interpreted, and receive a base return; so it was here. It is hard for wicked, selfish men, to think well of others. They judge of others by themselves, and are ready to suspect some selfish design. This suspicious temper argues a very bad mind. If we are so treated, it is no great wonder, for it was so of old. The more we are convinced of the absurdity and impiety of such practices, the more careful we should be not to treat others so. "The soul of the wicked desireth evil, his neighbour findeth no favour in his eyes."

3. Great dangers sometimes inspire bad men with true sentiments of courage and piety. Joab, excepting some actions, behaved

ed, that it was at the entrance of the gate of Medeba, that this battle was fought. This city is reckoned to the tribe of Reuben, Josh. xiii. 16. It was not far from Heshbon; and being a frontier city, it was sometimes in the possession of the Ammonites, and at others of the Moabites, Isa. xvi. 2. I have followed Houbigant in supplying the words added.

9, 10. The Syrians seems to have surpassed the Ammonites, in discipline, and perhaps in courage. Hence Joab selects the best troops to attack them.

16. Beyond the river. That is the Euphrates, on or near to which river Helam was situated. The Vulg. indeed renders, 'and he brought forth their host;' the other versions as the name of a place. The formidable preparations for war roused David; and he hastened to meet the Syrians

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 1035. While Joab besiegeth Rabbah, David committed adultery with Bath-sheba; Uriah sent for, to cover his adultery, refuseth to go in to his wife; he is sent back with orders to Joab to be slain.

- 1 AND on the return of the year, at the time when kings go forth to battle, David sent Joab, and his servants with him, and all Israel; and they destroyed the children of Ammon, and besieged Rabbah. But David abode still at Jerusalem.
- 2 Now it happened one evening, that David arose from off his bed, and walked upon the roof of the royal palace: and from the roof he saw a woman washing herself; and the woman
- 3 had a very beautiful countenance. And David sent and inquired after the woman. And one said, "Is not this Bath-sheba, the daughter of
- 4 Eliam, the wife of Uriah, the Hethite?" And David sent messengers, and took her; and she came in to him, and he lay with her; and when she had purified herself from her uncleanness,
- 5 she returned to her own house. And the woman conceived, and sent and told David, and said, "I am with child."
- 6 And David sent to Joab, saying, "Send to me Uriah, the Hethite." And Joab sent Uriah
- 7 to David. And when Uriah was come to him, David asked him how Joab did, and how the like a prudent, valiant general, and shone as a great man. Here he talks like a good man; even David himself could scarce have talked better. He argues from the most just and influential topics; not from private glory or advantage, but from the honour of God, the safety and credit of Israel; and under a deep sense of an over-ruling providence, piously leaves the success with God. Oh that our commanders would imitate his example! Zeal for God and religion, and the cause of liberty and our country, are the best arguments to inspire men with ardour and courage.

4. We learn from these Syrians, to avoid those snares and dan-and prevent the invasion of his own country. I uniformly read Hadadezer with Houbigant.

CHAP. XI. 1. At the time when kings, &c. Owing to the heat in summer, it was not usual in Judea, and the neighbouring countries to engage in warfare, until September. Few men could bear the fatigues of marching in the hot season; and had they been so imprudent as to engage in war at that season, more would have perished by disease than the sword. — Besieged Rabbah. David followed up his conquests by laying waste the country of the Ammonites, and then attacking their capital; which was at last taken.

2. In modern courts what is here related, would be considered as a mere affair of gallantry; and such conduct would scarcely be noticed as people did, and how the war prospered. And 8 David said to Uriah, "Go down to thy house, and wash thy feet." And Uriah departed out of the palace, and there followed him a mess from the king. But Uriah slept at the gate of 9 the palace, among all the servants of his lord, and went not down to his own house. And 10 when it was told David, saying, "Uriah went not down to his own house," David said to Uriah, "Camest thou not from a journey? why then didst thou not go down to thine own house?" And Uriah said to David, "The ark, 11 and Israel, and Judah, abide in tents; and my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields; shall I then go into mine own house, to eat and to drink, and to lie with my wife? As thou thyself livest, I will not do this thing." And David said to Uriah, 12 "Abide here to day also, and to-morrow I will let thee depart." So Uriah abode in Jerusalem that day. And on the morrow, David called for him, he made him eat and drink in his presence until he had made him drunk: and at even he went to lie on his bed with the servants of his lord, but went not down to his own house.

Now the next morning, David wrote a letter 14 to Joab, and sent it by Uriah. And he wrote in 15 the letter, saying, "Set Uriah in the forefront gers by which we have been already injured. When the Israelites had smitten the Syrians, they forsook their old allies, and made peace. Experience is never good till it is bought; many buy it very dear, and suffer much before they have learned it; but it is better late than never. Let sinners, the enemies of God, act thus. If they have opposed him, and striven with their maker, as all sinners do, let their afflictions, their fears, their terrors of conscience, and disappointment in created comforts, make them solicitous to retreat in time, to make peace with him, and become his servants; otherwise their iniquity will be their utter and everlasting ruin.

criminal, because it has become so common.

4. And when she had purified, &c. Compare Levit. xv. 18. It is difficult to say how far she was to blame; but he was certainly the greater criminal who seduced her, if I had said forced her, the original word would bear me out, as it generally signifies an incapacity of resistance.

5. I am with child. She was in danger of death by the law of God, as an adulteress, and therefore consulted with David how they might contrive a way to hide their shame, and she to avoid punishment.

- 8—13. David's design to cover his own sin, and preserve the credit of Bath-sheba seems well planned, but the manner in which it miscarried, shows a special, over-ruling providence. How true is the remark of Moses, 'Be sure your sin will find you out.'

of the hottest battle, and retire from him, that 16 he may be smitten, and die." And when Joab had observed the city, he assigned Uriah a place 17 where he knew there were valiant men. And the men of the city went out, and fought with Joab; and there fell some of the people, some of the servants of David; and Uriah the Hethite was also killed.

18 Then Joab sent and told David all the occurrences of the war; And charged the messenger, saying, "When thou hast made an end of telling the occurrences of the war to the king, 20 And if so be that the king's wrath arise, and he say to thee, 'Wherefore approached ye so nigh to the city when ye fought? knew ye not that 21 they would shoot from the wall? Who smote Abimelech, the son of 'Jerubbaal'? did not a woman cast a piece of a milstone upon him from the wall, so that he died in Thebez? why went ye so nigh the wall?' Then say thou, 'Thy servant Uriah the Hethite is also killed.'"

22 So the messenger went, and came and told 23 David all that Joab had sent him for. And the messenger said to David, "Surely the men prevailed against us, and came out to us into the

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XI. 1. We here see the dreadful effects of giving up ourselves to our unhallowed desires and passions;
and how needful it is for us both 'to watch and pray, lest we should enter into temptation!' David's sun suffers a dreadful eclipse; and in the midst of his victories abroad, he is vanquished at home. O David!
how art thou fallen, how changed! David whose conscience smote him, when he had cut off the hem of Saul's garment; and who had hitherto conducted himself as a man of sincere and fervent piety!
Hurried away by his passion, he forgets his character, and his God;
and once ensnared, he is pushed on to the perpetration of other crimes.
By his sin God is dishonoured, religion disgraced, and occasion given to the wicked to blaspheme. The scriptures faithfully relate this shameful miscarriage of one of its greatest heroes; which is at once an evidence of their sincerity, and an awful warning to all, even to the best of men.

2. We should hence learn, to avoid all occasions of sin, and quench the first sparks of temptation. Had David been with his army, 14, 15. Of what a hardening nature is sin. David seeks to hide one sin by the commission of another, and a still greater; by the murder of a most loyal subject, and a brave and deserving man. Had not conscience been asleep, how could he have written this letter to Joab?

18-21. It appears that in accomplishing the order sent him, Joab had sustained considerable loss. The messenger was to pacify the king by field, but we drove them back to the entrance of the gate. And the shooters shot from off the 24 wall upon thy servants; and some of the king's servants are dead, and thy servant Uriah the Hethite is also dead." Then David said to the 25 messenger, "Thus shalt thou say to Joab, 'Let not this thing displease thee, for the sword devoureth now one, and now another. Make a stronger attack on the city, and overthrow it.

Thus encourage him.'"

And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah 26
her husband was dead, she mourned for her husband. And when the mourning was past, 27
David sent and brought her to his own house,
and she became his wife, and bare to him a son.

CHAPTER XII.

B. C. 1084. Nathan's parable of the ewe lamb; David's repentance;
the death of the child born to him of Bath-sheba; the birth of Solomon.

Now the thing which David had done, was evil in the eyes of Jehovah; and Jehovah sent Nathan, 'the prophet', to David. And he came to him, and said to him, "There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor.

CHAP. XII. 1. *Sept. Syr. Ar. 4 mss.

as he undoubtedly should have been, he would have escaped this foul stain. Had he been at his harp, or his psalms, at almost any thing but being idle, he had not fallen. Had he checked the temptation at first, turned away his eyes from the tempting object, and given himself to prayer, he had overcome the temptation. May we avoid every thing which may be an occasion to sin, and an incentive to fleshly lusts; especially idleness and a love of sloth. Let us mind the duties of our station; and stand in awe and sin not.

3. See the mischievous consequences of sin; how one leads to another; and what vast evil one act of vice is often big with; how much one sin needs another to cloak and conceal it. Adultery must be covered with treachery, making Uriah drunk, and then murdering him. The way of sin is down hill; a man knows not where he will stop. The beginning of sin ought to be dreaded; and the appearance of it avoided; for who can tell where it will end? Let us daily pray, 'Lord, lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil;' from the evil of compliance, if we are tempted.

announcing the death of Uriah; and when he hears this, he calmly says,
'the sword now devoureth one, now another.'

26, 27. Thus were appearances kept up, and the king's infamous conduct covered, by taking to be his wife, the woman he had seduced, and whose husband he had ordered to be slain.

CHAP. XII. 1-4. There were two men. This was a prudent and re-

3 The rich man had many flocks and herds; But the poor man had nothing, but one little ewe lamb, which he had bought and nourished: and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it ate of his own morsel, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was to him like a daughter. Now a traveller came to the rich man, and he spared to take of his own flock and of his own herd, to dress for the traveller that had come to him; but took the poor man's lamb, and dressed it for the man that had come to him." And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, "As Jehovah liveth, the man that hath done this is worthy of death. And because he did this thing, and because he had no pity, he shall restore the lamb fourfold." Then Nathan said to David, "Thou art the man. Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'I anointed thee king over Israel, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul; And I gave to thee thy master's daughter', and thy master's wives into thy bosom, and gave to thee the house of Israel and of Judah; and if that had been too little, I would moreover have given to thee such and such things. Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of Jehovah, to do evil in his sight? thou hast killed Uriah, the Hethite, with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon. Now therefore the sword shall never spectful way of reproving, and after the manner of the eastern nations, by which David was brought to condemn himself. As this was the great design, it was not necessary that there should be an exact resemblance in every particular. Some things were only ornamental. Nathan had been used to come on these occasions, to complain of irregularities in the kingdom, and see that the king did justice to the injured.

6. Fourfold. This was commanded Exod. xxii. 1; but there was so much cruelty in the rich man's conduct that he was worthy of death.

7. Thou art the man. Thou hast committed the crime stated, and art that guilty person, whom thou hast accused and condemned. Nathan now speaks as a prophet of God, and as his ambassador to David.

8. Thy master's wives. I have preferred the reading adopted, because Michal was given to David, and because the wives of Saul, would not have been mentioned after house, or family, being included in it. It is well known that the Haram, or female establishment of a deceased king, always belongs to his successor. Compare Chap. xvi. 21.

10. Shall never depart. That is never during thy life. So Dath renders, 'The sword shall not depart as long as thou livest;' and observes that the next verse supports this sense. Compare Exod. xxi. 16. This sen-depart from thine own house; because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of Uriah to be thy wife.' Thus saith Jehovah, 'Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will take thy wives from before thine eyes, and give them to thy rival, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun: Thou indeed hast acted secretly; but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun.' And David said to Nathan, "I have sinned against Jehovah." And Nathan said to David, "Jehovah also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die. Nevertheless, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of Jehovah to blaspheme, the child that is born to thee shall surely die."

And Nathan departed to his own house. And Jehovah struck the child that Uriah's wife had born to David, and it was very sick. David therefore besought God for the child; and David fasted, and went in, and lay all night upon the ground. And the elders of his house arose, and went to him, to raise him up from the ground; but he would not, nor did he eat bread with them. And on the seventh day, the child died; and the servants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead: for they said, "Behold, while the child was yet alive, we spoke to him, and he would not hearken to our voice; how will he then vex himself, if we tell him that the child is dead?" But when David

tence was fulfilled in the death of Absalom, Amnon, and Adonijah, who all fell by the sword, and so did many of his remote descendants, especially when the whole royal house, except one, was slain by Athalia, and Zedekiah's son was slain before his eyes.

11. I will take thy wives. This refers to his son Absalom, who spread his tent probably on the very house top whence David saw Bath-sheba, and debauched his father's wives in the sight of all Israel. See Ch. xvi. 22.

13. I have sinned against Jehovah. Now David owns his offence; and the Psalms he wrote on this occasion, show the deep sense he had of the guilt he had contracted, and will be an evidence of his repentance to all future ages. It is probable that he did not say more than is related; but like the publican his language was that of a softened, contrite, and penetrated heart, and Nathan is directed to comfort him with the assurance of pardon.

14. The child shall die. This was to begin the temporal chastisement, threatened to David; and it soon followed.

17. Nor would he eat bread. Perhaps he was the more earnest on this occasion, partly because he considered the child's death as a punishment for his sin, and partly out of his great love to Bath-sheba.

22. God will be gracious, &c. David did not know, but the denuncsaw that his servants whispered, David supposed that the child was dead: David therefore said to his servants, "Is the child dead?" And 20 they said, "He is dead." Then David arose from the ground, and washed and anointed himself, and changed his garments, and came into the house of Jehovah, and worshipped: he then came to his own house, and he asked, and they 21 set food before him, and he ate. Then said his servants to him, "What is this that thou hast done? while the child was alive thou didst fast and weep; but when the child was dead,

 22 thou didst arise and eat food." And he said, "While the child was yet alive, I fasted and wept: for I said, 'Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, so that the child may 23 live?' But now he is dead, why should I fast? can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he will not return to me."

24 And David comforted Bath-sheba his wife, and went in to her, and lay with her: and she "conceived, and" bare a son, and he called his name Solomon, [PEACABLE]. And Jehovah loved him; And he sent by Nathan the prophet; and he called his name Jedidiah, [BELOVED OF 25 JEHOVAH], because Jehovah "loved him".

26 And Joab fought against Rabbah of the chil-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. We may here learn to admire God's abundant grace and kindness. Though what David had done was evil in his sight, yet he sends Nathan to awaken his sleeping conscience, and to make him sensible of his awful guilt; to show him his ingratitude, injustice and cruelty, and to bring him to repentance. His word came with power; and David being confounded, humbled, and abased, with deep contrition acknowledged his sin. According to the law which it was his duty to see executed, he was worthy of death; but God, who is rich in mercy, assured him that he should not die. David might now say with greater emphasis, ation might be conditional, and while the child lived there was room for hope and for prayer.

23. I shall go to him, &c. Some explain this passage, as only meaning, 'I shall die like my child.' Though this undoubtedly may be intended, I cannot believe that it is the whole of what David meant. In his writings, I conceive a future state is clearly referred to; and hope of rejoining his child, in a state of happiness, might justly inspire submission, and produce solid and strong consolation.

26. The royal quarter of the city. This quarter is in the next verse, called the city of waters, because situated on the river. The Israelites having obtained possession of this quarter, cut off the supplies of the enemy; and hence Joab knew they could not long hold out.

dren of Ammon, and had taken the royal quarter of the city. And Joab sent messengers to 27 David, and said, "I have fought against Rabbah, and have taken the city of waters. Now, there- 28 fore, assemble the rest of the people, and encamp against the city, and take it; lest if I take the city, it be called after my name." And Da- 29 vid assembled all the people, and went to Rabbah, and fought against it, and took it. And 30 he took their king's crown from off his head, the weight of which was a talent of gold, beset with precious stones: and it was set on David's head. And he brought forth the spoil of the 31 city in great abundance. And he brought forth the people that were therein, and put them to saws, and to harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them pass through the brick-kiln: and thus did he to all the cities of the children of Ammon. Then David and all the people returned to Jerusalem.

CHAPTER XIII.

B. C. 1032. Amnon loveth Tamar; he ravisheth and shamefully dismisseth her; Absalom, her brother, killeth Amnon, and flieth to Tahmai, king of Geshur.

AND after this, Absalom, the son of David, I had a beautiful sister, whose name was Tamar;

25. *Sept. Syr. Arab.

'Is this the manner of men, O Jehovah?' This instance of forgiving mercy may encourage the greatest sinners, when penitent, to hope for the same blessing.

2. We may observe that the sins of professors, give the wicked occasion to blaspheme. How often is the name of God dishonoured, his worship and ways rendered contemptible, by the shameful deeds of his professed friends! by unbecoming conduct the way of truth is evil spoken of; and sinners are hardened in their impiety, and emboldened still more to transgress. They are led to consider all seriousness a pretence, and religion a name. Let professors of religion, therefore,

28. It be called after my name. This shows how much Joab loved his king, and endeavoured to raise his glory.

31. It is a duty of humanity to vindicate every man's character, when charged wrongfully; this is more necessary, in proportion as the character is more exalted. David was a prince truly eminent and illustrious. And though it is certain, that he was guilty of some great crimes, yet it is as certain, that he ought not to be charged with crimes, or cruelties, of which he was really innocent. One heavy charge has been urged against him, from this part of the sacred history; as if it represented him sawing, and harrowing, and chopping, and burning, all the Ammonites: a savage representation! which has raised much clamour among the enemies of revelation. But a charge so severe as this, and so very unlikely to be true, should be

2 and Amnon, the son of David, loved her. And Amnon was so distressed, that he fell sick on account of his sister Tamar; for she being a virgin, it seemed hard to Amnon to do aught
3 to her. But Amnon had a friend, whose name was Jonadab, the son of Shimeah, David's brother; and Jonadab was a very subtle man. And he said to him, "Why art thou, the king's son, every morning leaner? wilt thou not tell me?" And Amnon said to him, "I love Tamar, my
5 brother Absalom's sister." And Jonadab said to him, "Lie down on thy bed, and feign thyself sick: and when thy father cometh to see thee, say to him, 'I pray thee, let my sister Tamar come, and give me food, and dress the food in my sight, that I may see it, and eat it from her hand.'"
6 Amnon then lay down, and feigned himself sick; and when the king came to see him, Amnon said to the king, "I pray thee, let Tamar, my sister come, and make me a couple of cakes in my sight, that I may eat them from her
7 hand." Then David sent home to Tamar, saying, "Go now to thy brother Amnon's house, and dress food for him." So Tamar went to her brother Amnon's house; and he was laid down.

be very careful so to behave, that they may at once secure the favour and friendship of Almighty God, and adorn his doctrine, by a holy life and conversation.

3. The arguments by which David composed his own mind after the death of his child, are proper on similar occasions. It was a very solid consideration, that all his grief could not recover his child. He further reflected, that he should quickly go after it. Considering himself as a mortal creature, he saw the folly of excessive grief. When friends examined into with great care; and if the original records are consulted accurately, they will, I humbly apprehended, set the matter in a different light. Here in Samuel the two first words signify et posuit in serra, as in the interlinear Latin version: which words are a true key to the following; and fairly show, that David put them to the saw, and sentenced them to other hard works of slavery. The whole mistake here seems to have arisen from an error in the Hebrew text of the parallel place in Chronicles; by the omission of one small part of one letter: for the word, instead of et posuit, is now et serravit, in 1 Chron. xx. 3. This corruption was probably very ancient, because expressed in the Greek version. But still, there can be little doubt, that the two words were at first the same; and if so, the context requires the word in Samuel; especially, as that reading is confirmed by five Hebrew mss. in Chronicles.

CHAP. XIII. 2. She being a virgin, &c. Virgins in the east are so closely watched, that it is difficult for any man to get access to them, without witnesses. Hence the distress of Amnon; and the wicked device he follows to obtain his desire. I have followed the common version in the

And she took flour, and kneaded it, and made cakes in his sight, and baked the cakes. And she took a pan, and poured them out before him; but he refused to eat. And Amnon said, "Let all the men go out from me." And all the men went out from him. And Amnon said 10 to Tamar, "Bring the food into the inner-chamber, that I may eat from thy hand." And Tamar took the cakes which she had made, and brought them into the chamber to Amnon, her brother. And when she had brought them
11 to him to eat, he took hold of her, and said to her, "Come lie with me, my sister." And she 12 answered him, "Do not, my brother, do not force me; for no such thing ought to be done in Israel: commit not this base deed. For whither could I transfer my shame? and even thou wilt be accounted as one of the profligates in Israel. Now, therefore, I pray thee, speak to the king; for he will not withhold me from thee." Howbeit he would not hearken to her 14 voice; but, being stronger than she, forced her, and lay with her.

Then Amnon hated her exceedingly; so that the hatred with which he hated her, was greater than the love with which he had loved her.

die, we should think of our own death; how quickly we shall go after them; therefore we have something else to do than spend our time in fruitless sorrow. The words intimate further, that, looking beyond the grave, he saw something to assuage his grief, some views of future happiness. The prospect of meeting our fellow-creatures again, and being for ever with them, is a source of comfort and joy when they are taken away. Let us therefore be patient in tribulation, and be in subjection to the Father of spirits, and live.

latter clause, which suggests a struggle between his passion and his conscience. Geddes after Dath renders, 'for she being a virgin it appeared impossible for him to enjoy her,' I conceive this is more limited and particular than the text will warrant.

5. Lie down on thy bed, &c. This wicked Courtier, instead of reproving him, and endeavouring to call him to a sense of duty, furnishes him with an expedient to gratify his passion, at the expense of his honour, and, as it proved, the loss of his life.

10. Inner-chamber. Geddes renders, alcove. I conceive it certain, that as Amnon had dismissed his attendants, he retired where he might most conveniently accomplish his purpose.

12, 13. Tamar spoke like a prudent woman; and gave her half-brother the most suitable advice; but passion is deaf to reason and propriety. She pleaded that she was a near relation; that she would not submit without violence; that such a thing ought not to be done in Israel, a nation devoted to God; that it would be an insuperable dishonour to her; that she could neither drive away her shame, nor hide it; that he would lose his

And Amnon said to her, "Arise, be gone."
 16 And she said to him, "This treatment is causeless. Sending me thus away, is a greater injury than that which thou hast before done to me."
 17 Yet he would not hearken to her; But called his servants, who attended on him, and said, "Put out now this woman from me; and bolt 18 the door after her." Now Tamar had on her garment of various colours: for such robes the king's virgin daughters 'anciently' wore. Then his servants brought her out, and bolted the 19 door after her. And Tamar put ashes on her head, and rent her garment of various colours, which she had on, and laid her hand on her 20 head, and went along crying. And Absalom, her brother, said to her, "Hath Amnon, thy brother, been with thee? yet be thou silent, my sister: he is thy brother: regard not this thing." So Tamar abode disconsolate in her brother Absalom's house.
 21 But when king David heard of all these things, he was very wroth: 'yet he would not grieve the heart of Amnon; because he loved 22 him, as being his first-born son'. And as to Absalom, he spoke to his brother neither good nor bad: although Absalom hated Amnon, because he had forced his sister Tamar. And 23 after two full years, Absalom had sheep-shearers in Baal-hazor, which is beside Ephraim; and 24 Absalom invited all the king's sons. And Absalom came to the king, and said, "Behold now, thy servant hath sheep-shearers; let the king,

I beseech thee, and his servants go with thy servant." And the king said to Absalom, "Nay, 25 my son, let us not all now go, lest we be chargeable to thee." And although he urged him, yet he would not go; but blessed him. Then said 26 Absalom, "If 'thou wilt not go', I pray thee, let my brother Amnon go with us." And the king said to him, "Why should he go with thee?" But Absalom so urged him, that he let 27 Amnon and all the king's sons go with him.

'Absalom made a feast like the feast of a king'; and Absalom commanded his servants, 28 saying, "Observe now when Amnon's heart is raised with wine, and when I say to you, 'Smite Amnon;' then kill him, fear not: have not I commanded you? be courageous and valiant men." And the servants of Absalom did to 29 Amnon as Absalom had commanded. Then all the king's sons arose, and each mounted his mule, and fled.

And while they were yet on the way, tidings 30 came to David, saying, "Absalom hath slain all the king's sons, and there is not one of them left." Then the king arose, and tore his garments, and lay on the ground; and all his servants stood by with their clothes rent. And 32 Jonadab, the son of Shimeah, David's brother, spoke and said, "Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the young men, the king's sons; for Amnon only is dead: for this hath been determined on by Absalom from the day that he forced his sister Tamar. Now, there- 33 reputation, and perhaps his crown, and he considered as a man void of all religion, honour and humanity. But finding all this would not do, she intimated, that he was his father's darling, and he would deny him nothing, and would therefore give her to him for his wife. She urged any thing to divert him from his purpose, and deliver herself from the present danger; but all was in vain.

15. This change of passion in a brutal breast is not uncommon. When he had accomplished his purpose, and then reflected on the probable consequences of it, he detested the beautiful Tamar, whose virginity he had violated, and who had been an incitement to his passion.

16. Sending me thus away, &c. It was not a greater sin, but a greater mischief, because it would publish her shame, and be a public scandal on the whole family. The first injury might be concealed and repented of; the second was deliberate, and would bring reproach on himself, on her, and on the people of God.

18. For the reason of the version the learned reader may consult Note, Hebrew Bible.

20. Hath Amnon been with thee? Absalom covered his suspicions in the most decent and prudent phrase; and to spare her blushes he prevented her answering, and advised her to be composed, because the offender was her brother. He knew Amnon's character to be a bad one, or he never would have suspected that he could be guilty of such a thing.

21. The addition to the text is so suitable to the character of David, and, the context, that, with other Critics, I have adopted it as genuine; and so in the 28th verse.

26. If thou wilt not go. I follow the Syriac. Honbigan, 'If the king will not, I pray, &c.'

32, 33. Jonadab, who had contrived the plan of seduction for Amnon, either conjectured the cause of Absalom's attack, or he might have heard him express his intention to avenge the dishonour of his sister. He speaks of this affair, which had originated with himself, without the least concern. He proves himself as destitute of friendship as of sympathy; and without any regard to justice, honour, or humanity.

37-39. I have, with Geddes joined these verses to the following chapter, as fore, let not my lord the king take the thing to heart, to think that all the king's sons are 34 dead: for Amnon only is dead; and Absalom will have fled." And the young man who kept the watch, raised his eyes, and looked, and, behold, by the way of the hill side, behind him, 35 there were many people coming. And Jonadab said to the king, "Behold, the king's sons are 36 coming: as thy servant said, so it is." And as soon as he had made an end of speaking, behold, the king's sons came, and raised their voice and wept: and the king also, and all his 37 servants, wept exceedingly. But Absalom had fled, and went to Talmi, the son of Ammihud, king of Geshur.

CHAPTER XIV.

B. C. 1027, Joab perceiving David's inclination, suborns a woman of Tekoah to excite, by a parable, David to bring home Absalom; he returns; his beauty, and his children.

AND "David" mourned for his son "many 38 days". But when Absalom, who had fled and gone to Geshur, had been there three years, 39 king David longed for Absalom; for he was

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. We learn how dangerous it is to have a wicked companion. 'Evil communication corrupts good manners;' and young persons in particular should guard against it. Full of spirit and unexperienced, they are but too much inclined to throw off the restraints of religion; they need not counsellors to urge them to what is wrong. They should be careful in the choice of companions, lest 'they learn their way, follow their counsel, and get a snare to their souls. "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not. If they say, 'Come with us, let us lay wait for blood, cast in thy lot among us.' My son, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path: for their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood."

2. We here see that primitive simplicity obtained in the time of David. Absalom, though the king's son, had his farm, and his sheep-shearing. His sister was as eminent for her good housewifery as for her beauty: she was not afraid of spoiling the beauty of her face, or the whiteness of her hands, by kneading and baking. Business is not beneath the greatest gentleman; domestic employments are not below the finest lady. How different are modern ideas and manners! Many a tradesman's daughter would be ashamed to be found cooking. Pride and vain accomplish-containing the reason of Joab's contrivance.

CHAP. XIV. 7. Every reader must admire the art with which Joab by this woman prevailed on the king to restore Absalom. The case suppos-comforted concerning Amnon, seeing he was dead.

Now Joab, the son of Zeruah, perceived that 1 the king's heart was towards Absalom. And 2 Joab sent to Tekoah, and brought thence a wise woman, and said to her, "I pray thee, feign thyself to be a mourner, and put on now mourning apparel; and anoint not thyself with oil, but be as a woman who hath a long time mourned for the dead. And go to the king, and speak 3 on this manner to him." And Joab put the words in her mouth.

And when the woman of Tekoah *went to 4 the king, she fell on her face to the ground, and made obeisance, and said, "Help, O king." 5 And the king said to her, "What aileth thee?" And she answered, "I am indeed a widow woman; for my husband is dead. And thy 6 handmaid had two sons, and they two strove together in the field, and there was none to part them, but the one smote the other, and slew him. And, behold, the whole family have 7 risen against thy handmaid, and they said, "Deliver up him that smote his brother, that ments are the things which most assiduously cultivate; appearances and show are substituted in the place of solid attainments.

3. This chapter forcibly impresses the apostle's advice, 'Flee youthful lusts.' Who knows the mischiefs they may occasion, if indulged? Amnon must have been an abandoned character, previously to his shameful behaviour to his innocent sister. How miserable was he after! What dreadful agonies of conscience and horror must he have felt, when he could not bear the sight of his injured sister. But he knew all the guilt lay upon himself. He had brought ruin on his amiable sister, distress upon his pious father, and scandal upon all Israel.

4. We see here how abominable malice and revenge are. What infamous characters were both David's sons; Absalom hated Amnon, and concealed it for two years, without showing any signs of it. He cloaked his wicked design with the pretence of civility and kindness. Let us guard against a revengeful spirit. However we may be injured, we are forbidden to revenge ourselves. Guard against rancour and hatred; for 'he that hateth his brother is a murderer;' and we know that 'no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him;' a truth, which should teach us to restrain our passions, to prevent the crime.

ed was in point; and the decision of the king in favour of the woman, was certainly against himself, in that he did not recall Absalom.

11. I have transposed the 15—17 verses as clearly their proper

we may kill him, for the life of his brother whom he hath slain; and we will destroy even the heir.' Thus would they extinguish my remaining coal, and leave to my husband neither name nor one remaining upon the face of the 8 earth." And the king said to the woman, "Go to thy house, and I will give charge concerning 9 thee." And the woman of Tekoah said to the king, "My lord, O king, the iniquity be on me, and on my father's house; and may the king 10 and his throne be guiltless." And the king said, "Whosoever saith aught to thee, bring him to me, and he shall no more trouble thee." 11 Then said she, "I pray thee, let the king remember, for the sake of Jehovah, not to suffer the multitude of blood-avengers to destroy any 15 more, lest they destroy my son. Now therefore I am come to speak of this thing to my lord the king, because the people have made me afraid: and thy handmaid, said, 'I will now speak to the king; it may be that the king will perform 16 the request of his handmaid. For the king may so hear as to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of every one, who would destroy me and my son together out of the inheritance of God. 17 Thy handmaid also said, 'The word of my lord the king may now be comfortable: for as an angel of God, is my lord the king, to discern good and bad: and may Jehovah thy God be with thee.' And he said, "As Jehovah liveth, there shall not one hair of thy son fall to the 12 earth." Then the woman said, "Let thy handmaid, I pray thee, speak one word to my lord 13 the king." And he said, "Say on." And the woman said, "On what ground then hast thou thus decided concerning one of the people of God? From the word the king speaketh, he is guilty, in as far as the king bringeth not home his banished son. For we must needs die, and 14 become as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again; (for God excepteth no person:) let the king devise means, so that his banished son may no longer be banished from him. Then the king answered and said to the 18 woman, "Hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I am about to ask thee." And the woman said, "Let my lord the king now speak." And the king said, "Is not the hand of Joab 19 with thee in all this? And the woman answered and said, "As thou livest, my lord the king, the thing is altogether, as my lord the king hath spoken: for thy servant Joab, he charged me, and put all these words in the mouth of thy handmaid, To give this turn to the discourse: 20 thy servant Joab hath done this thing. But my lord is wise; is wise as an angel of God, to know all things which are on the earth."

And the king said to Joab, "Behold, now, 21 I grant this request: go then, and bring back the young man Absalom. And Joab fell to the 22 ground on his face, and made obeisance, and thanked the king: and Joab said, "To day thy servant knoweth that I have found favour in thine eyes, my lord the king, in that the king hath fulfilled the request of his servant." So 23 Joab, set out and went to Geshur, and brought Absalom to Jerusalem. And the king said, 24 "Let him turn to his own house; but let him not see my face." So Absalom turned to his own house, but saw not the king's face.

place. For the woman in these verses continues to speak of her own son, and of the assistance that she expected to receive from the king to secure him; but how could she do this after she had acknowledged that the whole was a fable, intended to represent the king's conduct towards his exiled son Absalom? This transposition removes every difficulty and makes the narrative consistent. In the 12—14 verses the woman urges the opinion and decision of the king, and applies it to the point intended.

13. Concerning one of the people, &c. The common version is, 'against the people of God.' The preposition will admit either sense; but the context require the sense I have given.

14. For God excepteth no person, &c. The words of the text are ambiguous, and are variously rendered. Houbigant renders, 'God doth not take away life. Yea, it is his counsel that one exiled from him should not be utterly rejected.' It is probable he thought the words referred to the case of the man-slayer, for whom God had appointed a city of refuge. Dathe forms his version on this sentiment; and many of our early translators had the same opinion. I confess I do not see, what this has to do with the subject; nor how the text will admit it. The verb (נָשָׂא) denotes among many other significations, to forgive, to spare. Compare Gen. xviii. 24, 26; Exod. x. 17, &c: and (נָשָׂא) often signifies person. 'God will spare no person; all must die.' This is connected with what precedes. I consider with Geddes, the king understood, as the nominative of the following verb; and have supplied it for the sake of perspicuity.

20. As wise as an angel. Harmer has shown that it is the superstitious belief in the east, that their kings are privileged with the possession of the highest wisdom. Was this a compliment to David? or did the woman believe what she said?

26. Two hundred shekels. According to Bochart this would be about 3lb. 2oz. of our weight; but it is not certain, what was the weight of the Jewish shekel, at different periods. This is mentioned as something singular.

- 25 Now in all Israel there was no one so much praised as Absalom for his beauty; from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him. And when he polled his head, which he did from time to time, because it burdened him; and when he polled it, the hair of his head weighed two hundred shekels, according to the king's standard. And to Absalom were born three sons, and one daughter, whose name was Tamar: she was a woman of a beautiful countenance.
- 28 Absalom had now dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, and had not seen the king's face.
- 29 Absalom then sent for Joab, that he might send him to the king; but he would not come to him: and when again he sent a second time, he would not come. "Absalom" therefore said to his servants, "See, Joab's field is near mine, and he hath barley there; go and set it on fire." And Absalom's servants set the field on fire. "And the servants of Joab came to him, with their garments rent, and said, 'The servants of Absalom have set fire to thy field.'" Then Joab arose, and came to Absalom to his house, and said to him, "Why have thy servants set fire to my field?" And Absalom answered Joab, "Be-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. We may learn that we ought not to retain our anger for ever; but should be disposed to exercise mercy. We should recollect our own faults, and forgive, as we expect to be forgiven. Our Lord enforces this duty, from the consideration of God's patience and kindness to us. He has appointed means for our recovery and reconciliation; sacrifices under the law, and the sufferings of Christ under the gospel. Let sinners therefore remember, that it is their own fault if they are not restored. This should lead us to be merciful and compassionate, even as our father in heaven is merciful.

2. We see that a handsome person sometimes covers a deformed soul; "But in all Israel there was no one so much praised as Absalom for his beauty." Nothing is said of his wisdom and piety; he was only the fine gentleman. His outside beauty concealed a proud, base, and malignant soul. This would be a lar and unusual. Some would explain, by supposing, that the shekel here is used not for the weight but the value. His hair was worth two hundred shekels.

27. Three sons, &c. These probably died young, as it is said that Absalom had no son; Chap. xviii. 18. He called his daughter after her aunt.

30. Joab's field is near mine. Geddes renders, 'near my monument,' and according to some of the best Critics (^r) has this sense, but as it is used frequently with thy affixed for the possessive pronoun, I adhere to the com-

hold, I sent to thee, saying, 'Come hither, that I may send thee to the king, to say, 'Why came I from Geshur? better were it for me to have been there still: now therefore let me see the king's face; and if there be iniquity in me, let him put me to death.'" So Joab came to the king, and told him: and when he had called for Absalom, he went to the king, and with his face to the ground, he made obeisance to the king: and the king embraced Absalom.

CHAPTER XV.

B. C. 1024. Absalom, by various arts, gains the esteem of the people, and under pretence of a vow goes to Hebron, and there erects the standard of revolt and rebellion; David flies from Jerusalem, where Absalom soon arrives.

AND after this, Absalom prepared for himself 1 chariots and horses, and fifty men to run before him. And Absalom rose up early, and stood 2 on the way side, that led to the palace-gate: and when any man who had a law-suit came to the king for judgment, then would Absalom call to him, and say, "Of what city art thou?" And he would say, "Thy servant is of such, or such a tribe of Israel." Absalom would then say to 3 him, "See, thy cause is good and right; but poor commendation of a woman, and much more so of a man. Let us not be proud of external accomplishments, but seek the beauties of the mind, the ornaments of wisdom, virtue, meekness, and humility. "Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain, but every one who feareth the Lord shall be praised."

3. See how wise and good men may be deceived and imposed upon by their children, especially when they are over fond of them. David forgave Absalom's horrid crime, admitted him to favour, and cherished a viper in his own bosom. Affection blinds the eyes. Parents should judge wisely and cautiously, even of their own children, and treat them according to their deserts; else they will prove a grief of heart to them, as this proud wretch did to David, as we shall see afterwards; and, if they prove rebellious and disobedient, the more fond they are of them, the greater will be their torment and vexation.

mon version; and because I think he had not yet erected the monument mentioned in ch. xviii. 18.

31—33. Absalom had most probably now formed the design of obtaining the crown; and it was necessary to his success that he should be introduced to court. His conduct towards Joab, and the message he sends to the king, display his temper and ambition.

CHAP. XV. 3. Thy cause is good and right. Thus he flattered all; and by his state, his beauty, condescension and affability, he gained the

there is no man deputed by the king to hear thee." Absalom was moreover wont to say, "Oh that I were made a judge in the land, that every man who hath any suit or cause might come to me, and I would do him justice!" And when any man came nigh to make obeisance, he was accustomed to put forth his hand, and take hold of him, and embrace him. And after this manner did Absalom to all Israel, who came to the king for judgment: thus Absalom stole away the hearts of the men of Israel.

And at the end of "four" years, Absalom said to the king, "I pray thee, let me go to Hebron, and perform my vow, which I made to Jehovah. For thy servant made a vow while I abode at Geshur in Syria, saying, 'If Jehovah shall indeed bring me back to Jerusalem, then will I serve Jehovah.'" And the king said to him, "Go in peace." So he set out, and went to Hebron. But Absalom had sent spies throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, "As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet, then ye shall say, 'Absalom is made king in Hebron.'" And with Absalom went from Jerusalem two hundred invited men: but they went in their simplicity, and they knew not any thing. And Absalom sent for Ahithophel the Gilonite, David's counsellor, from his city, Giloh, while he offered sacrifices. Thus was the conspiracy strengthened; and the people with Absalom continually increased. And there came a messenger to David, saying, "The hearts of the men of Israel are after Absalom." And David said to all his servants 14 who were with him at Jerusalem, "Arise, let us flee; for we shall not else escape from Absalom: make haste to depart, lest he suddenly overtake us, and bring evil upon us, and smite the city with the edge of the sword." And the 15 king's servants said to the king, "Behold, thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall appoint." And the king went forth, 16 and all his household after him. And the king left only ten women, concubine-wives, to keep the house. Thus the king went forth, and all 17 "his servants" after him, and abode at Beth-amerhach. And all his servants were mustered 18 before him; and all the Cherethites, and all the Pelethites, and all the Gathites, (six hundred men) who had followed him from Gath, were mustered before the king.

Then said the king to Ittai, the Gathite, 19 "Why shouldst thou go along with us? return to thine own place, and abide with the new king: for thou art a stranger, and also an exile. Thou 20 camest but yesterday, and should I this day make thee wander up and down with us? seeing I go whither I can, return thou, and take back thy brethren: mercy and truth be with thee." And Ittai answered the king, and said, 21 "As Jehovah liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether it be my lot to die or to live, there assuredly will thy servant be." David 22 then said to Ittai, "Go and pass on." And Ittai, affection of great numbers.

7. Four years. The common text has forty, which is manifestly erroneous. David reigned only forty years; and if we follow the text, the rebellion of Absalom would occur long after David was dead. Some, to get over the difficulty, would date from the time David was anointed by the prophet Samuel. As the versions mentioned contain the true reading, there is no need of any subterfuge.—To Hebron. Why to Hebron? It may be answered because there he was born, and there David began his reign. It was the chief city of the tribe of Judah, next to Jerusalem; much celebrated in the patriarchal times, and famous for its high places, where they still sacrificed.

8, 9. Absalom's request seemed so just and pious, that David, without reluctance, granted it. He was doubtless pleased to discern any thing like gratitude to God, in his favourite son.

12 Sent for Ahithophel. Ahithophel was capable of doing great mischief, as he was one of David's privy counsellors. Some suppose that he was angry at David's affair with Bath-sheba, who was his grand-daughter.

17. † Sept. 2 mss. 3rd Ed.

He was too wise to think of coming till he saw what people joined Absalom, and whether his scheme was likely to succeed.

14. And smite the city. David chose to leave Jerusalem that he might prevent a surprise, and not expose it to the horrors of a siege. He did not know how it stood affected to him, as Absalom had many adherents there. He could more easily raise an army in the country, where neither the morals nor the political principles of the people were so much corrupted.

17. Beth-amerhach. I have followed Houbigant, Dathe and others, in considering (בית המרחק) as a proper name; for no proper sense can be given if the words be considered as appellatives. Hence the versions are not satisfactory. The Vulg. and he stood at a distance from the house. The Sept. they stood a far in the house. The Chald. they stood in a distant place. This is the best rendering, but then the preposition should be added (בבית) which is not found in any mss.

19—21. Ittai discovers a strong attachment to David, and resolves to share with him all dangers. It is not improbable that he and the six hundred men with him, had renounced idolatry, and embraced the worship of the Gathite, passed on, and all his men, and 23 all the little ones who were with him. And all the country and all the people as they passed along, wept with a loud voice. Thus the king himself passed over the brook Kidron, and all the people passed over, towards the way of the wilderness.

 24 And lo, Zadok also, and all the Levites were with him, bearing the ark of the covenant of God: and they set down the ark of God; and Abiathar offered before it, until all the people 25 had wholly passed out of the city. And the king said to Zadok, "Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I shall find favour in the eyes of Jehovah, he will bring me back, and 26 show me both it, and its habitation: But if thus he shall say, 'I have no delight in thee;'
 behold, here am I, let him do to me as seemeth 27 good in his own eyes." The king also said to Zadok the priest, "Observest thou? Return in peace to the city, and your two sons with you;
 Ahimaaz thy son, and Jonathan the son of Abia-28 thar. See, I will linger in the plain of the wilderness, until there come word from you to certify me. Zadok therefore and Abiathar 29 carried back the ark of God to Jerusalem; and they abode there.
 30 And David went up by the ascent of mount

Olivet: and he wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and his feet bare. And all the people who were with him covered every one his own head; and they went up, weeping
 as they went. And one told David, saying, 31
 "Ahithophel is among the conspirators with Absalom." And David said, "O Jehovah, I pray thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness." And when David had come to the 32 top of the mount, where he worshipped God, behold, Hushai, the Archite, came to meet him, with his coat rent and earth upon his head. To 33
 him David said, "If thou pass on with me, thou wilt be a burden to me: But if thou return to 34
 the city, and say to Absalom, 'I will be thy servant, O king! as I have been thy father's servant, so will I now also be thy servant:'
 thou mayest then defeat for me the counsel of Ahithophel. And is there not with thee Zadok 35 and Abiathar, the priests? so whatsoever thou shalt hear from the king's house, thou shalt tell it to Zadok and Abiathar, the priests. Behold, 36
 they have with them their two sons, Ahimaaz
 the son of Zadok, and Jonathan, the son of Abiathar; and by them ye can send to me every thing that ye may hear. So Hushai, David's 37 friend, went back to the city, as Absalom entered Jerusalem.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. Parents may here learn not to be too fond of their children, nor to encourage them too much; especially when they discover a proud, domineering temper. The history proves that this was the spirit of Absalom.
 What might contribute to strengthen this temper, and embolden him in his ambitious designs, might be the praises lavished on him for his beauty and personal accomplishments, and the known affection of his father. Let it ever be remembered, that pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall;
 and awful is the fall of such persons.

2. We may also observe, that those are often most ambitious of honour and preferment, who are least fit for it. O that I were a judge. Such a cool, deliberate villain, who had violated all the

the true God.

23. The brook Kidron. This was in the valley between Jerusalem, and the mount of Olives. In the hot season it usually dried up. Compare xxvi. 36, and John xviii. 1.

30. And he wept as he went up. He did so to express his deep humiliation, shame, and concern. He wept for his own sins, and for the unnatural behaviour of his son, and the marks of divine displeasure that attended it.

31. Ahithophel. David seems to have had a great regard for him, and bonds of duty, gratitude, and religion, was not likely to do justice.

 Humble and modest men, who will discharge their duty faithfully, bear their honours and credentials humbly, and not think of themselves more highly than they ought to think, are the fittest persons for advancement.

3. The greatest affliction of a good man, is to be driven from the house and ordinances of God. David speaks of this most feelingly. He parted with the ark reluctantly, and earnestly desired, if it were the will of God, to see it again. Those circumstances which drive holy men from God's house and ordinances, are peculiarly grievous; and their language then is,
 "When shall I come and appear before God in Zion? How amiable are thy tabernacles! A day in thy courts is better than a to have felt sensibly the defection of such a man. On this occasion he wrote the 41st psalm.

32. Top of the mount. Perhaps the very same place, where our Lord looked on Jerusalem, and wept over it. See Luke xix. 37, &c.

33-37. Severe casuists have condemned this conduct of David, as at variance with the proper line of his duty. If the use of stratagems in war may be justified, David only acted as wisdom and sound policy dictated. It is thought that David now wrote the 3rd and 43rd psalms.

CHAPTER XVI.

B. C. 1023. Ziba's false accusation; and Shimei's insulting conduct towards David, which he bears with submission; Hushai admitted to Absalom's council; the counsel of Ahithophel.

- 1 AND when David was a little past the top of mount Olivet, behold, Ziba, the servant of Mephibosheth, met him, with a couple of saddled asses, and upon them two hundred loaves of bread, and a hundred bunches of dried grapes,
and a hundred clusters of figs, and a skin-bottle
2 of wine. And the king said to Ziba, "What meanest thou by these?" And Ziba said, "The asses are for the king's household, to ride on;
and the bread and clusters of fruit, for the young men to eat; and the wine, that such may drink 3 as become faint in the wilderness." And the king said, "And where is thy master's son?"
And Ziba said to the king, "Behold, he abideth at Jerusalem: for he said, 'To day the house of Israel may restore to me the kingdom
4 of my father.'" Then said the king to Ziba,
"Behold, to thee I give all that belonged to Mephibosheth." And Ziba, 'making obei-sance', said, "May I find favour in thine eyes,
my lord the king."
5 And when king David came to Bahurim, behold, thence came out a man of the family of the house of Saul, whose name was Shimei, the son of Gera. He came out, and reviled as he 6 went along. And he cast stones at David, and at all the servants of king David; at all the thousand." May it be our desire to attend the house and the ordinances of God, walking in his statutes blameless.

5. Whatever circumstances a good man may be in, he will patiently and cheerfully submit to the will of God. He may pray, and desire that God will remove his sorrow, and restore this or the other comfort; but if God thinks best that he should be

CHAP. XVI. 1. Clusters of figs. In this version I have followed the Sept. and Vulg. as I conceive those translators must have known what the word (רפ) precisely signified.

3, 4. Ziba was already made rich, through Mephibosheth; and his false accusation, betrayed alike his ingratitude and treachery. He coveted his master's inheritance; and David was too hasty in bestowing it. Some however, think that Ziba only testified the truth, and that Mephibosheth now expected that the revolution would end in favour of the house of Saul. This does not seem to me probable.

7, 8. When he reviled. I have preferred this term to curse, as the language which follows contains nothing but reviling and railing. He people and all the mighty men who were on his right hand and on his left. And thus said Shi- 7 mei when he reviled, "Get off, get off, thou man of blood, thou worthless man. Jehovah 8 now returneth on thee all the blood of the house of Saul, in whose stead thou hast reigned; and Jehovah delivereth the kingdom into the hand of Absalom thy son. Behold now, thine own wickedness seizeth thee; for a man of blood thou art." Then said Abishai, the son of Ze- 9 ruiah, to the king, "Why should this dead dog revile my lord the king? let me go over, I pray thee, and take off his head." And the 10 king said, what have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? Thus let him revile on; if Jehovah hath said to him, 'Revile David,' Who shall then say, 'Why hast thou done so?'

Moreover, David said to Abishai, and to all his 11 servants, "Behold, my own son, the offspring of my own body, seeketh my life: how much more now may this Benjaminite revile me? Let him alone, and let him revile on; for Jehovah hath bidden him. It may be that Jehovah 12 will regard my affliction; and that Jehovah will return good to me for his reviling this day." And as David and his men went by the way, 13 Shimei went along on the side of the opposite hill; and reviled as he went on, and threw stones at him, and cast dust. And the 14
king, and all the people who were with him, came to Ephim, and refreshed themselves there.

humbled and disappointed, his language should be let him do to me as seemeth him good. This should be our temper; and in proportion to our trust in God's providence, and concern to practise our duty, will this temper appear reasonable; it will become easy and agreeable; and be an abundant equivalent for the sorrow we endure, and the comfort of which we are deprived.

unjustly charges David with shedding the blood of the house of Saul; and represents him as an usurper and a tyrant; and mentions Absalom's rebellion to sting and vex him.

9—12. Abishai's request shows, that David maintained strict discipline in his army; and the reflections of David are equally wise, submissive and pious.

14. Came to Ephim. The following adverb there, shows that (עפם) must be the name of a place. It is usually rendered 'weary.'

16—19. Hushai discovers great address; he neither prays personally for Absalom, nor promises him allegiance. He intimates that he was not governed by private affection, but considered the voice of the people as

CHAPTER XVII.

15 And Absalom, and all the people, the men of Israel, had come to Jerusalem; and Ahitho-16 phel was with him. And Hushai, the Archite, David's friend, came to Absalom; and Hushai said to Absalom, "Long live the king! long 17 live the king!" And Absalom said to Hushai,
"Is this thy kindness to thy friend? why went-18 est thou not with thy friend?" And Hushai said to Absalom, "Nay; but whom Jehovah,
and this people, and all the men of Israel chose, 19 his will I be, and with him will I abide. And again, whom ought I to serve, if not his own son? as I have served in thy father's presence.
so will I be in thy presence."
20 Then said Absalom to Ahithophel, "Give 21 counsel, among you, what we shall do." And Ahithophel said to Absalom, "Go in to thy father's concubines, whom he hath left to keep the house; that all Israel may hear how odious thou hast made thyself to thy father: so will the hands of all that are with thee be strengthened." 22 So they spread Absalom a tent upon the top of the house; and Absalom went in to his father's 23 concubines in the sight of all Israel: For the counsel which Ahithophel gave, was, as if a man had inquired at the oracle of God: such was every counsel of Ahithophel, both with David and with Absalom.

CHAP. XVII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. In the conduct of Shimei we see what follies a man may be guilty of through prejudice and passion. He seems to brave all dangers to vent his malice and spleen; and when his stones did not reach the king, he continued to cast them towards him. Passionate men are madmen, and know not what they do. Let us be careful to rule our own spirits, pray for divine grace to guard us, and resist the first rising of wrath and revenge; for we know not how far we may be transported, what evil we may do, or what injury we may suffer.

2. We learn, that the most innocent persons may be falsely censured. David had more than once spared Saul's life, was at a distance when he was slain, was kind to Mephibosheth, and punished those that murdered Ishbosheth; yet all was laid to his

the voice of God; and was bound to prefer the public good to private affection and obligation.

21—23. We here see the denunciations of Nathan fulfilled. This counsel of Ahithophel was designed to make the breach between Absalom and David irreparable, and to cut off all hope of reconciliation.

CHAP. XVII. 3. I have followed the version of the Sept. and partly that of the Vulg. and my version I trust is clear and intelligible. Ahitho-

B. C. 1023. Ahithophel's counsel overthrown by Hushai's; secret intelligence sent to David; Ahithophel goeth home and hangeth himself.

AHITHOPHEL now said to Absalom, "Let me, I
I pray, choose out twelve thousand men, and I will set out and pursue David this night. And 2
I shall come upon him while he is weary and weak-handed, and terrify him: and, while all the people that are with him flee, I will smite the king only. And I will bring back all the 3 people unto thee, 'as a bride is brought to her husband'; (for only one man's life thou seekest)
and the whole people shall have peace." This 4 counsel seemed good to Absalom and to all the elders of Israel. Then said Absalom, "Call 5 now Hushai, the Archite, also, and let us likewise hear what he hath to say." So Hushai 6 came to Absalom, and Absalom spoke to him, saying, "After this manner hath Ahithophel counselled: shall we follow his counsel or not?
Speak thou." And Hushai said to Absalom, 7
"The counsel that Ahithophel hath given is not good at this time. For, said Hushai, thou 8 knowest that thy father and his men are valiant, and they are chafed in their minds, as a bear of the forest bereaved of her whelps. Also, thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with charge. We should not think it strange if we are falsely accused, and condemned, by rash and passionate men, who regard neither what they say nor do.

3. A humble man will turn reproaches into reproofs, and own the hand of God in them. David knew his guiltiness in other things, and therefore humbly submitted. And so should we in like circumstances. We have been guilty of other crimes, if not of those for which we are reproached, and God thus brings them to remembrance. His hand strikes us by the hand or tongue of an enemy. The strife of tongues calls us to repentance and humiliation. Instead of being provoked, we should endeavour to get good by it, and imitate the example of David in patience and submission; and a greater than David, even Christ, phel proposes to command in person, to disperse the attendants of David, and seize and put him to death. Absalom assents to this, as perhaps thinking the guilt would rest on Ahithophel.

8—10. Hushai argues speciously from the known valour of David and his friends; and the consequence of a failure in the first attack. The least repulse at such a juncture might be fatal to the cause.

12. Attack and fall on him. I have thus rendered the word (וּנְפַל)

9 the people: Behold, he now is hid in some pit, or in some other place; and should it happen, that some of these your men should fall at the first onset, then every one who heareth of it will say, 'There is a slaughter among the people
10 who follow Absalom.' And thus, even the valiant, whose heart is as the heart of a lion, will be utterly dismayed: for all Israel knoweth that thy father is a mighty man, and valiant are those 11 men who are with him. I therefore counsel that all Israel be gathered to thee, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, numerous as the sand on the sea-shore; and that thou go to battle, in thine own 12 person. So shall we come upon him in whatever place he may be found, and will attack and fall on him as the dew falleth on the ground: and of him and of all the men who are with 13 him not so much as one shall be left. Or if he get into a city, then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city, and drag it into the torrent, until 14 there be not one small stone found there." And Absalom and all the men of Israel said, "The counsel of Hushai, the Archite, is better than the counsel of Ahithophel." For Jehovah had appointed to defeat the good counsel of Ahithophel, to the intent that Jehovah might bring evil upon Absalom.
15 Then said Hushai to Zadok and to Abiathar, the priests, "Thus and thus did Ahithophel counsel Absalom and the elders of Israel; and 16 thus and thus have I counselled. Now therefore send quickly, and tell David, saying, "Lodge not this night in the plain of the wilderness, but speedily pass over the Jordan;

who, when he was reviled, reviled not again.

4. How often are great talents abused; and men who excel in worldly wisdom, are not unfrequently the most depraved and wicked. However Ahithophel might be regarded as a profound politician, he seems to have been destitute of every principle of in allusion to what follows. The Chald. uses the same verb in each part of the verse. The metaphor is beautiful, a large army overspreading the country.

13. All that Hushai wanted by this advice was, to gain time for David to gather his forces and put them in order; and as it suited Absalom's vanity and cruelty, he readily fell in with it.

17. En-rogel. This was a well not far from Jerusalem.

18. A cistern in his court. This must have been now dry, and of some capacity, to contain these two young men. The device of the woman in covering the mouth of the cistern, and spreading pounded corn, was well lest the king, and all the people who are with him, be swallowed up. Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz were waiting at En-rogel; for they durst not be seen to come into the city; and a damsel went and told them; and they went and told king David. Nevertheless a lad saw them, and 18 told Absalom: but they both went on with speed, and came to a man's house in Bahurim, who had a cistern in his court. Into it they went down; And the woman took and spread

19 a covering over the mouth of the cistern, and spread on it pounded corn, that the thing might not be known. And when Absalom's servants
20 came to the woman, they said, "Where is Ahimaaz and Jonathan?" And the woman said to them, "They are gone over the brook." And when they had sought, but could not find them, they returned to Jerusalem. And, after they 21 had departed, the other came up out of the cistern, and went and told king David, and said to David, "Arise, and pass quickly over the water; for thus hath Ahithophel counselled against you." Then David arose, and all the 22 people who were with him, and they passed over the Jordan. By the morning light there was not one who had not passed over the Jordan.

Now when Ahithophel saw that his counsel
23 was not followed, he saddled his ass, and set out, and went home to his own city; and he put his household in order, hanged himself and died, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father.

David had now come to Mahanaim; and Absalom had passed over the Jordan, he and all the men of Israel with him. And Absalom honour and virtue. His counsel to Absalom to go in to his father's concubines was an outrage on decency; and while it showed the disposition of the counsellor it manifested profligacy of Absalom. The soundest wisdom is the fear of the Lord; and to depart from evil, a proof of the best understanding.

calculated to prevent suspicion. I have followed the Vulg. in rendering (רִיחַת) pounded corn; that is corn, which having been soaked in water, was dried in the sun, and then pounded till the husk came off. This was commonly done to barley.

23. Now when Ahithophel. He perceived that by gaining time, David would easily prevail; and probably disgusted and mortified at the rejection of his counsel, he departed, and became his own executioner.

24 Mahanaim. This city was in Bashan, in the tribe of Gad, a little north of the Jabbok; and not far from the lake of Cinneroth, or Gennesaret. Compare Gen. xxii. 2, 22; Josh. xxi. 38, &c.

made Amasa captain of the host instead of Joab. This Amasa was the son of a man, whose name was Jether, an Ishmaelite, who went in to Abigail, the daughter of Nahash, sister to Zeruiah, Joab's mother. So Israel with Absalom encamped in the land of Gilead.

27 And when David had come to Mahanaim, Shobi, the son of Nahash, from Rabbah, of the children of Ammon, and Machir, the son of Ammiel from Lo-debar, and Barzillai, the Gileadite of Rogelim, Brought beds, and basons, and earthen vessels; and wheat, and barley, and flour, and parched corn, and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulse, And palm-honey, and butter, and sheep, and cow-milk cheese, for David, and for the people who were with him, to eat; for they said, "The people in coming through the desert, are hungry, and weary, and thirsty.

25. v1 Chron. ii. 17.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. In Absalom we see the fatal influence of ambition. It cancelled all the ties of kindred, gratitude, and duty; and made this rash, mad youth, thirst for his father's blood; even his throne and his kingdom would not satisfy him without that. He felt no reluctance at Ahithophel's horrid scheme. May we guard against ambition and pride, and cultivate the humble grace of the gospel; that we may with confidence appeal to God, that our hearts are not haughty, nor our eyes lofty.

25. This Amasa was, &c. Concerning Ithra's name and nation, Sept. calls him Jether: and so does the Hebrew also, at 1 Kings. ii. 32, and 1 Chron. ii. 17, an Ishmaelite. So apt are scribes to mistake in words that are nearly alike. Of all of them the reading of the Hebrew here is the least probable: for if he had been an Israelite, there had been no need of mentioning his nation. The name Nahash is the same in Hebrew, and Vulg. and Sept. and Vat. But Sept. Ald. and Comp. have for it, Jesse; which if it be taken for Abigail's father, is likely to be the true reading; for Abigail and Zeruiah were, both of them, sisters of David, whose father was Jesse. Is Nahash another name for Jesse? Or did the scribe seeing Nahash in v. 27, write it here by mistake? Or is Nahash the name, not of Abigail's father, but of her mother? So Trem. thinks that Abigail was the daughter of Jesse by a wife of his called Nahash; and so but half sister of David and Zeruiah.

27. Shobi, the son of Nahash, &c. He was probably made governor captains of hundreds over them. And David sent forth a third part of the people under the command of Joab, and a third part under the command of Abishai, the son of Zeruiah, Joab's brother, and a third part under Ittai, the Gathite. And the king said to the people, "I myself also will surely go forth with you." But the people answered, "Thou shalt not go forth: for should we be compelled to fly, they will not regard us; nor will they regard us, should half of us be slain: for they will account thee of more importance, than ten thousand of us: it is, therefore, better that thou succour us from the city." And the king said to them, "What seemeth to you best I will do." And the king stood by the gate side, and all the people came out by hundreds and by thousands. And the king charged Joab and Abishai and Ittai, saying, "Spare, for my sake, the young man Absalom." And the whole people heard, when the king gave to all the captains this charge concerning Absalom.

So the people went out into the field against Israel: and the battle was in the forest of Ephraim; Where the people of Israel were slain before the servants of David; and there was a great slaughter there, that day, of twenty thou-

Sept. V at

2. We may see in Ahithophel the awful end of pride and disappointed expectations. The people believed him to be an oracle, and he thought himself so. And now, to see his counsel neglected, upon which his safety and provision depended, mortified him to such a degree, that he could not bear it; and while his soul was loaded with all the horrors of guilt, treachery, rebellion, incest, and parricide, he destroyed himself; and to prevent any possibility of repentance, died in the very act of self-murder. So perished the great politician of that age. He had wisdom enough to go-of the country, in the room of Hanun his brother, who had treated David's ambassadors so ill. He might have disapproved that indignity, and showed his gratitude by coming so seasonably to David's relief. Machir had been the faithful friend of the house of Saul, and guardian of Mephibosheth. Barzillai was very old, but rich, wise and pious. These brought a plentiful supply for the king and his troops; and alike showed their unshaken loyalty and generosity.

CHAP. XVIII. 4. This reasoning was forcible, and doubtless David must have felt thankful, that he was spared the necessity of going to fight against his own son in person; and providence so ordered it, that he might not interpose to save Absalom's life.

5. Spare, for my sake. So the Sept. render; and the known affection of David for Absalom, supports this sense. In the 12th verse we have a different, but synonymous word, 'preserve, for my sake.'

6. The forest of Ephraim. One body of David's forces came out of

8 sand men. For the battle was thence scattered over the face of the whole country; and the forest devoured, that day, more people than the sword devoured. And Absalom was overtaken by the servants of David: for Absalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a turpentine-tree, so that his head was entangled in the turpentine-tree, and he hung between the heavens and the earth; for the mule that was under him passed away. And a certain man saw this, and told Joab, and said, "Behold, I saw Absalom hanging in a turpentine-tree." And Joab said to the man who told him, "And behold thou sawest him, and why didst thou not smite him there to the ground? And I would have given thee ten shekels of silver, and a girdle." And the man said to Joab, "Though I should receive a thousand shekels of silver in my hand, I would not put forth my hand against the king's son; for in our hearing the king charged thee and Abishai and Ittai, saying, 'Preserve, for my sake, the young man Absalom.' Or, had I thus done falsely, it would have been at the risk of 'my own life': for there is no matter hid from the king, and thou thyself wouldst have stood up against me." Then said Joab, "I must not tarry thus with thee." And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, vern a state, but not to rule his own spirit. He had composure enough to set his house in order, but not to check his passions, or bear a disappointment. He took great care of his house and family, but none for his soul. Thus died Abithophel, as a fool dieth. "Oh let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, nor the strong man in his strength; but let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord."

4. God often raises up friends to his people when they are in the greatest distress. So he did to David here, Shobi, and the wood, the other lay in ambush on the skirts of it. The men who came out of the wood seeming to fly before Absalom into the wood again, he pursued them, upon which the other part of David's army closed in, and thus Absalom and his people were hemmed in and easily destroyed.

11. Ten shekels and a girdle. Harmer, from De Tot's memoirs, has illustrated the custom of giving money and a pellisse for the service he had performed. So would Joab have rewarded this man for the slaughter of Absalom. Some conceive the military girdle meant, signifying that he would have given to him a command. Compare Isa. xxii. 21.

13. At the risk of my own life. Houbigant prefers the various lec-

while he was yet alive in the midst of the turpentine-tree. And ten young men who bore 15 Joab's armour, surrounded and smote Absalom, and slew him. And Joab blew the trumpet, 16 and the people returned from pursuing Israel: for by this Joab kept back the people. And 17 they took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the forest, and laid a very great heap of stones upon him: and all Israel fled, every one to his own home. Now Absalom had in his life- 18 time, taken and reared up for himself a monument, which is in the kings dale: for he said, "I have no son to keep my name in remembrance:" and he called the monument after his own name: and it is called to this day, Absalom's monument.

Then said Ahimaaz, the son of Zadok, "Let 19 me now run, and bear the king tidings, how that Jehovah hath avenged him of his enemies." And Joab said to him, "Thou shalt not bear ti- 20 dings this day. Another day indeed thou mayest hear tidings; but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, because the king's son is dead." Then 21 said Joab to Cushi, "Go tell the king what thou hast seen." And Cushi bowed himself to Joab, and ran. Then said Ahimaaz, the son of Za- 22 dok, yet again to Joab, "But howsoever, let me, I pray thee, also run after Cushi." And Joab said, "Why wouldst thou run, my son, Machir, and Barzillai. What a comfort was it to him in his sorrow and banishment, to find friends, and such friends, who furnished him with such suitable and seasonable supplies. "O fear the Lord, ye his saints, for there is no want to them that fear him. Blessed is the man who putteth his trust in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. The young lions may lack, and suffer hunger; but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing. Their bread shall be given them, and their water shall be sure;" and in need, God will afford supplies.

tion; while Dathe and Geddes adopt the textual reading. I cannot but think בנפש the true reading; and I would construe it not with עשרי but with עקר which I read as a participle. I have given the sense rather than the idiom.

14. I must not tarry thus, &c. Some would render: 'Not so will I delay with thee.' And Houbigant thinks the true reading is: 'Not so; I will stab him before thee.'

18. The king's dale. The vale where Absalom had erected his pillar. Wells supposes the same as noticed Gen. xiv. 17. Josephus asserts it was only two furlongs from Jerusalem, and it is conjectured to be the same as

23 seeing that thou hast no tidings ready?" "But howsoever, said he, let me run." And he said to him, "Run." Then Ahimaaz ran by the 24 way of the plain, and overran Cushi. And David was sitting between the two gates; and the watchman was walking on the wall, on the top of the gate; and he raised his eyes, and looked, 25 and behold a man running alone. And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king said, "If he be alone he bringeth tidings." 26 And he came apace, and drew near. And the watchman saw another man running! and the watchman called to the porter, and said, "Behold another man running alone." And the 27 king said, "He also bringeth tidings." Again the watchman said, "The running of the foremost appeareth to me like the running of Ahi-maaz, the son of Zadok." And the king said,
"He is a good man, and cometh with good 28 tidings." And Ahimaaz called, and said to the king, "Success!" And he fell down to the earth on his face before the king, and said, "Blessed be Jehovah, thy God, who hath delivered up the men who had rebelled against my lord the 29 king." And the king said, "Is the young man

Absalom safe?" And Ahimaaz answered,
"When Joab, the king's servant, sent thy servant, I saw a great tumult, but I know not what was the cause of it." And the king 30 said to him, "Turn aside, and stand here." And he turned aside, and stood still. And, 31
behold, Cushi came; and Cushi said, "Tidings, my lord the king: for Jehovah hath avenged thee this day of all those who rose up against thee." And the king said to Cushi, "Is the 32 young man Absalom safe?" And Cushi answered, "The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee for evil, be as that young man is." And the king was much mov- 33
ed, and went up to the chamber over the gate,
and wept: and as he went, thus he said, "O
my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom!
would God I had died for thee, O Absalom,
my son, my son!"

CHAPTER XIX.

B. C. 1023. Joab recalls David to a sense of his duty, who returns to his kingdom; Shimei meets him, and is pardoned; interview with Mephibosheth and Barzillai, &c.

weeping and mourning for Absalom; And that 2

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVIII. 1. From David's regard to the advice of his friends, we may learn, that it is the duty of superiors to submit to inferiors. Rank, command and affluence often beget pride; and pride frequently adopts and follows the most pernicious and mischievous counsels. David acted not only as a good man in following the counsel of his officers, but wisely in point of policy. His regard for Absalom, and his desire to spare the people, might have turned the victory into a defeat.

2. We here see the miserable end of an undutiful and rebellious son. Absalom met with his death in a very singular manner. There are many ways of being slain in battle; but this was an unheard of instance, and was designed to make his punishment more remarkable, and the hand of providence in it the more apparent. How quickly did his rebellion come to an end, and all his gay dreams vanish! His pillar of honour was turned into a monument of shame; his beauty perished in the dust, and his memory was blasted. How awful, and yet how righteous was the judgment of God on this wicked son! God is still displeased with undutiful children; and he will, either in this world or another, make their plagues wonderful. "Honour thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be prolonged in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

3. What a dreadful shock does the death of a wicked child give a pious parent! How terribly was David's heart wounded, to think of his son going down to destruction, with such multiplied and aggravated guilt upon his head. He was willing to have died for him, to save him from such complete and hopeless ruin. Let parents, to prevent such painful reflections, take care to 'bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord,' and guard against that excessive fondness for them, which prevents their correcting and restraining them when they do evil, and which was at once the ruin of Absalom, and the grief of David. And may we earnestly pray, that God would give to our children "an upright heart, that they may know and serve the God of their fathers with a perfect heart and a willing mind, that it may be well with them for ever."

that called the valley of Jehosaphat. Here the words (יִרְמְיָהוּ and יִרְמְיָהוּ) are used as synonymous.

20. Because the king's son, &c. Regard to Ahimaaz made Joab wish to send the tidings by some other; but his importunity at length prevailed, and he followed Cushi.

28. Success! Ahimaaz mentions only the victory; and leaves Cushi to relate the fate of Absalom.

32. Be as that young man is. The delicate manner in which Cushi communicates the intelligence, must strike every reader. Without mentioning his name, or the manner in which he had met his end, he only covertly notices it. Here is an instance of address, of the same kind as that of Cicero, in his noble defence of Milo, who, instead of mentioning the murder, said, 'His servants only did what every one would have his servants to do in like circumstances.'

33. O Absalom, my son! This pathetic lamentation must excite the sympathies of every parent. It is, however, impossible to account for it, the victory of that day was turned into mourning to all the people: (for when the people, that day, heard it said that the king was grieved for his son, The people stole away, that day, into the city, like people who steal away, through shame, when they have fled in battle); And that the king had covered his face, and that the king was crying with a loud voice, "O my son, Absalom! O Absalom, my son, my son!" Joab then went into the house to the king, and said, "Thou hast this day affected with shame all thy servants, who have now saved thy life, and the lives of thy sons and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines; In showing that thou lovest thine enemies and hatest thy friends. For thou hast this day made it manifest, that thou regardest neither thy chiefs nor thy servants: for I now perceive, that if Absalom were alive, and all of us, this day, dead, then all would be right in thine eyes. Now, therefore, arise, go forth, and speak kindly to thy servants: for, by Jehovah I swear, if thou go not forth, not a man will remain with thee this night: and this will be worse to thee than any evil which hath befallen thee, from thy youth until now." Then the king arose, and sat in the gate. And they told all the people, saying, "Behold, the king sitteth at the gate." And all the people presented themselves to the king.

Now Israel had fled, every man to his own home; and all the people, throughout all the tribes of Israel, blamed one another, saying, "The king saved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philistines; and now he is fled out of the land on account of Absalom. And Absalom, 10 whom we anointed over us, is dead in battle. Now therefore, why speak ye not a word of bringing back the king?"

And king David sent to Zadok and to Abiathar, the priests, saying, "Speak to the elders of Judah, saying, 'Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his own house? seeing that the speech of all Israel hath come to the king, in his present abode? Ye are my brethren, ye are 12 my own bone and flesh: wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the king?' Say also to 13 Amasa, 'My own bone and flesh art thou; God do so and so to me, and more also, if thou be not captain of the host continually, in the room of Joab.'" Thus he inclined the heart of all the 14 men of Judah, even to a man; so that they sent this word to the king, "Return thou, and all thy servants." So the king returned, and 15 came to the Jordan. And Judah came to Gilgal, to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over the Jordan.

And Shimei, the son of Gera, a Benjaminite, 16 who was of Bahurim, hasted and went down with the men of Judah to meet David. And 17 with him were a thousand men of Benjamin; Ziba, the servant of the house of Saul, also was with him, and his fifteen sons, and his twenty servants. And these went over the Jordan, before the king; And 'performed the service' 18 of bringing over the king's household, and in doing what he thought good. And Shimei, the son of Gera, fell down before the king, when he had come over the Jordan; And said to 19 the king, "Let not my lord impute to me my unless we admit, that David lamented the death of this young man, with all his sins upon his guilty head.

CHAP. XIX. 1-4. For the punctuation of these verses the learned readers may consult the Vulg. and Dathe.

5. Affected with shame. Geddes renders, 'affronted.' The whole of Joab's address was suitable to the state of David's affairs; and well calculated to bring him to a sense of his own interest and duty.

9, 10. After the loss of Absalom, the people returned to a sense of duty, and blamed each other for encouraging the rebellion, and for their remissness in bringing back the king.

11. Sent to Zadok, &c. It seems that many of the tribe of Judah had joined with Absalom; and David might fear, that unless hope of par-

dou was held out to them, a civil war might be the consequence. Through the priests he attempted to negotiate a reconciliation; and the attempt was successful.

13. Say ye to Amasa. Amasa was his nephew, whom he was particularly desirous to bring over to his interest, and who (judging his own case desperate,) might persuade Judah to hinder or delay the king's return.

18. They performed the service. The common version here, is unsupported either by the sense of the present text or any of the versions. I have followed the Sept. and Syr. The Vulg. is, 'And they passed the fords, that they might bring, &c.'

19, 20. Let not my lord, &c. He pleaded, that he came first to submit to him; and it is remarkable that he calls himself of the house of Joseph,

iniquity, nor do thou remember what thy servant
 perversely did the day that my lord the king went out of Jerusalem, so that the king should 20 take it to his heart. For thy servant doth know that I have sinned: therefore, behold, I am come the first, this day, of all the house of Joseph, to go down to meet my lord the king.” 21 But Abishai, the son of Zeruiah, answered and said, “Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, because he reviled Jehovah’s anointed?” 22 And David said, “What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be adversaries to me? Shall there any man be put to death this day in Israel? For do I not know 23 that I am this day king over Israel?” Therefore the king said, “Thou shalt not die.” And the king swore to him.
 24 And Mephibosheth, the grand-son of Saul, came down to meet the king; and he had neither dressed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor washed his clothes, from the day the king departed, until the day that he came back in 25 peace. And when he had come from Jerusalem to meet the king, the king said to him, “Why wentest thou not with me, Mephibosheth?” 26 And he answered, “My lord, O king, my servant deceived me: for thy servant said, ‘Let an ass be saddled for me, that I may ride thereon, and go to the king;’ because thy servant 27 is lame. And he hath slandered thy servant to my lord the king; but my lord the king is as an angel of God: do therefore what is good in thine 28 eyes. For all my grand-father’s house were but dead men before my lord the king: yet didst thou set thy servant among them that did eat at thy own table. What right therefore have I 29 yet to cry any more to the king?” And the king said to him, “Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? I say, ‘Thou and Ziba divide the land.’” And Mephibosheth said to 30

 the king, “Yea, let him take all, forasmuch as my lord the king is come again in peace to his own house.”

And Barzillai, the Gileadite, came down from 31
 Rogelim, and went over the Jordan with the king, to conduct him over the Jordan. Now 32 Barzillai was a very aged man, eighty years old: and he had provided the king with provisions, while he lay at Mahanaim; for he was a very rich man. And the king said to Barzillai, 33 “Come thou over with me, and I will feed thee with me in Jerusalem.” And Barzillai said to 34 the king, “How long have I to live, that I should go up with the king to Jerusalem? I 35 am this day eighty years old: and can I discern between good and evil? Can thy servant taste what I eat or what I drink? Can I listen any more to the voice of men-singers or women-singers? Why then should thy servant be yet a burden to my lord the king? ‘And why would the king recompense me with such a reward?’
 Let thy servant just go over the Jordan with the 36
 king: And then let thy servant, I pray thee, 37 return, that I may die in my own city, near the grave of my father and my mother. But behold thy servant Chimham; let him go over with my lord the king; and do to him what shall seem good to thee.” And the king answered, 38 “Chimham shall go over with me, and I will do to him that which shall seem good to thee: and whatsoever thou shalt require of me, that will I do for thee.” And all the people went over 39 the Jordan. And when the king had come over, the king kissed Barzillai, and blessed him; and he returned to his own place. Then 40
 the king went to Gilgal, and Chimham went on being a Benjaminite, of the family of Saul. He would have come ill recommended to David under that character, therefore he mentions the house of Joseph, a tribe the nearest akin to the other, Benjamin being his beloved brother.

21—24. The sons of Zeruiah, were undoubtedly brave, but sanguinary men. David’s determination to spare even his enemies was wise and politic.

24. And Mephibosheth, &c. It is evidently the design of the author to exculpate this prince from any share in the rebellion, by stating these tokens of his grief.

29. Thou and Ziba divide the land. David had before given all to Ziba; he now makes an equal division of the property, between Ziba and Mephibosheth.

32. A very rich man. So the Vulg. renders, and the context supports this version.

34—38. How long have I to live? The king’s kindness would be ill bestowed upon him, as his relish for the pleasures of a court and of the senses, were almost gone; besides, he would rather be a burden than of any service, and would only stand in the way of those who might be useful.
 He therefore recommended his son, as more fit for a court, and more desirous of enjoying the honours of it.

CHAP. XX. 2. So all the men of Israel, &c. This must be under-with him; and all the people of Judah conducted the king, and also half the people of Israel.

- 41 And, behold, all the men of Israel came to the king, and said to the king, "Why have our brethren, the men of Judah, stolen thee away, and have brought the king, and his household, and all David's men with him, over the Jordan?" And all the men of Judah answered the men of Israel, "Because the king is our near kinsman: why then are ye angry on this account? Have we so much as eaten at the king's cost; or hath he given to us any gift?"
- 42 And the men of Israel answered the men of Judah, and said, "We have ten parts in the king, and we also have more interest in David than ye: why then did ye despise us, so as not first to advise with us about bringing back our king?" But the words of the men of Judah were more fierce than the words of the men of Israel.

CHAP. XX.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIX. 1. We may learn, that it is our duty to exercise moderation even in grief. When this is carried to excess, it may lead us to neglect imperative duties, and be the occasion of real injury to us. David was sensible of this on the rough, but honest, reproof of Joab. He saw that he was treating his brave and victorious friends, not as they had reason to expect; and he therefore came forth to the people. It is happy when reproof thus produces fruits of repentance.

2. We see, in the self-reproach, and mutual recriminations of the Israelites, the effects of their own crimes. A restless and dissatisfied race, they had attempted to dethrone the man who had conquered their enemies, and raised them to a high pitch of national greatness; but when defeated, they began to recollect his merits, and to desire his return. Let those who suffer unjustly be encouraged, by this circumstance. The cloud which hangs over them will be dispersed; God will bring forth 'their righteousness as the light, and their judgment as the noon day. For light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart.'

stood in a limited sense, to signify, all those who were disaffected.

4. Then said the king to Amasa. David often attempted to get rid of Joab and his brothers, but was hitherto unsuccessful. He now appoints man, whose name was Sheba, the son of Bichri, a Benjaminite: and he blew a trumpet, and said, "We have no part in David, nor have we any portion in the son of Jesse: every man to his tents, O Israel." So all the men of Israel revolted from David, and followed Sheba, the son of Bichri: but the men of Judah adhered to their king, and conducted him from the Jordan even to Jerusalem.

And David came to his own house at Jerusalem; and the king took the ten concubine-wives, whom he had left to keep the house, and put them in ward, and fed them, but went not in to them. So they were shut up and lived like widows unto the day of their death.

Then said the king to Amasa, "Assemble to me the men of Judah, within three days, and be thou here present." So Amasa went to assemble the men of Judah: but he tarried longer than the set time which he had appointed him. And David said to 'Joab', "Now shall Sheba, the son of Bichri, do us more harm than did Absalom: take thou thy lord's servants, and pursue him, lest he obtain possession of fenced cities, and escape us." So there went after Joab, his own men and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites,

3. We have a lively example of clemency and gratitude in David's forgiving Shimei. Thus his throne was established by mercy. To forgive, is the great and best prerogative of kings. His gratitude to Barzillai for his hospitality, deserves praise and imitation. Let us be always ready to return kindness, and be grateful to our friends and benefactors, especially those who have helped us in times of distress. No future wealth, honour or ease, should make us forget them and our obligation to them.

4. We have in Barzillai an example for aged persons to restrain their desires after any temporal good. 'I go to court! It is time for me to think of going to my grave. My relish for diversions, and the delights of a court, are gone; and my capacity for business almost gone too. Let me return home, to set my house and heart in order, and prepare for my long home.' Let the aged learn from this venerable old man, what their disposition should be; to have as little to do with the world as possible; to think much of dying; and be daily prepared for their last awful change. And if they have a request to make let it be for their children.

and all the mighty men: and they went out of Jerusalem, to pursue Sheba, the son of Bichri.
 8 When they were come to the great stone which is in Gibeon, Amasa came to them. Now the garment which Joab had put on, was girded about him with a girdle, in which, a sword in its sheath, hung by his loins; but as he went 9 on he let it fall out. And Joab said to Amasa, "Art thou in health, my brother?" And Joab took Amasa by the beard with the right hand to 10 kiss him. But Amasa observed not the sword that was in Joab's other hand: so he smote him with it, in the groin, and shed his bowels out upon the ground, though he did not repeat the stroke: so he died. Joab, and Abishai his brother, then pursued Sheba, the son of Bichri.
 11 And one of Joab's men stood by 'Amasa, (who was weltering in his own blood, on the highway)" and said, "He that favoureth Joab, and he that 12 is for David, let him go after Joab." But when the man saw that the whole people stood still, he removed Amasa out of the highway into the field, and cast a cloth upon him: for he saw that every one that came to him stood still.
 13 When he was removed out of the highway, all the people went on after Joab, to pursue Sheba, the son of Bichri. And Sheba went through 14 all the tribes of Israel to Abel-beth-maachah; and all the dissatisfied assembled, and went 15 after him. But they came and besieged him in Abel-beth-maachah, and they cast up a bank against the city, which stood opposite the outward wall; and all the people who were with by accident, but by design; and he took it, most probably in his left hand, while with his right he took hold of Amasa's beard to salute him. This was then, and is now, a mark of the highest respect. See Note Heb. Bible.

2—13. Joab could not brook a rival; and for this and other deliberate murders, he deserved the end which awaited him.

14. Sheba went, &c. To render the text clear I have given the noun instead of the pronoun; and with Houbigant and others consider Abel-beth-Maacha, the name of the city we read in the next verse. It was situated at the extremity of the portion of Naphtali, in the Anti-Lebanon, and on the river Chrysorroas.—And all the dissatisfied assembled. Some make these the inhabitants of Beeroth, which is not at all probable. Dathe considers it as the name of a district, which I conceive the construction will not admit. Jerom renders, 'and all the chosen men assembled to him.' The Syr. and Arab. read (קריים) cities. This variety shows that the text is uncertain. From the Sept. we may conjecture they read (הנכרים) which from the verb, (נקר) may signify those estranged, alienated, which is the best sense; and Joab battered the wall, to throw it down.

Then cried a wise woman out of the city, 16
 "Hear, hear; say, I pray you, to Joab, 'Come near hither, that I may speak with thee.'" And 17 when he had come near to her, the woman said, "Art thou Joab?" And he answered, "I am." Then she said to him, "Hear the words of thy handmaid." And he answered, "I hear." Then she spoke saying, "They were wont to 18 speak in old time, saying, 'Make, indeed, sure inquiry, and then act accordingly.' 'We are' 19 peaceable and faithful in Israel: thou seekest to destroy a mother-city in Israel: why wouldst thou swallow up the inheritance of Jehoyah?" And Joab answered and said, "Far, far be it 20 from me, that I should swallow up or destroy. The matter is not so; but a man of mount 21 Ephraim, Sheba, the son of Bichri, by name, hath rebelled against the king, against David: only deliver him up and I will depart from the city." And the woman said to Joab, "Behold, his head shall be thrown to thee over the wall." The woman then, in her wisdom, went to all 22
 the people; and they cut off the head of Sheba, the son of Bichri, and threw it out to Joab. And he blew a trumpet, and they retired from the city, every man to his own home. And Joab returned to Jerusalem to the king.

Now Joab was over all the host of Israel; and 23
 Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, was over the Cherethites and over the Pelethites. And Adoram 24 was over the tribute; and Jehoshaphat, the son of Ahilud, was recorder. And Sheva was scribe; 25

which I have adopted.

18. Make, indeed, sure inquiry, &c. I have followed Geddes in this version, with whom Dathe nearly agrees. I read (באכל) as a participle, because the language will admit of it, and because there is no reason, why sure inquiry was to be made at Abel, more than at any other place. The woman reprehends Joab for attacking the city before he had inquired whether the citizens had willingly received him, and were actually his abettors. The Syr. and Arab. read for Abel (כריאים) prophets. The Sept. and Chald. are incoherent. I believe the sense is that given.

22. And they cut off the head, &c. Thus ended this second attempt, to subvert the throne of David. When the rebel-leader was pressed he was given up as a sacrifice, and his followers were in mercy suffered to escape.

26. And Ira also, &c. Dathe suspects that the words, and the sons of David were chief ministers, have been omitted before this verse. Compare Chapter viii. 18.

26 and Zadok and Abiathar were the priests. And Ira also, the Jairite, was a chief minister to David.

CHAPTER XXI.

B. C. 1321. In consequence of a famine, the Gibeonites are avenged; the Philistine Giants are slain, and the bones of Saul and Jonathan are buried.

1 THERE was a famine in the days of David three years, year after year; and David inquired of Jehovah. And Jehovah answered, "It is on account of Saul, and his bloody house, because he slew the Gibeonites." Now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Israel, but of the remnant of the Amorites; and the children of Israel had sworn to preserve them: but Saul, in his zeal for the children of Israel and Judah, sought to destroy them. And king David called for the Gibeonites and said to them, "What shall I do for you, and with what shall I make an atonement, that ye may bless the inheritance of Jehovah?" And the Gibeonites said to him, "We will have neither silver nor gold from Saul nor from his house; nor shalt thou kill any man in Israel for us." And he said, "What ye shall say, that will I do for you." And they answered the king, "The man who would have consumed us, and who formed the design of utterly destroying us in every district of Israel; Let seven men of his sons be delivered to us, 6 that we may hang them up before Jehovah in Gibeah-of-Saul."° And the king said, "I will give them." But the king spared Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, because of Jehovah's oath that was between them, between David and Jonathan, the son of Saul. But the king took the two sons of Rizpah, the 8 daughter of Aiah, whom she bare to Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of Merab, the daughter of Saul, whom she had born to Adriel, the son of Barzillai, the Meholathite: And he delivered them into the hands 9 of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them on the hill before Jehovah. Thus the seven fell together, and were put to death in the first days of harvest, in the beginning of the barley harvest.

And Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, took sackcloth, and spread it for herself upon the rock, from the beginning of harvest until water dropped from the heavens upon them, and suffered neither the birds of the air to rest on them by day, nor the beasts of the field to attack them

CHAP. XXI. 6. ° Chosen of Jehovah. Syr. Arab.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. How uncertain are human affairs! One would have thought when Absalom had failed in his attempt, no other would have been made. But David was no sooner restored to his kingdom, than fresh troubles arose, as clouds after the rain. We see it often so in private life. Let us therefore not be confident, nor think our mountain stands so strong, that it may not soon be moved. We should habituate ourselves to self-denial, mortification, and deadness to the world, and fix our thoughts and hopes on a better. "Set your affections on things above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God;" then you will be better able to bear the changes of life, and be more likely to improve them.

2. What a dangerous thing is an ambitious spirit. Joab again, to gratify his pride, killed his rival; he could not bear humiliation.

CHAP. XXI. 1. There was... in the days of David. When the transactions here recorded occurred, is not particularly stated. They could not occur after the rebellion of Sheba, but most probably in the early part of David's reign. The historian having mentioned David's sin, goes through the effects of it without interrupting the story, and then mentions several events out of due order of time. This seems confirmed by comparing v. 20, with ch. viii. 1.—Slew the Gibeonites. We have no account of this event in the history of Saul; some think it was when the priests were slain at Nab.

2. In his zeal for, &c. Under pretence of zeal for the interests of his own people, he slew or banished the Gibeonites; and most probably gave

8. ° So 2 mss. 1 Sam. xvii. 19. the text Michal.

This was the greatest treachery, especially as it was in a critical season. But when pride reigns, reason and conscience, justice and humanity, are all suppressed and silenced. Happy are those in private life, who have not such temptation to pride and ambition; and especially happy are those of humble and contented minds.

3. We may learn that disputes are continued, and grow warm, for want of knowing what is disputed. Joab thought the citizens of Abel were all treacherous men, and in the heat of passion determined to destroy them with Sheba, for his offence; but this wise woman cleared up the matter, and put an end to the rebellion. Let us, "study those things that make for peace. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." Meddle not with those given to change.

their land and wealth to his own relatives, who now possessed it; and perhaps those now punished were the persons who had executed his orders. 1 Sam. xxii. 7

6. The chosen of Jehovah. These words are wanting in the Syr. and Arab. and it is not probable, that the Gibeonites, Dathe thinks, would honour Saul, their cruel enemy, with this title. Geddes applies it to the hill, where he supposes there might be a school of the prophets. I cannot but think the words are a gloss on the text, and have thrown them among the various readings.

8. Merab. That an error has occurred in the text is past doubt,

- 11 by night. And it was told David what Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, the concubine of Saul, had done. And David went and took the bones of Saul, and the bones of Jonathan, his son, from the men of Jabesh-gilead, who had stolen them from the street of Beth-shan, where the Philistines had hung them up, when the Philistines had slain Saul in Gilboa. And he brought up thence the bones of Saul, and the bones of Jonathan, his son; and they gathered the bones of those lately hanged. And the bones of Saul, and Jonathan his son, buried they in the country of Benjamin, in Zelah, in the sepulchre of Kish his father: and they performed all that the king commanded. And after this God was intreated for the land.
- 15 Moreover the Philistines had again war with Israel; and David went down, and his servants with him, and fought against the Philistines.
- 16 David had now become feeble. And Ishbi-benob, who was of the race of the Rephaites, the brass of whose spear weighed three hundred shekels, and who was girded with a new sword, thought to have slain David: But Abishai, the 17 son of Zeruiah, succoured him, and smote the Philistine, and killed him. Then the men of David swore to him, saying, "Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, lest thou quench the lamp of Israel." And after this, there was 18 another battle with the Philistines at "Gezer": then Sibbechai, the Hushathite, slew Saph, who was of the race of the Rephaites. Again there 19 was another battle with the Philistines at Gob, where Elhanan, the son of Jair, a Bethlehemite, slew "Lahumi, the brother" of Goliath, the Gathite, the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam. And there was yet another 20 battle at Gath, where was a man of great stature, who had on every hand six fingers, and on every foot six toes, twenty-four in number; and he also was of the race of the Rephaites. And 21 when he defied Israel, Jonathan, the son of Shimeah, the brother of David, slew him. These four, of the race of the Rephaites of 22 Gath, fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

18. v 1 Chron. xx. 4.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. It is our duty to seek to God at all times, but more especially, in a time of trouble. We should then inquire, wherefore he contendeth with us; and by repentance, and forsaking our sins, endeavour to turn away his displeasure. How distressing is it, when God withholds the rain in its season; when he makes the heavens as brass, and the earth as iron! The consequence is a famine; and with famine is often associated the pestilence. Let us learn our constant dependence on God for life, and all the supports and comforts of it; and while enjoyed let us give him the glory.

2. We here see God's regard to public ordinances, and his justice in punishing perjury. The original treaty with the Gibeonites was gained by fraud; but as it was solemnly ratified before God, he punished the breach of it; and where murder is added to perjury, it is peculiarly abominable in his sight. Those who thus profane his name, and violate the most solemn engagements, shall not be held guiltless; but peculiar marks of divine displeasure shall be inflicted upon them.

3. Wealth obtained by fraud and injustice has a curse entailed on it; and so far from being a blessing to men, it brings calamities on them or on their posterity. God hears the cry of the oppressed, and will sooner or later avenge them of their oppressors. The conduct of Saul and his house to the Gibeonites, was founded on injustice; without any reason their lands and their wealth were seized, and perhaps many of them slain. The plunderers did not long enjoy their prey; God afflicted them first with famine, and then cut them off with the sword.

We are told that Michal had no children, Chap. vi. 23: and we are informed that Merab, not Michal, was married to Adriel; 1 Sam. xviii. 19. During David's banishment from the court of Saul, Michal was married to Phaltiel. 1 Sam. xxv. 44, and 2 Sam. iii. 15.

9. And they hung them, &c. Michaelis contends that the meaning of the word (קָטְּפוּ) is, that after they were slain, the bodies were nailed to wood, in the manner of those crucified, and left there to perish. In this case the law, Deut. xxviii. 23, was not observed.

10. Until rain from the heavens. It was in consequence of a long draught, that David was commanded to execute these men, for their injustice toward the Gibeonites; and they seem to have been condemned to hang up till rain fell. The attention of Rizpah to the dead manifested her affection; and it should seem that she watched the bodies for some time, but how long is not stated. Some indeed suppose from March till September; but Harmer has proved, that sometimes in dry seasons, it rains abundantly in June or July.

11—14. David seems to blame himself for having neglected to inter the bones of Saul, and of Jonathan his friend, in a suitable manner; and the conduct of Rizpah led him now to perform the funeral rites, by transferring their bones to the sepulchre of their father. To be laid in the sepulchre of their fathers was the desire of the Israelites; and to neglect this was thought sinful in survivors.

17. The lamp of Israel. This is a beautiful metaphor, and contains a delicate compliment to the venerable warrior.

18. At Gezer. I adopt this as the preferable reading, because this was on the confines of Israel, adjoining the Philistines, Josh. xvi. 3.

19. For the text which I have followed, the writer of 1 Chronicles must be consulted; and Kennicott has shown how the present has been corrupted. In short, the one text is plain and coherent; this as it stands, makes Elhanan slay Goliath contrary to fact.

CHAPTER XXII.

B. C. 1019. After his deliverance from his enemies, David composed this most excellent song of thanksgiving.

1. AND David spoke to Jehovah the words of this song, in the day that Jehovah delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul: And he said,
"Jehovah! my rock, my fortress, and my deliverer:
- 3 My God, my rock, in whom I trust;
My shield, my safe retreat, my tower, my refuge,
My saviour, who saveth me from violence.
- 4 I called on Jehovah, worthy to be praised,
And from mine enemies I was saved.
- 5 The "billows" of death had encompassed me,
Destructive floods had filled me with terror:
- 6 The cords of hades enclosed me:
The snares of death were laid for me!
- 7 In my distress I called on Jehovah;
And to my God, I cried aloud:
From his temple, he heard my voice;
And my cry came to his ear.
- 8 Then the earth shook and trembled;
The foundations of the mountains rocked—
They shook, because he was wroth.
- 9 From his nostrils ascended a smoke,
And from his mouth a devouring flame:
Flakes of fire were kindled by it.
- 10 He bowed the heavens and descended:
And thick darkness was under his feet.
- 11 He rode on a cherub, and did fly:
Swiftly did he fly on the wings of the wind!

CHAP. XXII. 3. My safe retreat. It is well known, that the Hebrews used the term (רֶפַע) not only for a horn, but to denote a hill, or elevated place; and in this sense I understand it here. Compare Isa. v. 1, in the original.

4. Worthy to be praised. Michaelis, Dathe, Rosenmuller, and others render, 'distressed with fear.' I have followed the common version. The future is here, as often used, for the perfect tense.

6. Hades. I have adopted this term as best answering the original, and as it is become almost naturalized. It means the invisible state, into

For Jehovah thundered 'from' the heavens: 14

And the Most High sent forth his voice.

His arrows he shot, and scattered his enemies; 15

He multiplied lightnings, and confounded them.

which men go at death. Hence the 'cords of Hades,' are the pains and diseases, which bring on death, and hurry mortals into that state.

7—15. It is not improbable that David in some of his battles might be favoured with victory in the midst of a thunder-storm. Compare Judges v. 4, &c. This would give occasion to this sublime description.

16—24. In these verses David celebrates the wonderful deliverance wrought for him; and states the cause of it to be his own integrity and uprightness.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXII. I. The general use of this chapter is to excite us to gratitude and praise for divine mercies, especially extraordinary interpositions of providence in our favour. New mercies are every day rising, and call for new songs. Let us praise God in our secret devotions, and show forth his praises before others. We should not be ashamed to own our obligations to him, and to express our gratitude for his mercy. We should take notice of the greatness and seasonableness of our deliverances, and trace the hand of providence in them, to make our gratitude lively and acceptable.

character and deeds. In the last verse I follow the text of Ps. xviii.

30. Broken through troops. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

34. On my high places. The circumstance of standing on the high places, or mountains, is applied to the hind or stag by Xenophon. Lib. de Venat. compare Habakkuk iii. 19. That expression, my high place, in both

Then did I beat them small, as dust before the 43

From the violent man thou hast rescued me.

Who showeth kindness to his anointed,
To David and to his seed for ever.

2. If we desire the continued favour and interposition of heaven, let us follow after righteousness. David was rewarded according to it. This is a general maxim in divine proceedings. "The righteous Lord loveth righteousness. With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful, and with the upright man thou wilt show thyself upright." Thus we should pray with humble hope and confidence. The more we are like God, the more we may be assured of his favourable regards.

4. Let us learn to trust God in future difficulties, and rejoice in him as an everliving and unchangeable God. "The Lord liv-

The man who was highly exalted;
The anointed of the God of Jacob;
The pleasant psalmist of Israel.

And his word is on my tongue.

To me the rock of Israel hath promised,

veth; and blessed be my rock; and exalted be the God of the rock of my salvation." This is language well becoming christians, and should be their joy in every succeeding age. Whatever dangers or troubles are before us, he is still the same; therefore let him be trusted in, and exalted.

4. Let us especially rejoice to think that our deliverance is death of Saul.

50. Among the nations. Those subject to himself. He would instruct them in the knowledge of God, and by his songs afford them matter of praise.

CHAP. XXIII. 1. Now these though later. It is not improbable, that this short prophetic ode might be the last which David wrote. It is not probable that it contains the last words he spoke. The account given of his last days intimates that he was worn out with toils and age. 1 Kings ii.—The pleasant Psalmist. Literally, 'pleasant in the psalms of Israel.' Geddes renders, 'who harmonized the psalmody of Israel.'

3. A just ruler over, &c. These words contain the substance of what God had promised; and they cannot be applied with propriety to Solomon. For how could he be said to be a ruler over mankind? This is certainly the sense, when (בַּיָּד) is used absolutely, without any restrictive or qualifying term. The just ruler then must signify the future Messiah, who sprang from David, and whose kingdom was to be universal.

5. Is not my house, &c. This line is clearly the apodosis or application of the beautiful comparison, in the preceding verse; and this naturally contributes great assistance in ascertaining its genuine sense: "As lovely as the morning, when the sun ariseth; a morning, not gloomy, threatening tempests and hurricanes, but cloudless and bright; as flourishing as grass from the earth after rain; So shall my house or family abide, splendid in rank and in honours; flourishing until he come, who is to be the just ruler over mankind; and when every other branch is cut off, flourishing in him for ever." Such I take to be the import of this passage.

Wisely ordered in all points and sure.

Truly in this is all my salvation;

And mine every desire, will he not accomplish?

"But lawless men, all of them,

6

Are like thorns, to be thrust away,

(For they cannot be taken with the hand,

But the man who would cut them up,

7

Must have an ax and a spear-shaft,)

And to be burned, in the place, with fire."

These are the names of the worthies who belonged to David: "Jashobeam" the "Hachmonite", was chief of the first three. "He at one time, raising his spear", penetrated through three hundred men. And next to him, and one of the first three mighty men, was Eleazar, the son of Dodo, the Ahohite. "He was with David" at "Pasdammim"; where the Philistines were assembled to battle, and the men of Israel were giving way; And he arose, and smote the Philistines, until his hand which had stuck to his sword, was weary: and by him, Jehovah, that day, wrought a great deliverance; and the perfected in Christ. He hath raised us from the greatest trouble, the sorrows of death, the snares of hell; as the Captain of our salvation, he is gone before us, and will give us the victory over our spiritual enemies. If we fight under his banner, and depend on his grace, he will deliver us now; and at length bestow complete and everlasting salvation upon us.

That (וְ) is used as an interrogative particle see Nold. and Michaelis. Compare Isa. xxxvi. 19, with 2 Kings xvii. 34. In the Syr. and Chald. this signification is common, (see Castel;) and the context, I think, requires it.—For with me, &c. This is the reason of his confidence and hope; and well might he say, "Truly in this covenant is contained all my salvation, &c." Dathe, I find, has rendered nearly as I have done.

6. But lawless men, &c. Is there not here a reference, not only to the punishment of the wicked in general, but to the lawless, wicked Israelites, who, when the just king should come, would not submit to his law? The metaphor in this view has peculiar force and propriety. As thorns are cut up and burned with fire, in the place where they grew, so shall these sinners be cut off and consumed in their own land.

8. Chief of the first three. Every Critic knows that this catalogue in both the texts and the versions is strangely corrupted. It was a comparison of this catalogue with that in Chronicles, that laid the foundation of Kennicott's great work, and the subsequent labour of De Rossi.—Penetrated through, &c. So the word (חַלַּל) often signifies.

9. And one of the first three. In order to understand this, the reader must observe that of the thirty-seven brave men here mentioned, there were six more distinguished than the rest; and of these six, one ternary, or trio, were deemed superior to the second ternary.

10, 11. He arose. Here the parallel place is corrupted, and must be corrected by this. What was done by Shammah, is there ascribed to Eleazar.

- 11 people followed him only to spoil. And next to him was Shammah, the son of Agee, the Hararite. And the Philistines were assembled at Lechi, where was a piece of ground full of "barley": and the people fled from the Philistines.
- 12 But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it, and smote the Philistines: thus, by him, Jehovah wrought a great deliverance.
- 13 And those "three" chiefs of the thirty went, and came down to David to the "rock", to the cave of Adullam: and the Philistines "were encamp-
- 14 ed" in the valley of Rephaim. Now while David was in that hold, and a garrison of the
- 15 Philistines was at Bethlehem, David longed, and said, "Who will give me a draught of water from the well of Bethlehem, which is by the
- 16 gate?" Then those three mighty men broke through the host of the Philistines, and drew water from the well of Bethlehem, which was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David; but "David" would not drink it, but poured it out as a drink-offering to Jehovah. And he said, "Far be it from me, O Jehovah, that I should do this thing: "shall I drink" the blood of these men, who went for it at the risk of their lives?" He therefore would not drink it.
- 18 These things did those three worthies. And next to them was Abishai, the brother of Joab, the son of Zeruiah, the chief of the second three. For he, raising his spear, penetrated through three hundred men; and had the first name,
- 19 among the second three. Of the three, he was the most honourable, and became their chief; yet he attained not the rank of the first three.
- 20 And next to him was Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, (the son of a wealthy man of Kabzeel,) great in exploits. He slew two huge lions of Moab:

he went down also and slew another lion in the midst of a pit, in time of snow. He, moreover, 21 slew an Egyptian, five cubits high: and though the Egyptian had a spear in his hand; he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear. These things did Benaiah, the 22 son of Jehoiada; and hence had a name among the second three worthies. He was more honour 23 rable than the thirty, but he attained not the rank of the first three. And David set him over his own guard. Asahel, the brother of Joab, 24 was over the thirty, and one of the second three worthies. "The names of David's thirty mighty men were", Elhanan, the son of Dodo, of Bethlehem; Shammah, the Harodite: Elikai, 25 the Harodite; Helez, the "Pelonite"; Ira, the 26 son of Ikkesh, the Tekoite; Abiezer, the Ane- 27 thoite; "Sibbechai", the Hushathite; "Ilai", 28 the Ahohite; Maharai, the Netophathite; He- 29 led, the son of Baanah, a Netophathite; Ittai, the son of Ribai, from Gibeah of the children of Benjamin; Benaiah, the Pirathonite; "Hu- 30 rai", of Nahal-Gaash; Abi-albon, the Arba- 31 thite; Azmaveth, the Barhumite; Eliahba, 32 the Shaalbonite; "Beni-Hashem, a Gizonite;" Jonathan, "the son of" Shammah, the Hara- 33 rite; Ahiam, the son of Shacar, the Hararite; Eliphelet, the son of Ahasbai, the Maachashite; 34 Eliam, the son of Ahithophel, the Gilonite; Hezrai, the Carmelite; Naarai, "the son of 35 Arabai", the Arbite; Joel, the son of Nathan; 36 of Zobah; Bani, the Gadite; Zelek, the Am- 37 monite; Nahari, the Beerothite, armour-bearer to Joab, the son of Zeruiah; Ira, an Ithrite; 38 Gareb, an Ithrite; Uriah, the Hethite. 16. Geddes conjectures that a name of one of David's worthies has been dropped out of the text; unless with Kennicott we make him out of Ashael. I consider this the only way of explaining the place. For the various reading of the names, consult Hebrew Bible.

CHAPTER XXIV.

B. C. 1017. The sin of David in numbering the people; the judgment brought on the kingdom; the plague stayed by David's repentance, and an altar built to God.

1 AND the anger of Jehovah was again kindled against Israel, "because an adversary stood up against Israel", and moved David against them
2 to say, "Go number Israel and Judah." For the king said to Joab, who was with him, the captain of the host, "Go now through all the tribes of Israel, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, and number ye the people, that I may know the
3 number of the people." And Joab said to the king, "May Jehovah thy God add to the people, how many soever they be, a hundredfold; and may the eyes of my lord the king see it: but why should my lord the king delight in this 4 purpose?" Notwithstanding, the king's word prevailed against Joab, and against the other chiefs of the host. So Joab, and the chiefs of the host, went out from the presence of the king to number the people of Israel.

And they passed over the Jordan, and encamped on the right side of Aroer, a city that lieth within the river of Gad, and toward Jazer. Then they went to Gilead, and to the land of 6 Tahtim-hodshi; and they came to Dan-Jaan, and about to Zidon. Thence they went to the 7 strong hold of Tyre, and to all the cities of the Hivites, and of the Canaanites; and they proceeded to the south of Judah, to Beer-sheba. And when they had gone through the whole 8 land, they came to Jerusalem, at the end of nine months and twenty days. And Joab gave 9 to the king, the sum of the number of the people: and there were in Israel, eight hundred thousand valiant men, who drew the sword; and the men of Judah were five hundred thousand men.

And David's heart smote him, after that he 10

CHAP. XXIV.

It is our comfort in life and death; it is not only a covenant of royalty, but of grace, even the sure mercies of David. It is everlasting in its contrivance and continuance; admirably adapted to promote the glory of God, and the holiness and happiness of souls. It is firmly established by the promise of a faithful God, and Jesus is the surety of it. "It is well ordered in all things and sure; as it is all our salvation, let it be all our desire;" let us seek a share in its blessings, and comply with its demands. "Then will this God be our God for ever and ever, and our guide even until death."

3. Let the enemies of Christ and his kingdom dread the effects of his displeasure. Those sons of Belial who refuse his yoke,

CHAP. XXIV. 1. Because an adversary. It is not usual to mention the anger of God, without stating the cause of it; but as the text now stands, God is angry, and his anger leads him to move David to number the people. David's numbering the people was not the cause, but the effect of his anger; so that we are left without any knowledge of the cause. The words preserved in the parallel place, give us this cause. "Because an adversary, perhaps one of David's wicked counsellors, moved him, and he complied with the suggestion, so as to say, 'Go, &c.'"

2. That I may know, &c. One would think from this, that David's design was innocent; for if a shepherd ought to know the number and state of his flock, so a king should know the number and state of his people.

5 The right side of Aroer. This is not Aroer on the Arnon, but Aroer by Rabbah; on the west side of the torrent Jabbok, called here the torrent of Gad, because it passed through the territory of that tribe.—Within the river; that is, as I understand it, on the interior side of the torrent. The encampment was between Aroer and Jazer: whence, as from a centre, they made a survey and muster of the Reubenites and Gadites.

6. And about to Zidon; That is, to the border of the land belonging to Zidon; for Zidon was not a part of the territory of Israel. So we must which is so easy, who oppose his interests, and will not submit to him, shall be entirely destroyed by that fire which is never to be quenched. Therefore, "kiss the son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little."

4. Whatever valour, resolution, and success any may possess, should be ascribed to God. So were the noble exploits of these brave men; for Jehovah wrought a great victory, though they were the instruments in obtaining it. The hand of God should be acknowledged in all the strength, courage, and skill of men. Their names are recorded with honour; and so shall be the names of all the good soldiers of Christ. Having been faithful to death, they shall receive a crown of life.

understand the next verse. They then proceeded to the borders of Tyre and of the Hivite and Canaanite cities belonging to it.

9. Eight hundred, &c. Josephus has nine hundred thousand; and 1 Chronicles, it is eleven hundred thousand, and four hundred and seventy thousand for Judah. I have preferred the lesser number, as most probably the true one, or at least nearer the truth; for in these accounts there is no absolute certainty. The tribes of Levi and Benjamin were not included. 1 Chron. xxi. 6.

10. And David's heart smote him. Divines have assigned various things, as constituting the sin of David in this census of the people. Some think that he sinned by doing it without divine direction; and some that it consisted in his pride and vanity, which impelled him to undertake this measure. Josephus, whom many have followed, contends that his sin consisted in not collecting the half-shekel as a ransom for their lives, according to the law, Exod. xxx. 12. These opinions are scarcely probable. For were God to punish by pestilence every ambitious motion in the heart of kings, pestilence would never cease. I consider that Michaelis alone has given a just account of this transaction. The design of David was to force all the Israelites to perform military service, and to engage in new wars for had numbered the people. And David said to Jehovah, "I have greatly sinned by what I have done: and now I beseech thee, O Jehovah, take away the iniquity of thy servant; for I have done very foolishly." As soon as David arose in the morning, the word of Jehovah came to the prophet Gad, David's seer, saying, "Go and say to David, 'Thus saith Jehovah; 'Three things I offer to thee; choose for thyself one of them, that I may do it to thee.'" So Gad came to David, and said to him, "Shall a famine of 'three' years come to thee, in thy land? Or wilt thou flee three months before thine enemies, while they still pursue thee? Or wilt thou have a pestilence of three days in thy land? Consider now, and see, what answer I shall return to him who sent me." And David said to Gad, "I am greatly distressed: let us fall now into the hand of Jehovah; for many are his mercies: but let me not fall into the hand of man." *Thus David chose the pestilence".

15 *It was now the time of wheat harvest"; and Jehovah sent a pestilence upon Israel from the morning until 'mid-day"; and there died of the people, from Dan to Beer-sheba, seventy thousand men. And when the angel stretched out his hand to destroy Jerusalem, Jehovah repented of the evil, and said to the angel, who destroyed the people, "It is enough: stay now thy hand." And the angel of Jehovah was by the threshing-floor of Araunah, a Jebusite. And 17 David spoke to Jehovah when he saw the angel who smote the people, and said, "Lo, I have sinned, and I have done wickedly: but these sheep, what have they done? let thy hand I pray thee, be on me, and on my father's house."

And Gad came, that day, to David, and said 18 to him, "Go, build an altar to Jehovah on the threshing-floor of Araunah, the Jebusite." And 19 David, according to the saying of Gad, went up as Jehovah had commanded. And Araunah 20 looked, and saw the king and his servants coming on towards him: and Araunah went out, and made obeisance to the king, with his face to the ground. And Araunah said, "Why is my lord 21 the king come to his servant?" And David said, "To buy of thee the threshing-floor, to build an altar to Jehovah, that the pestilence among the people may be stayed." And Araunah 22 said to David, "Let my lord the king take and offer up what seemeth good to him. Behold, here are oxen for a burnt-offering, and threshing instruments, and the ox-gear for wood." All these things Araunah offered to 23 give to the king. And Araunah said to the king, "May Jehovah thy God accept thee." And the king said to Araunah, "Nay; but I 24 will surely buy it of thee, at a price: nor will I offer burnt-offerings to Jehovah my God, of that which cost me nothing." So David bought the purpose of conquest. Two arguments support this opinion: 1. The opposition which Joab made to the measure. In matters of religion Joab was not scrupulous; and was ready to commit any crime to promote his own interest, or to gratify the wish of the king. Joab saw that this measure was opposed to the liberties of the people, and hence he opposed it. 2. In taking this Census, David did not employ magistrates or priests, as was done before, but the army. From this, it appears that David feared that the people would make resistance; to prevent which, or to suppress any disturbances which might arise, soldiers were sent. When this unpopular measure had been completed, his heart smote him; and he repented of it.

13. Famine of three years. This I take to be the true reading, as we have three months, and three days, mentioned after.

15. Until mid-day. The other reading refers to the three days mentioned for the pestilence in the 13th verse; but if the pestilence had raged the specified time, I think it will be difficult to account for what is said, that Jehovah repented of the evil, and said 'it is enough.' This shows that Jehovah being merciful, punished less than he had threatened; and for this reason I have preferred the various reading.

18. On the threshing-floor, &c. This hill, where Araunah's barn now stood, was the place where Abraham had offered his son: for this place is called, 2 Chron. iii. 1, mount Moriah. So Josephus observes. "Here Solomon built the Temple: Here the old Prophecy, Gen. xxii. said, that the Lord would make provision of a lamb for a burnt-offering; Jehovah-jireh: from which word jireh, joined to the word Salem (the name of a place close by) was made, as many Critics think, the name Jerusalem, where our blessed Saviour was offered."

24. Fifty shekels of silver. If this reading be genuine, it must only be the price of the threshing-floor and oxen; and the parallel place 1 Chron. xxi. 36, must refer not to the threshing-floor only, but to the whole of mount Moriah, and the buildings on it, which David purchased afterwards for the temple.

25. Thus Jehovah was intreated. In the other account it is said, that God sent fire from heaven, in token of his favour, and consumed the victims. And by the appearance of the angel and this testimony of God's favour and regard, David probably determined to build the temple on this mount.

the threshing-floor, and the oxen, for fifty shekels of silver. And David built there an altar to Jehovah, and offered burnt-offerings and feast-offerings. Thus Jehovah was intreated for the land, and the plague was stayed from Israel.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. 1. We may here learn the sinfulness of ambition. It leads men to violate the rights of others, and to seek their own aggrandisement at the expense of justice and honour. God had greatly blessed David, and extended and established his kingdom. He had raised him above all his enemies, and fulfilled his original promise to Abraham. Still it appears that David formed the purpose of undertaking new wars, which would have been injurious to his subjects.

2. Here we learn how excellent a thing it is to have a tender conscience, which will smite us when we do evil, and reclaim us when we go astray. The best may err: but if the heart be tender, we shall soon be recovered; not continue under the power of sin, but quickly tread back the unhappy steps we have taken. We here see that the eye of God discerns the heart. May we be cautious, and look well to our own. He does not so much consider the action as the principle. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

3. We here see the nature and the fruits of repentance. It leads persons to own their sinfulness; that they have sinned greatly, and done foolishly; to accuse themselves more than others. So David. "These sheep what have they done? On me be the iniquity. Let these escape." It will lead us to seek pardon, and to cry earnestly for it. Too many are ready to extenuate their sin, saying, "it is but a little matter;" and are ready to charge others as greater offenders, especially when public judgments are abroad. But humble and contrite hearts blame themselves most, and intreat mercy for themselves and for others. The more they experience of God's great mercy, especially his pardoning mercy, the more they are humbled for sin and resolved against it.

4. Those who profess to belong to God, should cultivate a generous spirit. This was remarkable both in the Jebusite and the king. They strove who should excel, and it was a noble emulation. Araunah offered very generously to the king, though he was able to pay. David determined not to take advantage of his generosity, but to pay its full value, and gave a good reason; "he would not offer to the Lord what cost him nothing." There is no true religion in a niggardly, covetous breast. Most men are for a cheap religion; they do not care how little they give for God and his service, and are glad if it cost them nothing. But God requires and expects that we honour him with our substance; and that whatever we do in his service, it should be done generously, and proportionably to the greatness and goodness of that God whom we serve. This is the way to secure his favour and blessing here, and a glorious recompence at the resurrection of the just.

INTRODUCTION.

THE title of these two books is taken from the contents; as they contain the history of Judah and Israel, from Solomon to the Babylonish captivity; including a period of nearly five hundred years. It is not known by whom they were written. Some ascribe them to Ezra; but it is more probable that they were compiled by some of the prophets or priests, from the public records, except some of the last chapters of the second book. Calmet has observed, that the author, or authors, do not seem so much concerned to write a political history, as to describe what relates to the temple and to religion.

This first book comprises a history of about one hundred and nineteen years; containing an account of the death of David, the reign of Solomon, his building of the temple, his wisdom, his riches, and fall; the division of the kingdom under his son, and the history of four kings of Judah, and eight of Israel.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1015. David's age and infirmities; Adonijah's attempt to be king; Nathan's contrivance to secure the throne to Solomon; Solomon crowned, &c.

- 1 KING David was now old and advanced in years; and they covered him with clothes, but
- 2 he got no warmth. His servants, therefore, said to him, "Let a young woman, a virgin, be sought for my lord the king: and let her wait on the king, and be a nurse to him, and let her lie in thy bosom, that my lord the king
- 3 may get warmth." So they sought for a beautiful young woman through all the districts of Israel; and they found Abishag, a Shunammite,
- 4 and brought her to the king. And the young woman was most beautiful; and she became nurse to the king, and waited on him; but the king new her not.
- 5 Then Adonijah, the son of Haggith, exalted himself, saying, "I will be king;" and he prepared for himself chariots and horsemen, and
- 6 fifty men to run before him. Nor had his father

CHAP. I.

CHAP. I. 2. Be a nurse to him. The notion of warming or cherishing attributed to סכר, Michaelis considers to be without any authority. He renders, familiar, friend, or concubine. I conceive Geddes has hit the sense, nurse; and I have followed him. That Abishag became his nurse, and one of his wives, the following history makes certain.

6. Grieved him. An extreme indulgence of his children, seems to have been one of David's greatest failings; and he experienced the unhappy consequences of it.—And was born next, &c. He was not the son of the same mother as Absalom; for the mother of Absalom was not Haggith, but grieved him, by saying, "Why doest thou so?" He was, moreover, a very handsome man; and was born next after Absalom. And his designs were disclosed to Joab, the son of Zeruiah, and to Abiathar, the priest; and they, siding with Adonijah, helped him. But Zadok, the priest, and Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, and Nathan, the prophet, and Shimei, and "his companions", the mighty men, who belonged to David, were not with Adonijah. And Adonijah slew sheep and oxen, and fat cattle, by the stone of Zoheleth, which is by En-rogel, and invited all his brethren, the king's sons, and all the men of Judah, the king's servants. But Nathan, the prophet, and Benaiah, and the mighty men, and Solomon, his brother, he invited not.

Nathan then spoke to Bath-sheba, the mother of Solomon, saying, "Hast thou not heard, that Adonijah, the son of Haggith, reigneth, and David, our lord, knoweth it not? Now, therefore, come, let me, I pray thee, give thee counsel, that thou mayest save thine own life,

8. * Sept. the rest, Rei.

Maacah, 2 Sam. iii. 3. David's oldest son, Ammon, was slain by Absalom; Chiliab, his second, most probably died young, as he is not mentioned afterwards. Absalom fell in the rebellion which he excited; so that Adonijah, the fourth, was the oldest living; and if the throne had been hereditary, it was his by right. God however disposed of it as he pleased, and had clearly intimated that Solomon should reign after David.

9. En-rogel. Josephus says this fountain was in the royal gardens, without the city. Antiq. book vii. ch. 14.—All the men of Judah, &c. From this account it appears that many supported Adonijah's interest.

13 and the life of thy son Solomon. Haste, and go in to king David, and say to him, "Didst not thou, my lord, O king, swear to thy handmaid, saying, 'Assuredly, Solomon thy son, shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne?' Why then doth Adonijah reign?"

14 Behold, while thou yet talkest there with the king, I also will come in after thee, and confirm thy words."

15 And Bath-sheba went in to the king, into the chamber; and the king was very old; and Abishag, the Shunammite, waited on the king. And Bath-sheba bowed, and made obeisance to the king. And the king said "to her," "What wouldst thou?" And she said to him, "My lord, 'the king', thou sworest by Jehovah, thy God, to thy handmaid, 'saying', 'Assuredly, Solomon, thy son, shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne.'" And now, behold, Adonijah reigneth; and now, my lord the king, thou knowest it not; And he hath slain oxen, and fat cattle, and sheep, in abundance, and hath invited all the sons of the king, and Abiathar, the priest, and Joab, the captain of the host: but Solomon, thy servant hath he not invited. And "now", my lord, O king, the eyes of all Israel are on thee; that thou wouldst tell them, who shall sit on the throne of my lord the king, after him. Otherwise, when my lord the king shall sleep with his fathers, it will be, that I and my son Solomon will be counted offenders."

22 And, lo, while she yet talked with the king, Nathan, the prophet, also came in. And they told the king, saying, "Behold Nathan the prophet." And when he was come in before the king, he bowed himself before the king with his face to the ground. And Nathan said, "My lord, O king, hast thou said, 'Adonijah shall reign after me, and sit upon my throne?' For he is gone down this day, and hath slain oxen and fat cattle, and sheep in abundance, and hath invited all the king's sons, and the captains of the host, and Abiathar, the priest; and, behold, they are eating and drinking in his presence, and saying, 'Long live the king Adonijah!' But me, thy servant, and Zadok, the priest, and Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, and thy servant Solomon, hath he not invited. Is this thing done by my lord the king? and hast thou not showed to thy servant who should sit on the throne of my lord the king, after him?"

Then king David answered and said, "Call to me Bath-sheba." And she came into the king's presence, and stood before the king. And the king swore, and said, "As Jehovah liveth, who hath redeemed my soul out of every distress, Even as I swore to thee by Jehovah, the God of Israel, saying, 'Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne in my stead;' even so will I certainly do this day." Then Bath-sheba bowed with her face to the ground, and made obeisance to the king, and said, "Long live my lord king David?"

King David then said, "Call to me Zadok, the priest, and Nathan, the prophet, and Benaiah, the son of Jehoida." And they came before the king. The king also said to them, "Take with you the servants of your lord, and make Solomon, my son ride upon my own mule, and bring him down to Gihon; And let Zadok, the priest, and Nathan, the prophet, anoint him there king over Israel; and blow ye with the trumpet, and say, 'Long live king

12. Save thine own life, &c. It is supposed that Adonijah would cut off his brother, as a rival of the throne; and when the succession is not settled by law, but depends on popular favour, or parental partiality, what mischiefs follow. David indeed was divinely directed whom to appoint as his successor; and God occasionally interposed afterwards, setting aside one, and raising another.

20. That thou wouldst tell, &c. It is implied in this passage, either that David had, by virtue of the covenant made with the people, a right to appoint his successor, or that as an inspired prophet, they submitted this to him. Compare 1 Chron. xxii. 9—11.

20. *Chald. Syr. Arab. and many mss.

27. And hast thou not showed, &c. Nathan intimates that he had before told him who should succeed him; but by putting it in the interrogative form, it is given in a manner the most delicate and respectful.

33. To Gihon. The name of a fountain, called also Siloam in the new Testament, which was without the walls of the city, but near to them, according to Reland. It was at the bottom of mount Moriah. This is said to have been a fertile, beautiful place, on the west of the city; and probably a place of concourse. The attempt of Adonijah to reign induced David to order Solomon to be crowned; and thus all his hopes and expectations were disappointed.

Solomon.' Ye shall then come up with him, when he cometh, that he may sit upon my throne; for he shall be king in my stead: for him I appoint to be ruler over Israel and over 36 Judah." And Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, answered the king, and said, "Amen; so may Jehovah, the God of my lord the king say also.
 37 As Jehovah hath been with my lord the king, even so may he be with Solomon, and make his throne greater than the throne of my lord king
 38 David." So Zadok, the priest, and Nathan, the prophet, and Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, went down, and made Solomon ride upon king David's own mule, and brought him to Gihon.
 39 And Zadok, the priest, took a horn of oil out of the tabernacle, and anointed Solomon. And they blew the trumpet; and all the people
 40 said, "Long live king Solomon!" And all the people came back with him, and they played on flutes, and rejoiced with great joy, so that the earth was rent with their sound.
 41 And Adonijah and all his guests heard it when they had done eating. And when Joab heard the sound of the trumpet, he said, "Why 42 is this noise and uproar in the city?" And while he yet spoke, behold, Jonathan, the son of Abiathar, the priest, came: and Adonijah said to him, "Come in; for thou art a worthy 43 man, and bringest good tidings." And Jonathan answered and said to Adonijah, "Verily, our lord, king David, hath made Solomon king.
 44 And the king hath sent with him Zadok, the priest, and Nathan, the prophet, and Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and they have made him ride upon the king's own mule; And Zadok, the 45 priest, and Nathan, the prophet, have anointed him king in Gihon; and they are come up thence rejoicing, so that the city rang again. This is the noise that ye have heard. And also 46 Solomon sitteth on the throne of the kingdom. And moreover, the king's servants came to 47 bless our lord, king David, saying, 'God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne.' And the king bowed himself upon the bed. And also thus said the king, 'Blessed be Jeho- 48 vah, the God of Israel, who hath now given to me one to sit on my throne, mine eyes even seeing it.' And all the guests, who were with 49 Adonijah, were afraid, and rose up, and went every one his own way.

And Adonijah feared because of Solomon, 50 and arose, and went, and caught hold on the horns of the altar. And it was told Solomon, 51 saying, "Behold, Adonijah feareth king Solomon; for, lo, he hath caught hold on the horns of the altar, saying, 'Let king Solomon swear to me to day that he will not slay his servant with the sword.'" And Solomon said, "If he 52 will show himself a worthy man, there shall not a hair of 'his head' fall to the ground; but if wickedness be found in him, he shall die." So 53 king Solomon sent, and they brought him down from the altar. And he came and bowed himself to king Solomon; and Solomon said to him, "Go to thy house."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. We here see the folly and consequences of parental indulgence. Adonijah might well aspire to the crown, when his father had never opposed him in any thing; but had allowed him to do as he pleased. Such conduct in parents, is weakness, and real cruelty to their children. For by such treatment they become self-willed, ambitious, and generally profligate. 'He that spareth the rod, hateth his son, &c.'

2. It becomes aged saints to recollect and own the goodness of God to them in their past lives. When David mentions the name of God, he adds, who hath redeemed my soul out of all distress. He owns God's goodness in bringing him through so many dangers and difficulties. "Days should speak, and the multitude of years teach wisdom." Aged saints should be witnesses for God, should testify of his goodness, and the experience they have had of his protection and care. It is an honour due to God; it will afford them comfort in future scenes, especially in death; and be an encouragement to the rising generation; to taste and see that the Lord is gracious.

42. A worthy man. The common version valiant seems here improper. They have rendered (חיל) by the term I have adopted in the 52nd verse. The information of Jonathan destroyed the hopes of Adonijah and his party; and they dispersed, and fled away for safety.

53. Go to thy house. When we consider the attempt of Adonijah, this conduct of Solomon was mild, and founded in the wisest policy.

CHAPTER II.

B. C. 1015. David's last instructions to Solomon; his death, and Solomon's succession; the punishment of Adonijah, Joab, and Shimei.

- 1 Now the day of David's death drew near;
 2 and he charged Solomon his son, saying, "I am going the way of all the earth: so be thou 3 strong, and show thyself a man. And keep the charge of Jehovah, thy God, so as to walk in his ways, to observe his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies, as it is written in the law of Moses, that thou mayest prosper, in all that thou doest,
 4 and whithersoever thou turnest thyself: That Jehovah may confirm his word which he spoke concerning me, saying, 'If thy children take heed to their way, to walk before me in truth, with all their heart and with all their soul, some one of thy posterity shall not fail to be on the throne of Israel.'
 5 "Moreover, thou knowest also, what Joab, the son of Zeruiah, did to me; what he did to the two captains of the hosts of Israel, to Abner, the son of Ner, and to Amasa, the son of Jether, whom he slew, and in peace shed the blood of war! With the blood of war he stained his girdle which was upon his loins, and his 6 shoes which were on his feet. Thou shalt, therefore, do according to thy wisdom, and

3. David rejoiced to see his son sitting on his throne; and how much should all rejoice in the exaltation of Christ, the son of David. God hath set his king on his holy hill. Whatever attempts are made to dethrone him, or to destroy his kingdom, shall all be vain; and shall be turned to the confusion of their authors, as those of Adonijah and his party were. Men think by secret plots to undermine the cause of Christ, the prince of peace, but God shalt not let his hoary head go down in peace to the grave. But show kindness to the sons of 7 Barzillai, the Gileadite, and let them be of those that eat at thy own table: for so they support- ed me when I fled from before Absalom, thy brother. And, behold, with thee is Shimei, the 8 son of Gera, a Benjaminite of Bahurim, who grievously reviled me on the day when I went to Mahanaim: but he came down to meet me at the Jordan, and I swore to him by Jehovah, saying, 'I will not put thee to death with the sword.' Now, therefore, hold him not guilt- 9 less: for thou art a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do to him; and his hoary head bring thou down with blood to the grave." So 10 David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David. Now the days that David 11 reigned over Israel, were forty years: seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty-three years reigned he in Jerusalem. And Solomon 12 sat upon the throne of David, his father; and his royal power was greatly established.

Adonijah, the son of Haggith, then came to 13 Bath-sheba, the mother of Solomon. And she said, "Comest thou peaceably?" And he said, "Peaceably." He said moreover, "I have 14 somewhat to say to thee." And she said, "Say on." And he said, "Thou knowest that the 15 royal power was mine; and all Israel regarded will discover them. He suffers them to lay their heads together, and feast themselves with the hopes of success; and when at the height of their joy, he confounds them, lays them open to the scorn of the world, and the anguish of their own guilty hearts. But all those who are faithful to Christ, shall find him able to save to the uttermost, and shall enjoy all the inestimable blessings of his kingdom, which he hath promised.

CHAP. II. 1. Day of David's death. I have preferred the sense to the idiom, with Dathe and others.

6. Shalt not let his hoary, &c. The dying command of David to Solomon, respecting Joab, and Shimei, has been regarded by some, as a proof of ingratitude to his brave companion in arms; and of revenge, as it regarded Shimei, after having promised, that he would not put him to death. It has been often noticed, in the preceding history, that the sons of Zeruiah were too strong for David; that is, they had too much power with the army, for him to venture to punish their atrocious deeds. Reasons of state deferred the punishment; and when those reasons were removed, it was proper to punish a deliberate murderer, according to an express law. David also knew, that a man like Joab, who could brook no superior, might endanger the peace of the kingdom. He was now engaged to support Adonijah, and so far in actual rebellion. How could David with propriety then forgive him? As to Shimei, David fulfilled his promise; he only engaged that he would not put him to death; and he left it to Solomon to treat him as he thought just, in reference to his future conduct. David knew that he was Shimei still, and would so act, as to bring on himself due punishment.

7. They supported me. Barzillai is only mentioned 2 Sam. xvii. 27; but there can be no doubt, that his sons came also to bring the provisions for the support of David and his men. Compare 2 Sam. xix. 37, 38.

12. His royal power. The Hebrew (מלכות) not only signifies a kingdom, in the proper sense, but the kingly or regal power, the sovereignty, or as Geddes renders, after Parkhurst, the kingship. I have preferred the terms adopted to this term, because it is not sufficiently current, and because when used, it conveys rather a notion of contempt than of dignity. The term kingdom is used, in the new Testament for the regal power, or act of reigning.

me as about to reign : the royal power is, however, turned about, and become my brother's :
 16 for it was his from Jehovah. And now I ask of thee one request ; deny me not." And she said
 17 to him, "Say on." And he said, "Speak, I pray thee, to Solomon, the king, (for he will not deny thee,) that he will give to me Abishag, 18 the Shunammite, to wife." And Bath-sheba said, "Well ; I will speak for thee to the king."
 19 Bath-sheba therefore went to king Solomon, to speak to him for Adonijah. And the king rose up to meet her, and bowed himself to her, and sat down on his throne, and caused a seat to be set for the king's mother ; and she 20 sat on his right hand. Then she said, "I ask of thee, one small request ; deny me not, I pray thee." And the king said to her, "Ask, my 21 mother ; for I will not deny thee." And she said, "Let Abishag, the Shunammite, be given to 22 Adonijah, thy brother, to wife." And king Solomon answered and said to his mother, "And why dost thou ask Abishag, the Shunammite, for Adonijah ? ask for him the royal power also ; (for he is my elder brother ;) even for him, and for Abiathar, the priest, and for Joab, the son 23 of Zeruah." Then Solomon swore by Jehovah, saying, "God do so to me, and more also, if Adonijah have not spoken this word against his 24 own life. Now therefore, as Jehovah liveth, who hath established me, and set me on the throne of David my father, and who hath given to me progeny, as he promised, Adonijah shall, 25 this day, be put to death." And king Solomon gave orders to Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada ;

and he fell upon him and put him to death.

And to Abiathar, the priest, the king said, 26 "Go to Anathoth, unto thine own fields ; for thou art worthy of death ; but I will not, at this time, put thee to death, because thou didst bear the ark of the Lord Jehovah, before David, my father, and because thou hast shared in all the distresses with which my father was distressed." Thus Solomon thrust out Abiathar from being 27 high-priest to Jehovah ; so that the word of Jehovah was fulfilled, which he spoke at Shiloh concerning the house of Eli.

Then tidings came to Joab : for Joab had 28 turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Absalom. And Joab fled unto the tabernacle of Jehovah, and caught hold on the horns of the altar. And it was told king Solomon 29 that Joab had fled unto the tabernacle of Jehovah ; and, that he was beside the altar. Then Solomon sent Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, saying, "Go, fall upon him." And Benaiah 30 came to the tabernacle of Jehovah, and said to him, "Thus saith the king, 'Come forth.' And he said, "Nay ; 'I will not come forth' ; but here I will die." And Benaiah brought the king word, saying, "Thus spoke Joab, and thus he answered me." And the king said to him, 31 "Do as he hath spoken, and slay him there, and bury him ; that thou mayest take away the innocent blood, which Joab shed, from me, and from the house of my father. For Jehovah will 32 return his blood upon his own head, since he fell upon two men more righteous and better than himself ; whom, my father David not know-

15. Regarded me. Literally, 'set their faces on me.' Adonijah, as the oldest son, asserts his right to the throne ; but confesses that it was his brother's from Jehovah, or by his appointment. He pleads the loss of what he had a right to expect, as a reason, why Solomon should give him Abishag to wife.

20. I will not deny thee. Bath-sheba said the request was trifling ; and so she might think. She might suppose, that as Abishag, had only slept with David as his nurse, she might with propriety be married to any other ; as she could scarcely be regarded as his wife or concubine. Had Solomon seen the matter in the same light, he would not have denied her request.

22. Ask for him the royal power. It has already been hinted, that the wives and concubines of a deceased king became the property of his successor. Compare 2 Sam. iii. 7 ; xvi. 21. Solomon had before ordered Adonijah to his own house, and promised, that if he would show himself a worthy man, not a hair of his head should be injured. He now perceives, that he was aspiring to the crown ; and that he could not be secure, until Adonijah, Joab and Abiathar, his advisers, were removed. He therefore resolves on the execution of Adonijah and Joab, and the banishment of Abiathar.

26. Hast shared in all. Here I have given the sense with Dathe, as the idiom is neither clear nor elegant.

27. So that the word of Jehovah. I have rendered here as we should often render ; for it must be manifest that it is at least doubtful, whether in the punishment of Abiathar, Solomon had any design to fulfil the word of God ; but the Historian remarks, that in his degradation the word of Jehovah was accomplished.

30. But here will I die. Joab perhaps thought that Solomon would either regard the altar, so as not to slay him ; or, that he would die there, ing, he slew with the sword; Abner, the son of Ner, chief of the host of Israel, and Amasa, the son of Jether, chief of the host of Judah.

33 Their blood shall therefore return upon the head of Joab, and upon the head of his seed for ever; but upon David, and upon his seed, and upon his house, and upon his throne, there

34 shall, for ever, be peace from Jehovah." Then Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, went up, and fell upon him, and slew him; and he was buried in his own house in the wilderness.

35 And the king put Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, in his room over the host; and Zadok, the priest, did the king put in the room of Abiathar.

36 And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said to him, "Build for thyself a house in Jerusalem, and dwell there, and never go out thence

37 any whither. For on the day that thou goest out, and passest over the brook Kidron, know thou for certain, that thou shalt surely die: thy

38 blood shall be upon thy own head." And Shimei said to the king, "The sentence is proper; as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do." And Shimei dwelt in Jerusalem

39 many days. But at the end of three years, two of the servants of Shimei ran away to Achish, son of Maachah, king of Gath. And some one told Shimei, saying, "Behold, thy servants

40 are in Gath." And Shimei arose, and saddled his ass, and went to Gath to Achish to seek his servants; and Shimei went, and brought his servants from Gath. And it was told Solomon 41 that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath, and had returned. And the king sent and 42 called for Shimei, and said to him, "Did I not adjure thee by Jehovah, and protest to thee, saying, 'Know thou, for certain, that on the day thou goest out, and walkest abroad any whither, thou shalt surely die?' and thou saidst to me, 'The sentence which I have heard is proper.' Why then hast thou not kept the 43 oath of Jehovah, and the command with which I charged thee?" The king said moreover to 44 Shimei, "Thou knowest all the wickedness (of which thy heart is conscious) that thou didst to David my father. Jehovah, therefore, returneth thy wickedness upon thy own head; And king Solomon shall be blessed, and the 45 throne of David shall be established before Jehovah for ever." The king then gave orders to 46 Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, who went out, and fell upon him, and put him to death.

CHAPTER III.

B. C 1014. Solomon's marriage; his offering at Gibeon; his judgment between the two harlots.

THE royal power being thus established in the 1 hand of Solomon, Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and took to wife Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the city

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. We are here taught that the greatest and best of men go the way of all the earth. Neither wealth, nor power, nor piety, shield from death. It is appointed unto all men, and it becomes us seriously to think of it, and be prepared for this awful journey. It must terminate either in paradise, or in the gulph of misery. Be concerned, my reader, 'to escape from the wrath to come.'

2. Good men cannot spend their dying breath better, than in giving a solemn charge to their children. Parents should be solicitous to do it then, when their words may make a peculiar impression, and when children will be more likely to attend to them and keep their charge, and the charge of God, as the only way to prosperity in both worlds. If we keep God's charge, we may hope he will continue his mercies to us, as to our fathers, and perform all his promises, on which he hath caused us to hope.

3. Observe the just and righteous judgments of God upon cruel and ambitious men. Adonijah, Joab, and Shimei, did not take warning, but proceeded in their aspiring designs, till they came to a shameful end. A little contentment, meekness, and humility would have saved their lives. They might have lived easy and happy, and died in peace. But the justice of God and Solomon overtook them, and returned their violent doings on their own heads. In the lowest stations of life, if men would live easy and comfortable, it must be by being contented and humble. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." Be not then high-minded.

in hope that God, whose altar it was, would be gracious to him.

42. Did I not adjure thee. So Matthewe rendered; Cranmer and the Bishops, 'did I not charge thee with an oath.'

46. Gave orders to Benaiah. It appears from this chapter, that the execution of criminals was the duty of the king's chief officer.

of David, until he had made an end of building his own house, and the house of Jehovah, and the wall of Jerusalem round about.

- 2 Still the people sacrificed on high-places, because, until those days, there was no house built 3 to the name of Jehovah. And though Solomon loved Jehovah, walking in the statutes of David his father, yet he sacrificed and burnt incense on high-places. And the king went to Gibeon to sacrifice there; for that was the great high-place: a thousand burnt-offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar.
- 5 In Gibeon Jehovah appeared to Solomon in a dream by night; and God said, "Ask what 6 I shall give thee." And Solomon said, "Thou hast showed to thy servant David, my father, great mercy, according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart towards thee; and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou hast given to him a son to sit on his throne, as it is 7 this day. And now, O Jehovah, my God, thou hast made thy servant king, instead of David my father: and I am only a very young man;
8 I know not how to conduct affairs. And thy servant is in the midst of thy people whom thou hast chosen, a great people, that cannot be 9 numbered nor counted for multitude. Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding heart to judge the people, that I may discern between good and evil: for who else can judge this thy 10 so great a people?" And the request which Solomon had made, was acceptable to Jehovah.
11 And God said to him, "Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life; neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies; but hast asked for thyself understanding to discern what is right; Behold, I grant to thee thy 12 request: lo, I give thee a wise and understanding heart; so that there hath been none like to thee before thee, nor after thee shall any arise like to thee. And I also give to thee, what thou 13 hast not asked, both riches, and honour: so that there shall not be any among the kings like to thee all thy days. And if thou wilt walk in my 14 ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as thy father David walked, then I will lengthen thy days." And Solomon awoke;

15 and, behold, it was a dream. And he came to Jerusalem, and stood before the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, and offered up burnt-offerings, and feast-offerings, and made a feast for all his servants.

Then came there two women, who were har-16 lots, to the king, and stood before him. And 17 the one woman said, "O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one house; and I was delivered of a child with her in the house. And the third 18 day after I was delivered, this woman was delivered also: and we were together; there was no stranger with us in the house; we two only were in the house. And this woman's child died in 19 the night; because she overlaid it. And she 20 arose at midnight, and took my son from beside me, while thy handmaid slept, and laid it in her bosom, and laid her dead child in my bosom. And when I arose in the morning to give my 21 child suck, behold, it was dead: but when I considered it in the morning, behold, it was not my son, which I did bear." And the other wo-
22 man said, "Nay; but the living is my son, and the dead is thy son." And this said, "No; but the dead is thy son, and the living is my son."

required. Some consider Solomon as typical of Messiah, and this marriage as shadowing the union of Jew and Gentile in the christian church. After this verse, the Sept. Vat. adds, "Then Pharaoh, king of Egypt, came up and took Gezer and burned it; also the Canaanites who dwelt in Mergab, he subdued; and he gave these places to Solomon, as a dowry to Solomon's wife. And Solomon rebuilt Gezer." Some critics adopt this as genuine. Compare ch. ix. 16.

4. The great high-place. The most noted and most frequented high-place, because the tabernacle and the altar of Moses were there. Comp. 1 Chron. xvi. 39. and 2 Chron. i. 3, 5, 6. Solomon kept here some of the sacred feasts, and during the festival, offered a thousand burnt-offerings.

7. A very young man. Solomon could not be less than twenty years old, when he became king; so that to render a little child, when the words

do not necessarily imply it, is strange. Coverdale renders, 'a young lad', Purver, 'a little youth'. The meaning is, "I am but young, and inexperienced in the affairs of government." Comp. Num. xxvii. 17. Deut. xxxii. 2. Josh. xiv. 11.

10. Was acceptable to Jehovah. As Solomon's prayer is stated to have been made in a dream, it has been objected that there could be nothing acceptable in it. It may be replied, that the dream indicated the subject which had occupied his mind before; and showed what was then his prevailing desire. Nor is it improbable, that he repeated this prayer, when he awoke; and so turned what had passed in his mind asleep, into devout and ardent requests. The dream was encouraging; and must have imparted confidence to Solomon respecting his own safety and prosperity.

16—28. The case here was difficult to determine. The character of the 23 Thus they spoke before the king. Then said the king, "The one saith, 'This is my son that liveth, and thy son is the one dead:' and the other saith, 'Nay; but thy son is the one dead, 24 and my son is the one living.'" And the king said, "Bring me a sword." And they brought 25 a sword before the king. And the king said, "Divide the living child in two, and give half 26 to the one, and half to the other." Then spoke the woman whose the living child was to the king, for her bowels yearned upon her son, and she said, "O my lord, give her the living child, and in no wise slay it." But the other said, "Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide 27 it." Then the king answered and said, "Give to her the living child, and in no wise slay it: 28 she is its mother." And when all Israel heard of the judgment which the king had given, they revered the king: for they saw that the wisdom of God was in him, to do judgment.

CHAPTER IV.

B. C. 1014. Solomon's principal officers; the flourishing state of his kingdom; his great wisdom.

1 Thus king Solomon was king over all Israel.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. We may learn how good it is to seek God, in the use of appointed means. Had Solomon neglected to offer victims on God's altar, he would not have been favoured with those delightful discoveries and mercies with which God honoured him. He sought him in the due order, and he was found of him. His promise stands on record, and the uniform experience of good men avouches its truth. "Seek, and ye shall find; ask, and ye shall receive."

2. Solomon's prayer should remind youth especially what they ought to be solicitous to obtain; "a wise and understanding heart." Their inexperience makes this necessary; and the snares and temptations to which they are exposed, render it expedient. To be able to ascertain, in every circumstance, what we should do, and what we should avoid; to discern between good and evil, is requisite to secure our peace, our hope, and happiness.

3. We are taught that spiritual blessings should be sought with the greatest importunity, and temporal ones submitted to

And these were his chief officers; Azariah, the 2 son of Zadok the priest, Elihoreph and Ahiah, 3 the sons of Shisha, were scribes; Jehoshaphat, the son of Ahilud, the recorder: And Benaiah, 4 the son of Jehoida, was over the host: and Zadok and Abiathar were the high-priests: And Azariah, the son of Nathan, was over the 5 governors of provinces: and Zabud, the son of Nathan, was the chief officer, and the king's own friend: And Ahishar was over the house- 6 hold; and Adoniram, the son of Abda, was over the tribute.

And Solomon had twelve officers over all Is- 7 rael, who provided victuals for the king and his household; each man his own month in a year made provision. And these are their names: 8 * * *, the son of Hur, in mount Ephraim: * * *, the son of Dekar, in Makaz, and in 9 Shaalbim, and Beth-shemesh, and Elon-beth-hanan: * * *, the son of Hesed, in Aruboth; 10 to him pertained Sochoh, and all the land of Hephher: * * *, the son of Abinadab, in all 11 the region of Dor; who had Taphath, the daughter of Solomon, to wife: Baana, the son of Ahi- 12 lud; to him pertained Taanach and Megiddo, divine choice; this is the way to succeed in both. God allows us to be earnest for spiritual ones, but we should be indifferent to temporal ones; preferring wisdom to gold, and grace to worldly honour. Wisdom is good with an inheritance; without wisdom an inheritance is good for nothing. "Godliness has the promise of this life, and that which is to come." It is perhaps with reference to this that our Lord gives that advice, "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all other things shall be added to you."

4. We see the force of natural affection in the case submitted to Solomon. Let parents learn to be careful of their children's lives, as they are so tender, and so easily destroyed; and let parents show their love to their children by taking care of them themselves, especially by taking care of their souls. Those who thus do their duty to their children in both respects, are most likely to have comfort in them; and those who neglect their education, will smart for it.

28. The wisdom of God. That is, a godlike or divine wisdom.

CHAP. IV. 3. Were the scribes. These were like our clerks of court, They wrote down causes, examined witnesses, and sometimes distributed justice.—His recorder. Historiographer would, perhaps, be the better rendering. It appears to have been his duty to record all matters of importance, which respected foreign relations, as well as all interesting occurrences in the land.

5. Was the chief officer, &c. Geddes renders, 'the king's own priest.'

women was alike; so that the declaration of the one was not deserving of more credit than that of the other. There was no other evidence to incline and determine the judgment. The only way to ascertain which was the mother, was to try which showed maternal affection and tenderness. On this principle, he ordered that the child should be divided by a sword, into two parts, one of which should be given to each. Such an order must have been heard with horror; but when the decision was made, how much must their admiration have been raised!

and all Beth-shean, which is by Zartanah beneath Jezreel, from Beth-shean to Abel-meholah, and beyond Jokneam: * * *, the son of Geber, in Ramoth-gilead; to him pertained the towns of Jair, the son of Manasseh, which are in Gilead; to him also pertained the region of Argob, which is in Bashan, threescore great cities with walls and brazen bars: Ahinadab, the son of Idda, had Mahanaim: Ahimaaz was in Naphtali; he also took Basmath, the daughter of Solomon, to wife: Baanah, the son of Hushai, was in Asher and in Aloth: Jehoshaphat, the son of Paruah, in Issachar: Shimei, the son of Elah, in Benjamin: Geber, the son of Uri, was in the country of Gilead, in the country of Sihon king of the Amorites, and of Og king of Bashan; and he was the only governor, who was in the land.

21 ° And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms from the river unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt: they brought presents, and served Solomon all the days of his life.

22 And Solomon's provision for one day was thirty cores of fine flour, and sixty cores of common flour; Ten fat oxen, and twenty oxen of the pastures, and a hundred sheep, beside harts, and roebucks, and fallow deer, and fatted fowl.

24 For he had dominion over all the region on this side the river, from Tiphseh even to Azzah, over all the kings on this side the river: and he had peace on all sides round about him. And 25 Judah and Israel dwelt safely, every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, all the days of Solomon.

And Solomon had y four thousand stalls of 26 horses for his chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen. And those fore-named governors provided victuals for king Solomon, and for all that came to king Solomon's table, each one, in his own month: they suffered nothing to be wanting.

Barley also and straw for the horses and dro- 28 medaries brought they to the place where these were, each according to his charge.

And God gave to Solomon wisdom and un- 29 derstanding exceedingly great: and largeness of heart, like the sand which is on the sea-shore. And Solomon's wisdom was superior to the wis- 30 dom of all the people of the east; and to all the wisdom of Egypt. For he was wiser than all 31 other men; than Ethan, the Ezrahite, or Heman, or Chalcol, or Darda, the sons of Mahol: and his name was famous among all the nations around. And he spoke three thousand pro- 32 verbs: and his songs were a thousand and five. And he discoursed on trees, from the cedar- 33 tree which is on Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that groweth out of the wall: he discoursed also on beasts, and on fowls, and on creeping things, and on fishes. And men from all people came 34 to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, who had heard of his wisdom.

CHAP. IV. 20. ° Judah and Israel were many, as the sand which is by the sea in multitude, eating and drinking and making merry.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. From the account read, we see the promise made to Abraham literally fulfilled. Solomon's dominion extended from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates.

a version which, I conceive, is unsupported by the Jewish polity. Dathe omits the word (כִּרְיָן) and renders, 'the king's intimate friend.' I have adhered to our common version, which is at least as probable as any given; and because it is certain that the term denotes a chief governor, or one who administers the king's affairs. 2 Sam. viii. 18.

8. * * *, the son of Hur. The proper name of five of these prefects has been dropped out of the text, nor do any of the versions retain them. The context proves the omission. For in the other names, we have first the proper name, and then is added the name of the father.

20. This verse Geddes rejects as spurious. It is wanting in the Sept. It has no connexion with the narrative. Houbigant would retain it, but transposes after the 28th verse.

21. Unto the land, &c. That is, including the land of the Philistines;

26. y So 2 Chron. ix. 25.

We see how wisely the government was administered. While its dignity and honour were maintained, the general benefit was consulted. Provisions were collected from all parts of the realm; and, if purchas-

for his dominion extended to the border of Egypt.

22. Thirty cores, &c. The core, or homer, contained ten ephas. The epha, about ten of our pecks. See the tables.

25. Every man under his vine, &c. This is a beautiful image of the peace, security, and felicity of Solomon's reign.

26. Four thousand. The reading of the parallel place is, doubtless, the true one. All the versions have here forty, a number incredible and disproportionate. The lesser number Michaelis thought too great.

30. All the people of the east, &c. The Arabians and Egyptians were celebrated for their knowledge of astronomy, and other sciences; and the Greek philosophers generally went into Egypt to perfect their own attainments.

31. Wiser than Elhan, &c. These celebrated Israelites are mentioned

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 1014. Hiram congratulates Solomon; he furnisheth timber to build the temple, &c.

- 1 AND Hiram, king of Tyre, sent his servants to Solomon; for he had heard that they had anointed him king instead of his father: for Hiram was always an affectionate friend of David.
- 2 And Solomon sent to Hiram, saying, "Thou knowest how that David, my father, could not build a house to the name of Jehovah, his God, on account of the wars which beset him on every side, until Jehovah put his enemies under
- 4 the soles of his feet. But now Jehovah, my God, hath given me rest on every side; there
- 5 is neither adversary nor evil occurrence. And, behold, I purpose to build a house to the name of Jehovah, my God, as Jehovah spoke to David my father, saying, "Thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy stead, he shall build
- 6 a house to my name." Now, therefore, command thou that they hew for me cedar trees, out of Lebanon; and my servants shall be with thy servants: and for thy servants I will give thee according to all that thou shalt appoint: for thou knowest that among us there are none who have skill to hew timber, like to the Sidonians.
- 7 And, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, he rejoiced greatly, and said, "Blessed, be Jehovah, who this day hath given to David

ed, the money would circulate through all parts. What a blessing to a people is a wise, good, and equitable government, when every man can sit under his own vine, &c.

2. We may hence see one design of divine providence. By giving to Solomon so much wealth, wisdom, and power, the national-character was raised, and its glory spread abroad. Having such a prince at their head, strangers would naturally inquire into their religion and laws; especially those, who, as in the last verse, were sent on purpose to inquire. Thus some knowledge of the living God and true religion, would be diffused through the nations, and a way made for multitudes

a wise son, to reign over this great people." And Hiram sent to Solomon, saying, "I have 8 considered the things about which thou sentest to me; I will do according to all thy desire, in respect to cedar-trees, and fir-trees. My servants 9 shall bring them down from Lebanon unto the sea; and I will convey them by sea in floats unto the place which thou shalt appoint to me, and will cause them to be discharged there, that thou mayest receive them: but thou shalt accomplish my desire, in giving food for my household." Thus Hiram gave to Solomon cedar-trees and 10 fir trees, according to all his desire. And Solomon gave to Hiram twenty thousand cores of wheat for food to his household, and twenty cores of pure oil: thus Solomon gave to Hiram yearly. And Jehovah gave to Solomon wisdom, 12 as he had promised him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon; and they two made a mutual league.

And king Solomon raised a levy out of all 13 Israel; and the levy was thirty thousand men. And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand a 14 month by courses; a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home: and Adoniram was over the levy. Solomon had, moreover, 15 seventy thousand men, who carried burdens; and eighty thousand stone-hewers in the mountains; Besides the chief overseers of Solomon, 16 who were over the work, three thousand and to become proselytes to the Jewish church.

3. We may here see, that wisdom is better than riches. It is better to its possessor, affording the noblest exercise to the mind; and by enlarging the mental views, it multiplies the sources of pleasure. It is better in its results, as it discovers the properties of objects, and directs us to make a suitable application of them. Divine wisdom is still better, that which begins in the fear of Jehovah, and ends in the enjoyment of him. This wisdom is a tree of life; her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. How happy are those that make her their choice, and find her.

1 Chron. ii. 6. Some suppose it was this Heman who composed the 88th and 89th psalms. See the titles to them.

32. Three thousand proverbs. Had all the works of Solomon been preserved, they would doubtless have contributed much to the elucidation of the scriptures. We have but a few of his proverbs, and it is doubtful whether we have any of the songs here mentioned.

CHAP. V. 1. Sent his servants. The next clause indicates that Hiram did this at the commencement of Solomon's reign.

3. Thou knowest, &c. David's intention to build a house for God was well known to Hiram, by the great preparations which he had made. 1 Chron. xxviii. 12—19. and xxix. 2. &c.

6. Like to the Sidonians. From this, it appears, that Tyre and Sidon formed but one kingdom. Both Tyre and Sidon were distinguished commercial cities, and their ships carried on the whole trade of that period. The arts flourished among them, and they were celebrated not only for their nautical skill, but for their architecture, &c.

9. Bring them down from Lebanon. This lofty mountain did then, and still abound with the finest cedars, pines, and firs; and this circumstance

three hundred, who governed the people that 17 wrought in the work. And the king commanded, and they brought great stones, costly stones, and squared stones, to lay the foundation of the 18 house. Thus Solomon's workmen, and Hiram's workmen, and the Giblites, hewed and prepared timber and stones to build the house.

B. C. 1012. The building of the temple; its separate apartments, furniture, &c. Solomon's other buildings.

1 Now it was in the four hundred and eightieth year from the departure of the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, in the month Zif, which is the second month, that he began
 2 to build the house of Jehovah. And the house which king Solomon built for Jehovah, was in length, sixty cubits, and in breadth, twenty cubits, and in height, thirty cubits. And the porch before the temple, was in length, twenty cubits, according to the breadth of the house;
 3 its breadth from the house, ten cubits. And he made windows for the house, which might be 4 opened or shut; And adjoining the wall of the

CHAP. VI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. We here see the happy effects of friendship. Hiram had esteemed David, and he is desirous to show his regard to Solomon. Hence, he sends his servants to congratulate him on his advancement to the throne of Israel; and Solomon tries his sincerity by requesting him to cut down timber in Lebanon. How beautiful and lovely is it to see these two princes ready to serve each other with the productions of their respective countries! Thus should we act to those about us; be kind and friendly to them, ready to sell, or lend, or give, what we have, and which they want. This is the way to receive other favours in exchange, and to promote the peace and honour of society, and the comfort of one another.

2. A time of peace and rest ought to be employed for the service of God, and the edification of his church. When there is no foreign adversary to disturb our repose, no evil occurrence at home to call off our minds, we should be peculiarly active and forward in the Lord's work. "Then had the churches rest, and were edified, and walking contributed to raise Tyre, by affording materials for ships, &c.

18. The Giblites. I consider (גִּבְלִיִּם) a proper name, as Gebal was a city near to Lebanon. Comp. Josh. xiii. 5. Ezek. xxvii. 8.

CHAP. VI 4. Be opened or shut. So both Dathe and Michaelis render. The Chaldee renders, "broad within and narrow without," and most modern versions adopt the sense. Aquila gives the sense I have adopted;

house he built galleries round about: round about, adjoining the wall, both of the temple and of the oracle. He built also, round about, side-cells. The nethermost gallery was five 6 cubits broad, and the middlemost was six cubits broad, and the third was seven cubits broad; for, on the outside of the walls of the temple, he made narrowed rests round about, that the gallery-beams might not be fastened in the walls of the house. For, when the house was build- 7 ing, it was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither; so that there was neither hammer nor axe, nor any other iron tool heard in the house, while it was building. In the 8 "lowest" gallery there was an entrance on the right side of the house: and they went up with winding stairs to the middlemost gallery, and from the middlemost to the third gallery. Thus 9 he built the house, and finished it; and covered the house with beams and boards of cedar. And the galleries he built about the whole 10 house, five cubits high: and they rested on the house by beams of cedar.

And the word of Jehovah came to Solomon, 11 saying, "In respect to this house which thou 12 in the fear of the Lord, and the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied." Acts, ix. 31.

3. In erecting the Jewish temple, Hiram and other gentiles were employed. Let us long for that happy time, when Jews and Gentiles, and all the different nations, shall join together to build up God's spiritual temple, and establish his religion on the earth. The glory of the latter day is foretold by an image borrowed from this story, (Is. ix. 10—13.) "And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister to thee: for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee. Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the forces of the gentiles. The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious." Of such a time we have the fullest assurance; let us wish for its approach; and endeavour to promote the interests of true religion.

and Michaelis observes, that the oriental tongues favour the common rendering of (מִסְמָרִים).

5. Galleries; which were divided into a number of side-cells; as below: it is unknown how many, as their length is not mentioned.

8. For the lowest. The reading I have adopted is confirmed by the 6th verse, as well as the versions noticed.

21. Along the front. These chains seem to have been designed to sur-

art building, if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, so as to walk according to them; then will I perform my word to thee, which I spoke to David thy father:

13 And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will not forsake my people Israel."

14 And Solomon built the house, and finished

15 it. And having built the walls of the house, he covered the inside with wood, with boards of cedar up to the ceiling; but the floor of the 16 house, he covered with planks of fir. And at the further end of the house, he lined twenty cubits, both floor and walls, with boards of cedar: this he constructed for the inner ORACLE

17 Thus forty cubits were left for the outer house

18 or temple. And the cedar of the inner house was carved with knops and open flowers: all

19 was cedar; there was no stone seen. And this inner house he appointed to be the oracle, in which was to be put the ark of the covenant of

20 Jehovah. And the front of the oracle was twenty cubits in length, and its breadth twenty cubits, and its height twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with pure gold; and so he overlaid the

21 altar of incense. Thus Solomon overlaid the inner house with pure gold: and he made chains of gold along the front of the oracle; and he

22 overlaid it with gold. And the whole house he completely overlaid with gold; also the whole altar which was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.

23 And within the oracle he made two cherubs,

24 of wild olive wood, ten cubits high. And the one wing of the cherub was five cubits, and the other wing of the cherub five cubits; so that from the extremity of the one wing to the ex-

25 tremity of the other, was ten cubits. And the other cherub was ten cubits: both the cher-

26 ubs were of one measure and one size. The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and

27 so was that of the other cherub. And he placed the cherubs in the midst of the inner house: and the wings of the cherubs were expanded so that the wing of the one cherub touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; and their other wings touched one another in the midst of the house. And he overlaid the cherubs with gold. And 28 he carved all the walls of the house round about 29 with carved figures of cherubs, and palm trees, and open flowers, within and without the oracle.

And the floor of the house, within and with- 30 out the oracle, he overlaid with gold.

And for the entrance of the oracle he made 31 doors of wild olive wood: the lintel of the side posts was a fifth part of the breadth of the house. The two door-leaves were also of wild 32 olive wood; on which he carved cherubs, and palm trees, and open flowers; and he overlaid the doors with gold; and spread gold upon the cherubs, and upon the palm trees. Thus also 33 he made for the door of the temple posts of wild olive wood, a fourth part of the breadth of the temple. And the two door-leaves were of fir 34 tree; the one leaf turned on two hinges, and the other leaf turned on two hinges. And he 35 carved thereon cherubs, and palm trees, and open flowers: and covered them with gold fitted for the carved work. And he built the inner 36 court with three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams.

In the fourth year was the foundation of the 37 house of Jehovah laid, in the month Zif; And 38 in the eleventh year, in the month Bul, which is in the eighth month, was the house finished in all its parts, and according to its designed form. Thus was he seven years in building it.

But in building his own house, Solomon was 1 thirteen years more. And when he had wholly completed his own house, He built the house 2 of the forest of Lebanon. Its length was a hundred cubits; and its breadth fifty cubits, and

pend the veil, which separated the oracle from the temple.

23. Of the wild olive wood. Literally, 'of oily wood,' which Michahis explains to mean the oleaster, which abounds in Judea, and which is very durable.

31. Entrance of the oracle. From this, it should seem, that there was a partition wall extending, at least, part of the way between the oracle and temple; most probably, on each side in which the doors were made.

CHAP. VII. 1. The Greek version has the first twelve verses at the end of the chapter. These seem out of their place, if the order of time be regarded; but as the historian had mentioned the time in which the temple was building, he very naturally adds the time which Solomon spent in completing his other works. I have, therefore, joined the verses to the sixth chapter.—Thirteen years more. Compare 2 Chron. viii. 1.

2. House of the forest, &c. This appears to have been the country its height thirty cubits, raised upon four rows of cedar pillars, with cedar beams upon the pillars. And it was covered above with cedar upon the beams, which lay upon sixty pillars, fifteen in a row. And there were three rows of windows, and, in those three rows, light was opposite to light. And all the apertures, and posts of the windows were square: and light was opposite to light in three rows. He then made a porch with pillars; its length was fifty cubits, and its breadth thirty cubits: and the area of the porch was before those pillars, and over them were thick planks. He next made a porch for the throne where he might judge, hence called the judgment-porch: and it was covered with cedar from the floor to the ceiling. And his own apartment, where he sat, was a court-hall, behind the porch, of like workmanship. Solomon made also a house for Pharaoh's daughter, whom he had taken to wife, like to this porch. All these were built of costly stones, squared to a measure, and cut with saws, within and without, even from the foundation to the coping. And the foundation was of costly stones, and great stones, stones of ten cubits, and stones of eight cubits. And above these were costly stones, squared to a measure, and cedars. And the great court, round about was of three rows of hewed stones, and a row of cedar beams, both for the inner court of the house, and for the porch of the house.

CHAPTER VII.

B. C. 1014. Hiram sent for; makes the two brass pillars, molten sea, lavers, &c.

AND king Solomon sent and brought Hiram from Tyre. He was the son of a widow woman, of the tribe of Naphtali, (though his father was a man of Tyre,) a worker in brass; and he was filled with wisdom, and understanding, and knowledge to work all sorts of brass work. And he came to king Solomon, and wrought all his works. And he cast two pillars of brass, each pillar eighteen cubits: and a line of twelve cubits was the circumference of each pillar. And he made two capitals of molten brass, to be placed on the tops of the pillars: the height of the one capital was five cubits, and the height of the other capital was five cubits: And he made net-works and wreaths of chain-work, for the

CHAP. VII. 9. ° and without the great court.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. Long had Jehovah dwelt within the curtains of the tabernacle; but now what had often been adverted to, came to pass. He had chosen a place to put his name there; and a glorious building is erected to his honour, planned by himself, and dedicated to his service. The time when its foundation was laid, is recorded, as well as the time it was building, and the manner in which it was built. This was a distinguished era in the history of the Jewish church, and ought to be regarded.

2. The silence observed in building, may teach us that it was the temple of peace, and that those who worshipped there should be the sons of peace. No noise of iron tools was heard; the materials were all previously prepared. They who build the spiritual temple should be residence of Solomon, and not far from Jerusalem. It is probable, that it was thus called on account of the plantations with which it was surrounded; and not as Calmet supposed, from the pillars being formed of the cedars of Lebanon.

6. He then made a porch. The present Hebrew text is to me unintelligible; and so are all the versions of it, that I have seen. By a small alteration, which I trust will appear to be reasonable, I have made sense of it. The porch was probably in the form of a piazza. The pillars were placed at some distance from the wall, either on one side only, or all around: and that space was covered with a thick flooring, to keep out the rain and afford a shady walk.—And the area, &c. I have given what appears to be the sense, rather than the literal version, as the latter conveys no idea.

12. ° Jehovah 17. ° Sept. Syr. Arab.—ibid. ° Sept.

men of peace; clamour and contention never advance this structure. A conciliating, affectionate spirit is necessary to cement the lively stones that they may become a spiritual house.

3. The work of Solomon was acceptable to Jehovah. He sends to him a gracious message, promising, on condition of his obedience, that he will perform his word and dwell among his people. The most costly and splendid temple would not conciliate his regard, or secure his presence and blessing, without obedience to his will. Obedience is more than sacrifice; than whole burnt-offerings. Without this, the temple is profane, the offerings polluted, and all outward ceremonies, only a compound of pride and hypocrisy. It is only the form of godliness, without the living power.

9. I have omitted the words thrown into the margin, as evidently unnecessary, and, I think, interpolated. For if the whole building, within and without, was made of costly stones, &c. there is no necessity to add, and so without, &c.

12. It is easy to account for the insertion of Jehovah here, though it is clearly improper. The writer is giving an account of the house of the forest of Lebanon, and not of the temple. Houbigant considers that the sense is, like the inner court of the house of Jehovah, &c. and so Dathé.

17. And he made, &c. The readings adopted are supported by the context, and the idiom of the language. It has been justly observed by Michaelis and others, that although the ornaments of those pillars are minutely described, yet it is not easy to find equivalent terms in modern capitals, which were upon the top of the pillars;

 'a net-work' for the one capital, and 'a net-18 work' for the other capital. And he made to cover the capitals, which are on the tops of the pillars, two rows of pomegranates, round about the net-work of one capital; and so he did for 19 the other capital. And the capitals which were upon the top of the pillars had four cubits of lily 20 works. And above this, about the swelling, which was by the net-work of the capitals, on the two pillars, were rows of pomegranates;
 two hundred on the one capital, and two hun-21 dred on the other capital. And he set up the pillars in the porch of the temple; and he set up the right-side pillar, and called its name Jachin, [IT SHALL STAND;] and he set up the left-side pillar, and called its name Boaz, [IN 22 STRENGTH.] And upon the top of the pillars he placed lily work: thus the work of the pillars was completed.

23 And he made a molten sea, from one brim to the other, ten cubits: it was wholly round; its height was five cubits; and a line of thirty cu-24 bits compassed it round. And under its brim were knops encompassing it, ten in a cubit; encompassing the sea round about; the knops 25 were in two rows, cast when it was cast. It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking towards the north, and three looking towards the west, and three looking towards the south, and three looking towards the east: and the sea was so placed above them, that all their hinder parts 26 were inward. And the sea was a hand-breadth thick, and its brim was wrought like the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies. It contained two thousand baths.

27 He also made ten laver-stands of brass; four cubits was the length of one stand, and four cubits its breadth, and three cubits its height.

 And the workmanship of the stands was this: 28
 they had frame-bands, and the frame-bands were between the supporters. And on the frame- 29 bands, which were between the supporters, were lions, oxen, and cherubs: and upon the supporters, both above and below the lions and oxen, were joints of excellent workmanship.
 And every stand had four brazen wheels, and 30 brazen axle-trees. And at its four corners were undersetters; molten undersetters beneath the laver, by each of the joints. And its mouth was 31 within the capital, and was a cubit high: but its mouth, without, was a cubit and a half, corresponding to the workmanship of the stand: and also near to its mouth were engravings, square, not round, with their frame-bands. And under 32
 the frame-bands were the four wheels; and the axle-trees of the wheels were fixed to the stand:
 and the height of a wheel was a cubit and a half.
 And the work of the wheels was like the work 33
 of a chariot wheel; their axle-trees, and their naves, and their felloes, and their spokes, were all molten. And there were four undersetters to 34 the four corners of each stand: and the undersetters were of the stand itself. And at the top 35 of the stand was a circle, half a cubit high, and from the top of the stand itself, arose its arms and frame-bands. And on the plates of its arms, 36
 and on its borders, he engraved cherubs, lions,
 and palm-trees, in the open parts, at the joinings around. After this manner he made the 37
 ten stands: all of them had the same casting,
 measure, and size.

Then he made ten brazen lavers: each laver 38 contained forty baths; and each laver was four cubits, in diameter. Upon every one of the ten stands he placed one laver. And five of the 39

languages; and it is difficult to render them properly.

18. In the common text, the words that correspond to pillars and pomegranates, have, by changing places, turned the text into nonsense. Indeed, the whole of this and the next verse is strangely misarranged and mutilated. I have endeavoured to render them intelligible.

21. Jachin—Boaz. I believe the right name of the former is Jachin, which is that of the Greek version: the English of which is, It-shall-stand. The other signifies In strength, or Strongly. Perhaps the artist meant the latter a continuation of the former: It shall stand, firmly. Some conjecture that there was an inscription on each pillar, the first word of which is that given. They were intended more for ornament than use.

23. Molten sea. The Hebrews called any collection of waters seq. So the lake of Genesareth and others, are called in the gospels; and here, this term is applied to a large vessel, containing two thousand baths, which was used for various purposes, in the temple-service.

25. Twelve oxen. These were not only intended for its support, but for ornament.

28. Frame-bands. Among other senses the word (מסגר) denotes a border, a piece, which closes and shuts up others. I have followed Gêdès, as best expressing the sense here. Others render openings.

29. Joints of excellent, &c. So the Syriac translator rendered; but for what purpose these joints were made, I cannot conjecture. The whole stands he placed on the right side of the temple, and five on the left side of the temple : and the sea he placed, at the south-east corner of the temple. Also Hiram made the other lavers, and the shovels, and the basons.

Thus Hiram completed all the work which he did for king Solomon, for the house of Jehovah : The two pillars, and the bowls of the capitals, which were on the top of the two pillars ; and the two net-works, to cover the two bowls of the capitals, which were on the top of the pillars. And four hundred pomegranates for the two net-works, two rows of pomegranates for the one net-work, to cover the two bowls of the capitals which were upon the pillars ; And the ten stands, and the ten lavers on the stands ; And one sea, and twelve oxen under the sea ; And the pans, and the shovels, and the sprinkling basons, and all these utensils, which Hiram made for king Solomon, for the house of Jehovah, were of polished brass. In the plain of the Jordan did the king cast them ; in the clay ground between Succoth and Zarthan. And Solomon left all the vessels unweighed ; for so very great was the quantity of brass, that it was not ascertained. And Solomon made all the other utensils of the house of Jehovah : the golden altar, and the golden table, upon which was placed the presence-bread. And the chandeliers of pure gold, (five on the right side, and five on the left,) before the oracle, with their flowers, and lamps, and the snuffers of gold ; The bowls also and the knives, and the sprinkling basons, and the spoons, and the censers of pure gold ; and the golden hinges ; both for the doors of the inner-house, the most holy place, and for the doors of the outer-house, or temple. And when all the work which king Solomon made for the house of Jehovah was finished, Solomon then brought all the things which David, his father, had dedicated ; the silver, and the gold, and the vases, he put among the treasures of the house of Jehovah.

THEN Solomon assembled "all" the elders of Israel, all the heads of the tribes, the paternal chiefs of the children of Israel, unto king Solomon in Jerusalem, that they might bring up the ark of the covenant of Jehovah out of the city of David, which is in Zion. And all the chief men of Israel assembled themselves unto king Solomon at the feast in the month Etha-

CHAP. VIII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. The splendour and glory of the temple, were intended to excite veneration, in those who approached it, for him whose temple it was ; and to prevent idolatry. The temples of idols were splendid, and seduced many that were led away by the sight of the eye ; but none were so glorious as this temple. Grand and sumptuous churches are of no real service now ; but every thing ought to be decent and convenient. To contribute in order to supply our brethren with such places, is an important and excellent charity. Solomon did not build his own, till he had finished God's house. He should have the first and best of our services.

2. Whatever we do to support the house and worship of God, we should look to him for assistance and strength. The two pillars, Jachin and Boaz, suggest this thought to us. While we description is minute, but as the terms are ambiguous, it is impossible to understand it completely.

39. On the right side, &c. The stands and lavers were placed, not within the temple, but in the court before the temple.

45. Polished brass. The ancient translators generally understood it to be a finer sort of brass, known by the name of Corinthian.

1. "So all the versions and many mss.

keep close to him and his worship, we may hope for the continuance of his favours. He will keep our temples in peace, and strengthen the heart of every sincere and humble worshipper. Then shall we stand firm when he is our strength.

3. The frequent washing, for which the lavers were designed, is often represented in scripture as an emblem of that purity and holiness, which God, under the gospel, requires of his worshippers. It is not the putting away of the filth of the flesh only, but consists in washing the heart from all wickedness, in having clean hands, free from every act of injustice, dishonesty, and every thing contrary to gospel purity. If we desire the acceptance of our prayers and services, let us wash our hands in innocency, and humbly seek acceptance through the blood of Christ, "which cleanseth from all sin."

CHAP. VIII. 2. Seventh month. On the 15th of this month the feast of booths was kept ; and it is probable, that the feast of the dedication preceded, and continued seven days. See ver. 65. This time was chosen as most convenient for the people, the harvest and vintage being finished.

8. Within the holy oracle. The cherubs covered the ark with their wings, but when the high-priest went into the oracle, the staves by which

3 nim, which is the seventh month; And all the elders of Israel came, and the priests and the 4 Levites took up the ark. And they brought up the ark of Jehovah, and the congregation-tabernacle, and all the holy vessels which were in the tabernacle; even these the priests and 5 the Levites brought up. And king Solomon, and the whole assembled congregation of Israel
with him were sacrificing before the ark, sheep and oxen that could not be told or numbered 6 for multitude. Thus the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of Jehovah into its place, into the oracle of the temple, the most holy 7 place, under the wings of the cherubs. For the cherubs spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubs covered 8 both the ark and its staves. And though the staves were so long that the end of the staves might be seen within the holy oracle, yet they could not be seen without: and there they are to 9 this day. There was nothing in the ark, but the two tables of stone, which Moses put there at Horeb, when Jehovah made a covenant with the children of Israel, on their coming out of the land of Egypt.
10 Now when the priests had come out of the holy place, a cloud filled the house of Jehovah, 11 So that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud; for the glory of Jehovah had filled the house of Jehovah.
12 Then spoke Solomon, "Jehovah said that he 13 would dwell in the dark cloud. I have assuredly built for thee a house of abode, a place for 14 thy perpetual residence." And the king turned his face about, and blessed the whole congregation of Israel; and the whole congregation 15 of Israel stood up: And he said, "Blessed be Jehovah, the God of Israel, who, with his own hand hath fulfilled, what with his own mouth,

he promised to David, my father, saying,
'From the day that I brought my people out 16
of Egypt, I have not chosen a city out of any of the tribes of Israel to build a house, that my name might be there revered; but I have chosen David to be over my people Israel.' Now 17 it was the purpose of David, my father, to build a house to the name of Jehovah, the God of Israel. But Jehovah said to David, my father, 18
'Inasmuch as it is thy purpose to build a house to my name, thou hast done well to form such a purpose. Nevertheless, thou shalt not build 19
the house; but thy son, who shall come from thy own loins, he shall build the house to my name.' Now, Jehovah hath performed his 20 word which he spoke; for I am risen up instead of David, my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as Jehovah promised, and have built a house to the name of Jehovah, the God of Israel. And I have assigned there a place 21 for the ark, in which are the tables of the covenant of Jehovah, which he made with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt."

And Solomon stood before the ark of Jeho- 22
vah, in the presence of the whole congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands towards the heavens; And he said, "O Jehovah, the 23 God of Israel, there is no God like thee, in the heavens above, or on the earth below, who keepest covenant, and showest mercy to thy servants who walk before thee with their whole heart: Who hast kept with thy servant David, 24
my father, what thou didst promise to him: and what thou spakest with thy own mouth, with thine own hand hast thou fulfilled, as is this day seen. Therefore now, O Jehovah, the 25

the ark had been carried, might be seen, but could not be seen without when the door of the oracle was open. If this be not the sense of the passage, I confess that I do not understand it. The common version is a contradiction in terms.

9. There was nothing, &c. From this it appears, that the golden urn full of manna, the rod of Aaron, and the book of the covenant, or the authentic and genuine copy of the law, written by Moses, must have been placed before the ark, or by it. Comp. Exod. xvi. 33, 34. Numb. xvii. 10. and Heb. ix. 4.

12. Jehovah said, &c. He alludes to Levit. xvi. 2; and infers from the cloud, that Jehovah had chosen this house for his own residence.

18, 19. Solomon gives the sense of Nathan's message to David, and not the words. See 2 Sam. vii. 2-17. I have preferred the meaning to the literal version.

22. And Solomon stood. From the fuller account in 2 Chron. vi. 12. we learn that a platform of brass was set up in the court of the temple, on which Solomon first stood to call the attention of the people, and kneeled down and prayed.

God of Israel, keep still with thy servant David, my father, what thou didst promise to him, saying, 'Some one of thy posterity shall not fail to sit, in my presence, on the throne of Israel; provided that thy children take heed to their way, so that they walk before me as thou hast walked before me.' And now, O God of Israel, let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, which thou spakest to thy servant David, my father. But will God indeed dwell on the earth? behold, the heavens, yea the highest heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house which I have built? Yet have thou respect to the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O Jehovah, my God, to hearken to the cry and to the prayer, which thy servant prayeth before thee this day: That thine eyes, night and day, may be open towards this house; towards the place of which thou hast said, 'My name shall be there:' that thou mayest hearken to the prayer which thy servant may make towards this place. And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray towards this place: and hear thou then in the heavens thy own dwelling-place: and when thou hearest, forgive."

31 "If a man offend his neighbour, and he put him to his oath, and the oath be made before thine altar, in this house; Then hear thou in the heavens, and do justice to thy servants, condemning the wicked, by bringing his own guilt upon his own head; and justifying the righteous, by rendering to him, according to his own righteousness."

33 "And if thy people Israel be smitten before the enemy, because they have sinned against thee, and turn again to thee, and confess thy name, and pray, and make supplication to thee in this house; Then hear thou, in the heavens, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them back to the land which thou gavest to their fathers."

27. But will God, &c. The loftiest conceptions of the divine nature, of God's incomprehensible greatness, and his omnipresence, are here finely expressed. He contrasts the temple, which he had built, with the temple of

"When the heavens are shut up, and there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; if they pray towards this place, and confess thy name, and turn from their sin, when thou hast afflicted them: Then hear thou, in the heavens, and forgive the sin of thy servants, of thy people Israel; teach thou them the good way, in which they ought to walk, and send rain upon thy land, which thou hast given to thy people for an inheritance."

"If there be in the land famine, if there be pestilence, blasting, mildew, locust; or if there be caterpillar, or if their enemy besiege them in any of their cities; whatsoever plague, whatsoever disease there be: Then hear thou, in the heavens, thy own dwelling-place, the prayer and supplication made by any man, by any of thy people Israel, by any man who knoweth the plague of his own heart, and spreadeth forth his hands towards this house; And forgive, and do and deal with every man according to his ways, as thou knowest his heart; for thou, thou only, knowest the hearts of the children of men: That they may fear thee all the days that they live in the land, which thou gavest to our fathers."

"Moreover concerning a stranger, who is not of thy people Israel, but cometh from a far country for the sake of thy name; (For they have heard of thy great name, and of thy strong hand, and of thy out-stretched arm;) if he shall come and pray towards this house; Hear thou in the heavens, thy own dwelling-place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for: that all the people of the earth may acknowledge thy name, so as to fear thee, like thy people Israel; and that they may know that this house, which I have built, is called by thy name."

"If thy people go out to battle against their enemy whithersoever thou mayest send them, and shall pray to Jehovah towards the city the heavens; and considering the infinitely superior glory of the latter, he hesitates, he doubts, whether Jehovah, who inhabits it, will dwell with man upon earth! Or it is the language of holy admiration at his condescension which thou hast chosen, and towards the house 45 which I have built to thy name: Then hear thou, in the heavens, their prayer and supplication and maintain their cause."

46 "If they sin against thee, (for there is no man that sinneth not,) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them up to the enemy, so that they carry them away captives to the land of the 47 enemy, far or near; If in the land whither they are carried captives, they reflect and repent, and make supplication to thee in the land of those who carried them captives, saying, 'We have sinned, and have done perversely, we have 48 committed wickedness;' And return to thee with all their heart, and with all their soul, in the land of their enemies, who had led them away captives and pray unto thee towards their land, which thou gavest to their fathers, towards the city which thou hast chosen, and the house
49 which I have built to thy name: Then hear thou in the heavens, thy own dwelling-place, their prayer and their supplication, and maintain 50 their cause: And forgive thy people the sin that they have committed against thee, and all the transgressions whereby they have offended thee; and move the compassion of those who carried them captive, that they may have mercy on 51 them. For they are thy people, and thine inheritance, whom thou broughtest out of Egypt, 52 from the midst of an iron furnace. Thus do thou attend to the supplication of thy servants, to the supplication of thy people Israel, to hearken to them in all that they call for to thee.
53 For thou didst separate them from among all the people of the earth, to be thine own inheritance, as thou spakest by Moses thy servant,
when thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt,
O Lord Jehovah."

54 And when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication to Jehovah, he arose from before the altar of Jehovah,
from kneeling on his knees, with his hands 55 spread out towards the heavens; And he stood,
and blessed the whole congregation of Israel

with a loud voice, saying, "Blessed be Jeho- 56
vah, who hath given rest to his people Israel, according to all that he promised: there hath not failed one word of all his good promise, which he promised by Moses his servant. May 57 Jehovah our God be with us, as he was with our fathers; may he never leave us, nor forsake us. May he incline our hearts to himself, to 58 walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers. And may 59
these my words, with which I have made supplication before Jehovah, be nigh to Jehovah our God, day and night, that he may maintain the cause of his servant, and the cause of his people
Israel, and grant them daily what they need:
That all the people of the earth may know that 60
Jehovah, and none else, is God. Let your 61 heart therefore be perfect with Jehovah our God, to walk in his statutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day."

And the king, and all Israel with him, offered 62 sacrifice before Jehovah. And Solomon offered 63 a sacrifice of feast-offerings, which he offered to Jehovah, two and twenty thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep. Thus the king and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of Jehovah. The same day did the king 64 hallow the middle court which was before the house of Jehovah: for there he offered burnt-offerings, and wheaten-offerings, and the fat of the feast-offerings: because the brazen altar which was before Jehovah, was too little to receive the burnt-offerings, and the wheatenofferings, and the fat of the feast-offerings.
And at that time Solomon held a feast, and all 65 Israel with him, a great congregation, from the entrance of Hamath unto the river of Egypt, before Jehovah our God, seven days and seven days; fourteen days. On the eighth day he sent 66
the people away: and they blessed the king, and went into their tents joyful and glad of heart for all the good which Jehovah had done-for David his servant, and for Israel his people.

and grace, who would deign to dwell there by the token of his presence.

38, 39. I have transposed the order of the words, for the sake of perspicuity. There is a redundancy in the text, which it is difficult to translate verbally and clearly.

66. On the eighth day; that is, counting from the first day of the last seven; which we learn from 2 Chron. vii. 10. was the 23rd day of the month.

CHAPTER IX.

B. C. 992. God's second appearance to Solomon in a vision; Solomon's present to Hiram; his conduct towards the remaining part of the Canaanites; his ship sent to Ophir.

1 AND, when Solomon had finished the building of the house of Jehovah, and the king's house, and whatever else it was Solomon's desire, or pleasure to do, Jehovah appeared to Solomon the second time, as he had appeared to him in Gibeon, And Jehovah said to him, "I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication, which thou hast made before me: I have hallowed this house which thou hast built, to put my name there for ever; and mine eyes and my heart shall be there perpetually. And if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my statutes and my judgments; Then I will establish the throne of thy kingdom over Israel for ever, as I promised to David thy father, saying, 'Some one of thy posterity shall not fail to sit upon the throne of Israel.' But if ye or your children turn away from following me, and will not keep my commandments and my statutes which I have set

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. We are here taught that God's promises to us should encourage our prayers. This Solomon makes use of as a plea in his prayer. He grounds his petition for favour, on what was said to David, and of Israel, in the various circumstances that might occur. God's promises are to guide our devotions, to direct us what to pray for, and excite our hope that he will graciously hear our supplications, and send an answer of peace.

It becomes us whenever we approach God, to remember his immensity and omnipresence. This will prevent rudeness and presumption, and fill our hearts with an awful sense of the Majesty we address; it will lead us to admire his condescension and grace, in permitting our approach to him, who is a spirit, and must be worshipped in spirit and in truth. We should particularly recollect, that he knows our thoughts, therefore we must be serious and sincere. He knows the plague of our hearts, and allows us to spread our sins and our sorrows before him. He knows how to support us under every burden; to take it away, or to cure every plague and grief, both of body and mind.

CHAP. IX. 3—9. In this vision, Solomon is assured of the divine favour in case of obedience, but in case of apostacy to idols, both he and the kingdom should experience the reward of their deeds.

8. Which was so highly, &c. I have followed the text of 2 Chron. vii.

before you, but go and serve other gods, and worship them; Then will I cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them; and this house, which I have hallowed for my name, will I cast out of my sight; and Israel shall be a proverb and a by-word among all people! And at this house, which was so highly celebrated, every one that passeth by shall be astonished, and shall hiss; and they shall say, 'Why hath Jehovah done thus to this land, and to this house?' And some shall answer, 'Because they forsook Jehovah their God, who brought their fathers out of the land of Egypt; and they have adhered to other gods, and have worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath Jehovah brought all this evil upon them.'

Now at the end of twenty years, when Solomon had built the two houses, the house of Jehovah, and his own palace; As Hiram, the king of Tyre, had furnished Solomon with cedar-trees and fir-trees, and with gold, according to all his desire, king Solomon then gave to Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee. And Hiram came from Tyre to see the cities which Solomon had given to him; but they pleased him not. And he said, "What cities are these

3. We learn that repentance must precede pardon. Solomon in every branch of his prayer mentions this, to remind the people of the terms of acceptance, and to prevent their mocking God, by asking his favour while they were disobedient; and he particularly mentions it in the close of his address to them. To this purpose saith the Psalmist, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."

4. The public settlement of divine worship, and the tokens of the divine presence in it, give great joy to every pious Israelite. What a pleasure was it to the people to see the temple finished, the ark brought into it, and God giving these evident tokens of his favour and acceptance; to see the king so joyful and devout and every one so well pleased! Thus, when a spirit of devotion and zeal for the house of God prevails, and the people are made joyful in the house of prayer, there is great reason for thankfulness; and it should be our prayer that this may be more and more our case. In every instance in which it is so, the song of the priests and the people should be ours; "the Lord is good; his mercy endureth for ever. Amen."

21.; and given, with Dathe, the sense rather than the idiom. Geddes renders, but without any authority from the versions, shall be laid in the dirt.

13. The land of Cabul. The sense of these words has not been ascertained. The Sept. renders border-land. Rabbi Solomon explains appella-which thou hast given to me, my brother?"

 And he called them the land of Cabul, as they 14 are called to this day. Now Hiram had sent to the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold.
 15 And this is the reason of the levy of bond-ser- vice which king Solomon raised: it was in order to build the house of Jehovah, and his own house, and Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and Ha-16 zor, and Megiddo, and Gezer, (For Pharaoh, king of Egypt, had come up, and taken Gezer,
 and burnt it with fire, and slain the Canaanites who dwelt in the city, and given it as a present 17 to his daughter, the wife of Solomon; But Solomon rebuilt Gezer,) and Beth-horon the nether, 18 And Baalath, and Tadmor in the wilderness, in 19 the land of Zobah, And all the store-cities which Solomon had, and cities for his chariots, and cities for his horsemen, and whatever Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and in the whole land of his dominion.
 20 And all the people who remained of the Amorites, Hethites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebu-sites, who were not of the children of Israel, 21 But the children of those who were left in the land, whom the children of Israel were not able utterly to destroy; upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bond-service to this day. But of 22

 the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondmen; but they were men of war, and his own servants, and his chiefs, and his captains, and his charioteers, and his horsemen. These 23 were the chief of the overseers of Solomon's works, five hundred and fifty, who directed the people who wrought at the work.

After Pharaoh's daughter had come up out of 24
 the city of David to her own house which "Solo- mon" had built for her, he then built Millo.
 And three times in a year did Solomon offer 25
 burnt-offerings, and feast-offerings, upon the altar which he built to Jehovah; and when he had finished the house, he burnt incense upon the altar which was before Jehovah.

And king Solomon built ships at Ezion-ge- 26
 ber, which is by Eloth, on the shore of the Red-sea, in the land of Edom. And Hiram sent in 27
 the ships, with the servants of Solomon, his own servants, who were experienced mariners.
 And they went to Ophir, and thence fetched 28 gold; four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to king Solomon.

CHAP. IX. 18. *2 Chron. viii 3.

24. *Syr. Vulg. Arab.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. The caution which God gave Solomon in this chapter, reminds us, that if we desire the continuance of our privileges, we must be an obedient and holy people. No establishment of the externals of religion, no splendour of the church, or forms of worship, can secure the divine favour, and lengthen our tranquillity, without obedience to God's laws and keeping his commandments. Let us impress this truth upon our hearts, that we 'be not high minded, but fear;' and let every particular person remember, that doing the will of God is necessary to the acceptance of our prayers, and the continuance of the divine blessing.

2 We may learn to admire the divine wisdom in assigning to men different employments and occupations. Some go down to the sea in ships, and do business in the great waters, while others are devoted to the cultivation of the land; and their inclinations are suited to their different employments. The merchant and the artisan love the bustle of the city and the sea-port, while the husbandman prefers the quietness and retirement of the country. Thus are all, in different ways, contributing to the comforts of life.

3 Let both, however, remember, that there is no gain, no acquisition like that of spiritual wisdom. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding.
 For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. She is more precious than rubies: and all the things thou canst desire, are not to be compared unto her. Length of days is in her right hand; and in her left hand, riches and honour."

tively, a clay-land. Others as a proper name. Josephus asserts, that the word in the Phœnician tongue signifies displeasing. Michaelis proposes to render from the Arabic the land given for a debt. This suits the connexion;
 as Hiram had advanced to Solomon a hundred and twenty talents of gold.

18. Tadmor in the land of Zobah. Compare 2 Chron. viii. 3. This is generally supposed to be the city called by the Greeks, Palmyra, whose ruins are yet so magnificent. It has been visited by some of our own countrymen, and accurately described. See Dawkin's and Wood's ruins, &c.

19. In Lebanon. Houbigant contends that Solomon had no part of mount Lebanon within his territory. Though I conceive that this is not true, Lebanon being the north boundary of Judea, yet, as the term is used here in connexion with Jerusalem, it is probable, that what is before called the forest of Lebanon, is meant.

25. Three times in the year. At the three great annual feasts. See Introduction, p. 49. He doubtless offered at other times, free-will-offerings, but in a more particular manner he honoured the festivals.

28. They went to Ophir. Michaelis maintains that this place was in Arabia-Felix, but others think that the time employed in the voyage renders it probable that it denotes some place in the East-Indies. The editor of Calmet supposes some place up the Indies is meant.

CHAPTER X.

B. C. 992. The queen of Sheba visits Solomon; his amazing wealth and grandeur.

1 And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, and of the name of Jehovah, 2 she came to try him with questions. And she came to Jerusalem with a very great retinue; with camels, bearing spices, and very much gold, and precious stones. And when she was introduced to a king Solomon, she conversed with him concerning all things which were in 3 her mind. And Solomon replied to all her questions: there was nothing hidden from the king, 4 which he told her not. And when the queen of Sheba had seen all Solomon's wisdom; and the 5 house which he had built, And the food of his table, and the station of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, with their apparel, and his cup-bearers, and his burnt-offerings, which he offered in the house of Jehovah: there 6 was no more spirit in her. And she said to the king, "True was the report which I heard in my own land, of thy acts and of thy wisdom. 7 Yet that report I believed not, until I came, and saw with mine eyes: and, behold, the half had not been told to me: thy wisdom and greatness far exceed the report which I heard. Happy thy men! happy these thy servants, who stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom! Blessed be Jehovah, thy God, who was 8 so pleased with thee, as to set thee on the throne of Israel: through Jehovah's everlasting love to Israel, he appointed thee king, to execute 9 judgment and justice." And she gave to the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and a very great store of spices, and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as those which the queen of Sheba gave to king

CHAP. X. 1. * Sept. Syr. Arab.

CHAP. X. 1. Queen of Sheba. Sheba was part of Arabia-Felix, which lay south of Canaan; and therefore she is called the queen of the south. Her country was bounded by the ocean, and therefore she is said to come from the uttermost parts of the earth.—To try him, &c. It was an ancient diversion among princes to propose curious and difficult questions, in order to try each other's sagacity and skill. See Judg. xiv. 12.

5. No more spirit in her. That is, she was lost in astonishment, and

Solomon. And king Solomon gave to the queen 13 of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, besides what Solomon gave to her of his royal bounty. So she returned and went to her own country, she and her servants.

And the ships also of Hiram, which brought 11 gold from Ophir, brought from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees, and precious stones. And the king made of the almug-trees balus- 12 trades for the house of Jehovah, and for his own palace; harps also and psalteries for the singers: such almug-trees have not come, nor been seen to this day.

Now the weight of gold which came to Solo- 14 mon in one year was six hundred and sixty-six talents of gold; Besides what he received from 15 the port-collectors, and from the traffic of the spice-merchants, and from all the kings of Arabia, and from the governors of the land. And 16 king Solomon made of all this, two hundred shields of beaten gold: each shield containing six hundred shekels of gold. And he made 17 three hundred smaller shields of beaten gold; each shield containing three minas of gold: and the king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

Moreover the king made a great throne of 18 ivory, and overlaid it with the best gold. The 19 throne had six steps, and the top of the throne, behind, was round: and there were arm-stays on each side of the place of the seat, and two lions stood beside the arm-stays. And on the 20 six steps, on the one side and on the other, stood twelve lions: the like had not been made in any kingdom. And all the drinking vessels 21 of king Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold; none were of silver: for in the days of Solomon it was accounted of no value.

admiration, as the next verse intimates.

13. This verse is evidently out of its place. It is so connected with the 10th that, with Houbigant, I have transposed it there.

12. Almug-trees. Parkhurst supposes that the lignumvitæ-tree is intended, while others the sandal-tree. It must have been a valuable kind.

15. The port-collectors. Literally, searchers. Gaddes renders, miners, I think, without any probability.

22 For the king had at sea ships of Tarshish, which, with the ships of Hiram, once in three years went to Tarshish, bringing gold, and silver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

23 Thus king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth in riches and in wisdom. And all the kings of the earth sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom, which God had put into his heart.

25 And they brought every man his present, utensils of silver, and utensils of gold, and garments, and armour, and spices, horses, and mules; a

26 rate year by year. So Solomon collected chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he stationed in the chariot-cities, and with himself, at Jerusalem. And the king made silver as plentiful in Jerusalem as stones; and cedars made he abundant as the sycamores which are in the vale.

28 And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt and from Coa: the king's merchants received them from Coa at a stated price. And a chariot was brought up out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty: and so were they brought for all the kings of the Hethites, and for the kings of Syria.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER X. 1. The queen of Sheba came from the east to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and she furnishes an example for what special purpose men should travel. Many, alas! travel only to gratify an idle curiosity, and instead of obtaining any real advantage, return more depraved. The value of true wisdom is such, that we should spare no pains to obtain it. We have the means of obtaining it in our possession. The word of wisdom is nigh us, even in our heart.

2. The reflection of the princess, on the happiness of Solomon's servants, may remind us, how valuable are the opportunities of obtaining knowledge and cultivating piety. "Happy are thy people, happy are these thy servants!" And thus happy are the servants who live in religious families, if they did but know how to value and improve

17. Three minas, or three hundred shekels. Comp. 2 Chron. ix. 16.

22. Ships of Tarshish. So called because employed in trade to that place. Most moderns suppose that Tartessus, in Spain, is meant. Thus Solomon carried on trade with the Tyrians, along the whole Mediterranean sea, as well as along the Red-sea to India.

28. From Coa. So the Sept. and Vulg. render, which seems most natural. Linen yarn has nothing to support it. Dathe adopts the Arabic sense, "The king's merchants had the privilege of buying horses at a stated price." I prefer considering it a proper name.

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 992. Solomon's idolatry, and its consequences; the divine displeasure, the enemies raised up against him, his death and successor.

BUT king Solomon loved many foreign women, besides the daughter of Pharaoh, Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hethites; Of the nations, concerning which Jehovah said 2 to the children of Israel, "Ye shall not go in to them, neither shall they come in unto you: for they will assuredly turn away your heart after their gods:" to these Solomon was affectionately attached. And he had seven hundred wives, 3 princesses, and three hundred concubines; and his wives turned away his heart. For when Solomon was old, his wives turned away his heart after other gods; and his heart was not perfect with Jehovah, his God, like the heart of David, his father. For Solomon went after Ashtarothe goddess of the Zidonians, and after Chemosh, the god of Moab, and after Molech, the detestable idol of the Ammonites. And Solomon did evil in the sight of Jehovah, and went not fully after Jehovah, like David his father. For Solomon built a high-place for Chemosh, 7 the detestable idol of Moab, on the hill which their privileges. Happy are the servants of God, who dwell in his house, eat at his table, behold his glory in his temple, and have so many opportunities of growing wise to salvation. Above all, blessed are those who dwell in his house above, who see his face, and sing his praise.

3. The reflection which the queen of Sheba made on Solomon's advancement, is applicable to Christ. God delighted in him, therefore, made him king of the church, and empowered him to communicate happiness to men. Out of love to mankind, God hath made him king, to save them from ruin; to govern them by his wise and wholesome laws, and make all that are dutiful, loyal, and obedient, completely and eternally happy. This demands our warmest praise. "Thanks be to God for this unspeakable gift."

CHAP. XI. 1. Pharaoh's daughter. She was properly queen, and no blame is attached to him for marrying her. But in marrying so many besides, he violated two precepts, that of forbidding the king to multiply wives, and that of marrying women of the nations of Canaan.

3. Seven hundred wives, &c. Like the kings of the east, he collected this vast number, partly for state. Darius Codomanus was accustomed to take in his camp, no fewer than three hundred, and Le Compte tells us that the emperor of China had a vast number, chosen for their beauty, many of whom the emperor never so much as saw.

is before Jerusalem, and for Molech, the detest-8 able idol of the children of Ammon. And so he did for all his foreign wives, who burnt incense and sacrificed to their own gods.

9 Jehovah was now angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned from Jehovah, the 10 God of Israel, who had appeared to him twice;
And had commanded him concerning this thing,
that he should not go after other gods; but he did not observe that which Jehovah commanded.

11 Wherefore said Jehovah to Solomon: "Inasmuch as thou doest thus, and observest not my covenant and my statutes, which I commanded thee, I will assuredly rend from thee the king-12 dom, and will give it to thy own servant. Notwithstanding, in thy days I will not do it, for David thy father's sake; but I will rend it out of 13 the hand of thy son. Yet I will not rend away the whole kingdom; but will give one tribe to thy son, for David my servant's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, which I have chosen."

14 Jehovah then stirred up an adversary to Solomon, Hadad, the Edomite; who was of the 15 royal seed of Edom; For when David "smote" Edom, and Joab, the captain of the host, had gone up to bury the slain, after he had smitten 16 every male in Edom; (For six months did Joab remain there with all Israel, until he had 17 cut off every male in Edom;) Hadad fled, he and certain Edomites, the servants of his father, with him, and went into Egypt; Hadad being 18 then but a little boy. And they set out from Midian, and went to Paran; and they took men with them from Paran, and they went to Egypt, unto Pharaoh the king of Egypt; who gave to him a house, and appointed for him victuals, 19 and gave to him land. And Hadad found great favour in the sight of Pharaoh, so that he gave him to wife the sister of his own wife, the sister of Tahpenes, the queen. And the sister of 20 Tahpenes bare to him Genubath, his son, whom Tahpenes weaned in Pharaoh's house; and Genubath was in Pharaoh's household among the sons of Pharaoh. And when Hadad heard 21 in Egypt that David slept with his fathers; and that Joab, the captain of the host, was dead, Hadad said to Pharaoh, "Let me depart, that I may go to my own country." Then Pharaoh 22 said to him, "But what hast thou wanted with me, that, behold, thou seekest to go to thine own country?" And he answered, "Nothing;

still I request that thou wouldst let me go."

And God stirred up another adversary to him, 23
"Hezion", the son of Eliadah, who fled from his lord Hadadezer, king of Zobah: And he 24 collected men to him, and became captain over a band, when David slew them of Zobah, and they went to Damascus, and dwelt there, and "they made Hezion king" in Damascus. And 25
he was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon, besides the mischief that Hadad did,
who reigned over "Edom", and infested Israel.

And Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, an Ephra- 26
thite of Zereda, Solomon's servant, whose mother's name was Zeruah, a widow woman, rebelled against the king. And this was the 27 occasion of his rebelling against the king.
Solomon built Millo, and repaired the breaches of the city of David his father. The man Jero- 28 boam was a man of valour; and Solomon seeing that the young man was industrious, made him
ruler over all the imposts of the house of Joseph.
Now it happened at that time when Jeroboam 29
went from Jerusalem, that the prophet Ahijah,

16. Joab. In 1 Chron. xviii. 12. it is Abishai, not Joab, that is said to have slain the Edomites. Perhaps it was after this victory, that Joab went to complete the slaughter.

19. The queen; that is, the principal wife, or sultana.

23—25. The learned reader may consult my Heb. Bible for the text.

28. Imposts of the house of Joseph; that is, of the two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, or perhaps the former only is intended, as being far more numerous than the latter. Jeroboam finding the Ephraimites vexed on account of the imposts, took the opportunity of gaining their confidence by entering into their views, and, perhaps, of fomenting a spirit of discontent.

29. The prophet Ahijah. He was a native of Shiloh, and one of those who wrote the annals of Solomon's reign, (2 Chron. ix. 29.); and he is thought to be the person who spoke to him twice from God; once when he was building the temple, (ch. vi. 12.) and once when he apostatized in this chapter, ver. 11.

a Shilonite, met him in the way; and he had clad himself with a new garment; and they two 30 were alone in the field; And Ahijah caught the new garment that was on him, and rent it
31 in twelve pieces: And he said to Jeroboam, "Take ten pieces for thyself: for thus saith Jehovah the God of Israel, 'Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and 32 will give ten tribes to thee: (But he shall have one tribe for my servant David's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, the city which I have 33 chosen out of all the tribes of Israel:)' Because 'he hath' forsaken me, and worshipped Ash-taroath, the goddess of the Zidonians, Chemosh, the god of the Moabites, and Molech, the god of the children of Ammon, and hath not walked in my ways, by doing what is right in mine eyes, and by keeping my statutes and my judgments, 34 like David his father. Yet I will not take any part of the kingdom out of his hand; but I will maintain him prince all the days of his own life, for the sake of David my servant whom I have chosen, because he kept my commandments and 35 my statutes: But out of his son's hand I will take the kingdom, and will give to thee, ten 36 tribes. And to his son I will give one tribe, that David my servant may have a lamp always before me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen for myself, to put my name there. And 37 thee will I take, and thou shalt reign over all that thy soul desireth; for thou shalt be king over Israel. And it shall be, if thou wilt hear- 38 ken to all that I command thee, and wilt walk in my ways, and do what is right in mine eyes, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as David my servant did, that I will be with thee, and build for thee a sure house, as I have built for David, and I will give Israel to thee; And 39 I will, on this account, afflict the house of David, but not for ever." Solomon therefore sought to 40 kill Jeroboam; but Jeroboam arose and fled into Egypt, to Shishak, king of Egypt, and was in Egypt, until the death of Solomon.

And the rest of the acts of Solomon, and all 41 that he did, and his wisdom, are they not written in the book of the acts of Solomon? And the 42 time that Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel was forty years. And Solomon slept with 43 his fathers, and was buried in the city of David, his father; and Rehoboam, his son, reigned in his stead.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XI. 1. The conduct of Solomon forcibly impresses the Apostle's admonition, "let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." One may say, 'Is this Solomon, the wisest of men? Jedidiah, the beloved of the Lord? The man, who formed such just, such lofty sentiments of Jehovah? who built the temple to his glory, and prayed with such fervour, propriety, and efficacy? How changed now. Given up to voluptuous pleasures, and complying with the inclinations of his foreign wives, in erecting high places and worshipping idols. The fine gold is become dross; and the honour acquired by the wisdom and piety of youth, is obscured by the folly and lust of old age.'

2. We are taught how dangerous to virtue is a state of prosperity. When we possess the power of self-indulgence, we are easily inclined to make use of it. They who fare sumptuously every day, often find their table a snare, and a pampered appetite their ruin. For they who give way to one sin, never know, when or where they shall stop. Indulgence stupifies the conscience, and like the horse-leech, is never satisfied. How necessary then is it to govern our desires and rule our passions, lest they hurry us away into forbidden paths.

3. We see that our guilt is increased, when we break God's laws, in proportion to our privileges and advantages. How distinguished were the privileges of Solomon! He had the example and instructions of his pious father, and had received the most faithful admonitions. David had warned him with his last breath of those vices into which he fell. God had appeared to him twice. Let us remember, that God observes how often he has appeared to and for us; in the bounties of providence, in the checks of conscience, in the workings of the spirit, and in the admonitions of his word. This aggravates our guilt if we forget him, and have our hearts turned away from him.

4. All who sin against God, injure their own peace and happiness. While Solomon was virtuous, there was no adversary or evil occurrence; but when he revolted, various enemies were stirred up. God reserved this scourge for him, and when he revolted, they corrected him. Peace ends when impiety and lasciviousness begin. Sin not only separates between God and the soul, but arms innumerable enemies against us.

33. I have followed the versions noticed, in reading in the singular number; and I think that Solomon, and not the people, is intended.

rael had come to Shechem to make him king.
 2 And when Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who was yet in Egypt, whither he had fled from the presence of king Solomon, had heard of Solomon's death, then Jeroboam returned from
 3 Egypt: And they sent and invited him to the assembly. And Jeroboam and the whole congregation of Israel came, and spoke to Rehoboam, saying, "Thy father made our yoke grievous: now, therefore, make thou the grievous service of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee." And he said to them; "Depart yet for three days, then come again to me." And the people departed.
 6 And king Rehoboam consulted with the old men, who stood before Solomon his father, while he yet lived, and said, "How do ye advise me to answer this people?" And they spoke to him, saying, "If thou wilt be a servant to this people this day, and wilt serve them, and answer them, and speak good words to them, then they will be thy servants for ever." But he neglected the counsel which the old men gave to him, and consulted with the young men who had grown up with him, and attended on him.
 9 And he said to them, "What counsel give ye that we may answer this people, who have spoken to me, saying, 'Make the yoke which thy father put upon us lighter?' And the young men who had grown up with him spoke to him, saying, "Thus shalt thou speak to this people who spoke to thee, saying, 'Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it lighter to us; thus shalt thou say to them, 'My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins. And now, whereas my father loaded you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke; my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions."

So on the third day Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam, as the king had appointed, saying, "Come to me again the third day." And the king answered the people roughly, and neglected the counsel which the old men gave him; And spoke to them after the counsel of the young men, saying, "My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke; my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions." Wherefore the king hearkened not to the people; for Jehovah so overruled this affair, that he might perform his promise, which he had made by Ahijah, the Shilonite, to Jeroboam, the son of Nebat.

So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not to them, the people answered the king, saying, "What portion have we in David? or what inheritance in the son of Jesse: to your own homes, O Israel; now see to thine own house, David." So Israel departed to their own homes. But as for the children of Israel who dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them. Then king Rehoboam sent ^v Adoniram, who was over the tribute; and all Israel stoned him with stones, that he died; while king Rehoboam with difficulty got into his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem. So Israel rebelled against the house of David, and continue a distinct kingdom to this day. For, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam had come again, they sent and invited him to the assembly, and made him king over all Israel: none followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only.

CHAP. XII. 2. Returned from Egypt. The present text has, and dwelled in Egypt: but the parallel place in 2 Chron. x. 2. has returned from Egypt. And so the Vulgate here, which is the right reading.

4. Our yoke grievous. They most probably refer to the tribute which Solomon exacted for his buildings, the maintenance of his court, and of his horses and chariots. See ch. iv. 7.

hoboam made concessions, the consequence might have been as they stated.

11. With scorpions. The scorpion was a cruel engine of punishment. It was, we learn from Ephraim, a long bag of leather filled with sand, and stuck full of spikes.

15. So overruled this affair. I have given the sense in preference to the idiom.

18. Adoniram. This completes the climax of Rehoboam's folly. He had neglected the advice of his father's counsellors, and the Ephraimites had renounced their allegiance on account of their burdens or taxes; and to appease them he sends Adoniram, who was over the tribute; of course,

21 And when Rehoboam had come to Jerusalem, he assembled the whole house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, a hundred and eighty thousand chosen men, who were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring back the kingdom to Rehoboam, the son of Solomon.
22 But the word of God came to Shemaiah, the 23 man of God, saying, "Speak to Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and to the whole house of Judah and Benjamin, and to the remnant of the people of the other tribes, say-24 ing, 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren, the children of Israel: return every man to his house: for this thing is from me.'" They hearkened, therefore, to the word of Jehovah; and according to the word of Jehovah, they returned home.

CHAPTER XIII.

B. C. 975. Jeroboam's policy; prophecy against him; the old prophet seduced, and slain by a lion.

25 JEROBOAM then built Shechem, in mount Ephraim, and dwelt there; and he went out
26 thence, and built Peniel. And Jeroboam said

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. We here see that wise men sometimes leave behind them foolish children. Rehoboam was born in the first year of Solomon's reign; so that he was now forty years old. He had such advantages for improvement in divine and human literature, and in all wisdom, as no other prince ever had; yet he acted a foolish and mad part. Perhaps Solomon feared that he would thus act, and that he might be influenced to hate all his labour under the sun, seeing he knew not to what purpose it might be used. Eccle. ii. 18, 19.

2. The readiest way for young men to be ruined, is to follow the advice of their gay companions, and reject the counsel of the more wise and experienced. The former encourage them in their folly; teach them to be proud and self-willed; to abhor and cast off the most equitable restraints. The latter exhort them to be thoughtful, serious and sober-minded. It is of the greatest importance whose counsel young men hearken to. "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise, but a companion of fools shall be destroyed."

the most obnoxious man he could send.

21. A hundred and eighty thousand. From the following history, it appears that the two tribes which adhered to the house of David, were equal to the other ten.

26. Now the kingdom, &c. Had he feared God and trusted in him, there would have been no need of this policy. The Lord would have fulfilled his own word.

28. Two golden calves. Doubtless, these, like that of Aaron's, at in his heart, "Now will the kingdom return to the house of David: If this people go up to 27 offer sacrifice in the house of Jehovah at Jerusalem; then will the heart of this people turn again to their own lord, to Rehoboam, king of Judah, and they will kill me, and go again to Rehoboam, king of Judah." So the king took 28 counsel; and made two golden calves, and said to the men of Israel, "It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: behold thy gods, O Israel, who brought thee up out of the land of Egypt." And he set the one at Bethel, and 29 the other he placed at Dan. And this thing be- 30 came the occasion of sin: for the people went to worship either before the one at Bethel, or the other at Dan. And he made sacred houses 31 on high-places; and made priests of any of the people, who were not of the sons of Levi. And 32 Jeroboam ordained a feast in the eighth month, on the fifteenth day of the month, like to the feast which is kept in Judah: and he offered upon the altar which he had erected in Bethel, sacrificing to the calves which he had made: and he placed in Bethel the priests of the high-places which he had made. Thus he offered on 33

3. Proud, imperious, violent language, alienates men's affections. The old men had learned of their master Solomon, that "a soft answer turneth away wrath;" and it had been well for Rehoboam, had he taken their advice. But he was headstrong and imperious, and so lost the affections of his people, and the greatest part of his kingdom. Let us learn from this, to open our mouth with gentleness and kindness. Let husbands never be bitter against their wives, nor fathers against their children, nor masters against their servants. Gentleness will do what insolence and violence will never attain.

4. Whatever schemes and projects there are in the hearts of men, God is by them fulfilling his own work. Rehoboam intended to show his spirit and authority; Jeroboam intended to gain a kingdom, and the Israelites to get free of their taxes; but God was bringing about his own purposes. So will he overrule the schemes of the politicians of every age, and all the ferments of the people, to promote, one way or other, his own cause. "There are many devices in the heart of man; but the counsel of the Lord, shall stand,"

Horeb, were designed to be representations of the God of Israel; which was a violation of the first command. They sometimes worshipped the gods of the surrounding nations, together with the God of Israel; but this was worshipping him through an idolatrous medium.

29. At Bethel . . . and at Dan. Bethel had long before been a place of worship,—And the Danites had erected for their own tribe a molten image at Dan. Comp. 1 Sam. x. 3. and Judg. xviii. 29.

32. On the fifteenth day, &c. This was a full month later than the day

the altar which he had erected in Bethel on the fifteenth day of the eighth month which his own heart had devised; and ordained a feast to the children of Israel: and he offered upon the altar, and burnt incense.

- 1 But, behold, a man of God came from Judah, by the command of Jehovah, to Bethel; and Jeroboam stood by the altar to burn incense.
- 2 And he cried against the altar, by the command of Jehovah, and said, "O altar, altar, thus saith Jehovah; 'Behold, a child shall be born to the house of David, Josiah by name; and upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high-places who burn incense upon thee, and upon thee shall be burnt human bones.'" And he gave a sign the same day, saying, "This is the sign of what Jehovah hath spoken, 'Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes, which are
- 4 upon it, shall be poured out.'" And when king Jeroboam heard what the man of God said, who cried against the altar in Bethel, he put forth his hand from the altar, saying, "Lay hold on him;" but his hand, which he had put forth against him, became stiff, so that he could not
- 5 pull it in again to him. The altar also was rent, and the ashes poured out from the altar, according to the sign which the man of God had
- 6 given by the command of Jehovah. And the king spoke and said to the man of God, "Entreat, I pray thee, Jehovah, thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may be restored to me." And the man of God besought Jehovah, and the king's hand was restored to him, and be-
- 7 came as it was before. And the king said to the man of God, "Come home with me, and refresh
- 8 thyself, and I will give thee a reward." But the man of God said to the king, "If thou wouldst give to me half thy house, I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place: For so was I charged⁹ by the command of Jehovah, saying, 'Eat no bread, nor drink any water, nor return by the same way which thou shalt go.'" So he went 10 another way, and returned not by the way in which he had come to Bethel.

Now there dwelt an old prophet in Bethel; 11 and his sons came and told him all the works which the man of God had done that day in Bethel: the words which he had spoken to the king, them they told also to their father. And 12 their father said to them, "What way went he?" (For his sons had seen what way the man of God went, who had come from Judah.) Again 13 he said to his sons, "Saddle me the ass." So they saddled him the ass: and he rode thereon, And went after the man of God, and found him 14 sitting under a turpentine-tree: and he said to him, "Art thou the man of God who camest from Judah?" And he said, "I am." Then he 15 said to him, "Come home with me, and eat bread." And he said, "I cannot return with 16 thee, nor go in with thee: neither will I eat bread, nor drink water with thee in this place: For by the command of Jehovah, it was said to 17 me, 'Thou shalt neither eat bread, nor drink water, there; nor shalt thou return by the way in which thou shalt go.'" He said to him, "I also 18 am a prophet as thou art; and an angel spoke to me by the command of Jehovah, saying, 'Bring him back with thee into thy house, that he may eat bread and drink water.'" "Thus" he deceived him; So that he went back with 19 him, and ate bread in his house, and drank water.

appointed by the law of Moses.

CHAP. XIII. 2. Josiah by name. This is a remarkable prediction, which we find came to pass about 360 years after. See 2 King. xxiii. 15, 16.

3-6. These signs are so remarkable, that one would naturally suppose they would have made a deep impression on the mind of the king and of the people, and have led them to repentance; but they produced no effect.

11. An old prophet. The account of this prophet is encumbered with difficulties. The sons appear to have attended the worship of the calves, and I cannot but think that though he might have been favoured with some divine communications, yet, like Balaam, he was a wicked man. I suspect that having learned the reply of the man of God to Jeroboam, he formed the purpose of pursuing him, and inviting him back, with the design of bringing some calamity upon him, for the prediction which he had uttered. If this be just, he was one who supported Jeroboam's interest. Nor does his wish to be buried in the same grave with the man of God militate against this view of his character. It is only like that of his prototype Balaam, "Let me die the death of the righteous." Josephus asserts that he was a false prophet.

18. Thus he deceived him. He might wish to ensnare him and lessen the impression his prediction had made; and, perhaps, the man of God

20 But, while they sat at table, the word of Jehovah came to the prophet who had brought 21 him back: And he cried to the man of God who came from Judah, saying, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Forasmuch as thou hast disobeyed the command of Jehovah, and hast not kept the precept with which Jehovah, thy God, charged 22 thee, But camest back, and hast eaten bread and drunk water in the place, of which he said to thee, 'Neither eat bread, nor drink water;'
thy carcass shall not come to the sepulchre of thy fathers."

23 And after he had eaten bread, and drunk
'water', he saddled for him an ass, for the 24 prophet whom he had brought back. But when he was gone, a lion met him by the way, and slew him: and his carcass was cast down on the way, and the ass stood by it, the lion, also, stood 25 by the carcass. And, behold, some men passed by, and saw the carcass cast down on the way, and the lion standing by the carcass: and they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt. And when the prophet who had brought him back from the way, heard, he said,
"It is the man of God, who disobeyed the command of Jehovah: Jehovah hath, therefore, delivered him to the lion, who hath torn him, and slain him, according to the word of Jehovah, which he spoke to him." And he spoke to his 27 sons, saying, "Saddle me the ass." And they saddled him. And he went and found his car- 28 cass cast down in the way, and the ass and the lion standing by the carcass: the lion had not eaten the carcass, nor torn the ass. And the 29 prophet took up the carcass of the man of God,

and laid it upon the ass, and brought it back:
and the old prophet came to the city, to mourn and to bury him. And he laid his carcass in his 30 own sepulchre; and mourned over him, saying,
"Alas, my brother!" And after he had buried 31 him he spoke to his sons saying, "When I am dead, then bury me in the sepulchre in which the man of God is buried; lay my bones beside his bones: For the denunciation, which, by the 32 command of Jehovah, he proclaimed against the altar of Bethel, and against all the houses of the high-places, which are in the cities of Samaria, shall assuredly come to pass."

After this denunciation, Jeroboam returned 33 not from his evil way, but again made of any of the people priests of the high-places: whosoever would, he consecrated him, and he became one of the priests of the high-places. And this thing 34 occasioned such sin in the house of Jeroboam, as to cause it to be cut off, and destroyed from the face of the earth.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. We may here learn, how human policy corrupts religion. Whosoever adds to, or takes from, God's institutions, is guilty of high-treason against him. Such conduct is an arraignment of the wisdom, holiness, and authority of God. Let all those who, like Jeroboam, dare to interfere with divine institutions, be assured, that their work is folly, and will bring on themselves the judgments deserved. Respecting such human appointments in religion. God says, 'Who hath required this at your hands?'

2. We see here both the wonderful knowledge and power of God displayed. His knowledge in making known so long before hand the existence of a king of Judah, whose name should be Josiah. Nothing seems more contingent or uncertain than children's names; but known to God are all things. He sees the end from the beginning.
His power appeared in rending the altar, scattering the ashes, and making stiff the hand of Jeroboam. This may teach us, how easy it is for God to restrain the hand of persecution; and should inspire us with zeal and perseverance in his service.

3. Good men are in great danger of being seduced by pretenders to sanctity and divine revelation. There are some instances of this in the present day; therefore, "believe not every spirit, but try the spirits. Beware of false prophets." His fault was credulity, in giving credit to a message which was contrary to what God had declared, without sufficient evidence, that it came from him. Let us learn not to regard what men say in religious matters, without evidence; especially, when they make extraordinary pretences to divine illuminations and inspirations. There is great reason to suspect such. "The simple believe, and are punished;" but wise men are cautious. "Be not children tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine, and cunning craftiness of men, who lie in wait to deceive."

4. Let us learn not to judge of men by afflictions or prosperity.
One would have thought this wicked prophet would have been destroyed before the other. But he escaped the lion; he was to die a natural death, while the other was slain. "God's judgments are a great deep." We do not know good or evil, nor men's real characters; it is therefore folly and presumption for us to judge of them by their external circumstances. "Judge nothing before the time."

might think that the divine prohibition had respect only to idolaters.

CHAPTER XIV.

B. C. 956. Jeroboam sendeth his wife disguised to Abijah, the prophet, to consult him respecting his son Abijah, who was sick. He denounceth God's judgments.

1 AT that time Abijah, the son of Jeroboam, fell
2 sick. And Jeroboam said to his wife, "Arise, I pray thee, and disguise thyself, that thou be not known to be the wife of Jeroboam; and go to Shiloh: behold, there is Ahijah, the prophet, who told me that I should be king over this 3 people. And take with thee ten loaves of bread, and cakes, and a pot of honey, and go to him that he may tell thee what shall become of the 4 child." And Jeroboam's wife did so: for she arose, and went to Shiloh, and came to the house of Ahijah. Now Ahijah could not see; for his eyes were set through age.
5 And Jehovah said to Ahijah, "Behold, the wife of Jeroboam cometh to ask a thing of thee for her son; for he is sick: thus and thus shalt thou say to her: for it will be, when she cometh 6 in, that she will feign herself another." Now when Ahijah heard the sound of her feet, as she came in at the door, he said, "Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam; why feignest thou thyself
another? for I am sent to thee with heavy ti-7 dings. Go, tell Jeroboam; Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'Forasmuch as I exalted thee
from among the people, and made thee prince 8 over my people Israel, And rent the kingdom away from the house of David, and gave it to thee: and yet thou hast not been like my servant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, by doing 9 only what was right in mine eyes; But hast done evil above all that were before thee: for thou hast gone and made for thyself other gods,
and molten images, to provoke me to anger;

and me thou hast cast behind thy back: There- 10
fore, behold, I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam, every male, howsoever shut up and secure in Israel: the remnant of the house of Jeroboam I will clear away, as a man cleareth away dung, till it be all gone. Him that dieth, of Jero- 11
boam's posterity, in the city, shall the dogs eat;
and him that dieth in the field, shall the fowls of the air eat:' for Jehovah hath spoken it. Arise 12 thou, therefore, and go to thine own house: and when thy feet enter into the city, the child shall die. And all Israel shall mourn for him and bury 13 him: for he only of Jeroboam's posterity, shall find a grave; because in him there is found some good thing towards Jehovah, the God of Israel, in the house of Jeroboam. Moreover, Jehovah 14 will raise up to himself a king over Israel, who will, one day, and that soon, cut off the house of Jeroboam. For Jehovah will smite Israel, as 15 a reed is shaken in the water, and he will root up Israel, out of this good land, which he gave to their fathers, and scatter them beyond the river, because they have made their idol-groves, provoking Jehovah to anger. And he will 16
give up Israel because of the sins of Jeroboam, who hath both sinned, and caused Israel to sin."

And Jeroboam's wife arose, and departed, and 17 came to Tirzah; and when she came to the threshold of the door, the child died; And 18
they buried him: and all Israel mourned for him
according to the word of Jehovah, which he spoke by his servant Ahijah, the prophet. And 19
the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, how he warred and how he reigned, behold, they are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. And 20
the days which Jeroboam reigned were two and

ed, have been thought to support his claim to a true prophet. This may be admitted, but it will not follow that he was a good man. God constrained him to denounce his judgment on his servant for hearkening to his lies, but I cannot think that he uttered it willingly, unless he was lost to all sense of sin and shame. Let his character be what it might, he perceived that the prediction of the man of Judah was from God, and would be accomplished.

CHAP. XIV. 3. Ten loaves, &c. These were designed as a present to the prophet, conformably to the custom of the east. Jeroboam sent his wife on this errand, that it might not be known to his subjects. For if it had been known that he had no confidence in his own gods, nor in his own priests and prophets, the eyes of the people must have been opened, and this might have led them to reject him and return to the house of David.

10. Howsoever shut up, &c. I have followed Houbigant, Dathe, and others, in this version. See note Heb. Bible. I am not however certain, whether the preceding words should not be rendered, every dog, as I Sam. xxv. 22. Yet the words, shut up and secure seem rather to apply to men; and on this account I have been induced to adopt the version given.

14. Will one day, &c. I have, with most moderns, given what appears to be the sense rather than the idiom. The old versions read as we do, and have guessed at the sense as well as they could.

twenty years: and he slept with his fathers, and Nadab, his son reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XV.

B. C. 958. History of the reigns of Rehoboam, Abijah and Asa, kings of Judah.

21 AND Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, reigned in Judah. Rehoboam was "sixteen" years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which Jehovah chose out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah, an Ammonitess. And Judah did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, and they provoked him to jealousy with their sins which they committed, above all that their fathers had done. For they also constructed for themselves high-places, and statues, and groves, on every high hill, and under every green tree. And there were also sodomites in the land; and they did according to all the abominations of the nations whom Jehovah cast out before the children of Israel. 25 And in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, Shishak, king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem:

21. * So Sept. Appendix, Chap. xii. the rest forty one.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. In the conduct of Jeroboam, we see both folly and ingratitude. If he believed and knew that Jehovah was the only God, and his prophets the only true prophets, why set up the golden calves, and appoint prophets and priests of his own? He had been raised from a low condition, and placed on the throne of Israel, yet he impiously contrived to prevent Israel from going to worship Jehovah. He acknowledged Ahijah to be a prophet, but hoped to deceive him. What strange inconsistencies! Indeed sin first blinds, and then destroys.

2. How vain is all dissimulation when God is concerned. What folly in Jeroboam to send his wife in disguise, as if the prophet that could know the event of the child's distemper, could not know whose wife she was. Thus do sinners impose on themselves. They say, "How doth God know?" and think to hide themselves from him; but they will be discovered and disappointed. He sees them in their true colours, and judges them by what they are, and not by what they seem to be; he will say to such, "Go out, thou false hypocrite, why feignest thou thyself to be another?" Heavy tidings are sent to them, for their mask will

21. His mother's name, &c. It is singular that Solomon had only one son, though he had so many wives; and it must have been mortifying that this son was weak and foolish.

25. Shishak king, &c. Hitherto, the kings of Egypt were called Pharaoh, but it seems that this name was now sinking into disuse. It is probable, that Jeroboam had excited the king of Egypt to invade Judah, to pre-

And he took away the treasures of the house 26 of Jehovah, and the treasures of the king's house; he even took away all: and he took away all the golden shields which Solomon had made. And king Rehoboam made in their 27 stead brazen shields, and committed them to the hands of the chief of the guard, who kept the door of the king's house. And, when the 28 king went into the house of Jehovah, the guard bore them, and brought them back into the guard chamber.

Now the rest of the acts of Rehoboam, and 29 all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. And there was war be- 30 tween Rehoboam and Jeroboam all their days. And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was 31 buried with his fathers in the city of David. * And Abijah, his son, reigned in his stead.

Now in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam, 1 the son of Nebat, Abijah became king over Judah. Three years reigned he in Jerusalem. 2 And his mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Absalom. And he walked in all 3 the sins of his father, which he had done before be pulled off, and their secret wickedness exposed to all the world! These shall have their portion among unbelievers.

3. God remembers all the favours he hath bestowed upon us, tho' we may forget them. He reminds Jeroboam of this; all are registered in the book of his remembrance. Let us not forget his benefits, but improve them; for he will call them over another day to our shame, if we do forget them; and also to show the justice of our sentence, and increase the misery of our final and everlasting state.

5. It is peculiarly honourable in itself, and pleasing to God, to be good in a wicked family and age, as Abijah was. This is a lesson to all young persons, "there was some good thing in him;" amidst the temptations of a wicked court he kept his integrity. God takes notice of every good thing, every good intention, or hopeful beginning. Let this be a motive to all young people, amidst the abounding wickedness of the rising generation, to fear God, and keep themselves uncorrupted. It will be greatly to their honour; and while they do thus, they will have a peculiar blessing from God, and favour with men.

him: and his heart was not perfect with Jehovah his God, like the heart of David his grandfather. Nevertheless, for David's sake, Jehovah his God gave him a lamp in Jerusalem, to set up his son after him, and to establish Jerusalem: Because David did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, and turned not aside from whatever he commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the affair of Uriah the Hethite. And there was war between Abijah, the son of Rehoboam, and Jeroboam, all the days of his life. Now the rest of the acts of Abijah, and all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. And Abijah slept with his fathers; and they buried him in the city of David; and Asa his son reigned in his stead.

And in the twentieth year of Jeroboam, king of Israel, Asa became king over Judah. And forty one years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Anah, the daughter of Absalom. And Asa did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, like David his father. And he took away the sodomites out of the land, and removed all the idols which his father had made. And also Maachah, his grand-mother, he removed from being queen, because she had made a horrible idol in a grove; and her idol Asa destroyed, and burnt by the brook Kidron. But the high-places were not wholly removed; yet Asa's heart was perfect with Jehovah all his days. And he brought into the house of Jehovah, the things which his father had dedicated, and the things which himself had dedicated, silver and gold.

And there was war between Asa and Baasha, king of Israel, all their days. For Baasha, king of Israel, went up against Judah, and fortified Ramah, that he might prevent any from going over to Asa, king of Judah. Then Asa took all the silver and the gold which remained of the treasures of the house of Jehovah, and of the treasures of the king's house, and delivered them into the hand of his servants: and king Asa sent them to Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimon, the son of Hezion, king of Syria, who dwelt at Damascus, saying, "Let there be a league between me and thee, as there was between my father and thy father; behold, I have sent to thee a present of silver and gold; come and break thy league with Baasha, king of Israel, that he may depart from me." So Ben-hadad hearkened to king Asa, and sent the chiefs of his hosts against the cities of Israel, and smote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-beth-maachah, and all Cinneroth, with the whole land of Naphtali. And when Baasha heard of it, he left off fortifying Ramah, and dwelt at Tirzah. Then king Asa assembled by proclamation all Judah; none was exempted: and they took away the stones of Ramah, and its timber, with which Baasha had fortified it; and with them king Asa fortified Geba of Benjamin, and Mizpah. The rest of all the acts of Asa, and all his might, and all that he did, and all the cities which he built, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. In the time of his old age he was diseased in his feet. And Asa slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David; and Jehoshaphat, his son, reigned in his stead.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. Solomon's sin was but too faithfully copied by his son and grand-son, and the people of Judah. High places were constructed, and idols of every kind worshipped. They followed the example of the Canaanites, and soon experienced the displeasure of Jehovah. The division of the kingdom weakened it; and perpetual wars rendered them insecure. Jehovah also suffered Shishak to invade, and punish the sinful

CHAPTER XVI.

B. C. 954. History of the reigns of Nadab, Baasha, Elah, Zimri, and Omri, kings of Israel.

25 NADAB, the son of Jeroboam, began to reign over Israel, in the second year of Asa, king of 26 Judah, and reigned over Israel two years. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, and walked in the way of his father, and in his sin by which 27 he caused Israel to sin. And Baasha, the son of Ahijah, of the house of Issachar, conspired against him; and Baasha smote him at Gibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines; for Nadab and all Israel laid siege to Gibbethon.
28 Even in the third year of Asa, king of Judah,
did Baasha slay him, and reigned in his stead.
29 And when he had become king, he smote the whole house of Jeroboam; he left not to Jeroboam undestroyed, any that breathed; according to the word of Jehovah, which he had spoken by his servant Ahijah, the Shilonite: 30 Because of the sins of Jeroboam which he committed, and which he caused Israel to commit; provoking the anger of Jehovah, the 31 God of Israel. Now the rest of the acts of Nadab, and all that he did, are written in the 32 chronicles of the kings of Israel. And there was war between Asa and Baasha, king of Israel, all their days.
33 In the third year of Asa, king of Judah, began Baasha, the son of Ahijah, to reign over Israel, in Tirzah; and he reigned twenty-four 34 years. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, and walked in the ways of Jeroboam, and in 1 his sin by which he caused Israel to sin. The word of Jehovah, therefore, came to Jehu, the 2 son of Hanani, against Baasha, saying, "For-

be encouraged to hope for his mercy towards their offspring; and pious governors, indulge the expectation, that they may be the cause of preserving and warding off calamities from their country. Such characters are not only blessed, but are blessings to others.

asmuch as I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel; and thou hast walked in the ways of Jeroboam, and hast made my people Israel to sin, and by their sins to provoke me to anger; Behold, I will take 3 away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house; and will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat. Him that 4 dieth of the posterity of Baasha in the city, shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth of his posterity in the fields, shall the fowls of the air eat." Thus the word of Jehovah came, by the pro- 7 phet Jehu, the son of Hanani, against Baasha, and against his house, for all the evil that he did in the eyes of Jehovah, in provoking him to anger with the works of his hands, in being like the house of Jeroboam; and on this account God slew him. Now the rest of the acts of 5 Baasha, and what he did, and his might, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. And Baasha slept with his fathers, and was 6 buried in Tirzah; and Elah, his son, reigned in his stead.

In the twenty-sixth year of Asa, king of Judah, 8 began Elah, the son of Baasha, to reign over Israel in Tirzah; and he reigned two years. And his servant Zimri, chief captain of half his 9 chariots, conspired against him; and, while he was getting drunk, in Tirzah, in the house of Arza, steward of his house in Tirzah, Zimri 10 went in and smote him, and killed him, (in the twenty-seventh year of Asa, king of Judah,) and reigned in his stead. And as soon as he 11 began to reign, and was seated on his throne, he slew the whole house of Baasha: he left not a single male, either kindred or friend. Thus 12 did Zimri to the house of Baasha, according to growing depravity of the people; and banished the Sodomites, and removed the idols out of the land. He spared not the idol of his own grand-mother; being well aware, that if he began not the reform at home, little would be done among the people. Let us learn from him, the necessity of personal religion, and of showing piety at home, in order to promote it abroad. The best instructions will have little effect, without a suitable conduct.

CHAP. XVI. 7. This verse seems redundant. Houbigant transposes it after the 4th. If it be retained, this is, doubtless, a better arrangement. For it cannot be thought that the writer, after having finished the transac-

the word of Jehovah, which he had spoken

 14 idols. Now the rest of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

15 In the twenty-seventh year of Asa, king of Judah, Zimri reigned at Tirzah, seven days. And the people were encamped against Gibbethon, which then belonged to the Philistines.

16 And when the people who were encamped heard it said, "Zimri hath conspired, and hath also slain the king:" all Israel then made Omri, the chief captain of the host, king over Israel, that

18 And when Zimri saw that the city would be taken, he went into a retired part of the palace, and burnt the palace, over himself, and died; For his sins which he committed, by doing evil in the eyes of Jehovah, by walking in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin

20 which he did, in causing Israel to sin. Now the rest of the acts of Zimri, and the conspiracy which he made, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

21 The people of Israel were now divided into two parties; the one half of the people followed Tibni, the son of Ginath, to make him king;

22 and the other half followed Omri. But the people who followed Omri prevailed against the people who followed Tibni, the son of Ginath; so when Tibni was killed, Omri reigned. In the thirty-first year of Asa, king of Judah, 23 began Omri to reign over Israel; and he reigned twelve years. Six years he reigned in Tirzah; When he bought the hill Samaria of Samar, for 24 two talents of silver; and built a city on the hill, and called the name of the city, which he had built, after the name of Samar, owner of the hill, Samaria. But Omri did evil in the eyes of 25 Jehovah, and was more wicked than any that were before him. For he wholly walked in the 26 way of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, and in his sin, by which he caused Israel to sin, so as to provoke Jehovah, the God of Israel, to anger with their idols. Now the rest of the acts of 27 Omri which he did, and his might, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. And 28 Omri slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria; and Ahab his son reigned in his stead.

B. C. 918. The reign of Ahab, against whom Elijah prophesieth; the miracles wrought by him.

And in the thirty-eighth year of Asa, king of Judah, began Ahab, the son of Omri, to reign in Israel; and Ahab the son of Omri, reigned over Israel in Samaria, twenty-two years. And 30 Ahab the son of Omri, did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, above all that were before him. And 31 as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, he

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. We infer, that those who resemble others in their sins, may expect to resemble them in their punishments. Jeroboam and Baasha's families were like each other in their sins and in their ruin. How solicitous should we be to avoid those sins, which have brought poverty, shame, and ruin upon other families, lest we should suffer like them. Let us take that general advice with regard to all wicked men, "Come out from among them; partake not of their sins, lest ye partake of their plagues."

destruction of Baasha's family and Jeroboam's; the son of each reigned but about two years; they were both slain; there was no successor to either family; and both were slain while the same city was besieged.

18. A retired part, &c. I have given the sense here. Zimri wished to lay that palace in ruins, which he saw he must not occupy.

22. When Tibni was killed. I think that the context proves that Tibni

2. There is an awful warning to drunkards, in Elah and Zimri. How easily may such become a prey to death, or injury, when they have no reason or power to help themselves. To how many dangerous accidents are such exposed! To sudden death, and everlasting destruction, to which death transmits them. "Take heed to yourselves, therefore, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and that day, the awful day of judgment, come upon you unawares, for it may come soon, as a thief in the night."

did not die a natural death, as our common version supposes. In the circumstances in which the people were, a rival to the throne would not be suffered to die in peace.

24. Samaria, from Samar. In the Hebrew, according to the Masoretical punctuation, there is Shomron, from Shemer. But as the town is always called Samaria in the New Testament, and in our public version of took to wife, Jezebel, the daughter of Ethbaal, king of the Zidonians; and went and served Baal, and worshipped him: For he reared up an altar to Baal, in the temple of Baal, which he had built in Samaria: Ahab also made a grove. Thus Ahab did more to provoke Jehovah, the God of Israel, to anger than all the kings of Israel that were before him. In his days Hiel, the Bethelite, rebuilt Jericho: he laid its foundation in the death of Abiram his first-born, and in the death of his youngest son Segub, he set up its gates, according to the word of Jehovah, which he had spoken by Joshua, the son of Nun.

1. AND the prophet Elijah, the Tishbite, from Tishbi of Gilead, said to Ahab, "As Jehovah, the God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be these years, either dew or rain, but according to my word." And the word of Jehovah came to him, saying, "Go hence, and turn eastward; and hide thyself by the brook Cherith, which is before the Jordan. And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and I have commanded the ravens to support thee there." So he went and did according to the word of Jehovah: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, which is before the Jordan. And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank water of the brook. And it came to pass after a while, that the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land.

And the word of Jehovah came to him, saying, "Arise, go to Zarephath, which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold, I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee." So he arose and went to Zarephath. And when he came to the gate of the city, behold, there was a widow woman gathering sticks: and he called to her, and said, "Bring me, I pray thee, a little water in a vessel, that I may drink." And as she was going to bring it, he called to her and said, "Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thy hand." And she said, "As Jehovah thy God liveth, I have nothing baked, but only a handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse: and, behold, I am gathering sticks, that I may go in and prepare it, for myself and my son, that we may eat it, and die." And Elijah said to her, "Fear not; go and do as thou hast said: but make me of it a little cake first, and bring it to me, and afterwards make for thyself and thy son. For thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'The barrel of meal shall not waste, nor shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that Jehovah sendeth rain upon the earth.'" And she went and did according to the word of Elijah; and she, and he, and her household, ate of it many days. And the barrel of meal wasted not, nor did the cruse of oil fail, according to the Old, I retain that name; and call its owner Samar; the better to show the derivation.

31. Jezebel. She was an heathen princess, and to marry her was contrary to the divine command. She was an infamous woman; we read of her witchcraft and whoredoms, idolatries and persecutions of God's prophets in Rev. ii. 20. Persons who seduced others to uncleanness and idolatry, were called by her name.

34. Rebuilt Jericho. This is probably added, as a proof of the hardened state to which the inhabitants of Bethel had been brought, by their worship of Jeroboam's calf. Hiel would rebuild Jericho, in defiance of the execration of Joshua; he found, by experience, that what the good man had said, was the word of God.

CHAP. XVII. 1. From Tishbi. With the Sept. I consider the word as a proper name, for the common rendering affords no pertinent sense.

2. The brook Cherith. This seems to have been one of those rapid torrents which run down from the mountains, and form deep ravines in their way. These hollows are sometimes so deep, and their sides so steep and high, that eagles and other birds of prey build their eyries in them. Such are frequently to be seen in the northern parts of this island.

4. The ravens. So all the ancient versions render; except, perhaps, the Arabic. Some moderns, however, think the rendering wrong; and make the word in the original a proper name; denoting either the Arabians, or the inhabitants of Horbo, or Orbo, at some small distance from Scythopolis, according to Jerom.—I see no cogent reason to depart from the common rendering; so much the less, as it is certain that ravens are wont to nestle in such ravines as are above mentioned. The other rendering has, nevertheless, its probability: and the reader may choose for himself.

9. There to support thee. He was not sent to any of the rich or great men in Zidon, but to a poor widow, who was probably a proselyte to the Jewish religion. Jezebel came from this place, and brought the worship of Baal from hence. It must have been a mortification to her when she knew that the prophet was maintained there.

14. Thus saith Jehovah. This he said to try her faith and obedience. She might have possibly pleaded, that she must sustain herself and her son first; that she had none to spare; that charity begins at home; that if he was a prophet he must work a miracle, and so provide for himself. But her faith silences all these objections, and therefore was almost as miraculous as the supply itself.

the word of Jehovah, which he had spoken by the prophet Elijah.

- 17 Now after these things, it came to pass, that the son of the woman, the mistress of the house, fell sick; and his sickness was so grievous, that 18 there was no breath left in him. And she said to Elijah, "What had I to do with thee, O thou man of God? Hast thou come to me, to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?"
19 And he said to her, "Give to me thy son." And he took him out of her bosom, and carried him up into an upper room, where he abode, and 20 laid him upon his own bed. And he cried to Jehovah, and said, "O Jehovah my God, hast thou also brought evil upon the widow with 21 whom I sejourne, by slaying her son?" He then stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried to Jehovah, and said, "O Jehovah, my God, I pray thee let this child's soul return 22 to him." And Jehovah heard the prayer of Elijah; and the soul of the child returned into him.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. We have here an instance of the great efficacy of fervent prayer. (James v. 17.) Elijah was a man subject to like passions as we are; and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. The fervent prayer of this righteous man availed much, not only stopped the windows of heaven, but raised the widow's son to life. But the general truth it suggests, is, that God is near to the souls that seek him, and his ear is ever open to their cry."

2. We should learn to be liberal even of a little. If God has given us but little, let us be ready to do good to others; let them share with us. Water was at that time a scarce commodity; yet the poor widow, in her great necessity, was ready to relieve a stranger. Those who are in low circumstances have no excuse for being uncharitable. Let every one give of his little. Even "a cup of cold water shall not lose its reward."

3. Let us think of the joy with which saints shall be restored at the general resurrection, when all eyes shall be fixed on Christ, by whom the great work shall be accomplished. With what rap-

17. Wasted not. It was according to her faith; it lasted them for two years; what was taken out was immediately supplied by the divine power. With how much wonder and thankfulness would she look on her barrel and cruse every day, and acknowledge that the finger of God was there.

18. My sin to remembrance, &c. She takes it for granted that Elijah, by his prophetic spirit, had discovered some of the sins of her former life, and thought it hard to have no better return for his entertainment, than to be punished so awfully, in so tender a part. God is said to remember sin, when he punishes it; and not to remember, or forget, when he forgives.

24. Now by this I know, &c. This miracle was not only intended to establish Elijah's character, but, most probably, to be a remarkable proof of the resurrection, and the existence of the soul in a separate state;

And Elijah took the child, and brought him down from the upper room, into the house, and delivered him to his mother: and Elijah said, "See, thy son liveth." And the woman said to 24 Elijah, "Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of Jehovah is truly in thy mouth."

CHAPTER XVIII.

B. C. 906. Elijah sent to Ahab, meeteth Obadiah; his proposal to Ahab; he slayeth the prophets of Baal, and obtaineth rain.

Now after many days, in the third year, the word of Jehovah came to Elijah, saying, "Go, show thyself to Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth." And Elijah went to show himself 2 to Ahab. And famine prevailed in Samaria. And Ahab called Obadiah, who was the steward 3 of his house. (Now Obadiah greatly feared Jehovah: So that when Jezebel cut off the pro- 4 phets of Jehovah, Obadiah took a hundred prophets, and hid them by fifty in a cave, and ture did the widow receive her son! With what respect and joy did she look upon Elijah! So saints, especially relations and acquaintances, shall meet one another above, and be joined in their complete persons at the resurrection; they shall adore the power and grace that produced the change, shall see all the words of the Lord accomplished, and Jesus appearing as the faithful and true witness.

4. When God's own people are rebellious and disobedient, he confers their privileges upon strangers. Our Lord's own reflection is illustrated by this story, Luke iv. 25. "But I tell you of a truth many widows were in Israel, in the days of Elijah, when the heavens were shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land. But unto none of them was Elijah sent, save unto Zarephath, a city of Zidon, unto a woman that was a widow." God punishes people for their obstinacy and unbelief, by taking away their privileges, and transferring them to strangers, if they do not value and improve them. May we consider such awful dispensations, lest the gospel be taken from us, and sent to a nation that will make a better use of it.

thereby to encourage the righteous, and revive religion when it was at so low an ebb.

CHAP. XVIII. 1. In the third year. Reckoning from his flight. The draught continued, according to James, v. 17. and our Lord, Luke, iv. 25. three years and a half; so that six months elapsed before that Elijah went to the brook Cherith.

4. A hundred prophets. Most likely these were Levites devoted to the study of the law, some of whom might occasionally be inspired, from which the whole body would be denominated prophets. Jezebel hated the servants of Jehovah, and would have destroyed them all, if possible. It is singular that Obadiah should live in the court of Ahab, and more so that his life should be preserved.

5 fed them with bread and water. And Ahab said to Obadiah, "Come, let us go" through the land, unto all the fountains of water, and unto all the brooks: perhaps we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, that we lose not all the cattle." And they divided the land between them, to pass through it: Ahab went one way, by himself; and Obadiah went another way, by himself.

7 But as Obadiah was on the way, behold, Elijah met him; and he knew him, and fell on his face, and said, "Art thou my lord Elijah?"

8 And he answered him, "I am: go, tell thy lord, 'Behold, Elijah is here.'" But Obadiah said, "In what have I sinned, that thou wouldst deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab, to slay me? As Jehovah thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee: and when they said, 'He is not there;' he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that thou wert not to be found. And now thou sayest, 'Go, tell thy lord, behold, Elijah is here.'" And as soon as I am gone from thee, it may be, that the Spirit of Jehovah shall carry thee whither I know not; and so when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, he may slay me. Now I, thy servant, have feared Jehovah from my youth. Hath it not been told my lord what I did, when Jezebel slew the prophets of Jehovah, how I hid a hundred men of Jehovah's prophets, by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water? Yet now thou sayest, 'Go tell thy lord, behold, Elijah is here: so that he may slay me.'" And Elijah said, "As Jehovah, the God of hosts, liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely show myself to him this day."

16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him; and Ahab went to meet Elijah. And when Ahab saw Elijah, Ahab said to him, "Art thou he, who troubleth Israel?" But he answered, "I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of Jehovah, and followed other gods. Now therefore send, and assemble to me, into mount Carmel, all Israel, and the prophets of Baal, four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves, four hundred, who eat at Jezebel's table." So Ahab sent unto all the children of Israel, and assembled the prophets unto mount Carmel. And Elijah came to all the people, and said, "How long halt ye between two opinions? if Jehovah be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him." And the people answered him not a word. Then said Elijah to the people, "I am the only remaining prophet of Jehovah; but Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men. Let two steers be given to us; and let them choose one steer for themselves, and cut him in pieces, and lay the pieces on wood, but put no fire under: and I will dress the other steer, and lay him on wood, but put no fire under: And call ye on the name of your god, and I will call on the name of Jehovah: and the God that answereth by fire, let him be God." And all the people answered and said, "This proposal is good." Elijah then said to the prophets of Baal, "Choose ye one steer for yourselves, and dress him first; for ye are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under." And they took the steer, which was given them, and they dressed him; and called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, saying, "O Baal, hear us." But there was no voice; no answer. And they leaped about the altar which they had made. And at noon, Elijah mocked them and said, "Cry still louder:

CHAP. XVIII. 5. *Sept. the rest, Go thou.

9. *Syr. Vulg. 9. mss.

9. In what have I sinned? The following verses explain the meaning of Obadiah in this. Should Elijah not be found, Obadiah would be slain, for not having seized him or put him to death.

11. I have not troubled, &c. Ahab charges the famine on the prophet who predicted it; he repels the charge, and points out with boldness and energy the true cause, however uncourtly such language might be deemed. The proposal he makes to assemble the prophets of Baal, and to see who or what was the cause of the calamity, and to endeavour to remove it, Ahab could not but deem fair.

24. That answereth by fire. God had frequently appeared in favour of his people, by consuming the victims offered to him by fire from heaven. Levit. ix. 24. and Judg. vi. 21.

27. He may be musing, &c. The heathens ascribed the weaknesses of men to their gods. According to Homer, Jupiter sometimes went abroad, though he is a god, yet he may be musing; or he may be employed; or on a journey; or, perhaps he is asleep, and must be awaked." They then cried still louder, and cut themselves, according to their custom, with knives and lancets, till the blood gushed out upon them. 29 And when mid-day was past, though they continued their rites until the time of offering the evening sacrifice; there was no voice, no answer, no regard paid to them. 30 Elijah then said to all the people, "Come near unto me." And all the people came near unto him. And he repaired the altar of Jehovah, which had been broken down. And Elijah took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, (to whom the word of Jehovah came, saying, "Israel shall be thy name:") And with the stones he built an altar to the name of Jehovah: and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two seahs of seed. And he put the wood in order, and cut the steer in pieces, and laid the pieces on the wood, and said, "Fill four jars with water, and pour it on the burnt-sacrifice, and on the wood." And he said, "Do it the second time." And they did it the second time. And he said, "Do it the third time." 35 And they did it the third time. And the water ran round about the altar; and the trench was 36 even filled with water. It was now the time of offering the evening sacrifice, when Elijah, the prophet drew near, and said, "O Jehovah; the God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day, that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things by thy command. Hear 37 me, O Jehovah, hear me, that this people may know that thou Jehovah art God; and turn back their hearts." Then the fire of Jehovah fell, 38 and consumed the burnt-offering, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water which was in the trench. And when all the 39 people saw this, they fell on their faces; and they said, "Jehovah, he is God; Jehovah, he is God." And Elijah said to them, "Take the prophets of Baal; let not one of them escape." And they took them; and Elijah brought them to the brook Kishon, and slew them there.

And Elijah said unto Ahab, "Go eat and 41 drink; for there is a sound of abundance of rain." So Ahab went up to eat and to drink; and Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; and he cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees; And said to his servant, 43 "Go up now, look towards the sea." And he went up, and looked, and said, "There is nothing." And he said, "Go again seven times." And at the seventh time, he said, "Behold, 44 there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea, like a man's hand." And he said, "Go up, say to Ahab," "Prepare thy chariot, and get down, that the rain stop thee not." And it came to 45 pass in the mean while, that the heavens were black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. And Ahab rode and went to Jezreel. And the hand of Jehovah was on Elijah; and 46 he girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab to the entrance of Jezreel.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVIII. 1. The character of Obadiah shows the power of divine grace. Though surrounded with temptations, yet like Lot in Sodom, he maintains his integrity. Fearing God in his youth, he came to fear him still more in his old age. They that fear the Lord in their youth, come to fear him greatly. So Obadiah. He began betimes, and made great progress in piety, zeal, and hospitality. Early piety becomes eminent piety. This is a motive to young persons to remember their creator in the days of their youth.

2. We infer, that sinners, not reformers, are the troublers of Israel. Useful, zealous reformers are often called so: Christ and his apostles were said to turn the world upside down. Elijah was really the best guard to Israel; better than chariots and horsemen. Sin is a great disturber of families, churches, towns, sometimes slept, &c. How different the view which the prophets give us of the true God, who neither slumbereth nor sleepeth, and who is in every place, beholding the evil and the good.

29. Continued their rites. They acted the prophet, in their motions and gesticulations. How fine the remark with which the verse concludes, "Yet there was no voice," &c.

34. Do it the third time. This shows the confidence of the prophet, or rather his full assurance, that God would now appear to confound his enemies, and to raise the drooping spirit of his friends.

39. Jehovah, he is God; that is, we acknowledge him to be the only true and living God. Elijah availed himself of the impression made on the people, and engaged them to cut off the prophets or priests of Baal.

41. There is a sound, &c. God now intimated to his servant that he would send rain; and by this, still more establish his mission as his prophet

CHAPTER XIX.

B. C. 906. Jezebel threateneth Elijah, who fleeth; he goes to Horeb, where God appears to him, and sends him to smite Hazael, Jehu, and Elisha.

1 And Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done: and also how he had slain all the prophets with the sword. Then Jezebel sent a messenger to Elijah, saying, "So let the gods do to me, and more also, if, by to morrow about this time, I make not thy life as the life of one of them." And he was afraid, and arose, and went for his life, and came to Beer-sheba, which belonged to Judah. And there he left his servant; But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness; and he went and sat down under a broom-tree: and he requested for himself, that he might die; and said, "It is enough: now, O Jehovah, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers." And as he lay and slept under the broom-tree, behold, an angel touched him, and said to him, "Arise, eat." And he looked, and, behold, at his head was a cake baked on coals, and a cruse of water. And he ate and drank, and lay down again. 7 And the angel of Jehovah returned and touched him a second time, and said, "Arise, eat;

because a long journey is appointed to thee."

And he arose, and ate and drank, and went in the strength of that food, forty days and forty nights, unto Horeb, the mount of God.

And he came thither to a cave, and lodged there; and, behold, the word of Jehovah came to him, and said to him, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" And he said, "I have been very jealous for Jehovah, the God of hosts: for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, I only am left: and they seek to take away my life." And he said, "Go forth, and stand upon the mount before Jehovah." And, behold, Jehovah passed by, and there was a great and strong wind rending the mountains, and breaking in pieces the rocks before Jehovah; but Jehovah was not in the wind: and after the wind was an earthquake; but Jehovah was not in the earthquake: And after the earthquake, a fire; but Jehovah was not in the fire: and after the fire, a still small voice, "and there was Jehovah". And, when Elijah heard this he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entrance of the cave. And, behold, a voice came to him, and kingdoms, and the whole world. All mischief is owing to it. Therefore let us keep from the very appearance of evil.

3. We are hence taught resolution and steadiness in religion. Some worshipped Jehovah to please the prophets; others Baal to please Jezebel. This was shameful. Religion is every thing, or nothing. No man can serve two masters. Double-minded men are unstable in all their ways; their hearts are not right with God, therefore they are not found in his statutes.

4. See the vanity of idolatry, and the power of God. Surely no idolatry ever made so contemptible a figure, or was so justly to Israel. The event soon verified his intimation.

CHAP. XIX. 2. So let the gods. Jezebel was greatly enraged, and resolved to make the prophet a public example of her vengeance. Her passion clearly deprived her of prudence; and she, by sending a message to him, led to his escape.

3. And he was afraid. This shows the justness of the Apostles remark, that Elijah was a man of like passions with ourselves.

4. A broom-tree. This is now generally adopted as the sense of the word. The prophet now wishes to die and go home, perhaps, thinking that he had done no good, by all his efforts to reform Israel. In this desponding frame the Lord was mindful of him.

8. Forty days, &c. The distance of Horeb from Beer-sheba is little more than a hundred miles; and the prophet had gone a day's journey into the wilderness. This may justly induce suspicion, that the true reading is ridiculed. But how glorious does the God of Israel appear in the midst of this conquest, and in his power over all the elements. We have reason to say, "He is God;" and to be thankful for, and improve the light of the gospel; or else we, like those prophets, shall be ashamed and confounded.

5. We are taught perseverance in prayer. Elijah sent his servant seven times, prostrated himself humbly, and continued instant in prayer. The Lord will at length come, and will not tarry. Wait patiently for him; for "he is a God who heareth prayer."

four days, &c. Errors in numbers have most frequently occurred; yet there is no variety of reading either in the versions or manuscripts. That God can support without food, for any length of time, cannot surely be doubted. Moses fasted forty days and forty nights, and our Lord in like manner.

11, 12. The Greek and Arabic translators render in the future, and make these two verses a part of the angel's address, and not of the historian's narrative. I prefer the common rendering, because most agreeable to the context, and to the use of the Hebrew participles. Interpreters have given different views of what is here related. These awful appearances displayed the majesty of God, while the still small voice indicated his mercy. In short, he meant to assure the prophet, and by him, his people, that he would not employ storms and tempests, but the soft words of persuasion and kindness, in order to reclaim Israel and maintain his own

- and said, "What doest thou here, Elijah?"

- 16 And Jehu, the son of Nimshi, shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel; and Elisha, the son of Shaphat, of Abel-meholah, shalt thou anoint to

- 19 So he departed thence; and found Elisha, the son of Shaphat, and he was plowing, twelve yoke of oxen going before him; and he was with the twelfth: and Elijah passed on to him, and cast his mantle upon him. And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, "Let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and I will follow thee." And he said to him, "Go, return: for what have I done to hinder thee?" So he returned from him, and took a yoke of 21 oxen, and slew them, and boiled their flesh with the wood of the ox-gear, and gave to the people, and they did eat. Then he arose, and went after Elijah, and attended on him.

CHAPTER XXI.

B. C. 899. Ahab being denied Naboth's vineyard, is grieved; Jezebel murders false witnesses, and Naboth is condemned; Elijah denounceth God's judgments against Ahab.

AFTER these occurrences, the following happened. Naboth, the Jezreelite, had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, near to the palace of Ahab, king of Samaria. And Ahab spoke to 2 Naboth, saying, "Give to me thy vineyard, REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIX. 1. We are taught by the conduct of Jezebel, and that of Elijah, how incorrigible some sinners are, and how often the most eminent saints become impatient, and act unworthily their general excellency. Neither judgments nor mercies could melt the obdurate heart of Jezebel. The proofs which had been given of the vanity of idols, and of the power, goodness, and mercy of God, were wholly disregarded. When we hear Elijah wishing to die, and fearing the wrath of a wicked woman, we are surprised. We only find one perfect, in whom was no guile no sin.

2. The question put to Elijah should teach us not to go where duty does not call us. "What doest thou here, Elijah?" It was a just and gentle reproof; is this a time for good men, for prophets, to retire, when their service is so much needed? Let us often put the question to ourselves, What if we should hear God's voice saying to us when at ale-houses, assemblies, or in bad company, working or journeying, on sabbath-days, "What doest thou here?" how should we answer it? Let us often say to ourselves, "Does God call me to this? Am I in the way of duty? Can I be useful here? Is this my proper place? In such instances let us act with holy caution and fear, remembering that we are accountable to God.

worship. Though the persons he is sent to anoint will bring judgment on Israel for their idolatry, yet he will reserve seven thousand to support his own cause: This may mean a great number.

18. Who have not kissed. This was one method of adoration, either to kiss the image, or to kiss the hand and to stretch it towards the image.

21. So he returned from him; that is, from the prophet, as I understand it, and went home, and, having invited the people, made a feast sa-

3. This appearance to Elijah, is an emblem of God's manner of dealing with men in bringing them to himself. He is not in the wind, in an earthquake, &c. but by the terrors of the law, and alarms of conscience, he makes way for the gospel. In religious matters there is not always the greatest fervency and devotion, and the most of God, where there is the greatest noise: God makes way for himself "by terrible things in righteousness." But he speaks powerfully to the heart in his "still small voice" of mercy and peace.

4. We are taught that the number of God's servants may be greater in times of common degeneracy than we suspect. The Lord has his hidden ones. The apostle applies what is said to the prophet to his own times. Rom. xi. 4, 5. "But what says the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal. Even so then, at this present time also, there is a remnant according to the election of grace." It is a comfort that God "knoweth them that are his." Let us rejoice in this, and take encouragement in our resolute attempts to promote religion. If we stand up for God, others may join us, or at least thousands may pray for us: and their fervent prayers, may obtain for us, ultimate success.

crifice of some of his oxen; and then he followed Elijah.

CHAP. XXI. 1. In the Greek version, this chapter follows the 19th; and the order of the history supports this arrangement. In the present order the narrative of the wars of Israel with the Syrians is broken and interrupted.

2. Spoke to Naboth. The proposal of Ahab was fair; and the reason of Naboth's refusal ought to have satisfied him. It was the inheritance of that I may have it for a green garden, because it is near to my house: and I will give to thee, for it, a better vineyard than it; or, if it seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money." And Naboth said to Ahab, "Jehovah forbid that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee," And Ahab went to his house vexed and displeased, because of the word which Naboth, the Jezreelite, had spoken to him; for he had said, "I will not give to thee the inheritance of my fathers." And he laid himself down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no food.

But Jezebel, his wife, came to him, and said to him, "Why is thy spirit so vexed, that thou wilt eat no food?" And he said to her, "Because I spoke to Naboth, the Jezreelite, and said to him, 'Give to me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it;' and he answered, 'I will not give thee my vineyard.'" And Jezebel, his wife, said to him, "Dost thou now exercise royal authority over Israel? Arise, eat food, and let thy heart be joyful: the vineyard of Naboth, the Jezreelite, I will give to thee." She then wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal; and sent the letters to the elders and nobles of the city, in which Naboth dwelt. And she wrote in the letters, saying, "Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth at the head of the people: Then bring two lawless men before him, who may testify against him, saying, 'Naboth hath blessed' the gods, especially Molech." And then carry him out, and stone him that he may die. And the men of his city, the elders and the nobles, who dwelt in his city, did as Jezebel had sent to them: as was written in the letters which she had sent to them. They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth at the head of the people. And there came two lawless men, and sat before him; and these lawless men testified against him, against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, "Naboth hath blessed the gods, especially Molech." They then carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones so that he died. Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, "Naboth is stoned, and is dead."

And, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, she said to Ahab, "Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth, the Jezreelite, which he refused to give to thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead." And, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, he rose up to go down to take possession of the vineyard of Naboth, the Jezreelite.

And the word of Jehovah came to Elijah, the Tishbite, saying, "Arise, go down to meet Ahab, king of Israel, in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth; for he is gone down thither to take possession of it." And thou shalt speak to him, saying, 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'Hast thou killed, and also taken possession?' Again thou shalt speak to him, saying, 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'In whatsoever place' the dogs licked up the blood of Naboth, shall the dogs lick up even thine own blood.'" And 20

his fathers. Attachment to one's home, to the place of our birth, is natural; and few men would wish to part with it. He considered that he was bound by the obligations of religion to keep it.

4. Would eat no food. How a little thing may disturb a proud, or a covetous mind.

10. Blessed the gods, &c. There are five places where our translators have rendered (ברך) to blaspheme, or curse, here and in the 13th verse, Job, i. 5, and ii. 5, and 9. In all these places, the Sept. Syr. and Vulg. render to bless; and the word has no other signification in any of the oriental tongues. As a noun, it denotes the knee, and as a derivative verb, to bow the knee, and as this is a mark of homage, hence, to bless or pay homage; and as inferiors approached superiors without a present, hence another noun was formed, (ברכה) signifying a present, a favour, and hence again to bless, by bestowing favours. These are its only senses throughout the scriptures; but as in the passages mentioned, the context requires either a different sense of this verb, or the noun connected with it, I have preferred the latter, as אלהים not only denotes the true God, but false gods. I have also varied the points, and have translated Molech, instead of Melech the king. This version specifies the crime laid to Naboth's charge, to be idolatry, which was capital, according to Deut. xvii. 2—7. And though Jezebel was herself a gross idolater, she availed herself of that law to obtain her object.

11—14. The elders of Jezreel did not hesitate to do as Jezebel ordered. They perhaps dreaded the vengeance of this unprincipled woman; and, influenced by their fears, they became guilty of this unjust deed.

16. He rose up to go, &c. Ahab, by this, showed the same injustice as his wife; if he did not suggest the deed he approved of it.

19. In whatsoever place. I have followed the Greek translators, as this version removes the difficulty arising from ch. xxii. 38. Naboth was slain in Jezreel, and dogs licked up the blood of Ahab out of the pool of Samaria.

Ahab said to Elijah, "Hast thou met me, O mine enemy?" And he answered, "I have met thee; because thou hast sold thyself to work evil 21 in the eyes of Jehovah. 'Behold, (saith Jehovah,) I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy posterity, and will cut off from Ahab, every male, howsoever shut up or secure in Is-
 22 rael. And will make thy house, like the house of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha, the son of Ahijah, for the provocation with which thou hast provoked me to 23 anger, in having caused Israel to sin.' And concerning Jezebel, Jehovah hath also spoken, saying, 'The dogs shall eat Jezebel under the wall
 24 of Jezreel. Him who dieth of Ahab's posterity, in the city, the dogs shall eat; and him who dieth in the field, shall the fowls of the air eat.'
 25 Now there had been none like to Ahab, who, stirred up by Jezebel, his wife, sold himself to 26 work wickedness in the eyes of Jehovah. And he committed great abominations, by going after vile idols, according to all that the Amorites did, whom Jehovah cast out before the children 27 of Israel. But, when Ahab heard these words, he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his body, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and 28 walked mournfully. And the word of Jehovah
 29 came to Elijah, the Tishbite, saying, "Seest thou, how Ahab humbleth himself before me? because he humbleth himself before me, I will not bring the evil in his days; but in his son's days will I bring the evil upon his house."

CHAPTER XX.

B. C. 1490. Ben-hadad besiegeth Samaria; the Syrians are slain and the king taken whom Ahab dismisseth.

AND Ben-hadad, the king of Syria, assembled his whole host; thirty-two kings attended him; with horsemen and chariots: and he went up and besieged Samaria, that he might subdue it. But he first sent messengers into the city, to Ahab, king of Israel, who said to him, "Thus saith Ben-hadad, 'Thy silver and thy gold is mine; thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest are mine.'" And the king of Israel answered and said, "My lord, O king, according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have." And the messengers returned, and said, "Thus speaketh Ben-hadad, saying, 'I sent to thee, saying, 'Thou shalt deliver up to me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children; So to morrow about this time, I will send my servants to thee, and they shall search thy house, and the houses of thy servants; and whatsoever is most desirable in

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. How vain is regal dignity and power to the man, whose mind is not regulated by the rules of wisdom, goodness, and religion. Ahab had almost every thing; yet he was a slave to his passions, and because he could not have Naboth's vineyard, he was sick of the spleen, and enjoyed nothing. "Envy is rottenness to the bones." It does not arise so much from our condition, as from the state of the mind. Fretful persons will always have something to fret at. God consults our present ease and comfort, as well as our future happiness, when he commands us to "be content with such things as we have," and says, "thou shalt not covet."

2. How odious is it to see forms of religion and civil justice abused by men of injustice and cruelty! What a solemn farce to condemn an innocent man, and murder him under the colour of justice and order! and what a terrible, shocking thing, that all the nobles, and elders, and people should join in it! Let us not think worse of fasting and prayer because they have been thus abused; but lament the degeneracy into which men may sink.

20. Hast thou met me, &c. Ahab, on the sight of the prophet, conscious of his crime, expected some denunciation; and he regarded the prophet, for telling him what would be the effects of his sins, as his enemy.

3. Let us adore the providence of God, in restraining the malice of men, and in preserving our lives from fraud and artifice. Innocence is no security from perjury and oppression. We should rejoice that a day is coming when these false judgments shall be called over, and then shall be made manifest "the revelation of the righteous judgment of God." Concerning such as Ahab we may say, as in Hab. i. 12. "O Lord, thou hast ordained them for judgment; and O mighty God, thou hast established them for correction."

4. The conduct of Ahab teaches us, that there may be an outward show of repentance when the heart is not humbled. There may be "a rending of the clothes, and putting sackcloth upon the flesh, and fasting," without sincerity. God is pleased with marks of repentance; even for the sake of partial repentance, he often averts temporal judgments. But the sincere penitent shall have "his favour, which is life, and his loving kindness, which is better than life." The sacrifice of God is a broken heart; a broken and a contrite spirit he will not despise. With such a sacrifice he is well pleased.

27. Mournfully. Literally, groaning, and hence kindness and compassion, according to Michaelis. Parkhurst renders, deriving from a different root, with a down-cast look. The connexion supports the sense given.

"their" eyes, they shall seize, and take it away." 7 Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, and said, "Mark, I pray you, and see how this man seeketh mischief: for he sent to me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold; and I denied him not." And all the elders and all the people said to him, "Hearken not, nor consent." Wherefore he said to the messengers of Ben-hadad, "Tell my lord the king, 'All that thou didst send for to thy servant at the first, will I do: but this thing I cannot do.'" And the messengers departed, and brought him this message. And Ben-hadad sent to him, and said, "The gods do so to me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me." And the king of Israel answered, and said, "Say to your lord, 'Let not him who girdeth on his armour, boast as if he were pulling it off.'" And as soon as Ben-hadad, who was then drinking with the other kings, in booths, heard this message, he said to his servants, "Make an attack." And they attacked the city. 13 And, behold, there came a prophet to Ahab, king of Israel, saying, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Hast thou seen all this great multitude? behold, I will deliver it into thy hand this day; and thou shalt know that I am Jehovah.'" And Ahab said, "By whom?" And he said, "Thus answereth Jehovah, 'By the young men belonging to the chiefs of the provinces.'" Then he said, "Who shall order the battle?" And he answered, "Thou." Then he numbered the young men belonging to the chiefs of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty-two:

and after them he numbered all the people, all the children of Israel, seven thousand. And 16 they went out at noon; but Ben-hadad, and the thirty-two kings, his auxiliaries, were drinking in booths. And the young men belonging 17 to the chiefs of the provinces went out first; and Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him, saying, "There are men come out of Samaria." And he 18 said, "Whether they be come out for peace, or war, take them alive." But those young men 19 belonging to the chiefs of the provinces, who went out of the city, and whom the army followed, slew every one his man, and the Syrians 20 fled; and Israel pursued them; but Ben-hadad, the king of Syria, escaped on a horse with the horsemen. And the king of Israel went on, 21 and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with a great slaughter.

And the prophet came to the king of Israel, 22 and said to him, "Go, strengthen thyself, and wisely consider what thou shouldst do: for at the return of the year, the king of Syria will come up against thee." And the servants of the 23 king of Syria said to him, "Their gods are gods of the hills; therefore they were stronger than we; but let us fight against them in the plain, and assuredly we shall be stronger than they." And do this thing, Remove the kings every 24 one from his place; and put captains in their stead: And raise an army, like the army 25 which thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot for chariot: and we will fight against them in the plain, and assuredly we shall be stronger than they." And he hearkened to their voice, and did so. For, at the return of the year, 26 Ben-hadad numbered the Syrians, and went

CHAP. XX. 3. Thy silver, &c. By this he claims the sovereignty; and Ahab by his answer was willing to be his tributary.

6. So to morrow, &c. Ben-hadad, not satisfied with the submission of Ahab, demands the whole of what he thought proper to take out of Samaria. This demand rouses the spirit of the people to resistance.

11. Boast as if he were, &c. This is a very significant metaphor. The renders, 'Do not triumph before the victory is obtained,' which is the sense intended.

12. Make an attack. This hasty order shows the want of prudence; and is what might be expected from a king carousing with his vassals.

14. By the young men, &c. Those were selected for their spirit and courage; and it was evident, that if they succeeded in their attack, dismay would spread through the Syrian camp. The result was accordingly.

24. Remove the kings, &c. Ben-hadad's counsellors considered the tributary kings as not heartily engaging in his cause; and as the probable cause of their last defeat. They speak in the style of idolaters, but the policy of their advice, in proposing to fight in the plains, where their cavalry might be of essential service, was wise and good.

27. Like two small flocks, &c. The historian could not better express the smallness of the Israelite army. Goats are never seen in large flocks. Like sheep.

27 up to Aphek, to fight against Israel. And the children of Israel were numbered, and completed, and went against them: and the children of Israel encamped opposite to them, like two small flocks of goats; but the Syrians filled the country.

28 And there came a man of God, and spoke to the king of Israel, and said, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Because the Syrians have said, 'Jehovah is God of the hills, but he is not God of the valleys,' I will, therefore, deliver all this great multitude into thy hand, and ye shall know that I am Jehovah." And they encamped seven

29 days, one over against the other: but, on the seventh, they advanced to battle; and the children of Israel slew of the Syrians in one day a 30 hundred thousand footmen. But the remainder fled to the city Aphek; and there a wall fell upon this remainder of twenty-seven thousand men. And Ben-hadad, fled and came into that city, and hid himself in an inner-chamber.

31 And his servants said to him, "Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are merciful kings: let us, we pray thee, put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes about our necks, and go out to the king of Israel:

32 perhaps he will save thy life." So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes about their necks, and came to the king of Israel, and said, "Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, 'I pray thee let me live.'" And he said, "Is he yet

33 alive? he is my brother." Now the men diligently observed and hastily caught the word, and they said "Thy brother Benhadad, liveth." Then he said, "Go, bring him." Then Ben-hadad came forth to him; and he caused him

34 to come up into the chariot. And Ben-hadad said to him, "The cities, which my father took from thy father, I will restore; and thou shalt make streets for thyself in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria." Then said Ahab, "I will send thee away with this covenant." So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.

And a certain man, of the sons of the prophets, said to his neighbour, by the command of Jehovah, "Smite me, I pray thee." And the man refused to smite him. Then said he to 35 him, "Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of Jehovah, behold, as soon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee." And as soon as he had departed from him, a lion found him, and slew him. Then he found another man, 36 and said, "Smite me, I pray thee." And the man smote him, so that in smiting he wounded him. And the prophet departed, and waited for 37 the king by the way, and disguised himself by a "bandage" on his face. And as the king passed 38 by, he cried unto the king: and he said, "Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle; and, behold, a man turned aside and brought a man unto me and said, 'Keep this man: if by any means he be missing, then shall thy life go for his life, or else thou shalt pay a talent of silver.' And as thy servant was busy here and 39 there, he was gone." And the king of Israel said to him, "Thou thyself hast decided thy doom." And he hastily removed the bandage 40 from off his face; and the king of Israel perceived that he was one of the prophets. And he 41 said to him, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people.'" Then the king of Israel 42 went home vexed and displeased; and he came to Samaria.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. "Let not him that putteth on the armour boast himself as if he were putting it off." Let not him who is preparing for action triumph before the victory. This was

30. A wall fell upon, &c. That is, upon the main body of them. They were perhaps endeavouring to fortify themselves in some shaken tower, the walls of which gave way and destroyed many. Kennicott labours to prove that this word signifies here not a wall, but reading, as many mss. do, (חורמה) the Simoom or pestilential Wind by which, in his opinion and that perhaps the wisest speech Ahab ever made. It teacheth us all to be humble and diffident; to watch always against our spiritual enemies; and not to be confident in our own strength, but mark and see what of many others, the army of Senacherib was destroyed.

31. And ropes about our necks. These were to indicate, that they considered their lives at the mercy of Ahab; and they intended also to excite his mercy and compassion.

38. By a bandage on his face. This rendering arises from the change

CHAPTER XXII.

B. C. 897. Ahab seduced by false prophets, is slain at Ramoth-Gilead. History of the reign of Jehoshaphat.

1 THREE years passed without war between 2 Syria and Israel. But in the third year, Jehoshaphat, the king of Judah, came down to the 3 king of Israel; And the king of Israel said to his servants, "Know ye not that Ramoth
in Gilead is our's? and yet we delay taking it 4 out of the hand of the king of Syria?" And he said to Jehoshaphat, "Wilt thou go with me to battle, to Ramoth-gilead?" And Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel, "As thou art disposed, so am I; as thy people, so my people, as thy 5 horsemen, so my horsemen." Yet Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel, "Inquire now, I pray 6 thee, what is the will of Jehovah." Then the king of Israel assembled the prophets, about four hundred men, and said to them, "Shall I go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear?" And they said, "Go up; for Jehovah shall deliver it into the hand of the king."
7 And Jehoshaphat said, "Is there no prophet of Jehovah here besides, by whom we may in-8 quire?" And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "There is yet one man, Micaiah, the son of Imlah, by whom we may inquire of Jehovah; but him I hate; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil." And Jehosha-9 phat said, "Let not the king say so." Then the king of Israel called an officer, and said,
"Bring quickly hither Micaiah, the son of Imlah." And the king of Israel and Jehosha- 10 phat, the king of Judah, sat each on his throne having put on their robes, in a void place, at the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them. And 11 Zedekiah, the son of Chenaanah, made for himself horns of iron, and said, "Thus saith Jehovah, "With these shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou have destroyed them" And 12

all the prophets prophesied so, saying, "Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for Jehovah shall deliver it into the king's hand." Now 13
the messenger, who had gone to call Micaiah, spoke to him, saying, "Behold now, the words of the prophets declare good to the king with one mouth: let thy word, I pray thee, be like their word, and speak what is good." And 14 Micaiah said, "As Jehovah liveth, what Jehovah saith to me, that will I speak." So he 15 came to the king. And the king said to him,
"Micaiah, shall we go against Ramoth-gilead, to battle, or shall we forbear?" And he answered him, "Go and prosper; for Jehovah will deliver it into the hand of the king." And 16
the king said to him, "How often shall I adjure thee that thou speak to me only the truth, in the name of Jehovah?" "Micaiah" then said, 17
"I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills like sheep that have not a shepherd; and Jehovah said, 'These have no masters: let them return
every man to his house in peace.'" And the 18 king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, "Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good,

we are to do, and how we may best secure ourselves. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."

2. In the language of Ben-hadad, we see the uncertainty of power and riches. How soon did the man, who arrogantly said, "The dust of Samaria shall not suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me:" change his tone, into "thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee, let me live." Happy if those, who occupy exalted stations, would reflect how soon they may be brought down.

of a single letter, so like that they have been often mistaken for each other.
How could ashes on the head disguise the face of the prophet? A bandage might serve this purpose, and might be so placed as to hide the wound he had received.

CHAP. XXII. 6. For Jehovah, &c. This shows, that although these were false prophets; yet, at that time, both they, and their king, acknowledged the God of Israel.

3. The mercy of God to others should be a motive to us to be reconciled to him. Ben-hadad's servants pleaded that the king of Israel is a merciful king. The God of Israel is a merciful God. His mercy extends to great offenders, when penitent; and still he forgives "that he may be feared." We should appear before him as penitents; with humility and submission of soul; and earnestly beg the life of our souls.
Those who are ambassadors of Christ, as though God did beseech you by them, pray you in Christ's stead to be ye reconciled to God.

7. By whom we may, &c. Jehoshaphat seems to doubt the declarations of Ahab's prophets; and to wish to consult some one whose character was better established.

11. Horns of iron. These were symbols of power; and the false prophet intimated the power of Ahab, and how he should prevail.

13: Be like their word. This address of Ahab's messengers, shows the spirit of Ahab's prophets; they adopted their pretended gift to promote his.

19 but evil, concerning me?" Again "Micaiah" said, "Hear thou, therefore, the word of Jehovah. I saw Jehovah sitting on his throne, and all the host of the heavens standing by him, on his right hand and on his left. And Jehovah said, 'Who will entice Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead?' And one said on this manner, and another said on that manner. 21 A spirit then came forth and stood before Jehovah, and said, 'I will entice him.' And Jehovah said to him, 'By what means?' And he answered 'I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets.' And Jehovah said, 'Thou shalt entice him, and prevail also; go forth, and so do. Now, therefore, behold, Jehovah hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets; for Jehovah hath spoken evil concerning thee." 24 But Zedekiah, the son of Chenaanah, went near, and smote Micaiah on the cheek, and said, "How hath the spirit of Jehovah departed from me, to speak by thee?" And Micaiah said, "Behold, thou shalt see in that day, when thou shalt go into an inner-chamber to hide thyself." And the king of Israel said, "Take Micaiah, and carry him back to Amon, the governor of the city, and to Joash, the king's son; And say, 'Thus saith the king, 'Put this man in the prison, and feed him with the bread of affliction, and with the water of affliction, until I come in peace.'" And Micaiah said, "If thou indeed return in peace, Jehovah hath not spoken by me." He also said, "Hearken, O people, every one of you." 29 Then the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat, the king of Judah, went up to Ramoth-gilead. 30 And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "I will disguise myself, and enter into the battle; but put thou on thy robes." And the king of Israel disguised himself, and went into the battle. Now the king of Syria charged his thirty-two captains who commanded his chariots, saying, "Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king of Israel." And, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, they said, "Surely this is the king of Israel;" and they turned aside to fight against him. But Jehoshaphat called out; And when the captains of the chariots perceived that he was not the king of Israel, they turned back from pursuing him.

And a certain man drew a bow at a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness; and he said to the driver of his chariot, "Turn thy hand, and carry me out of the host; for I am wounded," But the battle increased on that day; and the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians, and the blood ran out of the wound into the midst of the chariot; and in the evening he died. Then, about the going down of the sun, a proclamation was made throughout the host, saying, "Every man to his city, and every man to his own country."

Thus the king died, and was brought to Samaria; and they buried the king in Samaria. And they washed the chariot, and rinsed his armour in the pool of Samaria; and the dogs licked up his blood; according to the word which Jehovah had spoken. Now the rest of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and the ivory house which he constructed, and all the cities which he built, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. So Ahab slept with his fathers; and Ahaziah, his son, reigned in his stead.

And Jehoshaphat, the son of Asa, began to reign over Judah, in the fourth year of Ahab, king of Israel. Jehoshaphat was thirty-five years old when he began to reign; and he reign-designs and flatter him.

15. Jehovah will deliver, &c. Micaiah must have spoken these words in an ironical tone, as the king adjures him to speak the truth.

19-23. This is not a real representation of any thing done in the heavenly world, as if God was at a loss for expedients, or had any hand in the sins of his creatures; but it is a parabolical or visionary representation, to let them know there was a higher king, that his providence was concerned about the affairs of this world, and that he has various ways of bringing about his purposes.

The expression, Jehovah hath put a lying spirit, only means he hath suffered Ahab's prophets to be guilty of prophesying lies in his name. At least this seems to me the sense.

28. Hearken, O people, &c. Micaiah boldly appeals to the whole multitude, that they might mark what he said, and judge by the event of its

ed twenty-five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Azubah, the daughter of Shilhi. And he walked in all the ways of Asa his father; he turned not aside from it, doing what was right in the eyes of Jehovah. For the remnant of the Sodomites, who were left in the days of his father Asa, he removed from the land. Only the high-places were not entirely removed; still the people sacrificed, and burnt incense on the high-places. And Jehoshaphat made peace with the king of Israel: And as there was then no king in Edom, but a deputy for the king of Judah; Jehoshaphat built ships of Tarshish, at Ezion-Geber, to go to Ophir, for gold. Then said Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, to Jehoshaphat, "Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships: to which Jehoshaphat consented". But they went not; for the ships were wrecked at Ezion-geber". Now the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, and the might which he exercised, and how he warred, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. And Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers; and was buried with his fathers in the city of David; and Jehoram, his son, reigned in his stead.

49. v1 Chron. xx. 36. text, consented not.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXII. 1. We are admonished by the conduct of Jehoshaphat, to seek divine direction in all our actions. Ahab had no inclination to this, till roused by the king of Judah; and then was inclined to consult such as were ready to obey his nod, and flatter his ambition. How proper is it to acknowledge God in all our ways, if we desire him to direct and prosper our steps. We should be willing to learn his will, whatsoever it be, and prefer truth to falsehood, however opposed to our wishes.

2. There is no judging of truth or error by numbers. Unity is not always the mark of a true church, or true ministers. The whole assembly of prophets, four hundred, were all wrong. One despised, persecuted prophet, who differed from the rest, had truth on his side. Unanimity in opinion, in the greatest ecclesiastical councils, is not an argument for truth. One man may possibly know more of the divine will, and understand his bible better, than a whole assembly of divines. Let us, therefore, bring every thing to the test of scripture, and not be the servants of men.

truth. He risks his prophetic character upon the truth of his prediction.

43—50. These verses have, from some accident, been strangely misplaced. I have followed Geddes in the order adopted, which is consistent with itself and with the account in Chronicles.

49. To which Jehoshaphat consented. The present text has, "He would not;" but this is wholly inconsistent with 2 Chron. xx. 36. and the change ibid. † from verse 48.

3. Ministers should learn impartiality and courage in pronouncing the messages of God, and purpose thoroughly to follow the intimations of the divine will, wherever it may lead. Micaiah, with a resolution high as heaven, and a pang of seraphic zeal, determined, v. 14, "As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith to me, that will I speak." A good pattern for all ministers. They must declare the whole counsel of God, whether agreeable or disagreeable to their hearers; for if they please men they will not be faithful to God.

4. We see how God governs and over-rules all events. His providence directs, what seems to us most casual. Micaiah declared this before two kings, with prophets and guards surrounding them, consulting about war. He declared God to be the great universal king on his throne, while his heavenly hosts surrounded him, all executing his orders, and that all the affairs of this lower world are under his direction. Ever remember this truth, that "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, yea, he sitteth on the floods; and when the sea roareth he stilleth its waves."

is easily accounted for. I have therefore followed Houbigant and others in reading ל for ל; which being nearly similar in sound, have in other instances been exchanged.

50. Here, with Coverdale and Matthew, I end the first book of kings: a much more proper division than the common one, which disjoins a part of the same reign.

II. KINGS.

INTRODUCTION.

This book contains a history of more than three hundred years; giving an account of the decline of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, and the ruin of both. The former was finally subverted, and the people of the latter were carried captive to Babylon. In the first seven chapters, we have the incidental history of the prophets Elijah and Elisha; and in what follows, that of eleven kings of Israel and fifteen of Judah.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 896. The reign of Ahaziah, king of Israel; the miracles of Elijah.

51 IN the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, began to reign over Israel, in Samaria; and he reigned 52 two years over Israel. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, and walked in the way of his father, and in the way of his mother, and in the way of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused 53 Israel to sin. For he served Baal, and worshipped him, and provoked to anger Jehovah, the God of Israel, according to all that his father had done.

1 Now, after the death of Ahab, Moab rebel-
2 led against Israel. And Ahaziah had fallen through a lattice in his upper-chamber, in Samaria, and was sick. And he sent messengers, and said to them, "Go, inquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, whether I shall recover of 3 this disease." The angel of Jehovah then said to Elijah, the Tishbite, "Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say to them, 'Is it because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to inquire of Baal-zebub, the 4 god of Ekron? Now, therefore, thus saith Jehovah, 'Thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art laid, but shalt surely die." And Elijah went *and told them". And 5 the messengers returned to him, and he said to them, "Why have ye returned?" And they 6 said to him, "A man came to meet us, and said to us, 'Go, return to the king who sent you, and say to him, 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'Is it because there is not a God in Israel, that thou sendest to inquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron? Therefore, thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art laid, but shalt surely die'" And he said to them, "What was 7 the habit of the man who came to meet you, and spoke to you these words?" And they an- 8 swered him, "He was clothed with a hairy garment, and girt about the loins with a leathern girdle;" and he said "It is Elijah, the Tishbite." The king then sent to him a captain of fifty, 9 with his fifty men. And he went up towards him: for behold, he sat on the top of a mountain. And he spoke to him, "O man of God, the king saith, 'Come down.'" And Elijah 10 answered and said to the captain of fifty, "If I be a man of God, fire will come down from the heavens, and consume thee and thy fifty men." And fire came down from the heavens, and consumed him and his fifty men. Again the 11 king sent to him another captain of fifty, with his fifty men. And he answered and said to him, "O man of God, thus saith the king, 'Come down quickly.'" And Elijah answered 12 and said to him, "If I be a man of God, fire will come down from the heavens, and consume thee and thy fifty men." And the fire came down from the heavens, and consumed him and his fifty men.

13 Yet again the king sent a third captain of fifty with his fifty men. And the third captain of fifty went up, and came and fell on his knees before Elijah, and besought him, and said to him, "O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of these fifty men, thy servants, be
14 precious in thy sight. Behold, fire came down from the heavens, and consumed the two captains of the former fifties, with their fifties: therefore let my life now be precious in thine
15 eyes." And the angel of Jehovah said to Elijah, "Go down with him: be not afraid of him." And he arose, and went down with him unto the 16 king. And he said to him, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Inasmuch as thou hast sent messengers to inquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, is it because there is not a God in Israel, of whom thou canst inquire? Therefore, thou shalt not come off that bed on which thou art laid, but 17 shalt surely die.'" So he died, according to the

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. See on what a precarious tenure, princes, as well as others, hold their lives. Ahaziah thought himself safe in his house; but he fell, and languished, and died. This is a warning to us all to "be always ready," as we are all liable to accidents even where we least expect them. "We stand in jeopardy every hour." It teaches us not to put our confidence in princes. "Man at his best estate is altogether vanity."

2. Observe the folly and obstinacy of men, and to what a degree of hardness the human heart is capable of arriving. See it in the folly of Ahaziah sending to Ekron, to inquire whether he should recover. He was not solicitous how to behave in his sickness, or what should become of him after death; but only to know whether he should recover. And this folly is acted over in every age. See his obstinacy in sending one detachment after another, when he knew they were slain by a miracle. To what a lamentable degree of hardness of heart, and to what a pitch of wickedness, may men arrive, when they forsake God, and he forsakes them.

tive, indicates something of passion in the prophet; and because, I consider the prophet as predicting what would now happen to show the king the truth of the message sent:

word of Jehovah, which Elijah had spoken. And because he had no son, Jehoram, "his brother", reigned in his stead.° Now the rest of the 18 acts of Ahaziah, "and all" that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

CHAPTER II.

B. C. 896. Elijah, attended by Elisha, divideth the Jordan, and is taken up to heaven; Elisha enjoys his spirit and works miracles.

JEHOVAH now intending to take up Elijah in a whirlwind into heaven, Elijah went with Elisha from Gilgal. And Elijah said to Elisha, "Abide 2 here, I pray thee; for Jehovah hath sent me to Bethel." But Elisha said, "As Jehovah liveth, and as thyself livest, I will not leave thee." So they went down to Bethel. And the sons of 3 the prophets who were at Bethel, came forth to Elisha, and said to him, "Knowest thou that Jehovah will take away thy master this day from thee?" And he said, "Yea, I know, be ye silent." Again Elijah said to him, "Elisha, 4 abide here, I pray thee; for Jehovah hath sent me to Jericho." But he said, "As Jehovah liveth, and thyself livest, I will not leave thee." So they came to Jericho. And the sons of the 5 prophets, who were at Jericho, came to Elisha, and said to him, "Knowest thou that Jehovah

3. We are here taught the different spirit of the law and the gospel. Elijah acted by divine impulse, and worthy ends were to be answered by it. We read in Luke, ix. 54. that the disciples, James and John, wanted to call down fire from heaven to consume the Samaritans, even as Elijah did. But Christ rebuked his disciples for it. The gospel inflicts no such severities on offenders. "Ye know not," says Christ, "what spirit ye are of." Elijah was all zeal for God; you are in a passion. He did it for God's glory; you for your own honour and reputation. "The son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." "Vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord."

4. See how safe good men are in following where God leads. An angel bids Elijah go, and he goes, "not fearing the wrath of the king." It was strange, that he who sent for him again and again in such a mad rage, should let him go. But even king's hearts are in the hand of the Lord. Learn hence, to follow the leadings of providence, to trust God in the way of duty, and say, "The Lord is my helper, I will not fear what man can do unto me." Heb, xiii. 6.

CHAP. II. 2. Thyself livest. Here the term (ws) is used for the pronoun; and to me, this is more emphatical than the idiom.

3. Sons of the prophets. That is, young men educated in the schools.

will take away thy master this day from thee?"

And he answered, "Yea, I know, be ye silent."

6 Again Elijah said to him, "Abide, I pray thee, here; for Jehovah hath sent me to the Jordan."

But he said, "As Jehovah liveth, and as thyself livest, I will not leave thee." So they both

7 went on together. And fifty men of the sons of the prophets, went, and stood to view afar off;

8 and they two stood by the Jordan. And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapped it together, and smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither, so that they both went over on dry ground.

9 And when they had gone over, Elijah said to Elisha, "Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee." And Elisha said,

"I pray thee, let a double portion of thy spirit be given to me." And he said, "Thou art bold in thy request: if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it will so be to thee, but if thou see me not, it will not be." Now as they still went on, and talked, behold, a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, parted them asunder; and Elijah went up in a whirlwind into heaven.

12 And Elisha saw, and he cried out, "My father! my father! the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof!" And when he saw him no more, he took hold of his own clothes, and mantle of Elijah, which had dropped from him, and went back, and stood by the bank of the Jordan; And he took the mantle of Elijah, 14 which had dropped from him, and smote the waters, ^abut the waters were not divided"; and he said, "Where now is Jehovah, the God of Elijah?" And again he smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither: and Elisha passed over.

And when the sons of the prophets, who were 15 opposite at Jericho, saw him, they said, "The spirit of Elijah resteth on Elisha." And they came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him. And they said to him, 16 "Behold now, there are with thy servants, fifty strong men; let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master: whom, perhaps, the Spirit of Jehovah hath borne away, and cast upon one of the mountains, or into one of the valleys." And he said, "Send them not." But, when 17 they urged him with importunity, he said, "Send." They sent, therefore, fifty men; and they sought three days, but found him not. And when they came again to him, (for he 18 abode still at Jericho,) he said to them, ^a"Did I not say to you, 'Go not?'"

And the men of the city said to Elisha, 19 "Behold now, the situation of this city is pleasant, as my lord seeth: but the water is bad, of the prophets. It was intimated to them, that Elijah was about to be removed.—From thee. I follow Jerom, and others in regarding אשר as used for the pronoun; in this construction, it can have no other sense. Comp. ver. 9. in the original.

9. A double portion of thy spirit. The most common explanation is, that Elisha speaks as a first-born son, to whom a double portion of the father's goods belonged, and who succeeded him. On this principle the meaning is, "Let there be vouchsafed to me, the same spirit of wisdom and power, which has rested on thee, and let me be thy successor." Geddes conjectures the sense is, "Let there be a repetition of thy spirit; let me possess the same spirit of wisdom, power, and zeal, and fortitude in maintaining the cause of true religion." The remark of the sons of the prophets, supports this view of the text. Comp. ver. 15.

10. It will not be. His seeing him could have no material influence to bestow the blessing; but he had a secret impression on his mind that there would be a correspondence between his seeing him taken away, and God's granting the petition. By this means he would be led to keep his mind more attentive to the wonderful scene, and more fit to bear witness of it.

11. In a whirlwind, &c. [Geddes, without support from any of the ancient versions, renders here and verse first, "he was snatched away in an aerial tempest." Granting that בסערה השמים would bear this version, the connexion and the preceding miracles, render it highly improbable. God gave such testimony to Elijah, and enabled him to work so many miracles that it is natural to expect that he would die in peace, rather than perish in a thunder-storm! How does this agree with the narrative? If Elijah was snatched away, why was not Elisha taken also? And where has it been known, that thunder-storms have taken men in the manner described? The version and note of this critic, show his bias to explain away whatsoever he met with, of a miraculous nature.

12. The chariot of Israel, &c. Most expositors explain this, as derived from the fiery chariots and horses, which separated between Elijah and Elisha. I agree with Dathe, in thinking the words are proverbial, and denote one who is considered as the guard and defence of his country. The same words are applied to Elisha, where there was no appearance of fiery chariots and horses, chap. xiii. 14.

14. The waters were not, &c. Whoever reads the common text attentively, will perceive that something is wanting. The words supplied, fill up this deficiency, and render the passage more clear and coherent.

16.—18. Hath borne away, and cast, &c. The sons of the prophets, seem to have had some such notion as Geddes. Elisha at last permitted them to search, that their fruitless labour might convince them that he had ascended to the regions of the blessed.

19. And the ground causeth, &c. I have adopted the marginal versions as more agreeable to the text. The noxious quality of the water

20 and the ground causeth abortions. And he said, "Bring to me a new pan, and put salt therein." And they brought it to him. And he went forth unto the water-spring, and cast the salt into it, and said, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'I have healed these waters; there shall not be therein any more dearth or cause of abortion. 22 So the waters were healed, and continue good unto this day, according to the word which Elisha spoke. 23 And thence he went on to Bethel; and as he was going up by the way, there came young lads out of the city, and mocked him, and said to him, "Ascend too, thou bald-head; ascend 24 too, thou bald-head." And he turned back, and looked on them, and cursed them in the name of Jehovah. And there came forth two she bears out of the wood, and tore of them 25 forty-two boys. And he went thence to mount Carmel; and thence he returned to Samaria.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. We may learn from Elisha, how anxious we should be to attend on and learn from wise and good men. He followed his spiritual father until he was taken from him, and his prayer was that he might possess his spirit. So we should all labour to equal, yea, to excel our brethren and fellow christians, not only in their state and learning, but in piety and zeal. Elisha did not desire the great things of this world for himself, but his father's spirit. This should be the object of our desire, to serve God as faithfully as our fathers, and have the same grace to carry us honourably and usefully through life, and to enable us to finish it well.

2. Let us thankfully meditate on this illustrious instance of divine wisdom and goodness in the translation of Elijah. It was a reward for his distinguished piety, zeal, courage, and patience, a proof of a future state, and an encouragement to be faithful amidst idolatry and opposition, especially to young prophets. "God makes his angels spirits," or winds, "and his ministers a flame of fire;" which implies splendour and not terror. They are as a whirlwind for speed, but not for violence. Thus angels now conduct good men to heaven; and thus at the last day "the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the heavens shall be on fire, and the might affect the produce of the ground, through which it flowed, and occasion among the cattle abortions. Hence when the waters were healed, the produce of the ground became wholesome. The means adopted, were only designed as a token that God would effect the miracle.

23. Young lads. From comparing Gen. xliii. 8. 1 King. iii. 7. it appears that the original not only means children, but young men, from 14 up to 20; who were capable of any riotous proceedings. Now these came out of Bethel, the seat of idolatrous worship; and seeing Elisha, who had been the attendant of Elijah, and who having for some time resided at

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 896. Joram's reign; the Moabites revolt; victory over them, &c.

Now in the eighteenth year of the reign of 1 Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, Joram, the son of Ahab, began to reign over Israel, in Samaria; and he reigned twelve years. And he did evil in 2 the eyes of Jehovah; but not like his father, and his mother: for he put away the statue of Baal which his father had made. Yet he cleaved 3 unto the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin; from them he did not depart.

Now Mesha, king of Moab, who reared cattle, 4 sent as a tribute to the king of Israel, a hundred thousand lambs, and a hundred thousand wethers, with their wool. But when Ahab was 5 dead, the king of Moab rebelled against the king of Israel. And at that time king Joram 6 went out of Samaria, and numbered all Israel. And he sent to Jeshoshaphat, the king of 7 saints shall be caught up in the clouds," and shall mount up, like Elijah, to heaven.

3. It ought to be matter of praise, that if the most eminent and useful men die and are removed, others are raised up in their stead; and thus God carries on his designs. When one hand is paralyzed, another is made vigorous; and when one tongue is silent, another speaks the truths of God, and maintains his cause. While we put on the mantle of those who are gone, let us imitate their faith, patience, and zeal; and at last we shall join them.

4. Let the judgment on mockers, here recorded, admonish all, but especially young persons. It can hardly be doubted but that this is one end God intended should be answered by it: Take care of your words; do not mock people for their infirmities; especially the aged and infirm. If you scoff at his people and ministers, God hears, and will punish those who do so. Parents should often warn their children of this danger, lest they suffer in their children's sufferings, as these idolaters did. We can never expect good from those children whose education is neglected. It is in vain to grieve for miscarriages which our care might have prevented. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it."

Jericho, was known to be his successor as prophet of the true God; these young lads, designedly insulted and reproached him. With many expositors, I think the verb הָלַךְ should be understood in allusion to the ascension of Elijah. In this view their impiety appears more glaring; they wish that all God's prophets may be removed; or they ridicule the idea of the miracle. The want of respect to age, may be added as another ingredient in their offence. Hence Elisha was justified in maintaining his character, and in denouncing the divine curse upon them.

CHAP. III. 4. Wethers. I have followed Le Clerc, in this version,

Judah, saying, "The king of Moab hath rebelled against me; wilt thou go with me against Moab to battle?" And he said, "I will go: as thou art disposed, so am I; as thy people, so my people; as thy horsemen, so my horsemen." And he said, "Which way shall we go up?" And he answered and said, "The way through the wilderness of Edom."

9 So the king of Israel went, and the king of Judah, and the king of Edom; but after a circuitous march of seven days, there was no water for the host, and for the cattle that followed them. And the king of Israel said, "Alas! that Jehovah hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab!"
11 But Jehoshaphat said, "Is there not here a prophet of Jehovah, that we may inquire of Jehovah by him?" And one of the king of Israel's servants answered and said, "Here is Elisha, the son of Shaphat, who attended on Elijah." And Jehoshaphat said, "The word of Jehovah is with him." So the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat, and the king of Edom, went down to him. And Elisha said to the king of Israel, "What have I to do with thee? go to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother." And the king of Israel said to him, "Nay: for Jehovah hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab." And Elisha said, "As Jehovah, the God of hosts, liveth, before whom I stand, surely, were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat, the king of Judah, I would not look towards thee, nor see thee."
15 But now bring to me a minstrel." And it came to pass, while he played on the minstrel, that the Spirit of Jehovah came upon him. And he said, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Make this valley full of ditches.'" For thus saith Jehovah, 17 "Ye shall not see wind, nor shall ye see rain; yet that valley shall be filled with water, that both ye, and your cattle, and your beasts may drink. And this is but a light thing in the eyes 18 of Jehovah: he will deliver the Moabites also into your hand. And ye shall smite every fenced 19 city, and every choice city, and shall fell every good tree, and stop up every well of water, and mar every good piece of land, with stones." And the next morning, when the wheaten-offering was to be offered, behold, there came water by the way of Edom, and the country was filled with water.

And when all the Moabites heard that the 21 kings had come up to fight against them, they assembled all that were able to put on armour, both young and old; and they stood on the borders of their own land. And they arose up 22 early in the morning, and the sun shone upon the water; and the Moabites saw the water on the other side as red as blood. And they said, 23 "This is blood: the kings are surely slain, and they have smitten one another: now, therefore, Moab to the spoil." And when they came to 24 the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up and smote the Moabites, so that they fled before them; but they went on smiting the Moabites, even into their own country. And they demolished 25 the cities, and on every good piece of land cast every man his stone, and filled it; and every well of water, they stopped up; and every because it is not probable, that such a number of rams would be kept. This must have been a heavy impost on the Moabites.

9. There was no water. Owing to the season, it is most probable, the usual wells, where they expected to find water, were dried up; hence they found themselves in danger of perishing.

11. Who attended on Elijah. Literally, "who poured water on the hands of Elijah." A servant is described by one part of service; and this is a frequent idiom.

13. What have I to do, &c. Elisha paid no regard to the king of Israel, knowing him to be an idolater, and who only sought to Jehovah, either from deference to Jehoshaphat or from fear.

15. The spirit of Jehovah. I have preferred this reading, because more usual, and because, if we render (רוח) came, it is more proper. In sense the phrases, "the hand of Jehovah was upon him," and "the spirit of Jehovah came upon him," are synonymous.

19. And mar every, &c. Harmer thinks, that they were to erect stones on every good piece of land, prohibiting its future cultivation, according to a custom of the Arabs. It is probable, gardens, and such like cultivated land, is only meant.

20. There came water. Without wind or rain, this water came; and it must be regarded as produced miraculously. For how could a quantity in such an arid clime be obtained, in an ordinary way?

23. This is blood. The reflection of the sun produced this illusion, and led to the defeat of the Moabites.

24. But they went on, &c. I have followed the Greek translators, as giving the best sense, and retaining the genuine text.

good tree they felled. The walls of Kir-haraseth, were only left; and the slingers surrounded 26 and smote it. But when the king of Moab saw that the battle would be too vigorous for him,
he took with him seven hundred swords-men,
to break through to the king of Edom; but 27 they could not. He then took his eldest son who should have reigned in his stead, and offered him a burnt-offering upon the wall.
And there was great indignation amongst the Israelites; and they departed from him, and returned to their own land.

CHAPTER IV.

B. C. 895. Elisha multiplieth the widow's oil; giveth a son to the Shunemite, and, when dead, raiseth him to life.

1 Now a certain woman, the wife of one of the sons of the prophets, cried unto Elisha, saying,
"Thy servant, my husband, is dead; and thou knowest that thy servant feared Jehovah. Now the creditor is come to take unto him my two 2 sons to be bondmen." And Elisha said to her, "What shall I do for thee? tell me, what hast thou in the house?" And she said, "Thy handmaid hath not any thing in the house, save a pot of oil." Then he said, "Go about, and 3 borrow from all thy neighbours, vessels, empty vessels; borrow not a few. And when thou art 4 come in, thou must shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and pour out into all those vessels; and thou must set aside that which is full." So she went from him, and having 5 borrowed vessels, shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her;

and she poured out. And when the vessels 6 were full, she said to her son, "Bring me yet another vessel." And he said to her,
"There is not a vessel more." And the oil stayed. Then she came and told the man of 7
God. And he said, "Go, sell the oil, and pay thy debt, and live thou and thy children on the rest."

And at another time, it happened, that Elisha 8
passed to Shunem, where was a rich woman;
and she constrained him to eat bread. And afterwards as often as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat bread. And she said to her 9 husband, "Behold now, I perceive that this man, who continually passeth by, is a holy man of God. Let us make a little chamber, I 10

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. When good men form alliances and associations with wicked men they may expect to suffer for it. Jehoshaphat had, before this, endangered his own life, by going to Ramoth-gilead, with Ahab; yet, as if he had forgot this he joins his son. When difficulties occur, he reflects on his error, and inquires for a prophet. He ought to have done this before he engaged in this war. It was happy that in this case, a distinguished prophet had accompanied the army, unknown to its commanders. Let us avoid all unnecessary intercourse with the ungodly, lest we partake of their plagues.

2. From the language of Joram, and the address of Elisha,
we learn how soon wicked men despond. Having forsaken God, conscience tells them, they have nothing to expect but his displeasure. What will they do, when sent to the idols which they have set up and worshipped? When sickness comes, or death approaches, what will ye do when sent to your money, to your pleasures, to your gay company? can they save you? Think of such seasons. They will come; and "what fruit will ye then have in those things of which you will be ashamed?"

27. And offered him. To whom did he offer him? I think to the tutelar divinity of the city, which from its name was the same. (See Buxtorf, on מלך.) This conduct of the king of Moab shocked the Israelites, so that they departed.

CHAP. IV. 1. See Introduction, Part II. ch. iv. § 1. and ch. vii. § 2.

7. Go sell the oil. In this manner, the prophet relieved the distressed

3. The conduct of the prophet towards the two kings, shows that we ought to respect persons, not according to their wealth and rank, but according to their moral characters. How improper is it, especially for ministers, to give flattering titles, to bow and cringe to men of wealth, however wicked and ungodly? By so doing, they encourage them in their sin, and incur great guilt in the sight of God. Elisha treated with holy displeasure, the idolatrous king of Israel, while he showed the greatest respect to pious Jehoshaphat. It is the character of a good man, "that a vile-person is contemned in his sight," however great, "and he loves and honours "all that fear the Lord."

4. How dreadful the superstition and rites of idolaters. They have stained the altars of their idols with human blood; not with the blood of enemies only, but with the blood of their own offspring. This was, and still is, a common practice in the heathen world; and this should stimulate the exertions of the whole christian world, to spread the knowledge of God, and his salvation;
to turn men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan
to God.

widow, and delivered her sons from being taken and sold for bondmen.

8. Rich woman. So our old translators, Coverdale and Matthews;
the Geneva, "great in estimation." As titles were unknown among the Jews, she could not be great, by birth, or marriage, in any other way than by being rich. So Luther, and other foreign translators.

10. A little chamber. This denotes a building called by the Arabs yet-

pray thee, on the wall; and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a seat, and a lamp, that when he cometh to us, he may turn 11 in thither." Now it happened one day, that he came thither, and he turned into the cham-
 12 ber, and lay there. And he said to Gehazi, his servant, "Call this Shunemite." And when he had called her, she stood before 13 him. And he said to him, "Say now to her, 'Behold, thou hast been careful for us with all this care; what is to be done for thee? Wouldst thou be spoken for to the king, or to the captain of the host?' And she answered;
 14 'I dwell among mine own people.'" And he said, "What then is to be done for her?" And Gehazi answered, "Verily she hath no 15 child, and her husband is old." And he said, "Call her." And when he had called her, she 16 stood at the door. And he said, "About this season, according to the time of life, thou shalt embrace a son." And she said, "Nay, my lord, man of God, do not deceive thy hand-17 maid." But the woman conceived, and bare a son at the season, according to the time of life, as Elisha had said to her.
 18 And when the child was grown, it happened one day, that he went out to his father to the 19 reapers. And he said to his father, "My head, my head." And he said to a lad, "Carry him to his mother." And when he had taken him,
 20 and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, and then died. And she went up, and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went 22 out. And she called to her husband, and said, "Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that I may run to the 23 man of God; and I will soon return." And he said, "Why wouldst thou go to him to day? it is neither new moon, nor sabbath." But she 24 said, "It is proper for me to go." She then ordered an ass to be saddled, and said to her servant, "Drive on; slack not my riding, except I bid thee." So she went, and came to 25 the man of God to mount Carmel. And when the man of God saw her afar off, he said to Gehazi, his servant, "Behold, yonder is the Shunemite: Run now, I pray thee, to meet 26 her, and say to her, 'Is it well with thee? well with thy husband? well with the child?' And she answered, "Well." But when she 27 came to the man of God to the hill, she laid hold on his feet; and Gehazi came near to thrust her away. And the man of God said, "Let her alone for her soul is distressed within her: although Jehovah hath hidden from me the cause, and hath not told me of it." Then 28 she said, "Did I desire a son of my lord? did I not say, 'Do not deceive me?'" Then he 29 said to Gehazi, "Gird up thy loins, and take my staff in thy hand, and go thy way: if thou meet any man, salute him not; and if any salute thee, answer him not again: and lay my staff upon the face of the child." And the mother 30 of the child said, "As Jehovah liveth, and as thyself livest, I will not leave thee." And he arose, and followed her. And Gehazi passed 31 on before them, and laid the staff upon the face of the child; but there was neither voice, nor any sensation. So he returned to meet him, and told him, saying, "The child is not awaked." And when Elisha entered the house, 32 behold, the child was dead, and laid upon his bed. He went in therefore, and shut the door 33 upon them two and prayed to Jehovah. And 34 he went up, and lay upon the child, and put his own mouth upon his mouth, and his own eyes upon his eyes, and his own hands upon his hands: and he stretched himself upon the child; and the flesh of the child became warm. He then returned, and walked to and fro in 35 the house; and went up, and stretched himself an Oleah, generally at some distance from the house, like a summer-house in our gardens.

13. I dwell among, &c. That is, I live among my friends, and want nothing from the king or his servants.

16. According to the time, &c. Comp. ch. xviii. 10. and Note there.

23. It is neither new moon, &c. By this it appears, that it was usual to visit the prophets at such seasons; most probably, for religious instruction. She seems not to have informed her husband of the death of her son.

29. Salute him not. Elisha, by this, wished Gehazi to make the greatest haste. For their salutations were tedious and ceremonious.

32—36. Were the means Elisha used, in themselves sufficient to restore suspended animation? I think they were not; as he must have been dead some time; and consequently while Elisha made use of them, he was looking to God by prayer and faith, to restore the life of this child, which at upon him; and the child sneezed seven times, 36 and the child opened his eyes. And he called Gehazi, and said, "Call this Shunemite."

 So he called her. And when she had come in 37 to him, he said, "Take up thy son." Then she went in, and fell at his feet, and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her son,
 and went out.

38 And Elisha came to Gilgal; and there was a dearth in the land; and the sons of the prophets were sitting before him: and he said to his servants, "Set on the great pot, and boil 39 pottage for the sons of the prophets." And one went out to the field to gather mallows, and found a wild-gourd, and gathered his lap
 full of wild-gourd leaves, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew 40 them not. So they poured out for the men to eat. But as they were eating of the pottage, they cried out, and said, "O man of God, death is in the pot." And they could eat no more.
 41 But he said, "Bring meal, and cast it into the pot:" and this being done, he said, "Pour out for the people, that they may eat." And there was nothing hurtful in the pot.

42 And there came a man from Baal-shalisha, and brought the man of God bread of the first-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. We learn that the families of good men may become poor, and be subject to the claims of the creditor; and when it is in their power, they are to act honestly, by satisfying such claims. The prophet directs the widow to sell the oil and pay her debts first. None of the oil was her's, till her creditors were paid. This maxim is necessary to be observed in the present day; "Owe no man any thing, render to all their due," if we leave ever so little for ourselves. Widows, if able, should honestly pay their husbands' debts, and labour and save to do it. It is better to beg or starve, than defraud others, or deal deceitfully, which will entail a lasting blemish on our families and our honesty.

2. We see, in the Shunemite, riches united with liberality and piety; and in the prophet, the most grateful heart. She respected him as a holy man of God, and prepared a place for his abode, when he came that way. The place was comfortably furnished, if not splendidly. Indeed, men of God are content with what is necessary; and Elisha repaid, in promising a son, all the kindness of the Shunemite. On the one hand, then, be "ready to fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full green ears of corn. And he said, "Give to the people that they may eat." And his servant said, 43

 "What, should I set this before a hundred men?" He said again, "Give to the people, that they may eat: for thus saith Jehovah,
 'They shall eat, and shall leave.'" So he set 44
 the loaves before them, and they did eat, and left, according to the word of Jehovah.

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 893. Naaman being sent to the king of Israel, is cured of his leprosy; Elisha refuseth his presents; Gehazi taking them, is smitten with the leprosy.

Now Naaman, chief captain of the host of 1
 the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honourable, because by him Jehovah had given deliverance unto Syria. He was also a man of valour, but a leper. And some 2 Syrian hordes had gone out and had brought away captive, out of the land of Israel, a little girl; and she waited on Naaman's wife. And 3
 she said to her mistress, "Would to God my lord were with the prophet who is in Samaria!
 for he would recover him from his leprosy."
 And Naaman went in, and told his lord, saying, 4
 "Thus and thus saith the girl who is from the

distribute, and willing to communicate, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." And on the other, let such as are obligated, show, in every way, their gratitude.

3. See how precarious our dearest comforts are! Parents must not depend upon the lives of their children. This widow's son was well in the morning, but dead at noon. What a melancholy alteration! Those who have relations and children, should be as those who have none. "Man cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down. His days are as grass; as a flower of the field so it flourisheth; the wind passeth over it and he is gone."

4. While we wait on the Lord in the way of duty, we may hope for protection and provision. These miracles of mercy in multiplying food, and defending from poison, establish our confidence in God, who can perform the most illustrious things, and whose perfections are immutably the same. We are not to expect extraordinary and miraculous things now; but God still governs the world; and it is our duty, and will be our wisdom and happiness, to "cast all our care upon him who careth for us," and hath said, "I will never leave nor forsake thee."

CHAP. V. 4. And Naaman went. The connexion of this with the following verse renders it clear that Naaman should be supplied as understood in the text; for it may easily be supposed that his wife would inform him.

length was done. This was a striking miracle.

43. Before a hundred men. From this we collect that the loaves were small, most probably only like our rolls.

land of Israel." And the king of Syria said, "Depart, go thither; and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel." And he departed, and took with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand shekels of gold, and ten changes of raiment. And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, which was to this purport: "When this letter cometh to thee, thou must recover from his leprosy, Naaman, my servant; behold, I have sent him with it." And when the king of Israel had read the letter, he rent his clothes, and said, "Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man sendeth to me to recover a man from his leprosy? Consider now, I pray you, and see how he seeketh an occasion of quarrelling with me."

But when Elisha, the man of God, heard that the king of Israel had rent his garments, he sent to the king, saying, "Why hast thou rent thy garments? Let now Naaman come to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel."

So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and waited at the door of the house of Elisha. And Elisha sent a messenger to him, saying, "Go and wash, seven times, in the Jordan, and thy flesh shall be restored to thee, and thou shalt be clean." But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, "Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of Jehovah, his God, and touch with his hand the place; and remove the leprosy. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean?"

So he turned and went away in a rage. But one of his servants came near, and spoke to him, and said, "My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing wouldst thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, 'Wash, and be clean?' Then he went down, and bathed himself seven times in the Jordan, according to the word of the man of God: and his flesh was restored like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean."

And he returned, with all his attendants, to the man of God, and went and stood before him: and he said, "Behold, now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel: now, therefore, I pray thee, receive a present from thy servant." But he said, "As Jehovah liveth, before whom I stand, I will receive none." And he urged him to receive it; but he refused. And Naaman said, "Let there, I pray thee, be given to thy servant, two mules' burden of earth; for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering nor sacrifice to other gods, but to Jehovah. In this one thing Jehovah pardon thy servant: When my master goeth into the temple of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the temple of Rimmon; when I bow myself in the temple of Rimmon, will Jehovah pardon thy servant in this thing?" And he said to him, "Go in peace."

He had departed from him, but a little way, when Gebazi, the servant of Elisha, the man of God, said, "Behold, my master hath spared that Syrian, Naaman, by not receiving from him what he brought: but, as Jehovah liveth, I will run after him, and get something from him."

what the girl said. So the Vulg. Dathe, and others.

6. Thou must recover, &c. This letter alarmed the king of Israel, and he considered it as only a pretext to undertake war against him. Indeed there was no such power with him. The prophet could do what the king could not.

10—12. The remedy prescribed seemed, to Naaman, inadequate to produce the effect, and his pride was wounded that the prophet should not so much as come out to him.

14. Seven times, &c. There is a marked respect to this number throughout the scriptures, originally derived, I think, from the number of days in which God made the world.

15. Receive a present. Literally, 'a blessing;' but the word in this connexion obviously has the sense given. Comp. Gen. xxxiii. 11. The prophet permitted Naaman to approach him when he had complied with his direction and received a cure.

18. When I bow myself, &c. Our Dr. Lightfoot and others would render in the past tense, and make this a confession of his idolatry, and a prayer that he might receive forgiveness. "In this thing Jehovah pardon thy servant, that when my master went into the temple of Rimmon, to worship, and he leaned on my hand, and I bowed myself there," &c. They support this version, by observing, that the common one is like asking permission to sin; which it is not reasonable to impute to a man who had just avowed his resolution to worship Jehovah only. In answer, be it remarked, first, that all the ancient versions render, as I have done, after our common version. Secondly, this version is most agreeable to the text, the words naturally suggesting it;—and thirdly, Naaman proposes a case, which must happen in the discharge of his duty. It appears to have been his duty, as chief commander, to attend the king, when he went to worship; and when he did this, he asks, "Will Jehovah pardon him?" Is such an act to be regarded as sinful, and inconsistent with the worship which Jehovah re-

21 So Gehazi followed Naaman. And when Naaman saw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and said,
 22 "Is all well?" And he said, "All is well." My master hath sent me, saying, "Behold, there are now come to me, from mount Ephraim, two young men, of the sons of the prophets: give them, I pray thee, a talent of silver, and two 23 changes of garments." And Naaman said, "Be pleased to accept two talents." And he urged him, and bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments, and laid them upon two of his servants; and they bore them 24 before him. But when he came to the barriers, he took them from their hand, and stowed them in a house; and he let the men go, and they 25 departed. And he went in, and stood before his master. And Elisha said to him, "Whence comest thou, Gehazi?" And he said, "Thy 26 servant hath been no where." And he said to him, "Went not I, in mind, with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee; at the time thou receivedst the silver? So thou mayest purchase garments, and olive-yards, and vine-yards, and sheep, and oxen, and men-servants, and maid-servants; But the 27 leprosy of Naaman shall cleave to thee, and to thy seed for ever." And he went out from his presence, a leper, white as snow.

CHAPTER VI.

B. C. 893. Elisha causeth iron to swim; he discloseth the king of Syria's counsel, and at his request the Syrian army is smitten with blindness.

AND the sons of the prophets said to Elisha, 1
 "Behold now, the place where we dwell with thee is too strait for us. Let us go, we pray 2 thee, unto the Jordan, and take thence every man a beam, and let us make for ourselves a place there, where we may dwell." And he answered, "Go ye." And one said, "Be plea- 3

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. We may here learn the good effects of instructing children in religious principles; this young captive girl carried the knowledge of God into Syria. The miracles of his prophet were a comfort to her mind in slavery, were useful to others, and led the way for Naaman's conversion. Parents should instruct their children in the great truths and principles of religion; as they will be of perpetual use to them, and make them useful to others. We know not where their lot may be cast; therefore we should be solicitous that they may carry their religion along with them.

2. We may see, in the spirit and language of Naaman, how prone men are to prefer their own devices to the direction of unerring wisdom. Naaman wanted a cure, but he would have it in his own way, and was angry at the prophet's plain prescription. We may see instances of it every day. Is not the light of nature better than scripture? Are not the waters of Greece and Rome, the learning and eloquence of their philosophers, better than the plain preaching of the gospel? We ought, say they, to be sober and honest; but what doth such a plain and simple ordinance as the Lord's Supper signify? What can bread and wine mean? So foolishly and absurdly do men argue. They are like Naaman, the worst enemies to themselves; and their leprosy of sin is never likely to be cured, till God's method is tried; that will be found easy and successful. "Wash and be clean." May we learn then, with humility to comply with all that God appoints; "not go about to establish our own righteousness," but cheerfully submit to that method of justification and healing, which God hath appointed, and commanded.

3 We are taught the duty of young converts. They ought to profess the name of the God of Israel, who has healed them. They ought to keep a constant watchfulness over themselves, lest they fall into those sins, in which they formerly lived. They should be willing, when doubtful, to ask advice, how they are to act; and teachers may be reminded, not to lay unnecessary burdens upon them. They are to be tender and gentle to them, as a nurse towards her children.

4. We have a striking instance of the sin and the evil of covetousness. Gehazi, who lived with one of the best of men; who witnessed many miracles, and doubtless, heard the most impressive warnings, and received the best instructions, is yet the slave of the most degrading vice. If we have food and raiment let us therewith be content. "For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." This is illustrated in Gehazi. One sin led to the commission of another. His whole conduct exhibits a total disregard to truth; and the judgment inflicted, was richly deserved. He hoped to conceal his sin, but was exposed to shame.

quires? If the act be considered in a civil light, he might bend in respect to the king, without regarding the idol.

22. My master hath sent, &c. How easily can a man invent falsehoods, to promote his own interest.

24. To the barriers. The sense of the word (מַעְבָּרִים) is doubtful. The Greek and Vulgate render, in the dark; others, in a secret place; and some, to an elevated place. I adopt, with Dathe and others, this sense; and suppose that the earth raised as a mound to the walls of the city is meant.

26. Went not I, in mind, &c. Jehovah had suggested to the prophet's mind the whole transaction of his covetous and wicked servant.

CHAP. VI. 2. Unto the Jordan. This school of the prophets seems to have been at Jericho or at Gilgal, both which places were not far from the Jordan. The banks of the Jordan were anciently covered with wood, as, in some places, they still are.

sed, I pray thee, to go with thy servants." And 4 he answered, "I will go." So he went with them. And when they came to the Jordan, 5 they cut down wood. But as one was felling a beam, the axe-head fell into the water; and he cried, and said, "Alas, master! for it was bor-6 rowed." And the man of God said, "Where fell it?" And he showed him the place. And he cut down a stick, and cast it in thither; and 7 caused the iron to swim. He then said, "Take it up to thee." And he put out his hand, and took it.
 8 Then the king of Syria, made war against Israel, and took counsel with his servants, saying,
 "In such and such a place, I will lie in wait."
 9 And the man of God sent to the king of Israel, saying, "Beware that thou pass not such a 10 place; for there the Syrians lie in wait." And the king of Israel sent to the place which the man of God told him and warned him of; and he was thus, not once, nor twice, saved from 11 the ambush laid there. And the mind of the king of Syria was much troubled on account of this thing; and he called his servants, and said to them, "Will ye not tell me who betrays us 12 to the king of Israel?" And one of his servants said, "None, my lord, O king; but Elisha, the prophet, who is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words which thou speakest in thy bed chamber."
 13 And he said "Go and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him." And it was told him, saying, "Behold, he is in Dothan." 14 Therefore sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a great host; and they came by night, and 15 encompassed the city. And when the servant of the man of God, had risen early, and gone forth, behold, a host with horses and chariots, encompassed the city. And his servant said to him, "Alas, my master! what shall we do?"

 And he answered, "Fear not; for they that are 16
 with us are more than they that are with them."
 And Elisha prayed, and said, "O Jehovah, I 17 pray thee, open his eyes; that he may see."
 And Jehovah opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha. And when they came down 18 towards him, Elisha prayed to Jehovah, and said, "Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindness." And he smote them with blindness, according to the word of Elisha.

And Elisha said to them, "This is not the way, 19 nor is this the city: follow me, and I will bring you to the man whom ye seek." But he led them to Samaria. And when they had come 20 into Samaria, Elisha said, "O Jehovah, open the eyes of these men, that they may see." And Jehovah opened their eyes, and they saw; and,
 behold, they were in the midst of Samaria.
 And the king of Israel said to Elisha, when he 21 saw them, "My father, shall I smite? shall I smite?" And he answered, "Thou shalt not 22 smite. Wouldst thou smite even those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword and with thy bow? Set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their master." And he prepared great provision for 23 them; and when they had eaten and drank, he sent them away, and they went to their master.
 So the hordes of Syria, for some time, came no more into the land of Israel.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. It will give pleasure to good men, to behold the prosperity of the schools of the prophets.
 They are the fountains, whence issue streams to water the churches.
 In them are formed spiritual labourers, who are to instruct and teach others the ways of God. They are taught, that in their turn they may teach; and blessed with religious advantages, that they may become blessings to one another. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest, that he would incline them to prepare for the work,

8, 9. Lie in wait. I have followed Houbigant in this version; and the whole narrative supports it. Dathe renders to the same purpose.

12. Elisha, the prophet. The cure of Naaman must have spread the fame of Elisha among the Syrians; and it is probable, that some might be induced to inquire more particularly concerning his miracles, and thence infer that he detected their schemes.

13. Dothan. A city not very far from Samaria. Gen. xxxvii. 17.
 The king resolved that he would surprise and carry off the prophet; as if the God who, by him, had defeated his past stratagems, could not defeat his present one.

17. Horses and chariots of fire. This appearance was designed to represent the care of providence and the manner in which God preserved his servant.

21. Shall I smite? The king of Israel seems eager to despatch these men; but the reply of the prophet checks him.

22. Wouldst thou, &c. It is not usual to smite men taken captive

CHAPTER VII.

B. C. 892. The siege of Samaria; Elisha foretelleth plenty; the unbelieving lord trodden to death.

24 Now after this, Ben-hadad, king of Syria, assembled all his host, and went up, and besieg-25 ed Samaria. And there was a great famine in Samaria; and, behold, they besieged it, until an ass's head was sold for eighty shekels of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of vetches for five 26 shekels of silver. And as the king of Israel was passing by upon the wall, there cried a woman to him, saying, "Help, my lord, O king." 27 And he said, "If Jehovah do not help thee, whence can I help thee? out of the barn-floor, 28 or out of the wine-press?" And the king said to her, "What aileth thee?" And she answered, "This woman said to me, 'Give thy son that we may eat him to day, and we will eat 29 my son to morrow.' So we boiled my son, and ate him; and I said to her on the next day,
'Give thy son, that we may eat him: and she hath hid her son."
30 And when the king heard the words of the woman, he rent his garments; and he passed by upon the wall, and the people looked, and,
behold, he had sackcloth within upon his flesh.
31 Then he said, "God do so and more also to me, if the head of Elisha, the son of Shaphat, shall stand on him this day." Elisha was then sit- 32 ting in his own house, and the elders sitting with him; and the king sent a man, one of his own attendants: but ere the messenger came to him, he said to the elders, "Know ye not that this son of a murderer hath sent to take off my head?

Observe, when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door: is not the sound of his master's feet behind him?" And 33 while he was yet talking with them, the messenger came, and the king who had followed him,
and he said, "Behold, this evil is from Jehovah,
what can I any more expect from Jehovah?"
Then Elisha said, "Hear ye the word of Jeho- 1 vah; Thus saith Jehovah, 'To morrow about this time shall a seah of fine flour be sold for a shekel, and two seahs of barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria.' Then a lord, on whose 2 hand the king leaned, answered the man of God, and said, "Behold, were Jehovah to make windows in the heavens, this thing might be?"
And he said, "Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat of it."

Now there were four leprous men at the en- 3 trance of the gate: and they said one to another,
"Why should we sit here until we die?" If we 4 say, we will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there: and if we abide here, we die also. Now, therefore, come, that the harvest may be furnished with numerous and faithful labourers.

2. From the visionary scene, we may learn how happy God's servants are in having angels, and the God of angels for their guard. What a constant source of consolation is it in times of danger, that "greater is he that is with them; than all who are against them. If God be for us, who shall be against us?" When "without are fightings, and within are fears," angels are their guards; he "gives them charge concerning us, to keep us in all our ways." Happy those who can by the eye of faith see this.

3. We are taught from the prophet's conduct, that we should exercise kindness rather than severity, even towards enemies. Wrath and revenge dwell in the bosom of fools, and men have often reason to repent of the deeds which these passions produce. Let us then sacrifice resentment to religion; and follow the advice so frequently urged upon us. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head."

in war, and wouldst thou smite those who are in this particular manner brought into thy power?

25. Cab of vetches. Buchart has clearly proved that זרייתים was a name given to a kind of pulse, or vetches, which abounded in Judea. The fourth part of a cab was less than a pint of our measure: and five shekels for so small a quantity proves the severity of the famine. Geddes justly observes that the common translation dove's dung is ridiculous.

27—29. Compare Deut. xxviii. 53—57.

31. Shall stand on him, &c. Had Elisha encouraged the king to hold out by promises of deliverance? The context seems to require this; and the king falls into a rage because this deliverance was delayed; as if the delay was owing to the prophet.

32. Son of a murderer. Ahab had been guilty of shedding innocent blood, and especially the blood of Naboth. Joram seems to have repented of his rash oath, and to have followed the messenger to prevent the execution of the prophet.

33. I have supplied, with Dathe, what is understood. The close of the 32nd verse makes it evident that the king followed the messenger; and the 17th and 18th verses of ch. vii. lead us to believe that it was the king who addressed the prophet, and to whom Elisha spoke, as well as to others.

CHAP. VII. 1. A seah. Somewhat more than a peck.

and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians; if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they 5 kill us, we shall but die." And they rose up in the twilight, to go to the camp of the Syrians: and when they had come to the outermost part of the camp of the Syrians, behold, there was
6 no man there. For "Jehovah" had made the host of the Syrians to hear a noise of chariots, and a noise of horses, the noise of a great host: and they said one to another, "Lo, the king of Israel hath hired against us the kings of the Hethites, and the kings of the Egyptians, to 7 come upon us." Wherefore they arose and fled in the twilight, and left their tents, and their horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was,
8 and fled for their life. And when these lepers came to the outermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and ate and drank, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it; and they came again, and entered into another tent, and carried thence
9 also, and went and hid it. They then said one to another, "We do not well; this day, being a day of good tidings, and we are silent: and should we delay till the morning light, we shall meet with the punishment of our guilt: come now, and let us go and tell the king's household."
10 So they came and called to the gate-keepers of the city; and they told them saying, "We went to the camp of the Syrians, and, behold, neither man, nor the voice of man, was there; but horses tied, and asses tied, and the tents
11 as they were." And the gate-keepers proclaimed this within, and told it to the king's household.
12 And the king arose in the night, and said to his servants, "I will now show you what the Syrians intend to do to us. They know that we are famished; they are, therefore, gone out of the camp, to hide themselves in the field, saying, "When they come out of the city, we may seize them alive, and so get into the city." And one of his servants answered and said, 13 "Let some take, I pray thee, two of the five horses which remain, (for behold, they only remained, of all the multitude which were in Israel, unconsumed,) and let us send and see." They took, therefore, two horsemen; and the 14 king sent after the host of the Syrians, saying, "Go and see." And they went after them to 15 the Jordan; and, lo, all the way was full of garments and utensils, which the Syrians had cast away in their haste. And the messengers returned, and told the king. And the people 16 went out, and spoiled the tents of the Syrians. So a seah of fine flour was sold for a shekel, and two seahs of barley for a shekel, according to the word of Jehovah.

And the king appointed the lord, on whose 17 hand he leaned, to have the charge of the gate; and the people trod him down in the gate, and he died, as the man of God had said who spoke when the king came down to him. And it 18 came to pass as the man of God had spoken to the king saying, "Two seahs of barley for a shekel, and a seah of fine flour for a shekel, shall be sold, to morrow, about this time in the gate of Samaria." And that lord answered the man 19 of God, and said, "Now, behold, were Jehovah to make windows in the heavens, such a thing might be?" And he said, "Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat of it." And so it fell out unto him; for the people trod 20 him down in the gate, and he died.

CHAP. VII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. The language of the king of Israel may teach us, that the judgments of God often make the wicked worse, and lead them to the most absurd, instead of reasonable, conclusions. v. 31. "Then he said, 'God do so, and more also to me, if the head of Elisha, the son of Shaphat, shall stand on him this day.' Had he reasoned thus, 'I will pull down the calves, and

6. * Many mss.

destroy the prophets of Baal; I will reform the idolatry and vices of the country;' he had reasoned wisely. But nothing will serve him but Elisha's head, who was the best man in the kingdom; the greatest friend and benefactor to the whole country. Thus sinners often fret against God. May we endeavour to guard our hearts and govern our tempers, especially in afflictive seasons, lest we should charge God fool:

CHAPTER VIII.

B. C. 891. The Shunemite hath her land restored; Ben-hadad dies, and Hazael succeedeth him; Jehoram's wicked reign, and death.

- 1 Before this period, Elisha had spoken to the woman, whose son he had restored to life, saying, "Arise, and go, thou and thine household, and sojourn wheresoever thou canst sojourn: for Jehovah hath called for a famine; yea, a famine of seven years is coming on the land."
- 2 And the woman arose, and did according to the word of the man of God: and she went with her household, and sojourned seven years, in the
- 3 land of the Philistines. Now at the end of the seven years, the woman returned out of the land of the Philistines: and she went to implore the king to restore her house and her land.
- 4 The king was then talking with Gehazi, the servant of the man of God, saying, "Tell me, I pray thee, all the great things that Elisha
- 5 hath done." And as he was telling the king how he had restored a dead body to life, behold, the woman, whose son he had restored to life, came to implore the king to restore her house ishly. He is always wise and righteous. But we may see every day, that "the foolishness of man perverteth his way, and then his heart fretteth against the Lord."

2. The reasoning of these lepers is applicable to our spiritual concerns, and the method to be taken for the security of our souls. When the hearts of penitents are ready to be overwhelmed with sorrow and despair, let them venture on Christ, and the terms of the gospel; they must perish without him, and can but perish at his feet. He is not an enemy, however Satan and the world may represent him, but a friend. He who applies here, is sure to live. But if there was only a chance or probability, yet surely it is the wisest way. If we must perish, let it be at the feet of Christ, confessing our sins, and imploring mercy.

5. Let us learn, as the chief lesson, the fatal consequence of unbelief. This nobleman thought himself very witty upon the prophet;

and her land. And Gehazi said, "My lord, O king, this is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life." And the king 6 asked the woman, and she told him. So the king appointed for her a certain officer, saying, "Restore all that was her's, and the whole produce of the field, since the day that she left the land, even until now."

And Elisha went to Damascus; and Ben-ha- 7 dad, the king of Syria, was sick; and it was told him, saying, "The man of God is come hither." And the king said to Hazael, "Take a present 8 in thy hand, and go, meet the man of God, and inquire of Jehovah by him, saying, 'Shall I recover of this disease?'" So Hazael went to 9 meet him, and took a present with him, even of every good thing of Damascus, forty camels' burden, and came and stood before him, and said, "Thy son Ben-hadad, king of Syria, hath sent me to thee, saying, 'Shall I recover of this disease?'" And Elisha said to him, "Go, say 10 to him, 'Thou mayest certainly recover:' yet Jehovah hath showed me that he shall surely die." Then having looked him in the face, 11

but he was trodden down as mire in the streets. His greatness and rank, and the king's favour, were no security to him. Thus men of unbelieving hearts, by despising the word of the Lord, dishonour and displease him; deprive themselves of good, and are wretched at last. They shall view eternal life at a distance; shall see others partake of it, while they miss of it, and are trodden down to hell. Thus "the rich man lifted up his eyes in torments, seeing Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." They may see, but shall never taste, the heavenly banquet. They despised the prophets of the Lord, and hardened their hearts against the God of heaven; and thus "judge themselves unworthy of eternal life." Let us humbly submit to the authority of God, and heartily receive his whole will without cavilling or disputing. "Take heed, brethren, lest there be found in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God;" for this will exclude you from the promised rest.

learned reader may consult the note on the passage in my Hebrew Bible.

CHAP. VIII. 1. Before this period. Compare ch. iv. 38.—A famine of seven, &c. Did the siege of Samaria occur about this period? This will account for its great severity; as no sufficient quantity of provisions could be stored up, and as the Syrians, by foraging, &c, would only increase it. Geddes contends that it happened before.

4. The king was then talking with Gehazi. This too seems a proof that the transaction happened at a prior period: while Gehazi was yet the attendant of Elisha; and before his leprosy. For it is not probable that the king of Israel would converse so familiarly with a leper. Our interpreters, to solve the difficulty, make him speak to him at a distance.

6. Restore all that was her's. Restore the land, and pay the worth of its produce, deducting the expence of cultivation.

7—9. The cure of Naaman, and the many other proofs which the Syrians had of the power of Jehovah, made them respect his prophet, and on his visiting Damascus, the sick king is desirous to learn from him what would be the event of his complaint.

10. Go, say to him, &c. All the versions follow the Keri (ח) in this passage. The text has the negative, "Thou shalt not recover." Many mss. follow the Keri; and I consider it the true reading.—First, because Hazael reports this to be the answer of the prophet, ver. 14; and secondly, because there appears to be a designed opposition between what might be, steadfastly, and long, the man of God wept.

 12 And Hazeal said, "Why weepeth my lord?"
 And he answered, "Because I know the evil which thou wilt do unto the children of Israel.
 Their strong holds wilt thou set on fire; and their young men thou wilt slay with the sword;
 and their children thou wilt dash in pieces; and 13 rip up their women with child." And Hazeal said, "How shall thy servant, who is but a dog, do such great things?" And Elisha answered,
 "Jehovah hath showed me that thou shalt be 14 king over Syria." So he departed from Elisha,
 and went to his master; who said to him,
 "What said Elisha to thee?" And he answered, "He told me that thou mayest assured-15 ly recover." But it happened on the morrow, that he took a fly-net, and dipped it in water,
 and spread it on his face, and he died: and Ha-zael reigned in his stead.
 16 And in the fifth year of Joram, the son of Ahab, king of Israel, ° Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, began to reign.
 17 Thirty-two years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem. And he walked in the ways of the kings 18 of Israel, and did like the house of Ahab; for the daughter of Ahab was his wife. But, although he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah. Yet 19 Jehovah would not destroy Judah for David his servant's sake, as he had promised him both to give to him and to his children a lamp always.

 In his days Edom revolted from under the 20
 hand of Judah, and made a king over themselves. So Jehoram went over to Zair, and all 21
 the chariots with him; and he rose by night,
 and smote the Edomites who had encompassed him, and the captains of the chariots: and the people fled to their own homes. Yet Edom 22 revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day: and at the same time Libnah revolted.
 And the rest of the acts of Jehoram, and all 23 that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. And Jehoram slept with his 24 fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and Ahaziah, his son, reigned in his stead.

CHAP. VIII. 16. ° Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. Observe another instance of the power of God over universal nature, and the awfulness of his judgments. That is a remarkable phrase in verse 1. "for the Lord hath called for a famine." So in Psalm cv, 16. "Moreover he called for a famine on the land; he broke the whole staff of bread."
 All calamities are from God, and come at his call, where and when he bids them, and he appoints how long they shall continue. Let us regard his hand in all our calamities and deliverances. They who despise or overlook it, may expect greater and heavier afflictions.

and what would in fact be the event of the complaint. The disease was not in its own nature mortal, so that he might recover; but through the means improperly used, death would be the consequence.

11. Steadfastly and long. I derive the word from שָׁמַיִם and so both the Chaldee and Arabic derived it. The common version, deriving from שָׁמַיִם is here improper. For why should the prophet be ashamed?

13. Who is but a dog. That is, how can I who am a man of low condition, do such great things? Hazeal, does not advert to the cruelties stated, but only to the great warlike achievements predicted. The common version, which makes Hazeal speak as if he were offended that the prophet should think him capable of such inhumanity and barbarous deeds, is inconsistent with the close of the verse. If this had been the sense, how could he style it this great thing? The version, which I have given, is that of the best modern translators. The answer of the prophet supports this view of the passage, as it shows how he was to do these great things; not as a private individual, but as a king.

14. He told me, &c. Hazeal only reports the first part of Elisha's answer: but studiously conceals the second; not to offend his master.

Syr. 3 mss. some copies of Sept. and Vulg.

2. Learn how much of the providence of God is to be seen in apparently little contingencies: the Shunemite came in just as Gehazi was telling her story. Those who observe the dealings of God, have often seen such things. His wisdom and goodness have timed certain events, so as to make them peculiarly remarkable, and in their consequences peculiarly comfortable and happy. "In the mount of difficulty the Lord is seen." "Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving-kindness of the Lord."

3. See how afflictions, especially those of sickness, change men's

15. And he took a fly-net. In the holy scriptures, the very ambiguity of the original should be regarded. Now there is nothing said which makes it clear that Hazeal took the fly-net; on the other hand, the text rather suggests that the king did this himself. And if his complaint was a fever, he might adopt this as a speedy remedy, but which, stopping the perspiration, occasioned his death. According to Josephus, this king was greatly beloved by his subjects; and if Hazeal had murdered him, would he have been raised to the throne? Besides, is it likely that the king should be alone, unattended by his physicians? Would not they, rather than Hazeal, be the attendants of the sick monarch? In short, there is nothing to support the common opinion either in the text or context; and its only foundation is, that Hazeal succeeded him on the throne; and as the love of power is so prevalent, it is presumed, that he contrived to smother him.
 We are not informed that Ben-badad had any children; and Hazeal might succeed him by the choice of the people. The probabilities are, I think, against the received interpretation.

16. The words omitted are inconsistent with the account given in 2
 Chron. xxi. 1. Jehoram did begin his reign before his father died.

CHAPTER IX.

B. C. 884. The reign of Ahaziah, and the conspiracy of Jehu, against the king of Israel.

25 IN the twelfth year of Joram, the son of Ahab, king of Israel, did Ahaziah, the son of Jehoram, 26 king of Judah, begin to reign. Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah, when he began to reign;
and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Athaliah, the grand-27 daughter of Omri, king of Israel. And he walked in the way of the house of Ahab, and did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, like the house of Ahab: for he was related to the house of Ahab.
28 And he went with Joram, the son of Ahab, to war against Hazael, king of Syria, at Ramoth-29 gilead; and the Syrians wounded Joram. And king Joram went back to be healed in Jezreel, of the wounds which he had received from the Syrians, at Ramoth, when he fought against Hazael, king of Syria. And Ahaziah, the son of Jehoram, king of Judah, went down to see Jo-ram, the son of Ahab, in Jezreel, because he was sick.
1 And Elisha, the prophet, called one of the sons of the prophets, and said to him, "Gird up thy loins, and take this vial of oil in thy 2 hand, and go to Ramoth-gilead: And when thou comest thither, look out there for Jehu, the son of Jehoshaphat, the son of Nimshi; and go in, and call him from among his brethren, 3 and bring him into an inner-chamber: Then take the vial of oil, and pour it upon his head, minds. When Ben-hadad was sick, Rimmon was nothing; he then wanted the help of a prophet; of that same prophet, he had sent a detachment to seize and whom probably he intended to destroy. He now reverences him as a father, and sends him a present. Afflictions show men the vanity of their idols, their riches, and pleasures. Then they will seek God early, have other thoughts of his ministers, and value the counsels and prayers of those whom before they despised. Many have reason to say, "before we were afflicted, we went astray, but since, we have learned to keep thy law."

26. Grand-daughter. Omri was the father of Ahab; and in the 18th verse we are expressly told, that his mother was the daughter of Ahab. So the margin renders the text.

CHAP. IX. 1. Go to Ramoth-gilead. From this, it appears that the army of Israel abode at Ramoth, after the battle with the Syrians.

11. This mad-man. The young prophet is thus described; perhaps,

and say, 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'I anoint thee king over Israel.' Then open the door, and flee, and tarry not."

So the young man, the young prophet, went 4 to Ramoth-gilead. And when he came, behold, 5 the captains of the host were sitting; and he said, "I have a message to thee, O captain." And Jehu said, "To which among us all?" And he said, "To thee, O captain." And he 6 arose, and went into the house: and the young prophet poured the oil on his head, and said to him, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, I anoint thee king over the people of Jehovah, over Israel. And thou shalt smite the house of 7 Ahab, thy master, that I may avenge the blood of my servants the prophets, and the blood of all the servants of Jehovah, at the hand of Jezebel. For the whole house of Ahab shall perish; and 8 I will cut off every male from Ahab, however shut up or secure in Israel: And I will make 9 the house of Ahab, like the house of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha, the son of Ahijah: And the dogs shall eat Je- 10 zebel in the field of Jezreel; no one shall bury her." And he opened the door and fled.

Then Jehu came forth to the servants of his 11 lord: and one said to him, "Is all well? why came this mad-man to thee?" And he said to them, "Ye know the man, and his conversation." And they said, "False; tell us now." 12 And he said, "Thus and thus spoke he to me, saying, 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'I anoint thee king over Israel.'" They then hastily took every 13

4. Let us learn to watch narrowly the workings of the heart: especially to guard against pride, ambition, and the love of preeminence, which frequently lead men to commit the worst wickedness to accomplish their ends. Let those who are poor and low, be content, and not desirous of great things. They know not what a snare and mischief, prosperity may prove to them. These things change men's manners, generally for the worse; which is a considerable reason why we should "have our conversation without covetousness, and learn in whatever state we are, therein to be content."

both from his habit, and the vehement manner in which he might be agitated, when about to deliver the message of Jehovah.

13. Hastily took every, &c. They must have been ready for this revolt before. Indeed, the conduct of the house of Ahab was sufficient to rouse all against them.

13—20. This revolt of the army was unknown to the king, until their man his garment, and put them under him, on the top of the stairs, and blew with trumpets, 14 saying, "Jehu is king." So Jehu, the son of Jehoshaphat, the son of Nimshi, conspired against Joram. Now Joram and all Israel, had defended Ramoth-gilead, against Hazael, king 15 of Syria; But king Joram had returned to Jezreel, to be healed of the wounds which he had received from the Syrians, when he fought with Hazael, king of Syria. And Jehu said, "If it be your mind, let no one escape out of the city to 16 go to tell this in Jezreel." Then Jehu rode in a chariot, and went to Jezreel; for Joram lay there. And Ahaziah, king of Judah, had come 17 down to see Joram. And the watchman, who stood on the tower of Jezreel, spied the company of Jehu as he came, and said, "I see a company." And Joram said, "Take a horseman, and send to meet them, and let him say, 'Come ye in 18 peace?'" So there went one on horseback to meet him, and said, "Thus saith the king, 'Come ye in peace?'" And Jehu said, "What hast thou to do with peace? turn thou behind me." And the watchman told, saying, "The messenger came to them, but returneth not." 19 Then he sent out a second on horseback, who came to them, and said, "Thus saith the king, 'Come ye in peace?'" And Jehu answered, "What hast thou to do with peace? turn thou 20 behind me." And the watchman told, saying, "He came also unto them, but returneth not: and the driving is like the driving of Jehu, the son of Nimshi; for he driveth with speed." 21 And Joram said, "Make ready." And his chariot was made ready. And Joram, king of Israel, and Ahaziah, king of Judah, went out, each in his chariot; and they went out against Jehu, and met him in the field of Naboth, the Jezreelite. And when Joram saw Jehu, he 22 said, "Comest thou in peace, Jehu?" And he answered, "How in peace, while the idolatries and sorceries of thy mother Jezebel are so many?" Joram then turned his hands, and fled, 23 and said to Ahaziah, "Treason, O Ahaziah." But Jehu drew a bow with his full strength, and 24 smote Joram between his shoulders; and the arrow went through his heart, and he sunk down in his chariot. Then said Jehu to Bidkar, his captain, "Take him up and cast him in a part 25 of the field of Naboth, the Jezreelite: for I remember how, that when I and thou rode together after Ahab, his father, Jehovah laid this burden upon him, saying, 'As surely, (saith 26 Jehovah,) as I saw yesterday the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons, so I will requite thee, in this field, saith Jehovah.' Now, therefore, take him up, and cast him into that field, according to the word of Jehovah."

But when Ahaziah, the king of Judah, saw 27 this, he fled by the way of the garden-house. But Jehu followed him, and said, "Smite him also in the chariot." * And they smote him in the chariot at the ascent to Gur, which is by Ibleam. And he fled to Megiddo, and died there. And his servants carried him in a 28 chariot to Jerusalem, and buried him in his own sepulchre, with his fathers, in the city of David. And in the eleventh year of Joram, 29 the son of Ahab, Ahaziah became king over Judah.

CHAP. IX.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. Observe again, how God disposes of kingdoms and hearts as he pleases. He gave the kingdom to Jehu; united the hearts of captains and soldiers to him, without envy or any opposition. He raiseth up and putteth down princes, and influenceth the spirits of men, to bring about his own purposes. Let us reverence him, "who doeth as he pleaseth among the armies of heaven, and the inhabitants of the earth."

2. We learn that the blood of God's servants and prophets is precious in his sight, and that he will avenge it. Ahab's house was in many instances notoriously wicked; but this great iniquity filled up the measure of it, as mentioned, verse 7. CHAPTER X.

B. C. 884. Jezebel dashed to pieces; seventy of Ahab's sons slain; worshippers of Baal slain.

30 Now when Jehu had come to Jezreel, Jezebel heard; and she painted her eye-brows, and attired her head, and looked out at a window.
31 And as Jehu entered at the gate, she said, "Had 32 Zimri peace, who slew his master?" But he turned up his face towards the window, and said, "Who, who, is on my side?" And there 33 looked out to him two or three eunuchs. And he said, "Throw her down." So they threw her down: and some of her blood was sprinkled on the wall, and on the horses, which trod upon 34 her. And he went into the palace, and ate and drank; and he then said, "Go, look for this accursed woman, and bury her: for she was a 35 king's daughter." And they went to bury her; but they found no more of her than the skull, 36 and the feet, and the palms of her hands. So they returned and told him. And he said, "This is the word of Jehovah, which he spoke by his servant Elijah, the Tishbite, saying, 'In the district of Jezreel shall dogs eat the flesh of 37 Jezebel; And the carcass of Jezebel shall be as dung upon the face of the field in the district of Jezreel; so that they shall not say, 'This is Jezebel.'" into their hands, and meet with awful tokens of the divine displeasure.

3. It is not uncommon for the best of men to be accounted mad. So the prophets were treated; so was Christ himself, and John, the baptist, as a poor, melancholy man. This is often the case, and none who are acquainted with the wisdom of this world will think it strange. But if we are beside ourselves, it is to God; and the reproach of the wicked is not worth regarding. They think it strange that we run not with them to the same unto the rulers of the 'city', to the elders, and to those who brought up Ahab's children, saying, "As soon as this letter cometh to you, 2 seeing your master's sons are with you, and there are with you chariots and horses, a fenced city also, and armour: Look out even the best 3 and fittest of your master's sons, and set him on his father's throne, and fight for your master's house." But they were exceedingly afraid, and 4 said, "Behold, two kings stood not before him: how then shall we stand?" And he that was 5 over the house, and he that was over the city, the elders also, and those who brought up the sons of Ahab, sent to Jehu, saying, "We are thy servants, and will do all that thou shalt bid us; we will not make any man king: do thou what is good in thine eyes." He then wrote to 6 them a second letter, saying, "If ye be for me, and will hearken to my voice, take off the heads of your master's sons, and come to me to Jezreel, by this time to morrow." Now the king's sons, seventy persons, were with the great men of the city, who had brought them up. And 7 when the letter came to them, they took the king's sons, and slew them, seventy persons, and put their heads in baskets, and sent them to him, to Jezreel.

And there came a messenger, and told him, 8 saying, "They have brought the heads of the king's sons." And he said, "Lay them in two heaps, at the entrance of the gate, until the excess of riot, and reproach us for it. So treated they the prophets."

4. We learn that the way of sin can never be the way of peace. "What hast thou to do with peace?" says Jehu, verse 19. They think to find peace and safety in their evil way, but what peace can there be, while God is dishonoured and affronted, and religion neglected? What peace with him, or with conscience? Men may amuse themselves with hope, and trust to a false peace; but "there is no peace," saith God, "to the wicked."

- 9 morning. And when the morning came, he went out, and stood, and said to all the people, "Ye are righteous: behold, I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who hath slain all these? now, know, that nothing of the word of Jehovah, which he spoke concerning the house of Ahab shall fall to the ground; for Jehovah will do what he spoke by his servant Elijah." Jehu then slew all that remained of the house of Ahab, in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his intimate friends, and his priests, until he left to him none remaining.
- 12 And he arose and departed, and was going to Samaria; but at the shearing-house on the way, Jehu met with the brethren of Ahaziah, king of Judah, and said, "Who are ye?" And they answered, "We are the brethren of Ahaziah; and we are going down to salute the children of the king, and the children of the queen of Israel." And he said, "Take them alive." And they took them alive, and slew them at the pit of the shearing-house, forty-two men; neither left he any of them.
- 15 And when he had departed thence, he met Jehonadab, the son of Rechab: and he saluted him, and said to him, "Is thy heart as right with my heart," as my heart is with thy heart? And Jehonadab answered, "It is." "If it be, give," said Jehu, "to me thy hand." And he gave him his hand; and he took him up to him into the chariot. And he said, "Come with me and see my zeal for Jehovah." So he made him ride in his chariot. And when he came to Samaria, he slew all that remained unto Ahab, in Samaria, till he had destroyed him, according to the word of Jehovah, which he spoke by Elijah.
- 18 And Jehu assembled all the people, and said to them, "Ahab served Baal a little; but Jehu will serve him much. Now, therefore, call unto me all the prophets of Baal, all his servants, and all his priests; let none be wanting: for I have a great sacrifice to offer to Baal; whosoever shall be wanting shall not live." But Jehu did this in subtilty, to the intent that he might destroy the worshippers of Baal. And 20 Jehu said, "Proclaim a solemn assembly for Baal." And they proclaimed it. And Jehu 21 sent through all Israel: and all the worshippers of Baal came, so that there was not a man left that came not. And they came into the temple of Baal; and the temple of Baal was full from one end to the other. And he said to him who 22 was over the vestry, "Bring forth vestments for all the worshippers of Baal." And he brought them forth vestments. And Jehu went, and 23 Jehonadab, the son of Rechab, into the temple of Baal, and said to the worshippers of Baal, "Search, and see that there be here with you none of the servants of Jehovah, but the worshippers of Baal only." And when they went 24 in to offer sacrifices and burnt-offerings, Jehu appointed eighty men without, and said, "The man, who letteth escape one of these men, whom I have brought into your hands, his own life shall go for his." And as soon as he had 25 made an end of offering the burnt-offering, Jehu said to the guard and to the captains, "Go in, and slay them; let none come forth." And they smote them with the edge of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out. They then went into the inner-sanctuary of the 26 temple of Baal; And they brought the statues out of the temple of Baal, and burned them. And having destroyed the statues of Baal, they 27 demolished the temple of Baal, and made it into dung-houses, which continue unto this day. Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel. 28

land of Israel, these scenes of blood were renewed. The relatives of the preceding monarch were all cut off.

12-14. Jehu thus treated the relatives of Ahaziah, as being connected with the house of Ahab. They had not heard, it seems, of the revolution which had occurred.

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 884. Joash, saved from Athaliah's massacre, is anointed king by Jehoiada.

AND when Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah, 1 saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal. But Jehosheba, the 2 daughter of king Joram, sister of Ahaziah, took Joash, the son of Ahaziah, (whom she had stolen from among the king's sons, who were slain;) and she "put him" and his nurse, in a bed-chamber of the temple; and hid him from Athaliah, so that he was not slain. And he was hid with 3 her in the house of Jehovah, six years. And Athaliah reigned over the land.

But in the seventh year, Jehoiada sent to col- 4 lect the rulers over hundreds, with the captains and the guard, and brought them to him into the house of Jehovah, and made a league with them, and took an oath of them, in the house of Jehovah. He then showed them the king's son; And he commanded them, saying, "This 5 is the thing that ye shall do; Let a third part of those of you who come in on the sabbath, be keepers of the king's apartment; And let 6 another third part be at the gate of Sur; and a third part at the gate behind the guard,

CHAP. XI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER X. 1. Observe how soon the most numerous families may be made desolate by the judgments of God. The royal house of David was large, and apparently in no danger of wanting successors; but it is here said all were cut off. "Children are an heritage of the Lord." Ps. cxxvii. 3. Parents should rejoice over them with trembling; be careful to instruct them; and entail the best blessings upon them. Sin soon cuts off families; but the "just man walketh in his integrity, and is preserved."

2. We are taught to guard against partial obedience to God. Jehu's zeal was neither pure in its principle nor exercise. Zeal is good; but, "Come see my zeal," spoiled all. Upon the whole, it was neither hearty nor universal; he retained his favourite idolatry, and worshipped the calves. Thus many perform some acts of religion, while they neglect others; part with some sins, but whole context proves this to be the meaning. What sense is there in the city of the house?

CHAP XI. 1. She arose and destroyed. She must have obtained great influence in the government during her son's reign; and hence the troops were ready to obey her orders on the present occasion. Being of the house of Ahab, she did this, probably, out of revenge, and to secure herself from Jehu and others; but particularly to maintain the cause of idolatry.

5. Of those of you who come in, &c. The Levites had their turns, or keep those which are most gainful, most pleasing, or most secret. Let us see that our hearts be right, and take heed to walk in the law of God with a perfect heart. Without care, we shall err, and turn aside from the holy commandment. May we, therefore, walk circumspectly in all the statutes and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

3. If God reward partial obedience, how much more will he approve of that which is sincere and universal? "His children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel." This Jehu received for having done what was right in punishing the idolatries of the house of Ahab. What then may the faithful christian expect? He follows the Lord fully; his love is unfeigned; his zeal, a pure, holy flame; and his submission to the divine will, entire, at least in intention and desire. Whatsoever he does, he aims to glorify God.

courses, in the service of the temple; so that a certain number went out every sabbath, to make room for another course. Jehoiada, having gained over the centurions and guards, or at least some of them, to his party, and having all the Levites at his command, took occasion of that time when the courses were to be changed, at day-break, to arm both those that were coming out, and those who were coming in; and thus effected the revolution he had so wisely planned.

6. The gate of Sur; supposed to be the eastern gate; while that

Thus shall ye guard securely the house, that it 7 be not broken into. And two parts of all those of you, who go out on the sabbath, even they shall keep guard about the king, in the house 8 of Jehovah. And ye shall surround the king, every man with his weapons in his hand; and he that cometh within the ranges, let him be slain: and be ye with the king as he goeth out 9 and as he cometh in." And the captains over the hundreds did according to all that Jehoiada, the priest, commanded: and they took each his own men, who were to come in on the sabbath,
 with those who were to go out on the sabbath, 10 and came to Jehoiada, the priest. And to the captains over hundreds did the priest give king David's spears and shields, which were in the 11 temple of Jehovah. And the guard stood, every man with his own weapons in his hand, from the right corner of the temple, to the left corner of the temple, along by the altar, to the king's 12 apartment. And he brought forth the king's son, and put the crown upon him, and the regal ornaments: and they made him king, and anointed him; and they clapped their hands,
 and said, "Long live the king."
 13 Now when Athaliah heard the noise of the guard and of the people, she came to the peo-14 ple, into the temple of Jehovah. And she looked, and behold, the king stood by the tribunal, as the manner was, and by the king the singers and the trumpeters; and all the people of the land rejoiced, and blew with trumpets;

 and Athaliah rent her clothes and cried, "Treason, Treason." But Jehoiada, the priest, com- 15 manded the captains of hundreds, the officers of the host, and said to them, "Take her forth without the ranges; and him that followeth her kill with the sword." For the priest had said,
 "Let her not be slain in the house of Jehovah."
 And they laid hands on her; and when she had 16 come to the horse-gate-way of the palace, she was there put to death.

And Jehoiada made a covenant between Je- 17
 hovah, and the king, and the people, that they should be Jehovah's people; also between the king and the people. And all the people of 18
 the land, went into the temple of Baal, and demolished it, its altars and its statues they broke all in pieces, and they slew Mattan, the priest of Baal, before the altars. Jehoiada, the priest, then appointed officers over the house of Jehovah. And he took the rulers over hundreds, 19 and the captains, and the guard, and all the people of the land; and they brought down the king from the house of Jehovah, and went by the way of the guard-gate to the palace; and he sat on the royal throne. And all the people 20 of the land rejoiced; and, the city was quiet, although they had slain Athaliah, with the sword, near the king's palace.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XI. 1. We may learn from this history, that the triumphing of the wicked is short. Athaliah waded to the throne, through the blood of the royal house of David, and perhaps thought herself secure, as she knew of no competitor for it. Providence had, unknown to her, preserved a branch of the stem of Jesse, because a blessing was in it; and at a time when this idolatrous and wicked woman, was hoping for years of peace, destruction was at hand.

2. We learn what a blessing one child, wisely married, may be to a good family. It was rather strange that Joram should marry his daughter to the high-priest. But providence ordered it so, that he might save his family from utter destruction. The good high-priest and his son saved one, as a brand from the burning. On how small a thread does the accomplishment of divine promises sometimes depend. All God's declarations in favour of the house of David depended on this one little child, a year old, saved from the sword of his grand-mother. The good people of Israel thought the house of David was extinct. "But no word of God shall fall to the ground;" nor shall any scheme of men make his promise of none effect.

3. From the joy that the people expressed in this great revolution, let us reflect what reason there is for joy and thankfulness, when Satan is deposed, and Christ is enthroned in the heart; when Satan, the usurper, is put down, and the soul gives itself up to behind the guard-house is thought to be the south-gate, or that next to the palace.

10. David's spears and shields. The people were in general without arms; but the high-priest had some within the temple, which at the present crisis were found of the greatest utility.

12. The crown, &c. Parkhurst observes, that our version here is not accurate. The term (קִרְיָה) means some part of the regalia, which was put on as well as the crown; for in the text the same verb has respect to both nouns.

14. Stood on the tribunal. This was a sort of rostrum, erected by Solomon; five cubits square and three cubits high; where he, and probably his successors, were seated during the divine service. See 1 Chron. vi. 18.
 The king, I conceive, stood up, that the whole people might behold him.
 On this tribunal Solomon both stood and kneeled.

CHAPTER XII.

B. C. 878. Joash reigneth well, while Jehoiada liveth; but afterwards he apostatized, and was slain by his own servants.]

- 1 TWENTY-SEVEN years old was Joash, when he began to reign; and Joash began to reign in the seventh year of the reign of Jehu; and forty years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his
- 2 mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-sheba. And Joash did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, as long as Jehoiada, the priest, instructed him,
- 3 But the high-places were not removed: the people still sacrificed and burnt incense on the high-places.
- 4 And Joash said to the priests, "All the hallowed money which is brought into the house of Jehovah, the money of every one numbered, the ransom money which every one is to pay, besides the money which any one chooseth to
- 5 bring into the house of Jehovah, Let the priests collect, every man of his acquaintance: and let them repair the breaches of the house,
- 6 wheresoever any breach may be found." But so it was that in the twenty-third year of the reign of king Joash, the priests had not repaired
- 7 the breaches of the house. King Joash, therefore, called for Jehoiada, the priest, and the other priests, and said to them, "Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? Ye shall not, therefore, receive any money of your acquaintance, but ye shall deliver it up for the repairing
- 8 of the breaches of the house." And the priests consented to receive no more money of the people, nor to repair the breaches of the house.
- 9 But Jehoiada, the priest, took a chest, and Christ, and receives him as king; when confusion and disorder are changed for piety and peace. Oh! glorious, happy change! "Hosanna to the son of David! blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

4. How wise and prudent is it to engage men to enter into a solemn covenant, when the heart is peculiarly impressed with the goodness of God, as Jehoiada here did. Public reformation is

CHAP. XII. 4. All the hallowed money. With the Syr. and Arab. I take the plural noun to be used adjectively, as is frequent: and the money hallowed was of two kinds. The first kind is the ransom money or the half-shekel, which every one who was numbered, having attained the age of twenty years, was to pay. The second was money paid for redeeming what was vowed, or money freely given. Levit. xviii. 2.

bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of Jehovah, and the priests who kept the door put therein all the money which was brought into the house of Jehovah. And when 10 they saw that there was much money in the chest, the king's scribe and the high-priest came up, and counted the money which was found in the house of Jehovah, and put it in bags. And they gave the money, being told, 11 into the hands of those who did the work, who had the inspection of the house of Jehovah; and they expended it by wages to the carpenters and builders, who did the work of the house of Jehovah; And to masons, and stone-hewers; 12 and in buying timber and hewed-stones to repair the breaches of the house of Jehovah, and for whatever was laid out for repairing the house. Yet they made not for the house of Jehovah, 13 either silver bowls; or knives, or sprinkling-basons, or trumpets, or any other utensils of gold or silver, of the money which was brought into the house of Jehovah; But they gave it to the 14 workmen, and repaired with it the house of Jehovah. Moreover they reckoned not with the 15 men, into whose hand they delivered the money to be laid out in wages to workmen; for they acted faithfully. The trespass money and 16 sin-offering money was not brought into the house of Jehovah: it was the priests'.

Then Hazael, king of Syria, went up, and 17 fought against Gath, and took it; and Hazael set his face to go up to Jerusalem. And Joash, 18 king of Judah, took all the hallowed things that Jehoshaphat, and Joram, and Ahaziah, best promoted when the memory of deliverances is fresh, and every heart is full of joy. Ministers and people should learn hence when they see young men thoughtful and considerate, narrowly escaped from danger and death, to remind them of their obligations to be the Lord's, and to devote themselves to him. Happy are the people who have joined themselves to the Lord, in an everlasting covenant, never to be forgotten.

5. They were to collect money in their respective districts. Comp. 2 Chron. xxiv. 5. — The breaches. These were made by Ataliah. 1b. ver. 7. 6—8. In the long space of fourteen or fifteen years, the house of God had not been repaired. There appears criminal negligence on the part of the priests; or else they had not appropriated the money as directed. Others were appointed to this work, and it was at length completed.

his fathers, kings of Judah, had hallowed, and his own hallowed things, and all the gold which was found in the treasures of the house of Jehovah, and of his own palace, and sent them to Hazael, king of Syria; that he might go away from Jerusalem.

- 19 And the rest of the acts of Joash, and all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the 20 kings of Judah. And his own servants arose, and made a conspiracy, and slew Joash, in the 21 house of Millo, in the descent of Silla. For Jozabad, the son of Shimeath, and Jehozabad, the son of Shimrith, his servants, smote him, that he died; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David; and Amaziah, his son, reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XIII.

B. C. 856. Jehoahaz's wicked reign; Joash succeedeth him; Elijah's death, whose bones afterwards revive a dead man.

- 1 In the twenty-third year of Joash, the son of Ahaziah, king of Judah, Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, began to reign over Israel, in Samaria;
2 and he reigned seventeen years. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, and followed the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin; from them he departed not.

CHAP. XIII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. Joash owed his life to the temple and to the high-priest, and he was especially called to honour and to repair it. His early measures may be considered as those of his uncle, under whom he acted; but when he came to years, he approved of what had been ordered. Happy is it for young persons to have wise, pious, and faithful advisers; they may derive advantage from them in their latest years.

2. We may infer, that there was little zeal for God, even among the priests and Levites, who could suffer the temple to remain for so long a time unrepared. How different was the spirit of David towards God's tabernacle, "who would not give sleep to his eyes, nor slumber to his eye-lids, until he had found a place for the Lord, a habitation for

18. The parallel place shows, that events of considerable importance are here omitted. This incursion of Hazael did not happen till after the death of Jehoiaada, and the relapse of the people into idolatry.

21. Jozabad, &c. In Chronicles, the names are Zabad, Ben-Shimeath, and Jehozabad, Ben-Shimrith: and Shimeath and Shimrith are said to have been, the former an Ammonitess, the latter a Moabitess. See 2 Chron. xxiv. 26.

CHAP. XIII. 1. In the twenty-third. Josephus has the twenty-first, which Geddes thinks the better reading.

And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against 3 Israel, and he delivered them continually into the hand of Hazael, king of Syria, and into the hand of Ben-hadad, the son of Hazael. But 4 Jehoahaz besought Jehovah, and Jehovah hearkened unto him; because he saw the oppression of Israel, with which the king of Syria oppressed them. For to Jehoahaz he left only 7 of the troops, fifty horsemen, and ten chariots, and ten thousand footmen; for the king of Syria had destroyed the rest, and trampled on them like dust. Jehovah, therefore, gave to 5 Israel a saviour, so that they were rescued from under the hand of the Syrians; and the children of Israel dwelt in their own tents, as beforetime. Nevertheless, they departed not from 6 the sins of Jeroboam, who caused Israel to sin, but walked therein, and the groves also still remained in Samaria. Now the rest of the acts 8 of Jehoahaz, and all that he did, and his might, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. And Jehoahaz slept with his fathers; 9 and he was buried in Samaria; and Joash, his son, reigned in his stead.

In the thirty-seventh year of Joash, king of 10 Judah, began Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, to reign over Israel, in Samaria; and he reigned the holy one of Israel." When there is little regard paid to the ordinances of God's house, we may be sure that the life and power of godliness are wanting.

3. It is painful to find, that in every reign, there was something to blame; the high-places were not removed. It is still more so, to find the king and the people perpetually apostatizing to idols. Though they were ever suffering national judgments for this sin, they refused to forsake it. A deceived heart turned them aside; they fed on ashes; and yet had not sense to perceive, or candour to say, "Is there not a lie in our right hand?" Be it our care to abide faithful with God; and not follow vain things which cannot profit, then we may hope for his mercy and favour.

3. Continually. Literally, all days; which some explain to mean often. The history makes it manifest, that it signifies at various times—in succession.

4. Houbigant, Dathe, and others, transpose the 7th verse after this, which is evidently its proper place. Transposition of verses and even chapters have been made by copyers having omitted them in their proper place; and then finding their mistake, inserted them after.

11 sixteen years. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah; he departed not from any of the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin: in them he walked.

14 Now Elisha had fallen sick, of the sickness of which he died. And Joash, king of Israel, went down to him, and wept over his face, and said, "O my father! my father! the chariot of 15 Israel, and the horsemen thereof." And Elisha said to him, "Take a bow and arrows."

16 And he took a bow and arrows. And he said to the king of Israel, "Put thy hand upon the bow." And he put his hand upon it; and Eli-

17 sha put his hands upon the king's hands. And he said, "Open the window eastward." And he opened it. Then Elisha said, "Shoot." And he shot. And he said, "Arrow of deliver-

"Take the other arrows." And he took them. And he said to the king of Israel, "Smite upon the ground." And he smote thrice, and stop-

19 ped. And the man of God was wroth with him, and said, "Thou shouldst have smitten five or six times; then wouldst thou have smitten the Syrians, till thou hadst consumed them: whereas, now, thou shalt smite the Syrians but thrice."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. We learn that as sin is the cause of chastisement, so humiliation and prayer are the means of deliverance, verses, 3, 4. This is applicable to society in general, and to private persons. "For their iniquity was I wroth, and smote them." Let such humble themselves under the mighty hand of God, and call upon him in the day of trouble. This is the appointed way to obtain deliverance and salvation.

2. The loss of good men, especially of prophets and instructors of youth, is greatly to be lamented. They are "better than chariots and horsemen." It is better to lose men of war, than men of God. They are the ornament and support of a nation while they live, and greatly

11. He did evil, &c. Josephus says, he was a good king, in nothing resembling his father. There is, however, no variety of reading in the text, or versions; and, if we are to credit Josephus, we must explain the evil that he did to mean his political adherence to the worship of the calves. From what follows, he seems to have regarded the prophet Elisha.

17. Arrow of deliverance. The prophets often predicted future events by symbolical actions. This was one, to teach Joash, that God, by him, would defeat the Syrians.

18. And he smote thrice. If the king understood the first symbolical

And Elisha died, and they buried him. And 20 in that same year hordes of Moabites invaded the land. And it happened, that as some Isra- 21 elites were about to bury a man, behold, they spied the horde of Moabites; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha; and when the man was let down, and touched the bones of Elisha, he revived, and stood up on his feet.

Although Hazael, king of Syria, had oppressed Israel all the days of Jehoahaz; Yet Jeho- 22 vah was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them, and had respect to them, because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and he would not as yet destroy them, nor cast them from his presence. So Hazael, king of 24 Syria, died; and Ben-hadad, his son, reigned in his stead. And Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, 25 took again out of the hand of Ben-hadad, the son of Hazael, the cities which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz, his father, by war. Three times did Joash beat him, and recovered the cities of Israel. Now the rest of the acts of 12 Joash, and all that he did, and his might, and how he fought against Amaziah, king of Judah, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. And Joash slept with his fathers, and 13 Jeroboam sat upon his throne: and Joash was buried in Samaria, with the kings of Israel".

lamented when they die. When they are taken away we should mourn for ourselves, not for them; we should be concerned to rise up in their stead, and pray that others may do so too.

3. It is our own fault if spiritual enemies are not smitten and subdued. It is owing to our sloth; we take no pains to watch, and pray, and strive; and do not believe the promises of God. The more vigorously we attack them, and the more firmly we depend on divine promises, the more successful we are likely to be. "We wrestle not with flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers: if we resist them stedfast in the faith, they will flee from us; and we shall be more than conquerors through him that loved us." It is a grief to all good action, as he could scarcely fail to do, he might conclude that his striking the earth with the arrows, was also symbolical of the number of victories he should obtain. Did he then stop, because he thought it not possible that he should be able to vanquish so powerful an enemy? If so, his stopping was the effect of diffidence or unbelief, and accounts for the anger of the prophet.

21. They spied the horde, &c. Alarmed for their own safety, they threw the corpse into the grave or sepulchre of the prophet. Perhaps this was at hand, and they had only some stone to remove; which might be

CHAPTER XIV.

B. C. 839. Amaziah's good reign; his victory over the Edomites; he is conquered by Joash, and slain by his own subjects; Uzziah succeedeth him.

- 1 IN the second year of Joash, son of Jehoahaz, king of Israel, Amaziah, the son of Joash, king
- 2 of Judah, became king. He was twenty-five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty-nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.
- 3 And he did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, yet not like David his fore-father: according to all which Joash, his father did, so did he.
- 4 Still the high-places were not taken away: but as yet the people sacrificed and burnt incense on the high-places.
- 5 Now as soon as the royal power was confirmed in his hand, he slew those of his servants,
- 6 who had slain the king, his father. But the children of the murderers he slew not: according to what is written in the book of the law of Moses, in which Jehovah commanded, saying, "The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children be put to death for the fathers; but every man shall be put to death for his own sin." After this he smote of Edom
- 7 ten thousand men, in the valley of salt; in that war he took Selah, and called the name of it Joktheel, which it bears unto this day.
- 8 Then Amaziah sent messengers to Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, "Come, let us look one another in the
- 9 face." And Joash, the king of Israel, sent to Amaziah, king of Judah, saying, "A thistle of Lebanon sent to a cedar of Lebanon, saying, men to see others losing the victory, for want of faith, zeal, and resolution. Therefore, let us stir up ourselves and one another; and "fight the good fight of faith, that we may obtain that crown of glory, which is laid up for those that love and serve God."

4. All deliverance and success, in temporal and spiritual concerns, is owing to the grace and compassion of God. verse 23. He was gracious to them, had compassion upon them, had respect unto readily done, and the body laid there till the present attack was over.

CHAP. XIV. 5. He slew those, &c. This was a filial duty; and a just regard to his own safety made it necessary. His strict adherence to the law, on this occasion, deserves praise. Comp. Deut. xxiv. 16. and Ezek. xiviii. 4. 20.

'Give thy daughter to my son to wife;' and a wild-beast of Lebanon passed by, and trod down the thistle. Thou hast indeed smitten Edom, and 10 thy heart is lifted up: glory in this, but abide at home: for why wouldst thou meddle to thy hurt, so that thou shouldst fall, and Judah with thee?" But Amaziah would not hearken; 11 Joash, king of Israel, therefore, went up; and he and Amaziah, king of Judah, looked one another in the face at Bethshemesh, which belonged to Judah. And Judah was smitten 12 before Israel; and they fled every man to his own home. And Joash, king of Israel, took 13 Amaziah, king of Judah, the son of Joash, the son of Ahaziah, at Bethshemesh, and came to Jerusalem, and broke down the wall of Jerusalem, from the gate of Ephraim unto the corner gate, four hundred cubits. And he took all the 14 gold and silver, and all the utensils found in the house of Jehovah, and in the treasures of the palace, and hostages, and returned to Samaria. Now the rest of the acts of Joash, which he did, 15 and his might, and how he fought with Amaziah, king of Judah, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. And Joash slept with his 16 fathers, and was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel; and Jeroboam, his son, reigned in his stead.

And Amaziah, the son of Joash, king of Judah, 17 lived after the death of Joash, son of Jehoahaz, king of Israel, fifteen years. And the rest of 18 the acts of Amaziah, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. And they made a 19 conspiracy against him in Jerusalem; and he fled to Lachish; but they sent after him to them, and remembered his covenant. He was willing to find out a reason to be long-suffering and gracious to this rebellious people. This is great encouragement to sinners to repent. God bears long with them. "He is not willing that any should perish. With him is forgiveness, that he may be feared." The goodness of God should lead us to repentance, that we may enjoy his presence, and the favourable tokens of it for ever.

9. A thistle of Lebanon. Nothing can be more cutting than this epilogue. Joash represents Amaziah by the thistle, himself by the cedar; and how soon he would perish like the ambitious thistle which some wild-beast trod down.

15, 16. These two verses are a repetition of ch. xiii. 12, 13.; yet they

20 Lachish, and slew him there. And they brought him on horses; and he was buried at Jerusalem with his fathers, in the city of David.

21 And all the people of Judah took 'Uzziah' who was sixteen years old, and made him king instead of his father Amaziah. He rebuilt Elath, and restored it to Judah, after the late king slept with his fathers.

23 In the fifteenth year of Amaziah, the son of Joash, king of Judah, Jeroboam, the son of Joash, king of Israel, began to reign in Samaria;

24 and he reigned forty-one years. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah; he departed not from any of the sins of Jeroboam, the son of

25 Nebat, who caused Israel to sin. He recovered the territories of Israel, from the entrance of Hamath, unto the dead sea, according to the word of Jehovah, the God of Israel, which he spoke by his servant Jonah, the son of Amittai,

26 the prophet of Gath-hepher. For Jehovah saw that the affliction of Israel was very bitter; though none were safe or secure, yet was there

27 no helper for Israel. So Jehovah said that he would not blot out the name of Israel from under the heavens; and he saved them by the hand of Jeroboam, the son of Joash.

Now the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, and all 28 that he did, and his might, how he fought, and how he recovered, for Israel, Damascus, and Hamath, (which had belonged to Judah,) are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. And Jeroboam slept with his fathers, with the 29 kings of Israel; and Zechariah, his son, reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XV.

B. C. 810. Uzziah's good reign; history of the reigns of Zechariah, and four other kings of Israel.

In the twenty-seventh year of Jeroboam, king 1 of Israel, began 'Uzziah,' son of Amaziah, king of Judah, to reign. Sixteen years old was 2 he when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty-two years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jecholiah of Jerusalem. And he did what 3 was right in the eyes of Jehovah, according to all that his father Amaziah at first did. Only the 4 high-places were not removed: the people still sacrificed and burnt incense on the high-places.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. The remark of Solomon is found generally true. "Train up a child in the way that he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Joash had not turned to idols like some of his predecessors; and his son followed his ways. "According to all which his father did, so did he." How highly responsible are parents, both to God and society. The example they set, may have the most beneficial, or the most destructive influence on the morals of their offspring; and may make them either blessings or curses to the world and to the church.

2. We may learn the folly of engaging in what is too arduous for us. Amaziah would not be admonished; he did not follow the maxim of his wise predecessor, "With good advice make war." He engaged rashly, and was defeated, and his country spoiled. This fomented disand 32nd verses of this chapter. So also in the following verses.

affection, and ended in his own violent death. In whatever we engage, let us begin with prayer. Let us ever be disposed to follow good advice, though given by an enemy. In whatever regards religion, let us walk uprightly, and we shall walk safely.

3. We are taught how long God bore with a sinful people, and how often he turned away his wrath, and exercised compassion. Though Jeroboam, the second, walked in the ways of his fore-father, yet Jehovah gave him success against his enemies, and fulfilled the word of his own prophet Jonah. When he saw the bitter affliction of Israel, he was moved with compassion towards them, "and would not blot out their name from under the heavens." Let the long-suffering of God, awaken serious reflection, and his mercy allure us to duty. He waits to be gracious; let us wait on him that he may be so to us.

seem to be necessary here, as so much is said of Joash in connexion with Amaziah.

21. Uzziah. That this is the true name of this king is clear from the ancient versions. See note in Heb. Bible.

22. Elath. This place had been lost under Joram. Uzziah recovered and fortified it, after the death of his father.

25. Dead sea. Literally, 'sea of the plain;' but the former name is better understood.

25. His servant Jonah. The prophet sent to Nineveh. This fixes the time of his mission, to the time of Joash, the father of Rehoboam the second. At the same time, or quickly after in Jeroboam's time, were also the prophets Hosea, and Joel, and Amos, as appears by their books. Isaiah in Judah, and these three in Israel, were the earliest of the sixteen prophets, and should be read the first in order.

26. Though none were, &c. I have given that turn to the words which the connexion seems to require. Geddes renders, "that there was none to avenge, succour, and assist them." Dathe gives this sense without attempting to render verbally, "for he respected the bitter calamity of the Israelites, who, deprived of all things, had no helper."

28. I have followed Geddes in this version; although, with him, I think it probable, that to Judah have been added to the text, as the words are wanting in the Syr. and the Arab. versions.

CHAP. XV. 5. Smote the king, &c. A reign of fifty-two years is given in a few verses; but we have a more detailed account in 2 Chron.

5 And Jehovah smote the king, so that he was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a separate apartment. And Jotham, the king's son, was over the house, judging the people of the land. And the rest of the acts of ^vUzziah⁶, and all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. ^vUzziah⁷ slept with his fathers; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David; and Jotham, his son, reigned in his stead.

8 In the thirty-eighth year of ^vUzziah⁸, king of Judah, did Zechariah, the son of Jeroboam, reign over Israel, in Samaria, six months. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, as his fathers had done: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin. And Shallum, the son of Jabesh, conspired against him, and smote him before the people, and slew him, and reigned in his stead.

12 ¹This was the word of Jehovah, which he spoke to Jehu, saying, "Thy sons shall sit on the throne of Israel to the fourth generation." And so it came to pass. And the rest of the acts of Zechariah, behold, they are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

13 Shallum, the son of Jabesh, began to reign in the thirty-ninth year of Uzziah, king of Judah; and he reigned a full month in Samaria. For Menahem, the son of Gadi, went up from Tirzah, and came to Samaria, and smote Shallum, the son of Jabesh, in Samaria, and slew him, and reigned in his stead. And the rest of the acts of Shallum, and the conspiracy which he made, behold, they are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. Then Menahem smote Tiph-sah, and all that was therein, and its territories from Tirzah; because they had not opened their gates to him: therefore, he smote it; he even smote and ripped up all the women with child.

xxvi. l. &c. His attempt to invade the priest's office, we learn, occasioned his becoming a leper.

12. This was the word, &c. The writer of this history always notices the fulfilment of God's promises or threatenings. Comp. ch. x. 30.

14. Tirzah. This was for a long time the royal city in Israel. Jeroboam, in the latter part of his reign, dwelt here, and the succeeding kings, till Omri, who purchased and built Samaria. See Canticles, vi. 4.

In the thirty-ninth year of ^vUzziah¹⁷, king of Judah, began Menahem, the son of Gadi, to reign over Israel, and he reigned ten years in Samaria. And he did evil in the eyes of Jeho- 18 vah: he departed not, all his days, from the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin. And Pul, the king of Assyria, came 19 against the land; and Menahem gave to Pul a thousand talents of silver, that through his assistance the royal power might be confirmed to him. And Menahem exacted the money of Israel, of 20 all the men of wealth, of each man fifty shekels of silver, to give to the king of Assyria. So the king of Assyria returned, and did not stay there in the land. And the rest of the acts of Me- 21 nahem, and all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel. And Mena- 22 hem slept with his fathers; and Pekahiah, his son, reigned in his stead.

In the fiftieth year of ^vUzziah²³, king of Ju- dah, Pekahiah, the son of Menahem, began to reign over Israel, in Samaria; and he reigned two years. And he did evil in the eyes of Je- 24 hovah: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin. But Pekah, the son of Remaliah, one of 25 his captains, conspired against him, and, with the aid of Argob and Arieah, and fifty Gileadites, smote him in Samaria, in the haram of his own palace: and he killed him, and reigned in his stead. And the rest of the acts of Pekahiah, 26 and all that he did, behold, they are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

In the two and fiftieth year of ^vUzziah²⁷, king of Judah, Pekah, the son of Remaliah, began to reign over Israel, in Samaria; and he reigned twenty years. And he did evil in the eyes of 28 Jehovah: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to

19. Pul, the king of Assyria. This is the first time the king of Assyria is mentioned as approaching Judea. This Pul is supposed to be the king who repented on the preaching of Jonah. According to Usher, he was the last king of Assyria, called by the Greeks Sardanapalus, that is, Sardan-Pul. Menahem availed himself of his assistance, to keep the power which he had acquired; though at a great expense to his subjects.

29 sin. In the days of Pekah, king of Israel, came Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, and took Ijon, and Abel-beth-maachah, and Janoah, and Kedesh, and Hazor, and Gilead, and Galilee, even all the land of Naphtali, and carried them captive to Assyria. And Hoshea, the son of Elah, made a conspiracy against Pekah, the son of Remaliah, and smote him, and slew him, and reigned in his stead, in the twentieth year of Jotham, the son of Uzziah. And the rest of the acts of Pekah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

32 In the second year of Pekah, the son of Remaliah, king of Israel, began Jotham, the son of Uzziah, king of Judah, to reign. Twenty-five years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jerusha, the daughter of Zadok. And he did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah: he did according to all that his father Uzziah had done. Only the high-places were not removed: the people still sacrificed and burned incense on the high-places. He built the higher gate of the house of Jehovah. Now the rest of the acts of Jotham, and all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. In those days Jehovah began to send against Judah, Retzin, the king of Syria, and Pekah, the son of Remaliah. And Jotham slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his fore-father: and Ahaz, his son, reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XVI.

B. C. 742. The wicked reign of Ahaz; he hireth Tiglath-pileser to assist him against Retzin, and Pekah; spoileth the temple, &c.

In the seventeenth year of Pekah, the son of Remaliah, Ahaz, the son of Jotham, king of Judah, began to reign. Twenty-five years old was Ahaz, when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem; but he did not what was right in the eyes of Jehovah his God, like David his fore-father, But walked in the way of the kings of Israel; yea, and devoted, by fire, his own son, according to the abominable custom of the nations, which Jehovah had cast out from before the children of Israel. And he sacrificed and burned incense on the high-places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

Then Retzin, king of Syria, and Pekah, son of Remaliah, king of Israel, came up to war against Jerusalem: and they besieged Ahaz, but could not overcome him. At that time Retzin, king of Syria, recovered Elath to Edom, and drove the Jews from Elath: and the Edomites came to Elath, and dwell there unto this day. But Ahaz sent messengers to Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, saying, "I am

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. The long reign of Uzziah, and his general character, may lead us to infer, that a strict regard to the law is the best security of a government. "He did," on the whole, "what was right in the eyes of Jehovah;" and hence arose his safety and success against his enemies. When kings neglect the law, invade the property, and oppress the persons of their subjects, it may be justly expected, that they will have secret enemies; nor will they find any cordial assistance in a time of need. It will be the present interest of all "to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God," and before men.

2. The reigns of Menahem and Pekah, show the consequence of disobedience to God. Having forsaken him, they are given up to the power of their enemies. The former spoils to purchase an ignominious peace; and the subjects of the latter, are carried into captivity. Thus "while righteousness exalteth a nation, sin is the reproach, and; finally, the ruin of a people." How necessary, therefore, is it, for every one "to stand in awe and sin not;" "for the wages of sin are death."

ment to the Hebrew Lexicon, who strongly justifies it.

29. Tiglath-pileser. Usher makes him the same as Belesis, who, in connexion with Arbaces, had overturned the ancient Assyrian empire.

37. In those days. That is, after the death of Jotham, and during the reign of his son Ahaz. Comp. 2 Chron. xxviii. 5. &c.

CHAP. XVI. 2. Twenty five. A comparison of parallel places makes it evident that an error has occurred here. In the next chapter, we are informed that Hezekiah began his reign in his twenty-fifth year. His father

Ahaz reigned only sixteen years, and died in his thirty-sixth. According to the text then, he must have begotten Hezekiah when only eleven years old, which is not probable. The Jews married early, and allowing the age of sixteen, the difficulty is removed. See note Heb. Bible.

6. To Edom. This reading arises from the change of a single letter. The whole history proves that Elath was in the land of Edom, and did not belong to Syria; it was situated on the east branch of the Arabic Gulf. As to the next term, 'Edomites,' are found in many mss.

thy servant and thy son : come up, and save me from the hand of the king of Syria, and from the hand of the king of Israel, who have 8 risen up against me. And Ahaz took the silver and gold, which was found in the house of Jehovah, and in the treasury of the palace, and 9 sent it for a present to the king of Assyria. And the king of Assyria hearkened to him; for the king of Assyria went up against Damascus, and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Retzin.

10 And king Ahaz went to Damascus, to meet Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria; and he saw the altar which was at Damascus: and king Ahaz sent to Urijah, the priest, the form of the altar, and the pattern of it, according to all its 11 workmanship. And Urijah, the priest, built an altar according to the form which king Ahaz had sent from Damascus: so Urijah, the priest, made it against king Ahaz came from Damas-
12 cus. And when the king had come from Damascus, the king saw the altar; and the king approached the altar, and offered sacrifices 13 thereon. And he burnt his burnt-offering, and his wheaten-offering, and poured out his drink-offering, and sprinkled the blood of his feast-14 offerings, upon the altar. And he brought also the brazen altar, which was before Jehovah, from the front of the house, from between the new altar and the house of Jehovah, and put it on the north-side of the new altar. And king 15 Ahaz commanded Urijah, the priest, saying, "Upon the great altar, burn the morning burnt-offering, and the evening wheaten-offering, and the king's burnt-sacrifice, and his wheaten-offering, with the burnt-offerings of all the people of the land, and their wheaten-offerings, and their drink-offerings; and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt-offerings, and all the blood of the sacrifices: as to the brazen altar, I will inquire what must be done." Thus did Uri-

16 jah, the priest, according to all that king Ahaz commanded.

And king Ahaz cut off the frame-bands of the 17 laver-stands, and removed the lavers from off them; and took down the sea from off the brazen oxen that were under it, and put it upon a pavement of stones. And the sabbath-covert 18 which they had built in the house, and the king's entry without, turned he from the house of Jehovah, on account of the king of Assyria.

Now the rest of the acts of Ahaz, which he 19 did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and 20 was buried with his fathers in the city of David; and Hezekiah, his son, reigned in his stead.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. The kings of Judah had peculiar reasons to adhere to the temple and to the worship of Jehovah; but Ahaz imitated the kings of Israel. Every species of idolatry he practised; he even observed the abominable custom of sacrificing his children to idols. To what blindness of mind, and hardness of heart must he have been given up. How proper is it for us to exhort one another daily, lest we should be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. One sin leads to another, and unless mercy prevent, by bringing us to repentance, it will issue in our final destruction.

2. How fond are men of their own inventions in the worship of God. Solomon's altar was a plain, old fashioned one. Ahaz would have something new and fine; he wanted more show and ornament. This is often the case in christian churches. Christ's institutions are plain and simple, too much so for superstitious men. They must add sacraments of their own, and impose them upon all worshippers. All innovations are dangerous, even in the circumstantial of divine worship. Adding ornaments to religious services, is generally spoiling them. The nearer we keep to the divine pattern the better.

3. Those, who in their distresses, trespass more against the Lord, are abominably, and, it is to be feared, incurably wicked. "This is that king, Ahaz;" his name has a mark of infamy upon it. Afflictions are intended to bring men to thought, to repentance, and amendment; but if they are made worse instead of better by them, it is a sign of great hardness of heart, and that they are in the broad way to ruin. Let it be our concern to keep our consciences tender, to humble ourselves under God's hand, and to improve our afflictions aright; that by "the sorrow of the countenance, the heart may be made better."

9. Hearkened to him; so as to come and subdue Damascus, but he exhausted the treasures of Judah, and distressed rather than assisted Ahaz.

10. Which was at Damascus. It was not so much the altar as the god to which it was dedicated that allured Ahaz. As he had suffered from the Syrians, this wicked king supposed that the God they worshipped must be more powerful than Jehovah. Sin first blinds and then destroys.

11. Urijah, the priest. He seems to have been the high-priest, and his compliance with the will of the king indicates his little regard, or rather, contempt of the altar of Jehovah. There will always be found men who will execute the most impious commands that can possibly come from the throne.

18. Sabbath-covert. The most probable opinion is, that this was a covered seat for the king and his court, when they attended public worship.

CHAPTER XVII.

B. C. 730. Hoshea's wicked reign; Samaria taken, and the people carried away captives; various other people brought and settled in Samaria.

1 In the twelfth year of Ahaz, king of Judah, began Hoshea, the son of Elah, to reign in Samaria, over Israel; and he reigned nine years.
2 And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, but not as the kings of Israel who were before him.
3 Against him came up Salmaneser, king of Assyria; and Hoshea became his servant, and 4 gave him presents. But the king of Assyria found treachery in Hoshea: for he had sent messengers to So, king of Egypt, and had not brought the yearly present to the king of Assyria; the king of Assyria, therefore, shut him
5 up, and bound him in prison. For the king of Assyria marched through the whole land, and went up to Samaria, and besieged it three years.
6 In the ninth year of Hoshea, the king of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor-nahar-gozan, and in other cities of the 7 Medes. Thus it was, because the children of Israel had sinned against Jehovah their God, who had brought them out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh, king of Egypt,
8 and had feared other gods. And walked according to the statutes of the nations which Jehovah had cast out from before the children of Israel, and of those which the kings of Israel
9 had made. And the children of Israel devised things which were not right, against the command of Jehovah their God; for they built for themselves, high-places in all their cities, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.
10 And they set up for themselves statues and grove-idols on every high hill, and under every green tree: And there, on all the high-places, 11 they burnt incense, like the nations which Jehovah had carried away before them. Thus they wrought wicked things to provoke Jehovah to anger: For they served idols, respecting which 12 Jehovah had said to them, "Ye shall not do this thing;" And though Jehovah had testified 13 against Israel, and against Judah, by all the prophets, and by all the seers, saying, "Turn ye from your evil ways, and keep my commandments and my statutes, according to the whole law which I commanded your fathers, and which I sent to you, by my servants the prophets:" Yet they would not hearken, but stiffened their 14 necks, like to the necks of their fathers, who believed not in Jehovah their God. For they 15 rejected his statutes and his covenant, which he had made with their fathers; and his testimonies which he testified among them; and they followed vain idols, and became vain, and followed the nations who were around them, respecting which Jehovah had charged them, that they should not do like them. And they rejected all 16 the commandments of Jehovah their God, and made to themselves molten images, the two calves; and they made grove-idols, and worshipped the whole host of the heavens, and served Baal. And they devoted, by fire, their 17 sons and their daughters to Molech; and used divinations and enchantments; and sold themselves to do evil in the eyes of Jehovah, to provoke him to anger. Therefore was Jehovah 18 very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight: none were left, save only the tribe of Judah. Also Judah kept not the command- 19 ments of Jehovah their God, but walked by the

on the sabbath. It was, perhaps, covered with plates of gold, as well as the passage to it, which the king took away to give to Tiglath-pileser.
CHAP. XVII. 3. Salmaneser. He is called Shulman in Hosea, x. 14; and in Tobit, Enemassar. He succeeded Pul as king of Assyria; and Menander, in his history of the Tyrians, according to Josephus, mentioned his conquest of the land of Israel.
4. So, the king of Egypt. According to Usher, he is the Sabachon of prophane authors, the first of the Ethiopian dynasty.—Bound him in prison. After he had taken Samaria, an account of which follows. The whole of Hosea and the beginning of Micah relates to this siege.
6. Habor-nahar-gozan. I make this one name, with several modern critics.
9. Devised things, &c. So Michaelis; and the following words explain what is meant. They associated the worship of idols with Jehovah. Dathe from the Arabic renders, "They ventured to contend with Jehovah their God, in the most shameful manner." I prefer the version given.—The tower of the watchmen, &c. These towers were built to secure the vine and olive-yards, and in them shepherds watched their flocks. The words seem proverbial, and denote that idolatry prevailed, not only in the cities, but, in the villages of Israel; had filled both town and country. Comp. ch. xviii. 8.

13. My servants the prophets. The prophets often received particular commands to the people of Israel, which they were to observe, according to Moses, as much as the law given by him. Deut. xviii. 15—22.
15. And his testimonies, &c. "His protestations which he made against them." Geddes. I cannot think that this is the sense, as testimonies are.

statutes, which the kings of Israel had made :
 *they did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, so as 20 continually to provoke him to anger". Jehovah, therefore, rejected the whole seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of spoilers, until he had cast them out of his 21 sight. For the Israelites rent themselves from the house of David ; and they made Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, king : and Jeroboam drove Israel from following Jehovah, and caused them 22 to commit a great sin. For the children of Israel walked in all the sins which Jeroboam commit-23 ted ; from them they departed not. At length Jehovah removed Israel out of his sight, as he had spoken by all his servants the prophets.
 24 Thus Israel was carried away out of their own land into Assyria unto this day ; and the king of Assyria brought inhabitants from Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from Ava, and from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria, instead of the children of Israel ; and they possessed Samaria, 25 and dwelt in its cities. Now, at the beginning of their dwelling there, they feared not Jehovah ; and Jehovah sent lions among them, which 26 slew many of them. Some, therefore, spoke to the king of Assyria, saying, " The nations which thou hast removed, and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of worshipping the God of that land ; he hath, therefore, sent lions among them, and, behold, they slay them, because they know not the manner of 27 worshipping the God of that land." Then the king of Assyria commanded, saying, " Carry thither one of the priests, whom ye brought thence ; and let *him" go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of worshipping 28 the God of the land." Then one of the priests, whom they had carried away from Samaria, came and dwelt in Bethel, and taught them how they should fear Jehovah. Never- 29 theless, every nation made gods of their own,

 and put them in the temples of the high-places
 which the Samaritans had made ; every nation in their cities in which they dwelt. Thus the 30 men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth ; and the men of Cuth made Nergal ; and the men of Hamath made Ashima. And the Avites made 31
 Nibhaz and Tartak ; and the Sepharvites burnt their children, in fire, to Adrammelech and Anammelech, the gods of Sepharvaim. So 32
 they feared Jehovah, but made to themselves,
 of any sort of people, priests of the high-places,
 who sacrificed for them in the temples of the high-places. They feared Jehovah, and served 33 their own gods, after the manner of the nations from which they had been carried away. Unto 34 this day they observe their former customs, they fear not Jehovah only, nor do according to those statutes, or ordinances ; or according to the law and commandment which Jehovah commanded the children of Jacob, (whom he named Israel :)
 With whom Jehovah had made a covenant, and 35
 whom he charged, saying, " Ye shall not fear other gods, nor bow yourselves to them, nor serve them, nor sacrifice to them : But Jeho- 36
 vah, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt, with great power and a stretched-out arm, him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye offer sacrifice. And 37
 the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law,
 and the commandment, which he wrote for you,
 ye shall take heed to do continually ; but other gods ye shall not fear. And the covenant which 38
 I have made with you, ye shall not forget ; nor other gods shall ye fear. But Jehovah your 39

God ye shall fear; and he shall deliver you out 40 of the hand of all your enemies." Nevertheless, they did not hearken, but they did after their 41 former manner. So these nations feared Jehovah, and served their graven-idols: and as did their fathers, so did their children, and children's children, unto this day.

CHAPTER XVIII.

B. C. 726. The reign of Hezekiah; he reforms Judah; Sennacherib invades the country, and sends a part of his troops to besiege Jerusalem.

- 1 Now in the third year of Hoshea, son of Elah, king of Israel, Hezekiah, the son of
- 2 Ahaz, king of Judah, began to reign. Twenty-five years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty-nine years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Abia, the daughter
- 3 of Zechariah. And he did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, according to all that David his fore-father did:
- 4 He removed the high-places, and broke the statues, and cut down the idol-groves, and broke in pieces the brazen serpent, which Moses had made: for to it, until those days, the children of Israel had burnt incense: and he called
- 5 it Nehushtan. He trusted in Jehovah, the God of Israel; so that after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any who
- 6 were before him. For he cleaved to Jehovah, and departed not from following him, but kept his commandments, which Jehovah commanded
- 7 Moses. And Jehovah was with him; and he

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. We may learn, that God's threatenings are not vain words, but will assuredly be accomplished. From the writings of the prophets, we learn, how faithfully, zealously, and incessantly, the prophets warned the people; and from the event, we see, that they refused to hearken. They became obdurate, equally insensible to promises, or denunciations; they chose their own delusions, and, at last, they received the just recompense of their deeds.

2. We may see, what wretched work sin makes in a nation.

41. This must have been written some generations after the events recorded. This mixture of people formed the race afterwards called Samaritans, of whom we read in Ezra, Nehemiah, and the New Testament.

CHAP. XVIII. 2. The daughter of Zechariah. Probably, the pious person who had so much influence in the reign of Uzziah, (2 Chron. xxvi. 5.); and his daughter, by his instruction and example, might preserve her son Hezekiah from the idolatry of Ahaz.

prospered, whithersoever he went: and he rebelled against the king of Assyria, and served him not. He smote the Philistines unto Gaza, 8 and its territories, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

And in the fourth year of king Hezekiah, 9 which was the seventh of Hoshea, son of Elah, king of Israel, Salmaneser, king of Assyria, came up against Samaria, and besieged it. And 10 at the end of three years it was taken; in the sixth year of Hezekiah, which was the ninth year of Hoshea, king of Israel, Samaria was taken. And the king of Assyria carried away 11 the Israelites unto Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor-nahar-gozan, and in other cities of the Medes: Because they hearkened 12 not to the voice of Jehovah their God, but transgressed his covenant; they would neither hear, nor do any thing, which Moses, the servant of Jehovah, had commanded.

In the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, 13 Sennacherib, king of Assyria, came up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them. And Hezekiah, king of Judah, sent to the king 14 of Assyria to Lachish, saying, "I have offended; return from me, and what thou puttest on me I will bear." And the king of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah, king of Judah, three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold. And Hezekiah gave him all the silver which 15 was found in the house of Jehovah, and in the treasures of the palace. At that time Hezekiah 16

These people had all the advantages they could have desired, from miracles and prophets; they had full evidence, that Jehovah was the supreme God; great and wonderful deliverances were wrought; but all had no effect. Though there was something peculiar in their circumstances, as God was their temporal king, yet it is an awful lesson to all. "All these things happened to them for examples, and they are written for our admonition, on whom the ends of the world are come." Let us then receive the admonition, and avoid their sin, that we may not meet with like punishment.

13. Sennacherib. He was the son of Salmaneser.

14. I have offended. Sennacherib had taken some of the fenced cities of Judah, which success probably made Hezekiah suspect he had done wrong in withholding the tribute. See ver. 7.

17. Yet the king. He appears determined on the absolute surrender of Hezekiah, and Jerusalem; and his partial success might embolden him in his attempt.

cut off the gold from the doors of the temple of Jehovah, and from the pillars which Hezekiah, king of Judah, had overlaid, and gave it to the king of Assyria.

- 17 Yet the king of Assyria sent Tartan, and Rab-saris, and Rab-shakeh, from Lachish, to king Hezekiah, with a great host against Jerusalem. ° And when they had come up, they stopped by the conduit of the upper pool, which is in the highway of the fuller's field.
- 18 And when they had called to the king, there came out to them Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, who was over the household, and Shebna, the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph, the recorder. And Rab-shakeh, said to them, "Speak ye now to Hezekiah, 'That thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, 'What confidence is this which thou exercisest? With thy lips thou sayest that thou hast wisdom and power to make war. Now, in whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me? Now, behold, thou trustest to the staff of a bruised reed, to Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh, king of Egypt, to all who trust in him. But if ye say to me, 'We trust in Jehovah our God: is it not he, whose high-places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and hath said to Judah and Jerusalem, 'Ye shall worship before this altar in Jerusalem?' Now, therefore, I pray thee, give pledges to my lord the king of Assyria, and I will deliver thee two thousand horses, if thou be able, on thy part, to set riders upon them. How, then, wilt thou dare to face one captain, the least of my master's servants; although thou put thy trust in Egypt for chariots and for horsemen? Am I now come up, without Jehovah against this place, to destroy it? Jehovah said to me, 'Go up against this land, and destroy it.'" Then said Eliakim,

the son of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Joah, to Rab-shakeh, "Speak, we pray thee, to thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and talk not to us in the Jewish tongue, in the hearing of the people who are on the wall." But Rab-shakeh said to them, "Hath my master sent me to thy master, and to thee, to speak these words? and not also to the men who are stationed on the wall, who will be compelled, with you, to eat their own dung, and drink their own urine?" Then Rab-shakeh stood and cried with a loud voice, in the Jewish tongue, and spoke, saying, "Hear the word of the great king, the king of Assyria: Thus saith the king, 'Let not Hezekiah deceive you; for he will not be able to deliver you out of his hand: Nor let Hezekiah induce you to trust in Jehovah, saying, 'Jehovah will surely rescue us; and this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria. Harken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, 'Make a present to me, and come out to me; and ye shall eat every man of his own vine, and every one of his own fig-tree, and drink every one of his own cistern:' Until I come, and take you away to a land, like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vine-yards, a land of the purest olive, and of honey; and ye shall live, and not die: but hearken not to Hezekiah, when he persuadeth you, saying, 'Jehovah will deliver us.' Hath any of the gods of the nations, delivered in any case, his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria? Where are the gods of Hamath, and of Arpad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah? have they delivered Samaria out of my hand? Who among all the gods of the countries, are they that have delivered their country out of my hand, that Jehovah should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?" But the people

CHAP. XVIII. 17. ° And they went and came up to Jerusalem. Sept. 10 mss.

19. And Rab-shakeh. He was the king's cup-bearer, as his name signifies; and by his talking of Jehovah, and speaking so readily in the Jews' language, he seems to have been an apostate Jew. He made a boasting speech, the main purpose of which was to tell them, that resistance would be in vain, if they trusted to warlike preparations.

21. To Egypt. Probably Hezekiah had made some proposals to the king of Egypt, but was reprov'd and overruled by Isaiah. See Is. xxx. xxxi.

25. Jehovah said to me. If Rab-shakeh were an apostate Jew, he might have pretended that Jehovah had said to his master, "Go up," &c. Or, perhaps Sennacherib might have divined, as was usual, respecting his future operations: and Rab-shakeh might ascribe the result to Jehovah, to alarm the people.

were silent, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, "Answer him not."

CHAPTER XIX.

B. C. 710. Hezekiah sendeth to Isaiah, who comforteth him; Sennacherib's letter; and Isaiah's prediction concerning his return to his own country.

37 THEN came Eliakim, the son of Hilkiyah, who was over the household, and Shebna, the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah, with their garments rent, and told him the words of Rab-shakeh.

1 And when king Hezekiah heard, he rent his garments, and covered himself with sackcloth, 2 and went into the house of Jehovah. And he sent Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna, the scribe, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, to Isaiah, the prophet, 3 the son of Amotz. And they said to him, "Thus saith Hezekiah, 'This day is a day of trouble, and of reproof, and of calumny: for the children are come to the birth, and there is 4 not strength to bring forth. It may be that Jehovah, thy God, hath heard all the words of Rab-shakeh, whom the king of Assyria, his master, hath sent to reproach the living God; and will reprove the words which Jehovah, thy God hath heard; intercede, therefore, by prayer for the remnant that are yet left."

The servants of king Hezekiah then went to 5 Isaiah; And Isaiah said to them, "Thus shall 6 ye say to your master; 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'Be not afraid on account of the words which thou hast heard, with which the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me. Behold, 7 I will put another spirit in him, and he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.'" When Rab-shakeh returned, he 8 found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah; for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish. And it being then reported to 9 him, saying, "Behold, Tirahkah, king of Ethiopia, is come out to fight against thee;" he again sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying, "Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah, king of Ju- 10 dah, saying, 'Let not thy God, in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, 'Jerusalem shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.' Behold, thou hast heard what the 11 kings of Assyria have done to all lands, by destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered? Did the Gods of the nations deliver 12 those whom my fathers destroyed; Gozan, and REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVIII. 1. Among a multitude given up to wickedness and depravity, God preserves a few steadfast and faithful to himself. Thus Noah was raised up to be a burning and shining light, amid the surrounding gloom and darkness of his generation; so Elijah maintained God's cause against Ahab and Jezebel. So now Hezekiah is raised up to preserve for a season, the kingdom of Judah, by promoting a reformation. His father had nearly ruined the state and the church; but he no sooner becomes king, than he restores divine worship, and by his own example, teaches the people to destroy their idols. Let my reader put away his idols and turn to God.

2. We may learn from Hezekiah's destroying the brazen serpent, how soon superstition perverts objects, indifferent in themselves, to the worst purposes. The brazen serpent was preserved in memory of a signal miracle, and may be regarded as a significant emblem of the way of salvation by faith. But it is probable, that the Israelites made an idol of it, and sought from it the cure of their diseases. Hence, Hezekiah found it necessary to destroy it, as only a piece of brass. Thus our Reformers thought they ought to act, in respect to all the superstitions of Rome. The clerical habits, the sign of the cross, kneeling at the Lord's supper, &c.

3. In accomplishing the work of reform, great courage and confidence are necessary. Notice is taken of Hezekiah's zeal and resolution, and his trusting in the Lord. They have need of great courage when the times are degenerate, when religion is at a low ebb, and corruptions are general. And when men trust in the Lord, and cleave to him, they may hope for success, and often meet with less difficulty than they expected. That may be done suddenly, which we despaired of doing at all. This should engage us resolutely to appear and act for God, and put our trust in him alone for our final success.

CHAP XIX. 3. Children are come, &c. These words are proverbial; and not only denote the disappointment of hope, but a season of the utmost distress and anxiety.

7. Another spirit in him. Secker has observed, that this is the uniform sense of the words. They here mean another mind, a spirit of fear. Comp. Is. xxxi. 8, 9. This was produced by hearing of the invasion of his own country by Tirahkah, the Ethiopian, or of his coming towards Judea.

9. Sent messengers. This was policy to prevent Hezekiah from pursuing him. As he had formed the design of hasting to meet Tirahkah, he wished to prevent the Jewish troops from hanging on his rear.

12, 13. Gozan and Haran, &c. These places seem to have been in Chaldea, and not far from the Euphrates.

Haran, and Rezep, and the children of Eden 13 who were in Thelasar? Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arpad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah?" 14 And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it; and Hezekiah went up to the house of Jehovah, and 15 spread it before Jehovah. And Hezekiah prayed before Jehovah, and said, "O Jehovah, the God of Israel, who dwellest between the che-rubs, thou art God, thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; thou hast made the 16 heavens and the earth. Bow down, O Jehovah, thine ear, and hear; open, O Jehovah, thine eyes, and see: and hear "all" the words of Sennacherib, which he hath sent to reproach the 17 living God. Of a truth, O Jehovah, the kings of Assyria, have destroyed those nations and their 18 lands, And have cast their gods into the fire:
 for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore have they 19 destroyed them. Now, therefore, O Jehovah, our God, I beseech thee, save thou us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou, Jehovah, art the only God." 20 Then Isaiah, the son of Amotz, sent to Hezekiah, saying, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel; 'Thy prayer to me, against Sennacherib, 21 the king of Assyria, I have heard.' This is the word which Jehovah hath spoken concerning him;
 'The virgin daughter of Zion hath despised thee,
 She hath laughed thee to scorn;
 The daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.
 22 Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed?

And against whom hast thou exalted thy voice,
 And hast lifted up thine eyes on high?
 Even against the Holy One of Israel.
 By thy messengers thou hast reproached Jeho- 23
 vah, and said,
 'With the multitude of my chariots I have ascended
 To the height of the mountains, the sides of Lebanon,
 And have cut down his tall cedars, his choice
 fir-trees:
 And I have entered his extreme retreat, his richest forest.
 I have digged and drunk foreign waters, 24
 And in my progress have I dried up all the streams of fenced places!
 Hast thou not heard of old, that I disposed this? 25
 And that from ancient times, I determined it?
 Now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldst be,
 To reduce into heaps of ruin, the strongest cities.
 Hence were their inhabitants of small power; 26
 They were dismayed and confounded;
 They were as the grass of the field, as the green herb;
 The grass on the house tops; as blighted corn,
 before its full growth.
 But thy counsels, and all thine enterprises, 27
 And thy rage against me, I have known;
 Because thy rage against me, 28
 And thine insolence, have reached mine ear;
 I will put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle
 in thy jaws,
 And turn thee back by the way in which thou camest.
 And this shall be a sign to thee, Hezekiah; 29
 Eat this year that which groweth of itself,

16—19. Hezekiah requests that Jehovah would now give proof that he was not like the idols of the heathens, but was indeed the living God; so that all kingdoms might know and acknowledge him as such.

23. The sides of Lebanon. Lebanon means the most secure places; and cutting down his tall cedars, the overthrow of his opponents. These images are beautiful.

24. In my progress. Literally, 'with the soles of my feet.' He had such a multitude of troops, that nothing could oppose him. The streams of fenced places, Vitringa and Lowth suppose refer to Egypt, whose principal cities were chiefly defended by moats, canals, or large lakes, cut and made with great labour. As Libna and Lachish were on the south-west of Jerusalem, it is not improbable, that he had made an attack on Egypt. The word מִצְרַיִם is ambiguous, and may signify Egypt, if the points be changed. I prefer the common version.

25—28. God had permitted Sennacherib hitherto to prosper, that he might perform his own counsels; but now he would punish him for his insolence, pride, and vanity.

29. This shall be a sign. How could an event after the deliverance, be a sign of that deliverance? For the direction to sow in the third year, supposes the departure of the enemy. No answer to this difficulty is more

- And the second year, what springeth from the same ;
And in the third year sow ye, and reap,
And plant vine-yards, and eat of their fruits.
30 For again the escaped remnant of the house of Judah,
Shall strike root downward, and bear fruit
upward.
31 For, from Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant,
And those who have escaped from mount Zion:
The zeal of Jehovah, 'God of hosts', will do this.'
32 Thus, then, saith Jehovah, concerning the king of Assyria,
'He shall not come into this city ;
Nor shall he shoot an arrow there,
Nor come before it with shield, nor raise a mound against it.'
33 He shall return by the way in which he came ;
Into this city he shall not come, saith Jehovah,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIX. 1. We may learn, that prayer is the duty of good men, in every time of difficulty and oppression. Hezekiah prayed himself, and sent to Isaiah to pray for him and for the people. Their enemies endeavoured to frighten them from it, as Rab-shakeh did Hezekiah, saying, "Where is your God?" But here is the last and first resort of good men; when heavy afflictions come upon them; when the interest of religion is at the lowest ebb, when difficulties insurmountable come, then is the time for prayer. It is a comfort that they can spread their cases before the Lord, and that he takes notice of them; that he will "hear their prayer and send an answer of peace."

2. It always becomes us in prayer to regard the honour of God, and thence to fetch our pleas. Adore him, with Hezekiah, as "the God of Israel; as the God of the kingdoms of the earth; the supreme, universal, everlasting king;" we should maintain a regard to his glory, 'that the nations may know and serve him.' A principle of religion is improved by prayer, especially that 'his name may be glorified.' This should be our daily prayer, "hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come."

3. It is a great satisfaction to the church and people of God, pertinent, than what Rosenmuller has given. That to predict a subsequent event, is a clear indication of the certainty of a prior event, on which it depends: Thus Exod. iii. 12. worshipping God in mount Horeb implied the deliverance of Israel from the fiery furnace of Egypt. Hence, the word miracle not only signifies a prodigy—a miracle, but any thing which confirms a promise made.

35. Angel of Jehovah. It is well known, that in scripture any instrument which Jehovah employs in his providential government, is called an angel. "He maketh the winds his angels," &c. Ps. civ. 4. Hence, some

And on that night, an angel of Jehovah went 35 out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians, a hundred and eighty-five thousand; and when the rest arose in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses. Then Sennacherib, king of 36
Assyria, departed, and returned and dwelt at Nineveh. And as he was worshipping in the 37 house of Nisroch, his god, Adrammelech and Sharezer, his sons, smote him with the sword:
and they escaped into the land of Armenia.
And Esarhaddon, his son, reigned in his stead.

to think that he has the greatest and proudest of their enemies under his controul. He has his eye upon them, knows their abode, their going out and coming in, their rage against his people. He knows all their plots and contrivances; he has his hand upon them; "his hook is in their nose, and his bridle in their mouth;" they are doing his work, and act by his power. He sees and knows all their insolence and rage; as the Psalmist observes concerning this story, (Ps. lxxvi. 10.) "The wrath of man shall praise him, and the remainder of wrath shall he restrain."

4. What a great, powerful, and terrible God is Jehovah! "At his rebuke," the Psalmist observes, "the chariots and horses are cast into a deep sleep; none of the men of might have found their hands." The greatest numbers cannot stand before him; one of his mighty angels destroyed this numerous host. Where is 'the great king, the king of Assyria,' now? "Thou," says the psalmist, "even thou art to be feared." Not the greatest king, but thou alone; and "who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry?" The general lesson from the whole is, "O love the Lord, all ye his saints; for the Lord preserveth the faithful, but plentifully rewardeth the proud doer." Such characters shall be exposed to everlasting contempt.

of the Rabbies explain the angel to be Tlrahkah, who coming unexpectedly on Sennacherib, vanquished him with a terrible slaughter. Usher embraced and defended this opinion; but what is said in Is. xxx. 30. and xxxi. 9. wholly subverts this notion. Vitringa supposed that an unusual tempest of thunder and lightning is intended; and others, the destructive wind called samiel, which is known to produce sudden death to all who are exposed to it. With others I think the plague is intended; a disease indigenous to Egypt, and where Sennacherib had been. This disease breaking out, and being ignorant of its nature, the infection spread, so that the chief part of the disease. And the prophet Isaiah, the son of Amōtz, came to him, and said to him, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Set thy house in order; for thou shalt die, and live no longer.'" Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall, and prayed to Jehovah, saying, "I beseech thee, O Jehovah, remember how I have walked before thee in truth, and with an upright heart, and have done what is good in thine eyes." And Hezekiah wept much. Now, before Isaiah had gone out into the middle court, the word of Jehovah came to him, saying, "Go back and tell Hezekiah, the chief of my people, 'Thus saith Jehovah, the God of David thy fore-father, 'I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold, I will heal thee: on the third day thou shalt go up to the house of Jehovah. And I will add to thy days, fifteen years; and I will deliver thee and this city, from the hand of the king of Assyria; and I will defend this city for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.'" And Isaiah said, "Take a lump of figs, and lay it on the boil, and he shall recover." And Hezekiah said to Isaiah, "What shall be the sign that Jehovah will heal me, and that I shall go up into the house of Jehovah on the third day?" And Isaiah said, "This sign will Jehovah give thee, that he will do the thing which he hath spoken: shall the shadow, on the dial, go forward ten degrees? or go back ten degrees?" And Hezekiah answered, "It is an easy matter for the shadow to go forwards ten degrees; nay, but let the shadow go backward ten degrees." And Isaiah, the prophet, cried to Jehovah: and he brought backward the shadow, ten degrees, which it had gone forward, on the dial of Ahaz.

About this time Berodach-baladan, the son of 12 Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and ambassadors with a present unto Hezekiah: for he had heard that Hezekiah had been sick. And Hezekiah rejoiced at their arrival, and 13 showed them all his store-houses, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and his armoury, and all that he had in his treasuries: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, which Hezekiah showed them not.

Then came Isaiah, the prophet, to king Hezekiah, and said to him, "What said these men? and whence came they to thee?" And Hezekiah said, "They are come from a far country, from Babylon." And he said, "What have 15 they seen in thy house." And Hezekiah answered, "All things which are in my house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures which I have not showed them." And Isaiah said to Hezekiah, "Hear the word 16 of Jehovah, 'Behold, the days come, that all 17 which is in thy house, and what thy fathers have laid up in store unto this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith Jehovah. And of thy sons who shall issue from 18 thee, whom thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.'" Then said Hezekiah 19 to Isaiah, "Good is the word of Jehovah which thou hast spoken: only, said he, let there be peace and truth in my days."

And the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and all 20

army perished. Rossenmuller, after Wepler, understands חמ to signify leaders or chiefs, and renders, "a hundred and eighty-five chiefs," and if so many of the chiefs, of course a large number of the others perished. This interpretation, they think, is supported by 2 Chron. xxxii. 21. "And Jehovah sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria." All the ancient versions render, "a hundred and eighty-five thousand."

CHAP. XX. 1. In those days. That is, the year after the destruction of Sennacherib's army. This was in the fourteenth year of his reign; and as he reigned twenty-nine years, it must have been in the fifteenth. Usher places it before the invasion of Judea by Sennacherib.—Of a deadly disease. From the boil mentioned it has been thought that this was the plague. The command to set his house in order seems to be to regulate his affairs, to make his will. Comp. 2 Sam. xvii. 23.

6. From the hand, &c. From any future attempts which he or his successors may make. The power of Assyria was now gradually diminished; and that of Babylon increased.

8—11. There are great difficulties in these verses. Some understand והצל to denote the steps either of the palace or temple, on which the shadow of some column fell; as it is doubtful, whether or not the division of time into hours was made so early as in the days of Hezekiah. Reland, after Josephus, adopts this opinion. If they had not any divisions like our hours, they might have others; and whatever these were, the design was answered by the shadow going back either ten degrees or steps.

13. Rejoiced, &c. This reading has the authority of all the versions, the parallel place, and many mss. and the narrative itself requires it.

his might, and how he made a pool, and a conduit, and brought water into the city, are written 21 in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. And Hezekiah slept with his fathers; and Manasseh, his son, reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XXI.

B. C. 698. The reigns of Manasseh and Amon; he being slain, Josiah succeedeth.

1 MANASSEH was twelve years old when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty-five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Heph-
2 zi-bah. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, after the abominable deeds of the nations, which Jehovah had cast out from before the children
3 of Israel. For he built up again the high-places which Hezekiah, his father, had destroyed; and he reared up altars for Baal, and made a grove, as did Ahab, king of Israel; and worshipped the whole host of the heavens, and served them.
4 And he built altars, for idols, in the house of Jehovah, of which Jehovah said, "In Jerusa-
5 lem will I put my name." And he built altars for the whole host of the heavens in the two 6 courts of the house of Jehovah. And he devoted, by fire, his own son, and observed the clouds, and used divinations, and encouraged necromancers and wizards: he wrought much wickedness in the eyes of Jehovah, to provoke him to anger. And he set up a grove-idol, 7 made by himself, in the house, of which Jehovah said to David, and to Solomon, his son, "In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever: Nor will I make the feet of 8 Israel move any more out of the land which I gave to their fathers; if they will but observe to do according to all that I have commanded them, and according to all the law which my servant Moses gave them in charge." But they 9 hearkened not: and Manasseh seduced them to do more evil than did the nations which Jehovah destroyed before the children of Israel.

And Jehovah spoke by his servants the pro- 10 phets, saying, "Because Manasseh, king of 11 Judah, hath committed these abominations, and hath done more wickedly than the Amorites did, who were before him, and hath also caused Judah to sin with his idols; Therefore, thus 12 saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'Behold, I am about to bring such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that both the ears of every one who hear-eth of it, will tingle. And I will stretch over 13 Jerusalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the house of Ahab; and I will wipe Jerusalem as one wipeth a dish; wiping and turning

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. It is the duty of every man, 'to prepare to meet his God.' In afflictions, we are called from the uncertainty of events, to regulate our affairs, and be more especially intent on cultivating a devotional spirit. Let then the sick learn to pray to God; this is the way to have the evil removed, or to be made fit for death. Let them learn also to use those means which providence affords; otherwise they tempt God, and do not trust him. When recovered they should return public thanks; and love the house of God better.

2. At sickness and death it is happy to appeal to God, as Hezekiah did. The testimony of a good conscience encourages our prayers and our hopes, either that God will remove our complaints, or overrule them for our good, or that he will receive us to a better world. If we desire this, herein let us exercise ourselves daily, that we may be found of him in peace, and ready to enter into the joy of our Lord.

3. We see that pride and vanity are sins which easily beset the best of men. God observes this, and is displeased at it. We are always in danger of it. Who would have thought this should be the case in Hezekiah; that his heart would have been lifted up? Good men know too little of themselves. God is righteous and kind in sending afflictions to try us, that we may know what is in our hearts, and cure what is amiss there. Let us then pray, that God would 'hide pride from us,' and keep us humble; and "that the fruit of every affliction may be to take away sin," especially this sin.

19. Only, said he, let, &c. With Dathe, I consider that the interrogative form implies strongly the affirmative, and I have rendered accordingly. This was a very mortifying message. But God was displeased that he should distrust his protection, and enter into an alliance with an heathen, of which the prophet Micah had warned him. Micah, iv. 9, 10. Babylon was now a very inconsiderable nation, and the event seemed unlikely; but it afterwards happened, and Daniel and other youths of the royal blood were taken there.

CHAP. XXI. 2-9. He did evil, &c. Thus what the pious Hezekiah had laboured to destroy, his profligate son soon restored. Every species of idolatry was introduced into the very temple itself. Baal was preferred to Jehovah; a grove-idol placed in the temple; altars built in the courts to the host of heaven; and divination, and other superstitions encouraged. He appears to have equalled, yea, to have surpassed Ahab in his wickedness.

13. The line of Samaria. The same lot or portion, as is intended by the measuring-line. Ps. xvi. 6, and 2 Chron. x. 16. Or it may be taken from

- 14 it upside down. And I will forsake the remnant of mine inheritance, and deliver them into the hand of their enemies; and they shall become a prey and a spoil to all their enemies;
- 15 Because they have done evil in mine eyes, and have provoked me to anger, since the day their fathers came out of Egypt, even unto this day.
- 16 Moreover, Manasseh shed innocent blood exceedingly, till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to another; besides his sin by which he caused Judah to sin, in doing evil in the eyes of
- 17 Jehovah. Now the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and all that he did, and his sin which he committed, are written in the chronicles of the kings
- 18 of Judah. And Manasseh slept with his fathers, and was buried in the garden of his own house, in the garden of Uzza: and Amon, his son, reigned in his stead.
- 19 Amon was twenty-two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned two years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Meshullemeth, the daughter of Haruz, of Jotbah.
- 20 And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, as his
- 21 father Manasseh did. And in all the ways in which his father had long walked, he walked; and the idols which his father had served, he served and worshipped. And he forsook Jehovah, the God of his fathers, and walked not in the way of Jehovah. And the servants of Amon conspired against him, and slew the king in his own house. But the people of the land slew all those who had conspired against king Amon; and the people of the land made Josiah, his son, king in his stead. Now the rest of the acts of Amon, and all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. And he was buried in his own sepulchre, in the garden of Uzza; and Josiah, his son, reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XXII.

B. C. 641. Josiah's good reign; his early regard to religion; his destruction of idols, &c.

JOSIAH was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty-one years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jedidah, the daughter of Adaiah of Boscath. And he did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, and walked in all the ways of David his fore-father, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left.

* And in the fourth year of his reign, the king commanded Hilkiah, the high-priest, and the REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. It is painful to witness the conduct of Manasseh, the son of one of the best kings of Judah. He had every advantage of a pious education and example; and must have often heard the most eloquent of the prophets plead the cause of Jehovah and of religion. Isaiah lived and prophesied through the whole of his father's reign; and in what lofty strains did he set forth the glory of Messiah and his kingdom. But all these advantages were lost on Manasseh; and his conduct was the result of a mind debased by superstition, and a heart steeled to remorse. He went on long in this awful course, and laid a foundation for the most bitter repentance.

the line which builders use, in adjusting their materials. The next words, the plummet, &c. rather support this.—I will wipe, &c. I will take away all its inhabitants and cleanse it by its destruction.

16. Shed innocent blood, &c. The blood of prophets who testified against his idolatries. It is generally thought that Isaiah suffered in this reign, and was sawn asunder, and that Paul alludes to this in Heb. xi. 37. Isaiah's fidelity to God, like that of John the baptist, cost him his life.

18. Garden of Uzza. Probably of king Uzziah, who, being a leper, might have been buried in his own garden. Manasseh wished to be interred there, on account of his former sins, of which he truly repented.

21. Had long walked. He did not regard his father's repentance, and late reformation; but as he had been early accustomed to serve idols, he refused to forsake them. His reign and his life soon terminated.

4—21. † from chap. 23.

2. We may see, what a curse to a people, wicked kings are. They seduce by their own example, and their injustice affects all. Those most like themselves are encouraged; the vile and the profligate are set up and honoured, the guilty are acquitted, and the innocent condemned. What have such to answer for at the bar of God? Let us be thankful, that we live under a constitution, where many of the evils specified, cannot obtain, unless by our own fault. Justice is in our hands as a people; and the supreme power can only execute the decision of a jury. In many respects the lines are fallen to us in pleasant places, and we have a goodly inheritance.

CHAP. XXII. 2. In 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3—7, we find that Josiah, in the eighth year of his reign, began to attend to the state of religion; and in the twelfth he destroyed the idols in Jerusalem, and throughout the land; an account of which we have in the next chapter, as if this had followed the finding of the book of the law. We have then here an anachronism inconsistent with the order of events as stated in the parallel place. On this ground I have ventured to transpose a part of the 23rd chapter, to follow the 2nd verse in this; and I greatly suspect, that the order which I have adopted was that of the original.

CHAP. XXIII. 4. And the king, &c. I have added, from the parallel place, the supplement of words, as necessary to the sense. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3.—Their ashes, &c. To make the altar there still more execrable. See ver. 16.

priests of the second order, and the door-keepers to bring out of the temple of Jehovah, all the vessels that were made for Baal, and for the grove-idol, and for all the host of the heavens; and he burned them without Jerusalem, in the fields of Kidron, but their ashes were carried
 5 unto Bethel. And he put down the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense on the high-places, in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem; those also who burnt incense to Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the planets,
 6 and to the whole host of the heavens. And he brought out the grove-idol from the house of Jehovah, without Jerusalem, unto the brook Kidron, and burned it at the brook Kidron, and having stamped it to dust, he scattered its dust
 7 upon the graves of the common people. And he broke down the houses of the Sodomites, which were by the house of Jehovah, where the 8 women wore hangings for the grove-idol. And he removed all the priests from the cities of Judah, and defiled the high-places where the priests had burnt incense, from Gibeah to Beer-sheba. He also broke down the high-places of the satyrs, which were at the entrance of the gate of Joshua, the governor of the city, on 9 one's left hand going into the city. And the priests of the high-places approached not the altar of Jehovah in Jerusalem, but they ate of the unleavened bread among their brethren.
 10 And he defiled Topheth, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, that no man might devote his son or his daughter by fire to Molech.
 11 And he took away the horses which the kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun, which were at the entrance of the house of Jehovah, by the chamber of Nathan-melech, the eunuch, which was in the suburbs; and he burned the sun-chariots with fire. And the altars which were on 12 the roof of the summer-house of Ahaz, which the kings of Judah had made; and the altars which Manasseh had made in the two courts of the house of Jehovah, the king broke down, and thence demolished and threw their dust into the brook Kidron. The king also defiled the high-

 13 places which were opposite Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of mount Olivet, which Solomon, the king of Israel, had built for Ashtarothe, the abominable idol of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh, the abominable idol of the Moabites, and for Milcom, the abominable idol of the children of Ammon. And he broke 14 in pieces the statues, and cut down the groves, and filled their places with human bones.

Moreover the altar which was at Bethel, and 15 the high-place, which Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin, had made, both that altar and the high-place, he broke down; and burned the idol of the high-place, and stamped it to dust: he burned also the grove. And as Josiah turned himself, he spied the se-16 pulchres that were there in the mount, and sent, and took the bones out of the sepulchres, and burned them upon the altar, and polluted it, according to the word of Jehovah, "when Jeroboam stood by the altar at the feast. And the king, turning about, cast his eyes on the sepulchre of the" man of God, who proclaimed these words, And he said, "What title is that which 17 I see?" And the men of the city told him, "It is the sepulchre of the man of God, who came as well as from rw. The former derivation has been adopted by some, and rendered, 'the mount of corruption.' The other seems more natural.—Which Solomon had built. It is singular that these had not been destroyed by Hezekiah or some other pious king. They had been, most probably, devoted to the worship of Jehovah, and the idols removed, in the reign of the better kings; but the altars and buildings being suffered to remain, the idols were again replaced, in the reign of the other kings. This seems the most probable account; and is supported by the remark so often made, "that the people still sacrificed on the high-places."

16, 17. The common text is deficient; and there is a total want of coherence and of perspicuity. The Septuagint has preserved the text com-

from Judah, and proclaimed these things which thou hast done against the altar of Bethel.”
 18 And he said, “Let him alone; let no man move his bones.” So they let his bones alone, with the bones of the prophet who came out of Samaria. And all the temples of the high-places which were in the cities of Samaria, which the kings of Israel had made to provoke Jehovah to anger, Josiah cast down, and did to them according to all that he had done at Bethel. And he slew all the priests of the high-places upon the altars which were there; and he burned human bones upon them. He then returned to Jerusalem.

CHAPTER XXIII.

B. C. 624. The reign of Josiah continued; the repairing of the temple; a solemn pass-over kept; and a covenant made to serve God, &c.

3 And in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, the king sent Shaphan, the son of Azaliah, the son of Meshullam, the scribe, to the house of Jehovah, saying, “Go up to Hilkiyah, the high-priest, that he may sum up the silver which hath been brought into the house of Jehovah, which the door-keepers have collected
 5 from the people: And let them deliver it into the hand of those who oversee the work of the house of Jehovah, and let them give it to the

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXII. 1. The early piety of Josiah; was the foundation of his subsequent conduct. It is of the greatest importance, to remember our Creator in the days of our youth, before evil habits have obtained dominion. In this season of life, if we are not under the salutary influence of religion, our passions govern, and we become as restive and untractable as the wild-ass's colt. Let parents exert all their influence, to turn the pliancy and ardour of youth into the right channel; let them labour to sow that seed which may repay all their cares by its increase. The knowledge of God's will, and a reverence for his perfections, form the best principles and the surest guides of life.

CHAP. XXII. 3—7. From this, it appears that measures had been previously taken to raise money for the repair of the temple; and the money thus raised, was now appropriated to the intended purpose.

8. I have found the book of the law. From the parallel place, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 14. it is most probable, if not absolutely certain, that this was the original copy of the Pentateuch, written by Moses. The learned reader may consult note in Hebrew Bible, loc.

And Hilkiyah, the high-priest, said to Shaphan, the scribe, “I have found the book of the law, in the house of Jehovah.” And Hilkiyah gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it. And 9 Shaphan, the scribe, came to the king, and brought the king word and said, “Thy servants have summed up the money found in the house of Jehovah”, and have delivered it into the hand of those who oversee the work to be done in the house of Jehovah.” And Shaphan, the 10 scribe, told the king, saying, “Hilkiyah, the priest, hath given to me a book.” And Shaphan read it before the king. And when the 11 king heard the words of the book of the law, he rent his garments. And the king commanded Hilkiyah, the priest, and Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, and Achibor, the son of Michaiah, and Shaphan, the scribe, and Asahiah, a servant of the king's, saying, “Go inquire of 13 Jehovah for me, and for the whole people of Judah, concerning the words of this book which

2. In the reform of Josiah, we see the proofs of the most awful apostacy from God. The whole state of Israel was corrupted. The temple, the court, Jerusalem, and all the cities were filled with idols! Even at the gates both of the temple and the cities, these abominable objects met the eye; and the awful vices connected with them, showed the degeneracy of the land. Josiah, undismayed, attempted the arduous task of reform. He began at the royal city, and removed and destroyed all the detestable idols. He then proceeded through the land, and gave no quarter to idols, wherever he found them. Thus should we act, putting away every abomination, and resolutely adhering to our God and Saviour.

copies of the law had perished, and that the king had not before seen one. This, I think, is highly improbable. The prophets would take care to preserve the sacred records; and among the serious people, the law would be regarded and copied. I am, therefore, disposed to admit the conjecture of Dathe, that Hilkiyah might send, together with the autograph of Moses, some of the prophecies of Isaiah, or the other prophets, in which the approaching ruin of Judah was foretold; and that this excited the fear of the pious king. Or, if we suppose that the king read the latter chapters of Deuteronomy; and, owing to the circumstances of the times, or to a divine is found: for great is the wrath of Jehovah which is kindled against us, because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according to all that is prescribed to us."

14 Then Hilkiyah, the priest, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Asahiah, went to Huldah, the prophetess, (the wife of Shallum, the son of Tikvah, the son of Harhas, keeper of the wardrobe, who dwelt in the suburbs of Jerusalem, and they spoke to her:

15 And she said unto them, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'Tell the man who sent

16 you to me; 'Thus saith Jehovah 'Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon its inhabitants, all the threatenings of the book which

17 the king of Judah hath read; Because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense to other gods, so as to provoke me to anger by all the works of their hands; therefore, my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and shall

18 not be quenched.' But to the king of Judah who sent you to inquire of Jehovah, thus shall ye say to him, 'Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'Because at the words which thou

19 hast heard, Thy heart was softened, and thou hast humbled thyself before Jehovah, when thou heardest what I spoke against this place, and against its inhabitants, (that they should become a desolation and a curse) and hast rent thy garments, and wept before me; I also have 20 heard thee, saith Jehovah. Behold, therefore, I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be brought to thy grave in peace; and thine eyes shall not see all the evil which I will bring upon this place."

1 And they brought the king this word; and the king sent, and gathered unto him all the 2 elders of Judah and of Jerusalem. And the king went up into the house of Jehovah, and all the men of Judah, and all the inhabitants of

Jerusalem with him, and the priests, and the prophets, and the whole people, both small and great: and he read in their hearing all the words of the book of the covenant, which had been found in the house of Jehovah. And the 3 king stood by a pillar, and made a covenant before Jehovah, to walk after Jehovah, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all his heart, and with all his soul, to perform the words of this covenant which were written in this book: and all the people consented to the covenant.

And the king commanded all the people, 21 saying, "Keep the passover unto Jehovah your God, as it is written in the book of this covenant!" Surely there was not holden such a 22 pass-over, from the days of the judges who judged Israel, nor in all the days of the kings of Israel, nor of the kings of Judah. In the 23 eighteenth year of king Josiah, this pass-over was kept to Jehovah, in Jerusalem.

Moreover the necromancers, and the wizards, 24 and the teraphs, and the idols, and all the abominations, which were seen in the land of Judah, and in Jerusalem, Josiah put away, that he might perform the words of the law, which were written in the book, that Hilkiyah, the priest, found in the house of Jehovah. And like to him was there no 25 king before him, who turned to Jehovah with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses; nor after him arose there any like him.

Notwithstanding, Jehovah turned not from 26 the fierceness of his great wrath, which had been kindled against Judah, because of all the provocations with which Manasseh had provoked him. And Jehovah said, "I will also re- 27 move Judah out of my sight, as I have removed Israel, and will cast off this city Jerusalem, which I have chosen, and the house, of which I said, influence on the mind, he saw more clearly and felt more powerfully the consequences of the apostasy of the land, we may account for his distress and anxiety. For it is matter of common experience, that the same things, heard or read, do not always make the same impression on the mind.

16—19. I will bring evil, &c. The answer to the king's inquiry, and especially the 19th verse, seems to support the conjecture of Dathe. For the threatenings of the law are general, respecting the whole land; but those of the prophets are particular, and directed against Jerusalem in particular. See Is. i. 7, 8. and xxix. 1—4. Jer. iv. 19—31. and v.

CHAP. XXIII. 1—3. The answer returned to the king influenced him to call the people together, at Jerusalem; and to engage them to make a solemn covenant with God; to which they having consented, the king then commanded the pass-over to be kept.

21—23. In the parallel place, 2 Chron. xxv. 1—19, we have a more full account of this pass-over.

24. Moreover the, &c. As far as he could discover any remaining idols,

28 "My name shall be there." Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and all that he did, are written 29 in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. In his days Pharaoh-necho, king of Egypt, went up against the king of Assyria, to the river Euphrates; and king Josiah went against him; and he was slain, on the first encounter, at Megiddo.
30 And his servants carried him dying in a chariot from Megiddo, and brought him to Jerusalem, and buried him in his own sepulchre. And the people of the land took Jehoahaz, the son of Josiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's stead.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIII. 1. We may learn that we should read and reflect on the word of God, as Josiah did, and be solicitous to follow in all things its holy precepts. Were the scriptures more read, and thought on, much would be found in them to alarm the fears of sinners, as well as much, to comfort penitents. The neglect of the Scriptures is one cause of the hardness, wickedness, and impenitence of men. Be it, reader, thy care to lay it up in thy heart. "When thou goest, it shall lead thee; when thou sleepest, it shall keep thee; and when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee."

2. We are taught never to grow weary in our efforts to promote the cause of religion. Though "wrath was gone out against Judah," yet Josiah was willing to do what he could to lighten and protract the judgment. "When iniquity abounds, the love of many waxes cold." Good men are too ready to be discouraged, and think it vain to make

he removed them, together with all those who practised superstitious arts.

29. On the first encounter. For this rendering, consult Poole's Synop.

33. Put him in bonds, &c. Either because he presumed to take the sceptre without his leave; or because he prepared to renew the war against him.

35. Gave the silver. As the power of Pharaoh raised him to the throne, so it was necessary for him to obey this command. The tribute was large; and must have been oppressive to the people.

CHAP. XXIV. 1. In his days. Jeremiah went to the palace in the beginning of his reign, and exhorted him and the people to repent. Jer. xxii. 1. &c. Soon after he denounced the destruction of the temple. xxvi.

Jerusalem; and laid a tribute on the land of a hundred talents of silver, and a talent of gold: And Pharaoh-necho, made Eliakim, the son of 34 Josiah, king, in the room of Josiah, his father, and changed his name to Jehoiakim, and took Jehoahaz away; and he came to Egypt, and died there. And Jehoiakim gave the silver and 35 gold to Pharaoh; but he taxed the land to give the money according to the command of Pharaoh: he exacted the silver and the gold of the people of the land, of every one according to his taxation, to give it unto Pharaoh-necho.

Jehoiakim was twenty-five years old when he 36 began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiiah of Rumah. And 37 he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, according to all that his fathers had done.

In his days, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, came up, and Jehoiakim became his servant three years: then he turned and rebelled against him. But Jehovah sent against him 2 hordes of the Chaldees, and hordes of Syrians, and hordes of Moabites, and hordes of the children of Ammon: and he sent them against Judah attempts to stem the tide. But duties are ours, and events are God's. We know not of what service God may make us; and whether we are successful or not, we know that "God is not unrighteous to forget any work or labour of love."

3. We are here also taught, how we should enter into covenant with God. We must do it with resolutions to walk after the Lord, in the way he has marked out; to be followers of him, and obey all his commands, moral and ceremonial, and to walk agreeably to the law. It is to be done with all our heart and soul; with care, sincerity, and vigorous resolution. The best of men need, like Josiah, to bind themselves to this work, considering the many ill examples which surround them, and the treachery of the human heart. In this view sacramental solemnities should be considered and improved, to strengthen our resolutions, and bind us to our duty.

1-19. Habbakkuk also prophesied at this period.—King of Babylon. This was in the third or the beginning of the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim. Comp. Dan. i. 1. and Jer. xxv. 1. On this occasion, God revealed to Jeremiah the success and victories of Nebuchadnezzar, first over the Egyptians at Char-chemish, and then in their own country.

2. Hordes of the Chaldees, &c. All the surrounding nations seem to have been let loose to punish a people whom God had so remarkably favoured, and who had been so ungrateful and wicked. For, after having submitted to Nebuchadnezzar, and paid tribute three years, Jehoiakim and the people revolted. The king of Babylon's commanders carried on the war, and destroyed the king, perhaps, when making a sally. Doubtless, the proto destroy it, according to the word of Jehovah, which he had spoken by his servants the prophets. Surely by the decree of Jehovah this came upon Judah, to remove them out of his sight, on account of all the sins which Manasseh had committed; And also on account of the innocent blood which he had shed: for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood, which Jehovah would not pardon. Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim; and all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. Jehoiakim then slept with his fathers; and Jehoiachin, his son, reigned in his stead. And the king of Egypt came no more out of his own land: for the king of Babylon had taken all that belonged to the king of Egypt from the river of Egypt unto the river Euphrates.

8 Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem three months. And his mother's name was Nehushta, the daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, according to all that his fathers had done. At that time, the servants of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, came up against Jerusalem, and the city was besieged. And Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, came against the city, and his servants besieged it. And Jehoiachin, the king of Judah, went out to the king of Babylon, he, and his mother, and his servants, and his princes, and his officers; and the king of Babylon took him in the eighth year of his reign. And he carried thence all the treasures of the house of Jehovah, and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces all the vessels of gold, which Solomon, king of Israel, had made in the temple of Jehovah, as Jehovah had said. And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the chiefs, and all the men of valour, ten thousand captives, with all the carpenters and smiths; none were left, except the meanest people of the land. Thus he carried away Jehoiachin to Babylon, and the king's mother, and the king's wives, and his eunuchs, and the chiefs of the land; those carried he into captivity, from Jerusalem to Babylon. And all the wealthy men, seven thousand; and a thousand carpenters and smiths, all the brave men, fit for war, even them the king of Babylon carried captives to Babylon.

And the king of Babylon made Mattaniah, his father's brother, king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah. Zedekiah was twenty-one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah. And he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, according to all that Jehoiakim had done. For the anger of Jehovah was against Jerusalem and Judah, until he cast them out of his sight.

Zedekiah then rebelled against the king of Babylon; and in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, on the tenth day of the month, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, came with all his host, against Jerusalem, and encamped against it; and they built forts against it round about. And the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah. And on the ninth "day" of the "fourth" month, the famine prevailed in the city, and there was no bread for the people of the land. And the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night by a gate, which was between two walls, by the king's garden: (for the Chaldees surrounded the city:) and they went the way toward the plain "of Jericho". And the army of the Chaldees pursued the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho; and all his army were scattered from him. So they took the king, and 8—16. The king of Babylon at length came himself, and pressed on the siege, to whom Jehoiachin surrendered; and he and the chief men, together with the treasures, were carried to Babylon. Ezekiel was now carried captive. Ezek. xl. 1.

CHAP. XXV. 1. Zedekiah then rebelled. From Jeremiah xxvii. it appears, that the neighbouring nations had formed the design of throwing off the yoke of the king of Babylon, and sent ambassadors to Zedekiah to do so too; that he complied with this proposal, contrary to his solemn oath to the king of Babylon.

7. They slew, &c. Thus two prophecies were fulfilled, which seemed brought him to Riblah, to the king of Babylon, and he gave judgment upon him.

7 And they slew the sons of Zedekiah, before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon.

8 And on the fifth month, on the seventh day of the month, which was the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard, a servant of the

9 king of Babylon, unto Jerusalem: And he burnt the house of Jehovah, and the palace, and all the great houses in Jerusalem; and

10 every great house he burned with fire. And the whole army of the Chaldees, who were with the captain of the guard, broke down the walls

11 of Jerusalem, round about. And the rest of the people that had been left in the city, with the deserters who had deserted to the king of Babylon, the remainder of the whole multitude, did Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard, carry

12 away. But the meanest of the land, the captain of the guard left, to be vine-dressers and hus-

13 bandmen. And the brazen pillars which were in the house of Jehovah, and the bases, and the brazen sea which was in the house of Jehovah, did the Chaldees break in pieces, and carry the

14 brass of them to Babylon. And the brazen pans, and the shovels, and the knives, and the cups, and all the other utensils of brass, with which the priests had ministered, they took

15 away. And the censers, and the sprinkling-bowls, whether of gold or silver, the captain of the guard took away. The two pillars, one sea,

16 and the bases which Solomon had made for the house of Jehovah; the brass of all those utensils was without weight. The height of one

17 pillar was eighteen cubits, and the capital upon it was brass: and the height of the capital, three cubits; and the wreathen work, and pomegranates upon the capital round about, were all of brass: the second pillar, with its wreathen-work, was similar.

And the captain of the guard took Seraiah, 18 the high-priest, and Zephaniah, the second priest, and the three door-keepers: And out 19 of the city he took a eunuch who had been set over the men of war, and five of the king's ministers, who were found in the city, and the principal scribe of the host, who mustered the people of the land, and sixty of the people of the land who were found in the city: These 20 Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard, took and brought to the king of Babylon to Riblah: And the king of Babylon smote them, and slew 21 them at Riblah, in the land of Hamath.

Thus Judah was carried away out of their land. And as for the people who remained in 22 the land of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had left, even over them he made Gedaliah, the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, ruler. And when all the captains of 23 the hosts, and their men heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah governor, they came to Gedaliah to Mizpeh; even Ishmael, the son of Nethaniah, and Johanna, the son of Careah, and Seraiah, the son of Tanhumeth, the Netophathite, and Jaazaniah, a Maachathite, they and their men. And Gedaliah swore 24 to them, and to their men, and said to them, "Fear not to be the servants of the Chaldees: dwell in the land and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you." But on 25 the seventh month, Ishmael, the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, came, and ten men with him, and smote Gedaliah so that he died, and the Jews and the Chaldees who were with him at Mizpeh. And 26 the whole people, both small and great and the captains of the hosts, arose, and went to Egypt: for they were afraid of the Chaldees.

And in the thirty-seventh year of the capti- 27 vity of Jehoiachin, king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the twenty-seventh day of the month, Evil-merodach, king of Babylon, in the year that he began to reign, released Jehoiachin, king of contrary one to the other, Jer. xxxii. 5. and xxxiv. 3. that Zedekiah should go to Babylon, but should never see it.

9—17. Thus the temple of Solomon was laid in ruins, for the sins of the people. Its treasures were carried away; and the utensils of service, which had been perverted to serve idols, were laid up at length in an idol's temple.

23. Ishmael, &c. Of the conspiracy of Ishmael, we have a full account in Jer. xl. and xlii.

28 Judah, out of prison; And he spoke kindly to him, and set his throne above the throne of the 29 kings who were with him in Babylon; And he changed his prison-garments: and he ate bread continually before him all the days of his life. And his allowance was a continual allowance 30 given him by the king; a stated rate for every day, all the days of his life.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. & XXV. 1. We see, that however God may wait to be gracious, he will at last whet his sword and execute his wrath. They who will not hear and obey his word, must feel the weight of his avenging hand; he will not spare the descendants of Abraham, his friend, when they cease to imitate their ancestors' piety and faith. The people to whom he sent his word, with whom he had entered into covenant, and for whom he had wrought such wonders, he at length cast out of his sight. All Israel was not rejected; there was a remnant preserved; and though banished from the land of promise, they had a promise that they should return. A branch was to spring from the stem of Jesse; and for its sake, the old decayed stock was preserved amidst every revolution.

2. As the dispersion of the Jews, for their unbelief when the Messiah appeared, became the occasion of making salvation known to the Gentiles; so, we have reason to think, that their dispersion on the present occasion was overruled to make the true God known to idolaters, and to prepare the way of the Lord among the nations. The serious carried with them their sacred books; and from their intercourse with others, it is easy to infer, that others might become acquainted with them. Let us bless God, who frequently overrules the wrath and even the wickedness of men, to accomplish his own holy and gracious purposes, and to make known his salvation.

I. CHRONICLES.

INTRODUCTION.

These books are called by the Hebrews, (דברי הימים) the word of the days, that is, journals of daily transactions: and it is supposed that they were compiled from the public records, so often mentioned in the preceding books. The Greek calls them the books of what had been omitted or left out in the other histories, which the Vulgate follows, calling them Paralipomenon. We style them Chronicles, a short register of particular and interesting events. This is derived from the Greek (χρονος,) time. These books contain first, the genealogies of the families of Israel, from Adam down to the captivity—then of David and Solomon, more fully in some particulars than that of Samuel and Kings. The history of the following kings is confined chiefly to those of Judah, and is much more full than the preceding history. Ezra is generally thought to have been the compiler.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 4004. Genealogy from Adam to Jacob; and of their posterities down to Iram.

- ¹ ADAM, Seth, Enos, Canaan, Mahalaleel, Ja-

³ Shem, Ham, and Japheth.
5 The sons of Japheth; Gomer, and Magog, and Madai, and Javan, and Tubal, and Me-
6 shech, and Tiras. And the sons of Gomer; 7 Ashkenaz, and Riphath, and Togarmah. And the sons of Javan; Elishah, and Tarshish, Kittim, and Rodanim.
8 The sons of Ham; Cush, and Mizraim,
9 Phut, and Canaan. And the sons of Cush; Seba, and Havilah, and Sabtah, and Raamah,
and Sabtechah. And the sons of Raamah;
10 Sheba, and Dedan. And Cush begot Nimrod:
11 he began to be mighty upon the earth. And Mizraim begot the Ludites, and the Anamites, 12 and the Lehabites, and the Naphtuhites. And the Pathrusites, and the Casluhites, (from whom came the Philistines,) and Caphtorites. And 13 Canaan begot Zidon, (his first-born,) and the Hethites; The Jebusites also, and the Amor- 14

ites, and the Girgasites, And the Hivites, and 15
the Arkites, and the Sinites, And the Arva- 16
dites, and the Zemarites, and the Hamathites.

The sons of Shem; Elam, and Asshur, and 17
Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram; *and the sons of Aram were" Uz, and Hul, and Gether, and Meshech. And Arphaxad begot *Cainan; 18 and Cainan begot" Salah, and Salah begot Eber. And to Eber were born two sons: the 19
name of the one was Peleg; because in his days
the earth was divided; and his brother's name was Joktan. And Joktan begot Almodad, and 20
Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jerah, And 21
Hadoram, and Uzal, and Diklah, And Obal, and Abimael, and Sheba, And Ophir, and 23 Havilah, and Jobab. All these were the progeny of Joktan.

CHAP. I. 1. Adam, Seth, &c. The genealogy of this chapter differs little from that of Genesis, from which it was probably taken. Eichhorn hath observed, that in these genealogies the author has drawn his materials from Gen. x. 8 (comp. 1 Chron. i. 10. &c.) and from the public tables preserved in their archives. For the author exhibits a more complete catalogue of some tribes and families than what we find given by Moses. The genealogy of some tribes and families is brought down to a lower period than that of others. The genealogy of the family of David is continued after the time of Zerubbabel. 1 Chron. iii. 19—24. Some things are related of the Simeonites which happened in the time of Hezekiah. Ch. iv. 41. &c. The history of the priests and Levites ends with the siege of Jerusalem. The catalogues of the Reubenites, Manassites, and Gadites, are short and imperfect. It is allowed that many errors have obtained in these catalogues; and that some names were added to them long after the time of Ezra.

17. The parallel place, Gen. x. 23. clearly shows that an omission has been made here; and the words ought to be restored.

28 the same is Abraham. The sons of Abraham were Isaac, and Ishmael.

29 These were their generations: the first-born of Ishmael, Nebaioth; then Kedar, and Ad-beel, and Mibsam, Mishma, and Dumah, 30 Massa, Hadar, and Tema, Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah. These were the sons of Ishmael.

32 Now the sons which Keturah, Abraham's concubine, bare to him, were Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah. And the sons of Jokshan; Sheba, 33 and Dedan. And the sons of Midian; Ephah, and Ephraim, and Henoah, and Abidah, and Eldaah. All these were the progeny of Keturah.

34 And Abraham begot Isaac. The sons of Isaac were Esau and Israel.

35 The sons of Esau were Eliphaz, Reuel, and Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah. The sons of Eliphaz were Teman, and Omar, Zepho, and 37 Gatam, Kenaz, ° and Amalek. The sons of Reuel were Nahath, Zerah, Shammah, and

38 Mizzah. And the sons of Seir were Lotan, and Shobal, and Zibeon, and Anah, and Dishon, 39 and Ezar, and Dishan. And the sons of Lotan were Hori, and Homam: and Timna was Lo-

40 tan's sister. The sons of Shobal were Alvan, and Manahath, and Ebal, Shepho, and Onam. And the sons of Zibeon were Ajah, and Anah.

41 The son of Anah was Dishon. And the sons of Dishon were Hemdan, and Eshban, and Ithran, 42 and Cheran. The sons of Ezer were Bilhan, and Zaavan, and Akan. The sons of Dishan were Uz, and Aran.

43 Now these are the kings who reigned in the land of Edom, before any king reigned over the children of Israel; Bela, the son of Beor: and 44 the name of his city was Dinhabah. And when Bela died, Jobab, the son of Zerah of Bozrah, 45 reigned in his stead. And when Jobab died, Husham of the land of the Temanites reigned 46 in his stead. And when Husham died, Hadad, the son of Bedad, who smote Midian in the field of Moab, reigned in his stead, and the name of his city was Avith. And when Hadad died, 47 Samlah of Masrekah reigned in his stead. And 48 when Samlah died, Shaul of Rehoboth on the river, reigned in his stead. And when Shaul 49 died, Baal-hanan, the son of Achbor, reigned in his stead. And when Baal-hanan died, 50 Hadad reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Pau; and his wife's name was Mehetabel, the daughter of Matred, the daughter of Mezahab. And when Hadad died, the 51 princes of Edom, descended from Esau, were prince Timnah, prince Alvah, prince Jetheth. Prince Aholibamah, prince Elah, prince Pinon, 52 Prince Kenaz, prince Teman, prince Mibzar, 53 Prince Magdiel, prince Iram. These were the 54 princes of Edom.

CHAPTER II.

B. C. 1752. Genealogy from Jacob to David, and other Judahite genealogies through Hezron.

THESE were the sons of Israel; Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun, Dan, Joseph, and Benjamin, Naphtali, Gad, 2 and Asher.

The sons of Judah: Er, and Onan, and She- 3 lah: which three were born unto him of the daughter of Shuah, the Canaanitess. And Er, the first-born of Judah, was evil in the sight of Jehovah; and he slew him. And Tamar, his 4 daughter-in-law, bare to him Pharez and Zerah. All the sons of Judah were five. The sons of 5 Pharez were Hezron, and Hamul. And the 6 sons of Zerah, were, °Zabdi", and Ethan, and Heman, and Calcol, and Darda; five of them in all. And the son of °Zabdi was Carmi", 7 and the son of Carmi was Achar, the troublers of Israel, who transgressed in respect to the devoted things. And the son of Ethan was Aza- 8 riah. The sons also of Hezron who were born 9

36. Timna. Timna was not a son of Eliphaz, but of his concubine, who brought forth Amalek. The word must either be omitted, or what is said in Gen. xxxv. 12. inserted; but the omission is more consonant with the narrative.

CHAP. II. 6. Zabdi. I have followed the reading in Joshua, for the sake of uniformity.

7. I have supplied here, from Joshua vii. 1. as it is evident that the words added have been omitted.

to him, were Jerahmeel, and Aram, and Caleb.
 10 And Aram begot Amminadab, and Amminadab begot Nabshon, chief of the children of 11 Judah; And Nabshon begot Salmon, and Salmon begot Boaz, And Boaz begot Obed, and 12 Obed begot Jesse, And Jesse begot Eliab, his first-born, and Abinadab, the second, and Shimeah, the third, Nethaneel, the fourth, Raddai, 13 the fifth, Ozem, the sixth, ^a Elihu, the seventh, and David, the eighth; Whose sisters were Zeruah, and Abigail. And the sons of Zeruah; Abishai, and Joab, and Asahel, three. And 14 Abigail bare Amasa: and the father of Amasa was Jether, an Ishmaelite.
 15 And Caleb, the son of Hezron, begot of Azubah his wife, Jerioth: whose sons are these:
 16 Jesher, and Shobah, and Ardon. And when Azubah was dead, Caleb took to him Ephrath, who bare to him Hur. And Hur begot Uri, and Uri begot Bezaleel.
 17 And afterwards Hezron went in to the daughter of Machir, the father of Gilead, whom he married when he was sixty years old: and she bare to him Segub. And Segub begot Jair, who had twenty-three cities in the land of Gilead. ^aAll these cities belonged to the descendants of Machir; But the Geshurites and Syrians took them from them, with the towns of Jair, with Kenath, and its towns, sixty cities.
 18 And after that Hezron was dead in Caleb-ephratah, then Abiah, Hezron's wife, bare to him Ashur, the father of Tekoa.
 19 And the sons of Jerahmeel, the first-born of Hezron were Ram the first-born, and Bunah, and Oren, and Ozem, and Ahijah. Jerahmeel had also another wife, whose name was Atarah; she was the mother of Onam. And the sons of Ram, the first-born of Jerahmeel were Maaz, and Jamin, and Eker. And the sons of Onam were Shammai, and Jada. And the sons of Shammai were Nadab, and Abishur. And the name of the wife of Abishur was Abihail, and she bare to him Ahban, and Molid. And the sons of Nadab were Seled, and Appaim: but Seled died without children. And the son of Appaim was Ishi. And the son of Ishi was Sheshan. And the ^vdaughter of Sheshan was Ahlai. And the sons of Jada the brother of Shammai were Jether, and Jonathan: and Jether died without children. And the sons of Jonathan were Peleth, and Zaza. These were the sons of Jerahmeel.

Now Sheshan had no sons, but a daughter. And Sheshan had a servant, an Egyptian, whose name was Jarha. And Sheshan gave his daughter to Jarha, his servant, to wife; and she bare to him Attai. And Attai begot Nathan, and Nathan begot Zabad, And Zabad begot Ephlal, and Ephlal begot Obed, And Obed begot Jehu, and Jehu begot Azariah, And Azariah begot Helez, and Helez begot Eleasah, And Eleasah begot Sisamai, and Sisamai begot Shallum, And Shallum begot Jekamiah, and Jekamiah begot Elishama.

Now the sons of Caleb, the brother of Jerahmeel were Mesha his first-born, who was the father of Ziph: and his son was Mareshah, the father of Hebron. And the sons of Mareshah, the father of Hebron, were Korah, and Tappuah, and Rekem, and Shema. And Shema begot Raham, the father of Jorkoam: and Rekem begot Shammai. And the son of Shammai was Maon: and Maon was the father of Bethzur. And Ephah, Caleb's concubine, bare Haran, and Moza, and Gazez: and Haran begot ^vJahdai. And the sons of Jahdai were Re-gem, and Jotham, and Gesham, and Pelet, and Ephrah, and Shaaph. Maachah, Caleb's concubine, bare Sheber, and Tirhanah. She bare also Shaaph, the father of Madmannah, Sheva, the father of Machbenan, and the father of Gibeon: and the daughter of Caleb was Achsah.

15. ^a Syr. Arab. ch. xxvii. 18. and 1 Sam. xvii. 12.

15. I think it manifest from a comparison of the places where the sons of Jesse are mentioned, that he had eight, of whom David was the youngest.

18. I have followed Geddes in this version; and, with him, consider Jerioth a daughter, whose sons were Jesher, &c.

23. ^vfrom the end of the verse. 31. ^vverse 34. 46. ^vnext verse.

46. Jahdai. The context justifies this reading, and shows that some scribe repeated the name he had just been writing.

50. With Houbigant, I think that the two names have been transposed. For it is certain that Caleb was the son of Hezron, and not of Hur, and

50 These were the sons of Hur, the son of Caleb, the first-born of Ephratah; Shobal the father of 51 Kirjath-jearim; Salma, the father of Bethle-
 52 hem; Hareph, the father of Beth-gader. And Shobal, the father of Kirjath-jearim, had sons;
 53 Haroeh and half of the Manahethites. And the families of Kirjath-jearim were the Ithrites, and the Puhites, and the Shumathites, and the Mishraites; of them came the Zareathites, and 54 the Eshtaulites. The sons of Salma, the father of Bethlehem, peopled Netophath, Ataroth, the house of Joab, and half of Manaheth, and 55 Zorath; And the families of the Sopherites who dwelt at Jabez. The Tirathites, the Shim-eathites and Suchathites, are Kenites who came from Hemath, the father of the house of Rechab.

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 1053. Genealogy from David through thirty generations.

1 Now these were the sons of David who were born to him in Hebron; the first-born, Ammon of Ahinoam, the Jezreelitess: the second, Daniel, of Abigail, the Carmelitess: The third, Absalom, the son of Maachah, the daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur: the fourth, Adonijah, the son of Haggith: The fifth, Shephatiah of Abital: the sixth, Ithream, by Eglah his wife.
 4 These six were born to him in Hebron; and there he reigned seven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty-three years.
 5 And these were born to him in Jerusalem: Shammuah, and Shobab, and Nathan, and Solomon, four, of Bathsheba, the daughter of Eliam:
 6 Ibhar also, and "Elishuah", and Eliphelet, And

Nogah, and Nepheg, and Japhia, And Elisha- 8 ma, and Eliada, and "Elipheloh", nine. These 9 were all the sons of David, besides the sons of the concubines. Tamar was their sister.

The son of Solomon was Rehoboam, whose 10 son was Abijah; Asa, his son; Jehoshaphat, his son; Joram, his son; Ahaziah, his son; Joash, 11 his son; Amaziah, his son; "Uzziah", his son; 12 Jotham, his son; Ahaz, his son; Hezekiah, 13 his son; Manasseh, his son; Amon, his son; 14 Josiah, his son: And the sons of Josiah were, 15 the first-born, Johanan, the second, Jehoiakim, the third, Zedekiah, the fourth, Shallum. And 16 the sons of Jehoiakim were "Jeconiah and Zedekiah".

And the sons of Jeconiah, the prisoner, were 17 "Salathiel," And Malchiram, and Pedaiah, and 18 Shenazar, Jecamiah, Hoshama, and Nedabiah. And the sons of "Salathiel" were Zerubbabel 19 and Shimei: and the sons of Zerubbabel were Meshullam, and Hananiah, and Shelomith their sister: And Hashubah, and Ohel, and Bere- 20 chiah, and Hasadiah, and Jushabhesed, five. And the son of Hananiah was Pelatiah, and 21 Isaiah, his son; Rephaiah, his son; Arnan, his son; Obadiah, his son; Shechaniah, his son. And the son of Shechaniah was Shemaiah: and 22 the sons of Shemaiah were Hattush, and Igeal, and Bariah, and Neariah, and "Azariah", and Shaphat, six. And the sons of Neariah were 23 Elioenai, and Hezekiah, and Azrikam, three. And the sons of Elioenai were Hodaiah, and 24 Eliashib, and Pelaiah, and Akkub, and Johanan, and Dalaiah, and Anani, seven.

that Hur was the son of Caleb. Comp. ver. 18, 19.

CHAP. III. 6—9. I have followed the Septuagint, to avoid the repetition of the same names.

12. Uzziah. See 2 Kings, xiv. and the note.

16. That errors have obtained here, I think, cannot be doubted. All the versions have the sons of Jehoiakim; from which I infer that (בני) his son has been written by mistake after Jeconiah and Zedekiah, as both the Vulgate and Arabic omit the word.

17. The above remark applies to this verse; for בני after Salathiel is inconsistent with the first part of the text. I, therefore, follow the Vulgate, and, omitting his son, make Salathiel and Malchiram, &c. to be the sons of Jeconiah. I have rendered, with Junius and others, Asir as an appellation. 2 King. xxiv. 15.

19. As the versions read so variously, and as Zerubbabel is uniformly, except in the text, called the son of Salathiel, or Shealtiel, I have adopted this as the true reading. He is seven times thus called in Ezra, Nehemiah, and Haggai. As our translators have here followed the Greek in spelling this name, and not the points, I shall adhere to it in other places where it occurs. Abiud is mentioned as the son of Zerubbabel Matt. i. 13. which is probably corrupted from Hananiah.

21. And Isaiah, his son. The present text makes Isaiah the son of Hananiah: but this is a mistake, owing to the change of a letter into another similar one; which mistake is four times repeated in this verse. The versions render as I have done.

24. This genealogy is brought down twelve or thirteen generations from the captivity; so that the names must have been added successively.

CHAPTER IV.

B. C. 1300. Other genealogies from Judah.

- 1 THE sons of Judah were, Pharez, Hezron,
2 and Carmi, and Hur, and Shobal. And Re-aiah, the son of Shobal, begot Jahath; and Jahath begot Ahumai, and Lahad. These are the 3 families of the Zorathites. And these peopled Etam, Jezreel, and Ishma, and Idbash: and 4 the name of their sister was Hazelelponi: And Jahath begot Penuel, the father of Gedor and Ezer, the father of Hushah. These are the sons of Hur, the first-born of Ephratah, the father of Bethlehem.
- 5 And Ashur, the father of Tekoa, had two 6 wives, Helah and Naarah. And Naarah bare to him Ahuzam, and Hephher, and Temem, and Haahashtari. These were the sons of Naarah.
- 7 And the sons of Helah were Zereth, and Jezo-
8 ar, and Ethnan, and "Coz" And Coz begot
Anub, and Zobebah, and the families of Ahar-9 el, the son of Harum. And Aharel begot Jazeb, who was more honourable than his brethren:
and his mother called his name Jazeb, saying,
10 "Because I bare him with sorrow." And Jazeb called on the God of Israel, saying, "Oh that thou wouldst bless me indeed, and enlarge my territory, and that thy hand may be with me, and that thou wouldst keep me from evil, that I may be no more sorrowful!" And God granted him that which he requested.
- 11 And Chelub, the brother of Shuah, begot 12 Mehir, who was the father of Eshton. And Eshton begot Beth-rapha, and Passea, and Tehinnah, the father of Irnahash. These are 13 the men of Rechah. And the sons of Kenaz were Othniel, and Seraiah: and the sons of 14 Othniel were Hathath, and Meonothai. And Meonothai begot Ophrah: and Ophrah begot

CHAP. IV. 7. * Chald. 17. 'from the close of the 18th verse.

CHAP. IV. 9. Aharel begot Jazeb. I have supplied, as in other instances. In the name, there is clearly a transposition of the letters, and instead of it, should be Jazeb, as is clear from the reason of the name זעב.

12. Men of Rechah. After this something is wanting, namely, who was the father of Kenaz.

17, 18. These two verses, as the text stands, are unintelligible. And she bare Miriam, &c. We are not told who bare them, which is necessary to Seraiah: and Seraiah begot Joab, who peopled the valley of Artisans; for they were artisans. And the sons of Caleb, the son of Jephunneh 15 were Iru, Elah, and Naam: and the sons of Elah were Kenaz, and Jehaleleel. And the 16 sons of Jehaleleel were Ziph, and Ziphah, Tiria, and Asareel, and Ezra. And the sons 17 of Ezra were Jether, and Mered, and Ephery, and Jalon. 'And these were the sons of Bithiah, the daughter of Pharaoh, whom Mered took"; Miriam, and Shammai, and Ishbah, who peopled Eshtemoa. And his wife Jehudijah bare 18 Jered, who peopled Gedor, and Heber, who peopled Socho, and Jekuthiel, who peopled Zanoah. And the sons of his wife Hodiah, the 19 sister of Naham, were Shimon, the father of Keilah, the Garmite, and Eshtemoa, the Maachathite. And the sons of Shimon were Amnon, 20 and Rinnah, Ben-hanan, and Tilon, and Ishi. And the sons of Ishi were, Zoheth and Benzoheth.

The sons of Shelah, the son of Judah, were 21 Er, the father of Lecah, and Laadah, the father of Maresbah, and of the families of Beth-Ashbea, who manufactured cotton; And Jo- 22 kim, and the men of Chozeba; and Joash, and Saraph, who sojourned in Moab, but returned to Bethlehem and Hadebasim-acthikim. These, and the inhabitants of Netajm and Ga- 23 dera, were potters employed by the king in his own work.

And the sons of Simeon were Jemuel, and 24 Jamin, "and Ohad", "Jachin, Zohar", and Shaul: Shallum, his son; Mibsam, his son; 25 Mishma, his son; And Hamuel, his son; 26 Zacchur, his son; Shimei, his son. And Shi- 27 mei had sixteen sons and six daughters; but his brethren had not many children, nor did any of their families multiply, like the children of Ju-the sense and the connexion, to distinguish the sons of this wife and those of Jehudijah. By transposing the last clause of the 18th verse, which now stands insulated, to the middle of the 17th, the whole seems natural and easy. The learned are indebted to Michaelis for this ingenious correction.

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 1300. Genealogy from Reuben, Jacob's first-born; of Gad and Manasseh.

28 dah. And they inhabited Beer-sheba, and 29 Moladah, and Hazar-shual, , And Balah, and 30 Azem, and Eltolad, And Bethul, and Hormah, 31 and Ziklag, And Beth-marcaboth, and Hazarsusah, and Beth-lebaoth, and Sharuhén. These were their cities unto the reign of David, with 32 their villages. Etam also, and En-Rimmon, and Tochen, *and Ether", and Ashan, five 33 cities. And all the villages which were round about the same cities, unto Baalath-beer-Ra-moth. These were their habitations, and this their genealogy.

34 Now Meshobab, and Jamlech, and Joshah, 35 the son of Amaziah, And Joel, and Jehu, the son of Josibiah, the son of Seraiah, the son of 36 Asiel, And Elioenai, and Jaakobah, and Jeshohaiah, and Asaiah, and Adiel, and Jesimiel, 37 and Benaiah, And Ziza, the son of Shiphi, the son of Allon, the son of Jedaiah, the son of 38 Shimri, the son of Shemaiah; These whose names have been recounted were chiefs of their families; and as the house of their fathers in-39 creased greatly, They went to the entrance of Gedor, to the east-side of the valley, to seek 40 pasture for the flocks. And they found fat and excellent pasture, and a spacious tract of land, quiet and peaceful; although the former inha-41 bitants were of the race of Ham. And those above described by name, in the days of Hezekiah, king of Judah, sent and smote their tents,
and other habitations which were found there;
and destroyed them utterly unto this day, and dwelt in their stead, because there was pas-42 ture there for their flocks. And others, of the progeny of Simeon, five hundred men, went to mount Seir, having for their captains Pelatiah, and Neariah, and Rephiaiah, and Uzziel, the 43 sons of Ishi; And they smote the remainder of the Amalekites who had escaped, and dwell
there unto this day.

32. * Josh. xix. 7.

Now the sons of Reuben, the first-born of 1 Israel, (for he was the first-born; but because he defiled his father's bed, his birth-right was given to the sons of Joseph, the son of Israel;
yet not so as that the genealogy should be reckoned after the birth-right: For although the 2 birth-right was Joseph's, Judah prevailed above his brothers, and a chief was chosen from him.) The sons of Reuben, the first-born of Is- 3
rael were Hanoah, and Pallu, and Hezron, and Carmi, *and Joel". The son of Joel was, 4
Shemaiah; Gog, his son; Shimei, his son;
Micah, his son; Reaia, his son; Baal, his son; 5
Beerah, his son, whom Tiglath-pileser, king 6
of Assyria, carried away captive; he was chief of the Reubenites. And his brethren by their 7 families, when the genealogy of their generations was reckoned, were Jeiel, the chief, and Zechariah. And Bela, the son of Azaz, the 8 son of Shema, the son of Joel, who inhabited
all the country from Aroer, even unto Nebo and Baal-meon on the west; And eastward he 9 inhabited unto the entrance of the wilderness which borders on the river Euphrates. For their cattle were multiplied in the land of Gilead; And in the days of Saul they made war 10 on the Hagarites, who fell by their hand: and they dwelt in their tents throughout all the east land of Gilead.

And the children of Gad dwelt over against 11
them in the land of Bashan unto Salcah. Joel 12 was the chief, and Shapham the next, and Jaanai, and Shaphat; all in Bashan. And their 13 brethren of the house of their fathers were Michael, and Meshullam, and Sheba, and Jorai, and Jachan, and Zia, and Heber, seven.

34—43. The Simeonites appear to have wanted room for their flocks and herds; and these heads of families undertook to extend themselves on the south, to Gedor, and into a part of the country of the Amalekites.

CHAP. V. 1—2. What is included in a parenthesis, contains a reason why the genealogy of Reuben was not given first, he being the first-born son. By his sin he lost the privileges of the birth-right, which were a double portion of goods, and being honoured with some degree of civil authority over the rest. The first part of the birth-right Jacob gave to Joseph, allotting to his sons two portions of the land of Canaan; the latter part he

- 14 These are the children of Abihail, the son of Huri, the son of Jaroah, the son of Gilead, the son of Michael, the son of Jeshishai, the son of Jahdo, the son of Buzahi, The son of Abdiel, the son of Guni, a paternal chief. And they inhabited Gilead in Bashan, and its towns, and all the suburbs of Sharon, on their borders. All these were reckoned by genealogies in the days of Jotham, king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam, king of Israel. And the sons of Reuben, and the Gadites, and half the tribe of Manasseh, of valiant men, men able to bear buckler and sword, and to shoot with bow, and skilful in war, were forty-four thousand seven hundred and sixty, that went out to war.
- 19 And they made war on the Hagarites, and on Jetur, and Nephish, and Nodab, who helped them. But the Hagarites were delivered into their hand, and all who were with them: for they cried to God in the battle, and he was favourable to them; because they put their trust in him. And of their enemies' cattle they took away fifty thousand camels, and two hundred and fifty thousand sheep, and two thousand asses, besides a hundred thousand men. Many also fell down slain, because the war was from God. And they dwelt in their stead until the captivity.
- 23 And the children of the half-tribe of Manasseh inhabited the land, from Bashan unto Baalhermon, and Senir, and unto mount Hermon: and they became numerous. And these were the paternal chiefs, Ephraim, and Ishi, and Eliel, and Azriel, and Jeremiah, and Hodaviah, and Jahdiel. These paternal chiefs were men of valour, famous men; But they transgressed against the God of their fathers, and went astray after the gods of the people of the land, whom God destroyed before them. And the God of Israel stirred up the spirit of Pul, king of Assyria, and the spirit of Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, and he carried them away, even the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, and brought them unto Halah, and Habor, and Hara, and to Nahar-gozan, where they remain unto this day.

CHAPTER VI.

B. C. 1300. Genealogy from Levi, through the line of high-priests, down to the captivity, and to the reign of David.

THE SONS OF LEVI WERE Gershon, Kohath, and Merari. And the sons of Kohath were Amram, Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel. And the children of Amram were Aaron, and Moses, and Miriam. The sons of Aaron were Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

Eleazar begot Phinehas; Phinehas begot Abishua; And Abishua begot Bukki; and Bukki begot Uzzi; And Uzzi begot Zerachiah; and Zerachiah begot Meraioth; Meraioth begot Amariah; and Amariah begot Ahitub; And Ahitub begot Zadok; and Zadok begot Ahimaaz; And Ahimaaz begot Azariah; and Azariah begot Johanan; And Johanan begot Azariah, (who executed the priest's office in the temple which Solomon built in Jerusalem,) and who withstood king Uzziiah. And Azariah begot Amariah; and Amariah begot Ahitub; And Ahitub begot Zadok; and Zadok begot Shallum; And Shallum begot gave to Judah, who was to be the head of the leading and ruling tribe, from whom Messiah was to spring. Yet, in the genealogy, Reuben was to be regarded as in reality Jacob's first-born.

14. Buzahi. I join the two words together, as one. Some render Ahi as a proper name, and others as an appellative, brother. The order of the narrative supports my rendering.

19, 20. I join the first part of the 20th verse to the 19th; and the version given is that of Dathe and others.

22. Compare 2 Kings, xv. 19, 29.; xvii. 6. and xviii. 11.

CHAP. VI. 4. Eleazar begot, &c. We have no account of the high-priests of the line of Ithamar. Eli and his successors, down to Abiathar, whom Solomon removed, and appointed Zadok in his stead. Was this interruption considered only in regard to the discharge of the office while the lineal descendant of Eleazar was looked upon as the real high-priest? From no mention being made of Eli, Ahitub, Ahimelech, or Ahijah, and Abiathar, of the line of Ithamar, I suspect that the above distinction obtained. See Lewes's Hebrew Antiq. Vol. I. for the succession down to the time of our Lord.

6. Meraioth. Lewes supposes that the high-priesthood passed from him to Eli, Poole and others think that it was in his father Uzzi's time.

If he be the same Azariah who withstood Uzzi's attempt, I suspect that this has dropped out of the text. All the high-priests, after the temple was built, executed the priest's office there, so that this could not be mentioned as any particular honour done to him.

11. Amariah. Perhaps the same as Urijah, who complied with Abaz, and made the altar after the pattern sent him. 2 King. xvi. 10.

18 sons of Gershon, Libni, and Shimei. And the sons of Kohath were Amram, and Izhar, and Mahli and Mushi. And these are the families sons of Merari were Mahli, and Libni, his son; 30 Shimei, his son; Uzza, his son; Shimei, his 31 son; Haggiah, his son; Asaiah, his son. And these are they whom David set over the singing service in the house of Jehovah, after the ark 32 had rest therein. And they ministered before the congregation-tabernacle with singing, until Solomon built the house of Jehovah in Jerusa-cording to their order. And these are they who of Merari, who stood on Heman's left hand was Ethan, the son of Kishi, the son of Abdi,

the son of Mallueh, The son of Hashabiah, the 45
son of Amaziah, the son of Hilkiash, The son 46 of Amzi, the son of Bani of Shamer, The son 47
of Mahli, the son of Mushi, the son of Merari, the son of Levi. Their brethren also the Le- 48
vites, were appointed to all manner of service
about the tabernacle of the house of God.

But Aaron and his sons offered upon the al- 49 tar of burnt-offering, and on the altar of incense; and were appointed for all the work of the most holy place, and to make an atonement for Israel, according to all that Moses, the servant of God, had commanded. And these are 50
the sons of Aaron; Eleazar, his son; Phinehas, his son; Abishua, his son; Bukki, his son; Uz- 51

of Aaron, of the families of the Kohathites, (for

22. Izhar, his son. The historian resumes each of the three branches of the Levitical families in a direct line. In removing a part of the confusion that is visible in this genealogy, I have been chiefly guided by the line of filiation in verses 33—38, corroborated by all the ancient versions. The names omitted are certainly interpolated, as appears by comparing the line of descent above referred to.

versions, I deem it genuine.

corrupted and misarranged. The parallel place, Joshua xvi. establishes the above remark, and affords assistance to correct the errors and restore the

65 their's was the "first" lot. "And they had given to them, by lot, out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, and out of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, these cities which are afterwards named". And they had given to them in the land of Judah, Hebron, with its surrounding suburbs. 55 But the fields of the city, and its villages, they 56 gave to Caleb, the son of Jephunneh. To the 57 sons of Aaron then were given, out of the cities of Judah, and of Simeon, Hebron, a city of refuge, and Libnah, with its suburbs; and Jattir, 58 and Eshtemoa, with their suburbs; And Holon, with its suburbs; and Debir, with its suburbs; 59 And Ashan, with its suburbs; "and Juttah, with its suburbs"; and Beth-shemesh, 60 with its suburbs. And, out of the cities of the tribe of Benjamin, "Gibeon, with its suburbs"; Geba, with its suburbs; and Alemeth, with its suburbs; and Anathoth, with its suburbs. All their cities throughout their families were thir- 61 teen cities. And to the remaining sons of Kohath of the family of the tribe of Levi, ten cities were given, by lot, "out of the inheritance of the tribes of Ephraim and Dan, and of" the half 62 tribe of Manasseh. And some of the remaining families of the sons of Kohath had cities "by lot", 63 out of the tribe of Ephraim. And they had given to them, Shechem, a city of refuge in mount Ephraim, with its suburbs: also Gezer, with 64 its suburbs; And "Kibzaim", with its suburbs; and Beth-horon, with its suburbs. "And out of the midst of the tribe of Dan, they had Eltekeh, with its suburbs; Gibbethon, with its suburbs"; 65 And Aijalon, with its suburbs; and 66 Gath-rimmon, with its suburbs. And out of the cities of the half tribe of Manasseh; "Taanach", with its suburbs, and "Beth-shean", with its suburbs. These were given to the remaining families of the sons of Kohath. And to the sons 62 of Gershon, according to their families, were given thirteen cities out of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the tribe of Asher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the tribe of Manasseh, in Bashan. To the sons of Gershon 71 were given out of the family of the half tribe of Manasseh, Golan, "a city of refuge" in Bashan, with its suburbs; and Ashtaroth, with its suburbs. And out of the tribe of Issachar, "Ki- 72 shon", with its suburbs; Daberath, with its suburbs; And "Jarmuth", with its suburbs; 73 and "En-gannim", with its suburbs; And out 74 of the tribe of Asher; Mishal, with its suburbs; and Abdon, with its suburbs; And "Helkath", 75 with its suburbs; and Rehob, with its suburbs. And out of the tribe of Naphtali; Kedesh in 76 Galilee, "a city of refuge", with its suburbs, and Hammoth-dor, with its suburbs; and Kirjathaim, with its suburbs. "Unto the sons of Me- 63 rari were given by lot, twelve cities, according to their families, out of the tribe of Reuben, out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun: Out of the tribe of Zebulun, were 77 given to the sons of Merari, "Jokneam, with its suburbs; Kartah, with its suburbs"; "Dimnah, with its suburbs; Nahalel, with its suburbs": And 78 on the other side of the Jordan by Jericho, on the east side of the Jordan, were given to them out of the tribe of Reuben, Bezer in the wilderness, a city of refuge, with its suburbs; and Jahaza, with its suburbs; Kedemoth also with 79 its suburbs; and Mephaath, with its suburbs: And out of the tribe of Gad; Ramoth in Gile- 80 ad, with its suburbs; and Mahanaim, with its suburbs; And Heshbon, with its suburbs; and 81 Jazer, with its suburbs. CHAPTER VII.

B. C. 1444. Genealogy from Issachar, Benjamin, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, and Asher.

1 Now the sons of Issachar were Tola, and 2 Puah, Jashub, and Shimron, four. And the sons of Tola were Uzzi, and Rephaiah, and Jeriel, and Jahmai, and Jibsam, and Samuel, paternal chiefs from Tola: they were valiant men in their generations; whose number in the days of David was twenty-two thousand 3 six hundred. And the son of Uzzi was Izrahiah:
and the sons of Izrahiah were Michael, and Obadiah, and Joel, and Ishiah * * * * five: all 4 of them chief men. And with them, according to their genealogies, by their paternal descent were bands of soldiers for war, in the days of David, six and thirty thousand: for they had 5 many wives and sons. And their brethren among all the families of Issachar, valiant men, reckoned according to their genealogies, were in all eighty-seven thousand.
6 The sons of Benjamin were Bela, and Be-7 cher, and Jediah, three. And the sons of Be-la; Ezbon, and Uzzi, and Uzziel, and Jerimoth, and Iri, five; paternal chiefs, mighty men of valour; and, reckoned according to their genealogies, were, in the days of David, twenty-8 two thousand and thirty-four. And the sons of Becher were Zemira, and Joash, and Eliezer, and Elioenai, and Omri, and Jerimoth, and Abi-ah, and Anathoth, and Alameth. All these were 9 the sons of Becher. And the number sprung from these paternal chiefs, according to their genealogies, mighty men of valour, were twenty 10 thousand and two hundred. The son of Jediah was Bilhan: and the sons of Bilhan were Jeush and Benjamin, and Ehud, and Chenaanah, and Zethan, Tarshish, and Abishashar. All these 11 were the sons of Jediah, paternal chiefs, mighty men of valour, whose progeny were seventeen thousand and two hundred, fit to go out for war and battle. Shuppim, and Huppim were the 12 sons of Ir; and Hushim, was the son of Aher.

The sons of Naphtali were Jahziel, and Guni, 13
and Jezer, and Shallum; the sons of Bilhah.

The sons of Manasseh: Ashriel, whom * * * * 14

the father of Gilead: And Machir took to wife, 15
Maachah, the sister of Huppim and Shuppim.
And Maachah, the wife of Machir, bare a son, 16
and she called his name Peresh; and the name of his brother was Sheresh; whose sons were Ulam and Rakem. And the son of Ulam was 17
Bedan. These were the sons of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh. And his 18
sister Hammoleketh bare Ishod, and Abiezer, and Mahalah, and Shemidah. And the sons of 19 Shemidah were Ahian, and Shechem, and Lik-hi, and Aniam.

And the son of Ephraim was Shuttelah: and 20
Bered, his son; and Tahath, his son; and Ela-dah, his son; and Tahath, his son; And Zabad, 21
his son; and his sons were, Shuthelah, and Ezer, and Elead, whom the men of Gath, the natives of the land, slew, because they came down to take away their cattle. And Zabad their father 22 mourned for them many days, and his brethren came to comfort him. And when he went in to 23 his wife, she conceived and bare a son, and he called his name Beriah [IN CALAMITY], because his house was then in calamity. And his daugh- 24 ter was Sherah, who built Beth-horon the nether, and the upper, and Uzen-sherah. Re- 25

and Telah, his son; and Tahan, his son; Laa- 26

Zelophehad; and Zelophehad had daughters.

CHAP. VII. 3. A name is either wanting or the number is wrong, as four only are mentioned.

6. Compare this with Gen. xvi. 21. and Num. xxvi. 38.

12. I suspect that this verse has been inserted by mistake, as we have no account of Ir, the father of Huppim and Shuppim; and Hushim is stated to be one of the sons of Dan, Gen. xvi. 33. Geddes conjectures that the genealogy of Dan stood here originally.

13. Nearly the whole of the progeny of Naphtali is omitted.

15. How the words omitted got into the text, it is difficult to ascertain; but surely this is not their proper place; nor do they appear to be connected with any part of the narrative. Some scribe might have had Josh. xvii. 3. in his head.

21. To take away their cattle. This expedition, according to the Chaldee paraphrast, happened thirty years before the departure of the Israelites from Egypt. They were accompanied, according to the same paraphrast, with a great army.

22. Zabad. Six generations are mentioned from Ephraim; and it is not probable, that the author who had just informed us that the men of Gath dan, his son; Ammihud, his son; Elishama, 28 his son; Nun, his son; Joshua, his son. And their possessions and habitations were Bethel

 and its villages; and eastward Naaran, and west-

 29 and its villages, Gaza and its villages. And in the territories of the children of Manasseh, Beth-shean and its villages; Taanach and its villages; Megiddo and its villages; Dor and its villages. In these dwelt the children of Joseph,
 the son of Israel.

30 The sons of Asher were Imnah, and Isuah,
 and Ishuai, and Beriah, and Serah, their sister.
 31 And the sons of Beriah were Heber, and Mal-32 chiel, who is the father of Birzavith. And Heber begot Japhlet, and Shomer, and Hotham, 33 and Shua, their sister. And the sons of Japhlet, were Pasach, and Bimhal, and Ashvath. These 34 are the children of Japhlet. And the sons of Shamer were Ahi, and Rohgah, Jehubbah, and were Zophah, and Imna, and Shelesh, and 36 Amal. The sons of Zophah were Suah, and Harnepher, and Shual, and Beri, and Imrah,

 37 Bezer, and Hod, and Shamma, and Shilshah,
 38 and Ithran, and Beera. And the sons of Jether 39 were Jephunneh, and Pispah, and Ara. And the sons of Ulla were Arah, and Haniel, and 40 Rezia. All these were the children of Asher, heads and paternal chiefs, chosen and mighty men of valour. And the number of those fit for war and battle, reckoned by their genealogy,
 was twenty-six thousand men.

Ashbel, the second; and 'Ahiram', the third;
 Naaman, the fourth; and 'Shupham', the fifth; 2
 "and Hupham, the sixth; and Ard, the seventh".
 And the sons of Bela were 'Ard', and Gera, 3
 and Abihud. And the sons of Abihud were 4 Abishua, and Naaman, and Ahoah, And Gera, 5 and 'Shuphan', and Hiram. And these are 6
 the sons of Abihud: these are the paternal chiefs of the inhabitants of Geba, who were removed to Manahath. "And Gera, who removed 7 them, begot Uzza, and Ahihud, and Shalaraim.
 And Shalaraim begot children in the country 8
 of Moab, after he had sent away his wives, Hu-shim and Baara. And he begot of Hodesh, his 9 wife, Jobab, and Zibia, and Mesha, and Malcham, And Jeuz, and Shachia, and Mirma. 10
 These were his sons, paternal chiefs. And of 11
 Hushim he had begotten Abitub, and Elpaal.
 The sons of Elpaal were Eber, and Misham, 12 and Shamed, who built Ono, and Lod, with its villages. Beriah also, and Shema, who were 13
 the paternal chiefs of the inhabitants of Aijalon, who drove away the inhabitants of Gath. And 14
 Ahio, Shashak, and Jeremoth, And Zebadiah, 15

6. Abihud. This reading is retained by the Syriac, (except changing the 7 into 7,) and the Arabic justifies the italic supplement, verse 4.

7. I have, with Houbigant, omitted the two first names, as repeated from the 4th verse. As Gera is expressly said to remove them, that is, to be the leader of the colony, it is not proper to notice other two as leaders.

And at Gibeon dwelt 'Jehiel', the father of Gibeon, whose wife's name was Maachah: And his sons were Abdon, and Zur, and Kish, and Baal, and Nadab, 'and Ner', And Gedor, and Ahio, and Zacher, 'and Mikloth'. And Mikloth begot Shimeah. And these also dwelt contiguous to their brethren in Jerusalem. And Ner begot Kish, and Kish begot Saul, and Saul begot Jonathan, and Melchi-shua, and Abinadab, and Ish-baal. And the son of Jonathan was Merib-baal; and Merib-baal begot Micah. And the sons of Micah were Pithon, and Melech, and Tarea, and Ahaz. And Ahaz begot Jehoadah; and Jehoadah begot Alemeth, and Azmaveth, and Zimri; and Zimri begot Moza, And Moza begot Binea: Rapha, his son; Eleasah, his son; Azel, his son: And Azel had six sons, whose names are these, Azrikam, Bocheru, and Ishmael, and Sheariah, and Obadiah, and Hanan. All these were the sons of Azel. And the sons of Eshek, his brother, were Ulam, his first-born, Jehush, the second, and Eliphelet, the third. And the sons of Ulam were men of valour, archers, and had many sons, and sons' sons, a hundred and fifty. All these were the sons of Benjamin.

1 Thus Israel were reckoned by genealogies; and, behold, these were found written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah, when the people were carried away to Babylon, for their transgression.

29. The last ten verses of chap. ix. are the same as these, containing some better readings; which are here noticed and adopted.

31. And Mikloth. The other copy, ch. ix. 37. shows how errors have crept into the genealogies. A name being repeated twice, the scribe in haste has only written it once. I have found from experience, that this is very easy, and most frequently occurs. I have often, while writing these notes, on reviewing them, found words omitted in this manner; and sometimes several together.

CHAPTER IX.

B. C. 1200. Those who inhabited the land after the captivity; and particularly those who resided at Jerusalem.

Now the first who dwelt in their possessions, 2 in their cities, Israelites, Priests, Levites, and Nethinims, were these. In Jerusalem dwelt of 3 the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin, and of the children of Ephraim, and Manasseh; Uthai, the son of Ammihub, the 4 son of Omri, the son of Imri; the son of Bani, of the children of Pharez, the son of Judah. And of the Shilonites; Asaiah, the first-born, 5 and his sons. And of the progeny of Zerah; 6 Jeuel. These and their brethren were six hundred and ninety. And of the sons of Benjamin; 7 Sallu, the son of Meshullam, the son of Hodaviah, the son of Hasenuah; And Ibneiah, the 8 son of Jeroham, and Elah, the son of Uzzi, the son of Michri; and Meshullam, the son of Shephathiah, the son of Reuel, the son of Ibnijah. These and their brethren, according to their 9 genealogies, were nine hundred and fifty-six. All these, by their descents, were paternal chiefs.

And of the priests were Jedaiah, and Jehoiarib, and Jachin, And Azariah, (the son of 11 Hilkiah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Zadok, the son of Meraioth, the son of Ahitub,) the ruler of the house of God; And Adaiah, 12 (the son of Jeroham, 'the son of Pelaliah, the son of Amzi, the son of Zechariah', the son of Pashur, the son of Malchijah,) and Maasai, (the son of Adiel, the son of Jahzerah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Meshillemoth, the son of Immer); These paternal chiefs, and their brethren, were one thousand seven hundred and sixty; very able men for the work of the ministry, in the house of God.

14 And of the Levites, of the sons of Merari, were Shemaiah, (the son of Hashub, the son of Azrikam, the son of Hashabiah,) And Bakbakkar, ° and Mattaniah, (the son of Micah, the son of Zichri, the son of Asaph;) And Obadiah, (the son of Shemaiah, the son of Galal, the son of Jeduthun,) and Berechiah, (the son of Asa, the son of Elkanah,) who dwelt in the villages of Netophath. And the door-keepers of the temple were Shallum, and Akkub, and Talmon, and Ahiman, and their brethren:

18 (Shallum was the chief;) At the king's gate, eastward, these were door-keepers, according to the fixed stations of the children of Levi.

19 For Shallum, (the son of Kore, the son of Ebiasaph, the son of Korah,) and his brethren, of the house of his father, the Korahites, in the work of the ministry were gate-keepers of the entrance of the tabernacle, during the encampments of Jehovah: When Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, was, in time past, ruler over them, before Jehovah; † And with him" was Zechariah, the son of Meshelemiah, the door-keeper of the congregation-tabernacle. All those chosen to be door-keepers, were two hundred and twelve. These were reckoned by their genealogy in their villages, as David and Samuel, the seer, had appointed their fore-fathers, in their set office. So they and their children had the oversight of the gates of the house of Jehovah, or the tabernacle, by wards. At the four sides of the temple were the door-keepers posted; 25 towards the east, west, north, and south. And their brethren who were in their villages, were to succeed them, by turns, every seven days. For those Levites were under the trust of the 26 four chief door-keepers, who were over the store-rooms and treasuries of the house of God. They, therefore, lodged around the house of 27 God, because they had the charge of it; and the opening of it every morning belonged to them. 28 And some of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, which they were to bring in and out by tale. Some of them also were appointed 29 to take care of the vessels, and all the utensils of the sanctuary, and the fine flour, and the wine, and the oil, and the incense, and the spices. But 30 the sons of the priests made the aromatic ointment. And Mattithiah, one of the Levites, 31 who was the first-born of Shallum, the Korahite, had the trust of such things as were made in the frying-pans. And others of their brethren, of 32 the Kohathites, had the charge of arranging the presence-bread, and of preparing it every sabbath. Now † these keepers of the temple, 33 paternal chiefs of the Levites, were lodged in the chambers, which were about the temple; because day and night they were employed. These were the paternal chiefs of the Levites, 34 who according to their genealogies, dwelt at Jerusalem. °

CHAPTER X.

B. C 1056. History of the life and death of Saul, the first king of Israel

Now the Philistines fought against Israel; 1 and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and they lay slaughtered on mount Gilboa. And the Philistines closely followed 2 Saul and his sons; and the Philistines slew Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Melchi-shua, the sons of Saul. The battle was then chiefly 3 against Saul, and the archers hit him, and he was wounded by the archers. Then said Saul 4

33. These keepers. The reading of the Syriac makes this passage, which is so confused and almost unintelligible, in the common version, clear and consistent with the narrative. The last ten verses of this chapter are the same as those in ch. viii. 29—40, and here omitted.

to his armour-bearer, "Draw thy sword, and thrust me through with it; lest these uncircumcised come and insult me." But his armour-bearer would not; for he was greatly afraid. Saul, therefore, took a sword and fell upon it. 5 And when his armour-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he likewise fell on his sword and died. 6 So Saul, and his three sons, *and his armour-bearer" and all his "men", died together. And when all the men of Israel, who were in the valley, saw, that the men of Israel had fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, then they forsook their cities and fled also; and the Philistines came and dwelt in them. 8 And on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, they found Saul and his 9 "three" sons, fallen on mount Gilboa. And when they had stripped him, they took his head, and his armour, and sent them about through the land of the Philistines; to publish it in the temples of their idols, and among the people. 10 And they put his armour in the temple of one of their gods; and his head they fixed up in the temple of Dagon, *and his body they hung up 11 by the walls of Beth-shan." But when *the inhabitants" of Jabesh-gilead, heard all that the 12 Philistines had done to Saul, All the valiant men arose, *and went all night" and took away the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, and brought them to Jabesh; *and there they burned them", and buried their bones under a tamarisk-tree in Jabesh; and they fasted seven days.

Thus died Saul for his transgression which he 13 committed against Jehovah, both by not keeping the word of Jehovah, and by consulting a necromancer, and not consulting Jehovah. Thus 14 he was slain; and the royal power was transferred to David, the son of Jesse.

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 1048. David made king at Hebron; takes Jebus and the catalogue of his worthies.

THEN all Israel assembled to David to Hebron, saying, "Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh. And, moreover, in time past when Saul 2 was king, thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest back Israel: and Jehoyah, thy God, said to thee, 'Thou shalt tend as a shepherd my people Israel, and thou shalt be ruler over my people Israel.'" Thus came all the elders of 3 Israel to the king to Hebron; and David made a covenant with them in Hebron before Jehovah; and they anointed David king over Israel, according to the word of Jehovah by Samuel.

Then David and all Israel went to Jerusalem, 4 which was called Jebus; where the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land, still dwelt. And the 5

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER X. 1. Those who honour God, he will honour; but those who despise him, shall themselves be despised. Saul, though brave, was wicked, and shed innocent blood. He did not obey the commands of Jehovah, but walked in the way of his own heart: and discovered no attachment to the precepts of religion, unless as connected with his own temporal interest. He and his house were rejected for transgression; and sooner or later, sin will be punished, unless repented of, confessed, and forsaken.

2. The evil which the wicked fear cometh upon them. Thus Saul, who put an end to his existence by falling on his sword, lest the enemy should insult him, became when dead, their spoil, and was treated with ignominy and disgrace. If we would avoid disgrace and ruin, and obtain honour and unfading glory, we must resolutely and nobly contend against sin, and cultivate that spirit which is the foundation of all real happiness and hope, a spirit of humility. "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted, but he that exalteth himself shall be abased."

CHAP. X. I. Compare with this, 1 Sam. xxxi. 7. Men of Israel, &c. So the parallel place, which removes the ambiguity; but as it is not essentially necessary I have added it in italics.

10. In the temple of, &c. In the temple of Ashtaroth. See 1 Sam. xxxi. 10. In the following verses I have adopted the readings of the parallel places, as they are supported by the versions, and as they are more full and perspicuous.

13, 14. I have rendered equivalently. The text is badly divided; the first words of the last verse belong to the preceding one.—Not consulting Jehovah. This seems opposed to what is said in 1 Sam. xxviii. 6. It may be said that though he sought to God, it was not with humility and perseverance and patient submission. Because Jehovah did not answer at the time, or in the manner he expected, he sought for a necromancer.

CHAP. XI. 2. Tend as a shepherd. This is the meaning of the verb nyr; and implies not only feeding, but all the care which a shepherd exercises over his flock.

inhabitants of Jebus said to David, "Thou canst not come in hither." Nevertheless, David took the citadel of Zion, which is now the city of David. And David said, "Whosoever first smiteth the Jebusites, shall be chief captain." So Joab, the son of Zeruiah, went first up, and was made chief captain. And David dwelt in the citadel; they, therefore, called it the city of David. And he rebuilt the city round about, from Millo; but the rest of the city Joab had preserved. And David continued growing greater and greater: for Jehovah, the God of hosts, was with him.

Now these are the principal worthies, who belonged to David, who, with all Israel, supported him in his claims to the kingdom, by making him king, according to the word of Jehovah concerning Israel. This then is the number of the worthies, who belonged to David.

Jashobeam, a Hachmonite, was chief of the first three. He, at one time, raising his spear, penetrated through three hundred men. And next to him, and one of the three first worthies, was Eleazar, the son of Dodo, the Ahohite. He was with David at Pas-dammim, where the Philistines were assembled to battle, and the men of Israel were giving way: and he arose and smote the Philistines, until his hand, which had stuck to his sword, was weary: and by him, Jehovah, that day, wrought a great deliverance; and the people followed him only to spoil. And next to him, was Shammah, the son of Agee, the Hararite. And the Philistines were assembled at Lechi, where was a piece of ground full of barley: and the people fled from the Philistines. But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it, and smote the Philistines: thus, by him, Jehovah wrought a great deliverance.

These three chiefs of the thirty, went down to David, to the rock, unto the cave of Adullam; and the host of the Philistines were encamped in the valley of Rephaim. Now, while David was in that hold, and a garrison of the Philistines was at Bethlehem; David longed, and said, "Who will give me a draught of water from the well of Bethlehem which is by the gate?" Then those three broke through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David. But David would not drink it, but poured it out as a drink-offering to Jehovah. And he said, "Far be it from me, O my God, that I should do this thing: shall I drink the life-blood of these men. For at the risk of their lives they brought it." He would not therefore drink it. These things did these three worthies.

And Abishai, the brother of Joab, was chief of the second three. For he, raising his spear, penetrated through three hundred, and slew them, and had a name among the second three. Of the three, he was more honourable than the two, and was their chief; yet he attained not the rank of the first three. Next to him was Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, (the son of a wealthy man of Kabzeel,) great in exploits; he slew two large lions of Moab: also he went down and slew a lion in a pit on a snowy day. And he slew an Egyptian, a man of great stature, five cubits high; and though the Egyptian had a spear in his hand, like a weaver's beam; yet he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear. These things did Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada; and hence had a name among the second three worthies. Behold, he was more honourable than the thirty, but attained not to the rank of the first three. And David set him over his own

The Hebrew word never signifies to repair, or rebuild, but to preserve alive, &c. Hence, the term city is used metonymically for the inhabitants.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XI. 1. In the advancement of David to the throne of Israel, we may learn the immutability of God's counsel, and his faithfulness in fulfilling his own promise. Various efforts were made to support the house of Saul; but the prudence, valour, and piety of David, at length gained the love and respect of all; and they came and submitted to him on stipulated terms. David made a covenant with them, doubtless, engaging to rule according to law, and to preserve to the people all their rights and privileges; and on these conditions they owned him as their king. Let both kings and people remember, that their obligations are mutual; and if the one are bound to obey, the other are bound to rule in justice.

2. Ennobled as David's worthies are for their deeds of valour, they are much more so, who are enrolled among the worthies of Christ. Their victories indeed are bloodless, but they are more difficult in their nature, and more important in their consequences. They fight not against flesh and blood only, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high-places. These worthies first shared with David in his afflictions, dangers, and contests, and then in the glories of his kingdom; so the soldiers of Christ must first suffer and then reign with him; they must go without the camp bearing his reproach, and then sit down with him in his eternal kingdom.

14. Over a hundred. That is, after David became king, these brave men were to command according to their ability.

and buckler, whose faces were like the faces of lions, and swift as the antelopes upon the mountains; Ezer, the first; Obadiah, the second; Eliab, the third; Mishmannah, the fourth; Jeremiah, the fifth; Attai, the sixth; Eliel, the seventh; Johanan, the eighth; Elzabad, the ninth; Jeremiah, the tenth; Machbanai, the eleventh. These, of the sons of Gad, were captains of the host: the least of them was over a hundred, and the greatest over a thousand. These are they who went over the Jordan, in the first month, when it had overflowed all its banks; and they put to flight all the inhabitants of the valleys, towards the east and towards the west.

Now, when some of the children of Benjamin and Judah came to the strong-hold unto David; David went out to meet them, and addressed them, and said, "If ye come peaceably to help me, my heart shall be one with yours; but if to betray me to mine enemies, although I have done no wrong, may the God of our fathers see, and reprove you." Then Amasai, chief of those captains, moved in spirit, said, "Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse: peace, peace be unto thee, and peace be to thy helpers; for thy God helpeth thee." Then David received them, and made them captains of bands. And there fell some of the tribe of Manasseh to David, when he went with the Philistines against Saul to battle: but he helped them not. For the lords of the Philistines, on deliberation, sent him away, saying, "He will fall to his master Saul, at the price of our heads." As he went to Ziklag, there fell to him of Manasseh Adnah, and Jozabad, and Jedaiel, and Michael, and Jozabad, and Elihu, and Zilthai, captains of thousands in Manasseh. And they helped David against the horde of the Amalekites, for they were all of them men of valour, and captains of the host. Thus at that time, day by day, they came to David's assistance, until he had a great and powerful host.

And these are the numbers of the bands armed for war, who came to David to Hebron, to transfer the kingdom of Saul to him, according to the word of Jehovah. Of the children of Judah there were six thousand and eight hundred, who bore shield and lance, armed for war. Of the children of Simeon, men of valour fit for war, seven thousand and one hundred. Of the children of Levi, four thousand and six hundred. And Jehoiada was the leader of the Aaronites, and with him were three thousand and seven hundred; And Zadok, a young man, mighty in valour, and twenty-two chiefs of his father's house. And of the children of Benjamin, the kindred of Saul, three thousand; for as yet the greatest part of them adhered to the house of Saul. And of the children of Ephraim, twenty thousand and eight hundred, men of valour; famous in the house of their fathers. And of the half-tribe of Manasseh, eighteen thousand, who had been nominated to come and make David king. And of the children of Issachar, of their chiefs, two hundred, knowing, prudent men, who knew what, according to the times, Israel ought to do; and all their brethren were at their command. Of the children of Zebulun, who went forth to battle, expert in the use of all warlike weapons, came fifty thousand to his assistance, who were not double-hearted. And of the children of Naphtali, a thousand captains, and with them

15. In the first month. That is, in the latter end of March or the beginning of April. This overflowing of the Jordan arises from the melting of the snow on the mountains, around its source, and on its sides. If these men swam across it at this time, and attacked some of the enemies of Israel, who had occupied the valleys, their prowess is justly recorded; for the attempt was extremely hazardous. Geddes renders, instead of put to flight, "when it inundated the valleys," &c.

17. And addressed them. Here, the term answer is, in our language, highly improper, and it is evident from numerous instances, that the verb my denotes, not only to reply to a person, but to begin a discourse, to address one, on any subject. Without any further notice I shall always adopt this rendering, when the subject requires it.—My heart shall be one, &c. That is, I will confide in you, and show you the most cordial attachment.

war, twenty-eight thousand and six hundred.

and of the half-tribe of Manasseh, beyond the Jordan, with all manner of warlike weapons for the battle, a hundred and twenty thousand.
38 All these men of war, who could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel; and all the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king.
39 And there they were with David three days, eating and drinking; for their brethren had 40 prepared for them. Moreover, their next neighbours, Issachar, and Zebulun, and Naphtali, brought food on asses, and on camels, and on mules, and on oxen; and meat, meal, cakes of figs, and bunches of raisins, and wine, and oil, and oxen, and sheep, in abundance. For there was great joy in Israel.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. They who early espoused the cause of David, though not raised to the highest degree of glory, yet have their names honourably recorded. They fled to him, when in disgrace, and some joined him when in the greatest danger. Thus many of the early followers of Jesus, David's son according to the flesh, have their names mentioned in the sacred pages of the New Testament. Paul salutes many as believers in the Saviour, and notices some as being in Christ before him; some who had been broken off from the wild-olive, and grafted into Christ the true vine. Others are mentioned as old disciples, whose faith, love, courage, and constancy had been tried, and who had given strong proofs of their attachment and submission to their Lord. Let us imitate such characters, and it will appear one day that our names are written in the Lamb's book of life.

But of what use could they be to David? He wanted wise and brave soldiers; and according to the version given, such were these men.

CHAP. XIII. 5. From Sihor of Egypt, &c. It is generally considered that by Sihor is meant the Nile. Comp. Josh. xiii. 3. Is. xxiii. 3. Jer. ii. 18. The meaning is, David assembled all the leading Israelites, from one extremity of the kingdom to another.

thousands, and hundreds, and with every inferior leader; And David said to the whole congrega- 2
tion of Israel; "If it seem good to you, and please Jehovah, our God, let us send abroad to our brethren every where, that are left in the whole land of Israel, and with them also to the priests and Levites who are in their cities and suburbs, that they may assemble unto us; And 3 let us bring hither the ark of our God to us: for we inquired not at it, in the days of Saul."
And the whole congregation said that this 4 should be done: for the thing seemed right in the eyes of all the people. So David assembled 5 all Israel together, from Sihor of Egypt, even unto the entrance of Hamath, to bring the ark of God from Kirjath-jearim. And David went, 6 and all Israel, to Baalah, (that is, to Kirjathjearim,) which belonged to Judah, to bring up thence the ark of God Jehovah, who dwelleth between the cherubs, and who is there invoked.
And they carried the ark of God in a new cart, 7
having brought it out of the house of Abinadab;
and Uzzah and his brother drove the cart. And 8 David and all Israel sang with all their might, before God, and played on harps, and on psalteries, and on tabours, and on cymbals, and blew with trumpets.

2. From the host which at last joined David, and the gladness and rejoicing, on that occasion, we are reminded of the joy and holy pleasure of good men in the establishment and enlargement of the kingdom of our Redeemer. They rejoice as those who divide the spoil. They witness the accession of new subjects, as evidences of his power and grace; and what he is doing for others, reminds them of their own obligations. They join with the holy angels in celebrating his praises, and attesting that he is worthy to reign in every heart, and to reign from the rivers to the ends of the earth. Gird thy sword on thy thigh, most mighty, and ride forth prosperously in the cause of truth, meekness, and righteousness. Let thine arrows be sharp in the heart of thine enemies, thine arrows of conviction, that they may fall down before thee, and become thy subjects. Thine we are, thou son of David; and on thy side, Jesus.

7. The words supplied are evidently necessary to the sense, and are found in the parallel place.

9. Of Nachon, &c. I have adhered to the reading of Samuel, because both the Chaldee and the Syriac read here as in the other place, though they render as an appellative, a prepared threshing-floor. The Septuagint and the Vulgate have the term as a proper name. Michaelis follows the Chaldee and the Syriac, and supposes that corn being spread on the thresh-

9 And when they came unto the threshing-floor of 'Nachon', Uzzah put forth his hand to hold 10 the ark; for the oxen were startled. And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Uzzah, and he smote him, because he put forth his hand to 11 the ark: and there he died before God. And David was grieved, that Jehovah had made a breach upon Uzzah: wherefore that place is called Perez-uzzah, [THE STRIKING OF UZZAH,] 12 to this day. And David was afraid of God that day, saying, "How shall I bring the ark of God
13 to me?" So David brought not the ark to himself to the city of David, but carried it aside 14 to the house of Obed-edom, the Gathite. And the ark of God remained with the family of Obed-edom, in his house, three months. And Jehovah blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that he had.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. A supreme regard to God, and a proper concern for the worship he had appointed, marked the spirit, and governed the conduct of David. The ark had been, for a long period, but little regarded: they had not sought to Jehovah as dwelling between the cherubs. David saw the sin of this neglect, and called the attention of the people to their duty. They agree with him in the propriety of his measure, and cheerfully engage that this should be done. Thus, how often are people neglecting their duty from mere inattention, or because they have not had it stated to them; and how necessary is it for those who see any branch of religious duty omitted, to ing-floor might occasion the oxen to start aside. I suspect, that the two words בְּיָדָא and בְּיָדָא were originally the same, and the difference has sprung from a mistake of the letters.

And when the Philistines heard that David 8 was anointed king over all Israel, all the Philistines went up to seek David. And David heard of it, and went out against them. For when 9 the Philistines had come and spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim, David inquired of 10 God, saying, "Shall I go out against the Philistines? and wilt thou deliver them into my hand?" And Jehovah said unto him, "Go out; for I will deliver them into thy hand." So "he went out" to Baal-perazim; and David 11 smote them there. Then David said, "God hath broken down mine enemies by my hand as the breach of waters:" therefore the name of that place was called Baal-perazim. [BAAL OF THE BROKEN.] For as they had left their idol 12 gods there, David gave a command, and they were burned with fire.

Again the Philistines spread themselves 13 abroad in the valley of Rephaim. And David 14 inquired of God; and God said unto him, "Go not up after them; turn away from them, and come upon them over against the mulberry trees. And it shall be, when thou shalt hear a 15 sound of a motion in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt go out to battle: for make it known, and not suffer their neighbours to incur guilt.

2. In the events of the day on which the ark was removed, we are taught, how soon joy may be turned into grief and sorrow. David and his numerous friends exulted greatly on the occasion. The air resounded with their songs of praise; with hosannas to Jehovah, the God of Israel. Amid the joyful procession, how awful the stroke which fell on Uzzah! He was smitten for his temerity; and a holy fear was impressed on all. David was grieved and perhaps alarmed for his own safety. Let us then rejoice with trembling; and never forget that occasions of sorrow may arise when least expected.

consistent with 2 Sam. v. 17.; and because it makes it evident that David consulted God before he went out against the Philistines. On the first report of the advance of the enemy he retired to the citadel of Zion, but, having received an encouraging answer to his inquiries, he issued forth and made a successful attack.

God is gone forth before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines." David, therefore, did as God commanded him; and they smote the host of the Philistines from Gibeon, even to Gazer. 17 And the fame of David went out into all lands; and Jehovah made all the nations dread him.

CHAPTER XV.

B. C. 1042: The ark brought to Jerusalem, from the house of Obed-edom.

1 AND David made for himself houses in the city of David; he prepared a place for the ark of God, and pitched for it a tent. Then David said, "None ought to carry the ark of God but the Levites: for them hath Jehovah chosen to carry the ark of God, and to minister to him for ever." And David assembled all Israel at Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of Jehovah to its place, which he had prepared for it. And David convoked the children of Aaron, and the Levites: Of the sons of Kohath; Uriel, the chief, and his brethren, a hundred and twenty: 6 Of the sons of Merari; Asaiah, the chief, and his brethren, two hundred and twenty: Of the sons of Gershon; Joel, the chief, and his brethren, a hundred and thirty: Of the sons of Elizaphan; Shemaiah, the chief, and his brethren, two hundred: Of the sons of Hebron; 10 Eliel, the chief, and his brethren, eighty: Of the sons of Uzziel; Amminadab, the chief, and his brethren, a hundred and twelve. 11 David then called for Zadok and Abiathar, the priests, and for the Levites, for Uriel, Asaiah, and Joel, Shemaiah, and Eliel, and Am-minadab, And said to them, "Ye are the paternal chiefs of the Levites: sanctify yourselves, both ye and your brethren, that ye may bring up the ark of Jehovah, the God of Israel, unto the place which I have prepared for it. For 13 because ye did not carry it the former time, Jehovah our God, made a breach among us; because we sought him not according to his directions." So the Priests and the Levites 14 sanctified themselves, that they might bring up the ark of Jehovah, the God of Israel; And 15 that the children of Levi might carry the ark of God upon their shoulders, on its staves, as Moses had commanded, according to the word of Jehovah.

And David spoke to the chiefs of the Levites, 16 to appoint their brethren who were skilled in music, to raise a joyous symphony, with psalteries, and harps, and high-sounding cymbals. And those Levites appointed Heman, the son 17 of Joel; and his brethren, Asaph, the son of Berechiah; and of the sons of Merari, their brethren, Ethan, the son of Kushaiah. And with 18 these were their brethren of the second degree; Zechariah, ° and Jaaziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, Eliab, and Benaiah, and Maaseiah, and Mattithiah, and Elipheleh, and Milkneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, the doorkeepers. The musicians, Heman, Asaph, and 19 Ethan, were to play on high-sounding cymbals of brass: And Zechariah, and ° Jaaziel", and 20 Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, and Eliab, and Maaseiah, and Benaiah, on acute-sounding psalteries: And Mattithiah, and Elipheleh, 21

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. Children are a heritage of Jehovah, given by him, and they should be trained up for him. David had many, but in most of them he found little comfort. He treated his peaceable neighbours with respect, and they returned his kindness. Hiram provided him with materials and workmen to build his own palace. Thus, if we would have friends, let us show ourselves friendly; for love and friendship are the source of human cares and toils. Let us imitate David in inquiring of God what he would have us to do; and when his will is known, let us follow it; and, like David, we shall conquer all our enemies.

CHAP. XV. 1. A tent. Doubtless, regard would be had to the form of the old tabernacle, and proper apartments made for the different services. From Solomon's going down to Gibeon, to sacrifice there, it appears that it was most usual to do so, until the temple was erected.

2. None ought, &c. Compare Num. iv. 15. The ark was not carried in a cart but on their shoulders. Hence, they had before neglected the divine command.

13—16. Conscious of their past offence, they adopted the method prescribed; the ark is carried as it was in the wilderness.

18. I have omitted, with Dathe, the word Ben, because it does not occur in the 20th verse, where the same names are repeated; and because it never occurs, I think, as a proper name elsewhere.

20. On acute-sounding, &c. I have followed Pfeiffer in this version, who observes that these instruments were called (אמלל) alamoth, because and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, and Azaziah, on eight-stringed harps, to complete 22 the harmony. And Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, directed the carriage of the ark, because he understood how to direct the carriage

 23 of it. And Berechiah and Elkanah were door-
 24 keepers for the ark. And Shebaniah, and Jehoshaphat, and Nethaneel, and Amasai, and Zechariah, and Benaiah, and Eliezer, the priests, blew with trumpets before the ark of God: and Obed-edom and Jehiah were door-keepers for the ark.

25 Thus David, and the elders of Israel, and the captains over thousands, went to bring up with rejoicing, the ark of the covenant of Jehovah,
 26 out of the house of Obed-edom. And as God favoured the Levites who bore the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, they offered seven steers
 27 and seven rams. And David was clothed with a muslin robe, (he also had on a precious ephod :) and all the Levites, who bore the ark, and the musicians, and Chenaniah, who directed 28 the carriage, And all Israel brought up the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, with shouting, and with the sound of the cornet, and with trumpets, and with high-sounding cymbals, with 29 psalteries and harps. Now when the ark of the covenant of Jehovah came to the city of David, Michal, the daughter of Saul, looking out at a window, saw king David dancing and playing before the ark: she despised him in her heart.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. We may learn from this account, that, when we perceive our past mistakes and errors, we ought to humble ourselves, and become more cautious in future. David did so; for, having read the directions which God had given respecting the removal of the ark, he appointed Levites to carry it. We should not draw back from a good work, because we do not succeed at first; but should rather apply to it with greater diligence and circumspection, and at length God will crown our efforts with his blessing.

2. We see, that on every occasion, atonement was made by the shedding of blood. "They offered seven steers and seven rams." This was a whole burnt-offering to Jehovah, the God of Israel. Thus should we have respect to the blood of atonement in all our religious services; for there is sin at all times for us to they imitated the acute voice of virgins. This is as probable as any of the senses attributed to the word.

22. The carriage of the ark. I have adopted our marginal version

Thus they brought the ark of God, and set it in the midst of the tent which David had pitched for it; and they offered burnt-sacrifices and feast-offerings before God. And when 2 David had made an end of offering the burnt-offerings and the feast-offerings, he blessed the people in the name of Jehovah. And he distributed to every Israelite, whether man or woman, to each a piece of bread, a piece of roast meat, and a fritter.

He then appointed certain Levites to minister 4 before the ark of Jehovah; and to celebrate, and to thank, and to praise Jehovah, the God of Israel. Asaph was the chief; and next to 5 him Zechariah; then Jeiel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Mattithiah, and Eliab, and Benaiah, and Obed-edom: and Jeiel, and his company played on psalteries and harps; but Asaph and his company on high-sounding cymbals: While Benaiah and Jahaziel, the 6 priests, were with trumpets continually before the ark of the covenant of God.

acknowledge, and for God to pardon. This is the way in which he hath appointed sinners to approach him, that they may find acceptance; and, unless they seek him in the prescribed method, he will not be favourable.

3. The tokens of God's favour on the present occasion, inspired David and the people with the most lively joy. The priests in their robes, the king clothed in a precious ephod, the Levites with trumpets, and other instruments of music; and the voices of many singing the praises of Jehovah, formed an interesting scene, and could not fail to make a deep impression on the mind. Thus "God, as dwelling between the Cherubs, went up with a shout; Jehovah, with the sound of a trumpet." How proper was it to say, "Sing praises to God, sing praises; sing praises to our king, sing praises."

B. C. 1042. David purposes to build a house for God; his purpose is accepted, and blessings promised to his seed; his prayer and thanksgiving.

1 Now when David was settled in his own house, he said to Nathan, the prophet, "Lo, I dwell in a house of cedar, but the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, remaineth under curtains." Then Nathan said to David, "Do all that is in thy heart; for God is with thee." But on that night, the word of God came to Nathan, "the prophet", saying, "Go and tell David, my servant, 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'Thou shalt not build for me a house to dwell in. For I have not dwelt in a house since the day that I brought up Israel out of Egypt', unto this day; but have gone from tent to tent, and from tabernacle to tabernacle.' Whithersoever I have walked in all Israel, spoke I a word to any of the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to tell my people, saying, 'Why have you not built for me a house of cedar?' Now, therefore, thus shalt thou say to my servant David, 'Thus saith Jehovah, God of hosts, 'I took thee from the sheep-cot, from following the flock, to be ruler over my people Israel; And I have been with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee. Also thy name, I will make as great as the name of the great ones who are on the earth. Moreover, I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will so plant them, that they may dwell in their own place, and move no more; nor shall wicked men afflict them any more, as formerly. As from the time that I appointed judges over my people Israel; for all thine enemies I will subdue. Moreover, I, Jehovah, tell thee, that I will build up thy house.'

'For when thy days are completed, and thou shalt go to thy fathers, I will raise up thy seed after thee, one of thine own sons; and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build for me a house, and I will establish his throne for ever. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. In this song of praise we are taught to record God's past mercies. David traces the history of the nation over which he was made king; and notices God's covenant established with their fathers, and fulfilled to them; his miraculous works, wrought in confirmation of his own promises; his special providential care of their fathers when they were few, very few in number, and when they wandered from place to place, exposed to attacks from the people among whom they were. Yet he suffered no man to do them harm, &c. He also gave them statutes and judgments, made known his own will, and the method of acceptance and salvation. Let us recal to mind, that God has blessed us in like manner, and that we are bound to praise him, to publish his glory to others; yea, to glory in his holy name, in his love, power, faithfulness, and mercy.

2. We are also taught to form proper conceptions of the God we worship, as the Creator, Governor, and Judge of all. He hath made the earth and the heavens, and is alone deserving of homage and worship. His perfections are great beyond comparison; his power, infinite; his goodness, unbounded; his glory, unspeakable. How proper then is the address, "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name; bring an offering, and come before him: worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." Before this God all must stand, and by him the eternal state of every man must be determined. Let the whole earth fear before him.

rendering in the first person, which the sense and the connexion requires, as better than by retaining the idiom lead some to think that it is the language of the prophet and not of God. So 2 Sam. vii. 10.

kingdom for ever: and his throne shall be established for evermore." According to all these words, and according to all this vision, did Nathan, the prophet, speak to David.

16 And David, the king, went into the tabernacle, and sat before Jehovah, and said, "Who am I, O God Jehovah, and what is my house, 17 that hitherto thou hast so promoted me? And as if this was but a small thing in thine eyes, O God, thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come; and hast provided for me according to the state of men of 18 high rank, O God Jehovah! What can David say more to thee; for the honour conferred on 19 thy servant? for thou knowest thy servant. O Jehovah, for 'thine own word's' sake, and according to thine own heart, thou doest all these great things, 'which thou hast made known to 20 thy servant'. 'Wherefore, thou art great, O God Jehovah'; there is none like thee; nor is there a God besides thee, according to all that 21 we have heard with our own ears. And what one nation on the earth is like thy people Israel, whom thou, O God, wentest to redeem to be thine own people, to make thyself a name great and terrible, by driving out nations from before thy people, whom thou hast redeemed out of Egypt? For thy people Israel thou hast made 22 thine own people for ever; and thou, Jehovah, hast become their God. Therefore now, O Jehovah, let the word which thou hast spoken, concerning thy servant, and concerning his house, be established for ever, and do as thou hast said. Let it even be established, so that 24 men may magnify thy name for ever, saying, 'Jehovah, God of hosts, is indeed the God of Israel.' And let the house of David, thy servant, be established before thee. For thou, 25 O my God, hast told thy servant that thou wilt build up for him a house: therefore thy servant hath been encouraged to pray before thee. And now, O Jehovah, thou art God, and hast 26 promised this goodness to thy servant: Now 27 therefore, let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may continue before thee for ever; and, 'with thy blessing', O Jehovah, let it ever be blessed."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. From Nathan's address, we see what is the duty of God's servants. They should encourage every good purpose and design; for even these are acceptable to God, though they may not be accomplished. When the heart indites good matters, forms holy resolutions, to do something for the glory of God, and for the good of the church, we should say to such an one, 'Do all that is in thy heart, for God is with thee.' Every good man when he hears of such purposes, rejoices, and is exceedingly glad; for he loves Zion, the place where God's honour dwelleth.

2. The magnificent promises made to David, have only their full accomplishment in the person of our Lord. He is, in a peculi-factly with Solomon or his successors, who might be said to be settled in God's house, because they were settled near it; but strictly and properly agrees only to Christ, to whom alone that promise also of an everlasting establishment in this kingdom belongs. And this expression seems to be most emphatically added, to signify, that that person in whom all those promises should be fully and perfectly accomplished, to wit, the Messiah, should be settled not only on the king's throne, as others of David's successors were, but also in God's house, or temple; and consequently, that he should be a priest as well as a king; which mystery was more clearly ar sense, God's well-beloved son, and established on the throne of Israel, and in God's house for ever. He is the king and the priest of his church; and, as king, he must reign until all enemies are made his footstool; as priest, he ever lives to make intercession. Let us thankfully acknowledge the mercy of God in raising up a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David. Justly may holy admiration be excited at the condescension, grace, and love of God, towards sinners. What is our father's house, what our origin, what our conduct, that God should have made such promises and fulfilled them? "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not any of his benefits. For it is he who forgiveth thy sins and healeth thy diseases." revealed to David, Psalm ex. 1, 2, 3, 4; and may be intimated, though obscurely (as was fit and usual in that state of the church) in these words.

16. So promoted me. I have preferred this version, because brought me may imply that God had only hitherto supported him, when it is clear that David intended to express that God had raised him to the throne, promoted him to be king.

17. Compare 2 Sam. vii. 19.

19. I follow the reading of the parallel place, which gives the most apposite sense.

2 towns out of the hand of the Philistines. And he smote Moab; and the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

3 And David smote Hadadezer, king of Zobah, at Hamath, as he went to re-establish his power
4 by the river Euphrates. And David took from him a thousand chariots, and seven thousand horsemen, and twenty thousand foot-men: and David ham-strung all the chariot horses, reserv-
5 ing of them only for a hundred chariots. And as the Syrians of Damascus had come to help Hadadezer, king of Zobah, David slew of the 6 Syrians twenty-two thousand men. David then put garrisons in Syria of Damascus; and the Syrians became David's servants, and brought gifts. Thus Jehovah preserved David whither-
7 soever he went. And David took the golden shields which were on the servants of Hadad-
8 ezer, and brought them to Jerusalem. Likewise from Tibhath, and from "Berothai", cities of Hadadezer, brought David very much brass, with which Solomon made the brazen sea, and the pillars, and the other vessels of brass.

9 Now when Toi, king of Hamath, heard how David had smitten all the hosts of Hadadezer, 10 king of Zobah, He sent "Joram", his son, to king David, to inquire of his welfare, and to congratulate him, because he had fought against Hadadezer, and smitten him; for Hadadezer was at war with Toi. And Joram brought all kinds of vessels of gold, and of silver, and of 11 brass. These also king David dedicated to Jehovah, with the silver and the gold which he brought from other nations: from "Syria", and from Moab, and from the children of Ammon, and from the Philistines, and from Amalek.

Moreover, Abishai, the son of Zeruiah, slew 12 of the Edomites in the valley of salt, eighteen thousand. And he put garrisons in Edom; and 13 all the Edomites became David's servants. Thus Jehovah preserved David whithersoever he went.

And David reigned over all Israel, and executed judgment and justice to all his people. And Joab, the son of Zeruiah, was over the 15 host; and Jehoshaphat, the son of Ahilud, was recorder; And Zadok, the son of Ahitub, and 16 Abiathar, "the son of Ahimelech", were the priests; and "Seraiah" was scribe; And Benaiah, 17 the son of Jehoiada, was over the Chelethites and the Pelethites; and the sons of David were chief ministers about the king.

CHAPTER XIX.

B. C. 1037. On the death of Nahash, king of the Ammonites, David sends messengers to comfort Hanun, his son; they are shamefully treated; a war is the consequence, and the Ammonites, with their confederates the Syrians, are conquered.

Now it came to pass after this, that Nahash, 1 the king of the children of Ammon, died, and "Hanun", his son reigned in his stead. And 2 David said, "I will show kindness to Hanun, the son of Nahash, because his father showed kindness to me." And David sent messengers

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVIII. 1. We may be reminded, that the victories of David, which followed the prayer which he had offered, recorded in the former chapter, appear to be an answer to it. He had humbly and fervently intreated Jehovah to bless the house of his servant; and the Almighty aided him against his enemies, which tended to establish his own power, and to transmit it to his posterity. Thus shall we find our prayers answered in our success against our spiritual enemies. God will bruise Satan shortly under our feet; will enable us to subdue every lust, and make us more than conquerors, through the grace of Christ. Let us then plead with God, and go forth in his power and might, and we shall put to flight our fears and our doubts; and finally receive the crown of life.

2. We may observe, that prosperity often induces men to profess friendship. Thus when David was successful, Toi sent to congratulate him, and to form an alliance with him; but it was observed that his motive was selfish; it was because David had conquered his enemy, Hadadezer. Thus "the rich hath many pretended friends, but the poor is hated by his neighbour." A real friend loveth at all times, and is the best known in adversity. Such a friend is Jesus: the humble penitent sinners' friend, who will not forsake him in poverty, sickness, or death. His promise is, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

21. I have rendered in the second person, as more perspicuous and suitable to our idiom and language.

- to comfort him concerning his father. And the servants of David came into the land of the children of Ammon, to Hanun, to comfort him.
- 3 But the princes of the children of Ammon said to Hanun, "Doth David in thine eyes honour thy father, because he hath sent comforters to thee? Are not his servants come to thee to search, spy out, and overthrow the land?"
- 4 Hanun, therefore, took David's servants and shaved them, and cut off their garments at the middle of their thighs, and sent them away.
- 5 Then some went, and told David how the men had been treated; and he sent to meet them; for the men were greatly ashamed: and the king said, "Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return."
- 6 And the children of Ammon now saw that they had made themselves odious to David; and Hanun and the children of Ammon sent a thousand talents of silver, to hire chariots and horsemen from Mesopotamia, and from Syria-maachah, and from Zobah. And they hired thirty-two thousand riders, and the king of Maachah, and his people, who came and encamped before Medeba. And the children of Ammon assembled from their cities, and came
- 8 to battle. And when David heard of this, he sent Joab, and all the host of mighty men.
- 9 And the children of Ammon came out, and formed in battle array before the gate of the city; but the kings who had come, were posted
- 10 by themselves in the field. Now when Joab saw that the battle was set against him, before and behind, he chose out of all the choice men of Israel, and formed them in array against the
- 11 Syrians. And the rest of the people he placed under the command of Abishai, his brother, that he might form them in array against the
- 12 children of Ammon. And he said, "If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me; but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will help thee. Be of good courage, and let us act valiantly for our people, and for the cities of our God: and may Jehovah do that which is good in his sight." Then Joab and the people who were with him went on to battle against the Syrians; and they fled before him. And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fleeing, then they also fled before Abishai, his brother, and entered into the city. Then Joab came back to Jerusalem.

And when the Syrians saw that they were smitten before Israel, they sent messengers, and brought the Syrians who were beyond the river; and they came to Helam under the command of Shobach, the captain of the host of Hadadezer. And when this was told to David, he assembled all Israel, and passed over the Jordan, and came to Helam, and formed in battle array against them. Now when David had put the battle in array against the Syrians, they fought with him; But the Syrians fled before Israel; and David destroyed of the Syrians, seven hundred chariots, seven thousand horsemen, and forty thousand footmen. He killed also Shobach, the captain of the host. And when the servants of Hadadezer saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with David, and became his servants; nor would the Syrians help the children of Ammon any more.

And, on the return of the year, at the time 1 when kings go out to battle, Joab led forth a powerful army, and wasted the country of the children of Ammon, and went and besieged Rabbah. But David abode at Jerusalem. And Joab smote Rabbah and destroyed it. And David took the crown of their king from off his head, and found it to weigh a talent of gold; and it was beset with precious stones; and it was set upon David's head: and out of the city he brought also exceeding much spoil. And he brought out the people who were in it, and put them to saws, and to harrows of iron, and to axes. Thus David treated all the cities of the children of Ammon. Then David and all the people returned to Jerusalem.

4 And after this, there arose a war at Gezer with the Philistines; at which time Sibbechai, the Hushathite, slew Saph, who was of the race of the Rephaites: and they were subdued. 5 And there was another battle "at Gab", with the Philistines; and Elhanan, the son of Jair, slew Lahmi, the brother of Goliath, the Gathite, the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam. 6 And there was yet another battle at Gath, where was a man of great stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand, and six on each foot: and he also was of the 7 Rephaite race. But when he defied Israel, Jonathan, the son of Shimea, David's brother, 8 slew him. These were of the Rephaite race in Gath; and fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

CHAP. XX. 5. ^a 2 Sam. xxi. 19.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XIX. & XX. 1. We are taught from this history, that our kindest actions may be misinterpreted; and we receive insult instead of love and esteem. Thus were David's friendly attentions to Hanun requited! And how often has the same crime been repeated since. The preaching, the miracles, and the kindest deeds of the son and Lord of David, were misinterpreted, by a prejudiced and unbelieving race; and they ascribed to the agency of Satan, what bore most manifestly the stamp of heaven. Like him, let us commit ourselves to the righteous judge, when our intentions are misrepresented, our motives questioned, or our characters traduced.

5. I have followed the numbers of the parallel place, because there is and moved David to number Israel. And David said to Joab, and to the rulers of the people, "Go, number Israel, from Beer-sheba even to Dan; and bring the number of them to me, that I may know it." And Joab answered, "May Jehovah make his people a hundred times so many more as they are: but, my lord the king, are they not all my lord's servants? why then would my lord require this thing? why would he be a cause of trespass to Israel?" Nevertheless, the king's word prevailed against Joab. Wherefore Joab departed, and went throughout all Israel, and came to Jerusalem.

And Joab gave to David the sum of the number of the people. And all those of Israel were "eight hundred thousand men" who drew the sword: and Judah was "five" hundred thousand men who drew the sword. But Levi and Benjamin counted he not among them; for the king's order was detestable to Joab. And God was displeased on account of this thing; therefore he smote Israel. And David said to God, "I have sinned greatly, because I have done this thing: but, now I beseech thee, do away the iniquity of thy servant; for I have done very foolishly."

And Jehovah spoke to Gad, David's seer, 9 saying, "Go and tell David, saying, 'Thus saith Jehovah, I offer to thee three things: choose for thyself one of them, that I may do it unto thee.'" So Gad came to David, and said 11

2. Behold, how great a fire a little spark kindleth! Had the Ammonites possessed prudence, they would not have insulted the messengers of a prince, who had already become formidable; and had they consulted their own interest they would not have provoked a war, which cost them so much. After repeated defeats, their capital was taken, their king dethroned, their country laid waste, and vast numbers slain. Let us carefully avoid contention, as we know not to what it may lead. It is the duty of men professing godliness, to be kind and courteous to all; and if some will act like the king and the princes of Ammon, the result will be their own disgrace and ruin.

14. Sent a pestilence. Compare 2 Sam. xxiv. 15. where the account is more full and particular.

15—17. Some circumstances are here mentioned which are not men-

- to him; "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Choose for thy-12 self; Either a famine of three years; or a defeat of three months before thy foes, while the sword of thine enemies smiteth thee; or else
 three days, the sword of Jehovah, even the pestilence, in the land, and the angel of Jehovah destroying through all the districts of Israel.'
 Consider now what answer I shall return to him 13 who sent me." And David said to Gad, "I am in a great strait: let me fall now into the hand of Jehovah, for very great are his mercies; but let me not fall into the hand of man."
 14 So Jehovah sent a pestilence upon Israel;
 and there fell of Israel seventy thousand men.
 15 And God sent an angel unto Jerusalem to destroy it; but while he was destroying, Jehovah beheld, and he repented of the evil, and said to the destroying angel, "It is enough; stay now thy hand." And the angel of Jehovah stood by the threshing-floor of 'Araunah', a 16 Jebusite. And David raised his eyes and saw the angel of Jehovah standing between the earth and the heavens, having a drawn sword
 in his hand stretched out over Jerusalem.
 Then David and the elders of Israel, clothed in 17 sackcloth, fell upon their faces. And David said to God, "Was it not I who commanded the people to be numbered? I am he who have sinned and done evil indeed; but as for these sheep, what have they done? let thy hand, I pray thee, O Jehovah my God, be on me, and on my father's house; but not on thy people, so that they should be smitten." 18 Then the angel of Jehovah commanded Gad to say to David, that David should go up, and set up an altar to Jehovah, in the threshing-floor 19 of Araunah, the Jebusite. And David went up at the word of God, which he had spoken in the tioned in the other place; the posture of the destroying angel, and the humiliation of David and the elders.

18. Araunah. I have followed the reading of the parallel place in this place, because, from the versions, I think it nearer the genuine reading than the present text. I conjecture that it should be אררן and that a letter has been added, or rather one mistaken for another. At any rate, uniformity is preferable.

20. The king. I adopt this reading, with Houbigant and others, as name of Jehovah. Araunah then turning, 20 saw the 'king'; and his four sons, who were with him, hid themselves. Araunah was threshing wheat. And as David came towards Arau- 21

 nah, he looked and saw David; and went out of the threshing-floor, and made obeisance to David, with his face to the ground. Then David 22 said to Araunah, "Grant me the place of this threshing-floor; for the full price thou shalt grant it me, that I may build an altar on it to Jehovah, that the pestilence among the people may be stayed. And Araunah said to David, 23
 "Take thou it; and let my lord the king do what is good in his eyes. See, I give to thee the oxen for burnt-offerings, and the threshing-instruments for wood, and the wheat for the wheaten-offering; I give them all." And king 34 David said to Araunah, "Nay; but I will verily buy it for the full price: for I will not take that which is thine for Jehovah, nor offer burnt-offerings without cost." So David gave to 25 Araunah for the place six hundred shekels of gold, full weight. And David built there an 26 altar to Jehovah, and offered burnt-offerings, and feast-offerings, and called upon Jehovah;
 and he answered him from heaven, by fire upon the altar of burnt-offering. And Jehovah 27 commanded the angel; and he put up his sword again into its sheath.

When David saw that Jehovah had answered 28
 him in the threshing-floor of Araunah, the Jebusite, from that time he sacrificed there. For 29
 the tabernacle of Jehovah, which Moses made in the wilderness, and the altar of burnt-offering,
 were at that season in the high-place at Gibeon. But David could not go before it to 30 inquire of God: for he was afraid on account of the sword of the angel of Jehovah. David 1

more appropriate, and as better agreeing with the other account. The approach of the king and his attendants, might lead the sons of Araunah to hide themselves, as being unfit to appear before them; but how they could hide themselves from the angel I do not perceive.

B. C. 1017. David maketh preparations for the building of the temple.

- 2 DAVID now gave orders to collect the strangers who were in the land of Israel; and he sent masons, to hew wrought stones for building the 3 house of God. And David prepared iron in abundance, for the door-nails of the gates, and for the joinings; and brass in abundance, with-4 out weight; And cedar-trees in abundance; for the Zidonians and Tyrians brought to 5 David cedar-trees in abundance. For David said, "Solomon, my son, is young and tender, and the house to be builded for Jehovah, must, for its height, grandeur, and beauty, be celebrated through all nations. I will, therefore, make preparation for it." So David prepared abundantly before his death.
6 He then called for Solomon, his son, and charged him to build a house for Jehovah, the 7 God of Israel. And David said to Solomon, "My son, as for me, it was my purpose to build
8 a house to the name of Jehovah, my God: But the word of Jehovah came to me, saying, "Thou hast shed much blood, and hast made great wars: thou shalt not build a house to my name, because thou hast shed much blood, in my sight, upon the earth. Behold, a son shall be born to thee, who shall be a man of rest; for I will give him rest from all his surrounding enemies: for his name shall be Solomon, [PEACEABLE,] and I will give peace and quietness to Israel in his days. He shall build a house to my name; 10 and he shall be my son, and I will be his father, and I will for ever establish the throne of his kingdom over Israel." Now, my son, Jehovah 11 will be with thee, and thou shalt prosper; and build the house of Jehovah, thy God, as he hath said of thee. Only may Jehovah give thee 12 wisdom and prudence, that thou mayest preside over Israel, so as to keep the law of Jehovah, thy God. Then shalt thou prosper, if thou take 13 heed to fulfil the statutes and judgments which Jehovah gave in charge to Moses, for Israel: be strong, and of good courage; fear not, nor be dismayed. Now, behold, with care I have pre- 14 pared for the house of Jehovah, a hundred thousand talents of gold, and a thousand thousand talents of silver; and of brass and iron without weight; for it is in abundance: timber also and stone have I prepared; and thou mayest add thereto. Workmen also thou hast with thee in 15 abundance; hewers and workers of stone and timber; and skilful men for every kind of work. Having gold, and silver, and brass, and iron, 16 beyond computation, arise and work; and may Jehovah be with thee."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. The history before us, proves, that however eminent a man may be for piety, he is still liable to offend, and especially, in a state of prosperity. David's pride and ambition led him to adopt the measure suggested by some one, who might pretend to be a friend, but who, in reality, was an adversary both to him and to Israel. What need there is to keep our hearts with all diligence, and to maintain a holy watchfulness over our own spirit. When we are off our guard, the least hint may lead us astray; and bad advice, adopted, may plunge us into inextricable difficulties. "Watch and pray," says our Lord, "that ye enter not into temptation."

2. In the penitent conduct of David, we are taught in what manner to seek for God's favour, when we have incurred guilt, and fallen under his displeasure. David takes the shame and the demerit on himself. "I have offended, I have sinned; but these sheep, what have they done? Let thine hand be on me." Thus prayed David; and thus the blessed Jesus, though innocent, exposed himself to the stroke of God's justice, for the safety of the people. He saw them perishing by their sin, and, moved with compassion, he came to turn away wrath, and to save. O let us look to him, who gave himself for us, and in whom we may find acceptance.

him and acceptance of his offering, hallowed the place.

CHAP. XXII. 5. The house, &c. Geddes has justly observed, that it is not easy to render the original literally: nor am I sure that it may not have another meaning; namely, must magnify his excellence, his name, and his glory, among all, &c.

I have followed the sense which Michaelis attributes here and Psalm cxxxii. 1.; for neither poverty nor affliction seems at all proper, as what follows testifies.—A hundred thousand talents, &c. Josephus has ten thousand talents of gold and a hundred of silver, which appears much more probable than the numbers of the text. The error might arise by some scribe adding a stroke to a letter, which had the same effect as adding a cypher in our mode of enumeration. Even this amounts, too—

17 David also commanded all the princes of Is-18 rael to help Solomon, his son, saying, "Is not hallowed to God, may be brought into the house that is to be built to the name of Jehovah."

CHAPTER XXIII.

B. C. 1015. Solomon made king; number and distribution of the Levites.

1 DAVID being now old and full of days, made 2 Solomon, his son, king over Israel. And he assembled all the princes of Israel, with the 3 priests and the Levites. Now the Levites were numbered from the age of thirty years and upward; and their number by their polls, man 4 by man, was thirty-eight thousand. "Of which," said David, "let twenty-four thousand be set over the work of the house of Jehovah; and let six thousand be officers and 5 judges. And let four thousand be door-keepers; and let four thousand praise Jehovah, with the instruments which I have made for that purpose."
 6 David now divided them into courses, according to the sons of Levi; Gershon, Kohath, and Merari. Of the Gershonites were Laadan, and 7

 Shimei. The sons of 'Libni," (the chief,) were 8 Jehiel, and Zetham, and Joel, three. * These 9 were the paternal chiefs of 'Libni." And the 10 sons of Shimei were Jahath, Ziza, and Jeush, and Beriah. These four were the sons of Shimei.
 And Jahath was the chief, and Zizah the se- 11
 cond: but Jeush and Beriah had not many sons; they therefore were reckoned but one paternal house.

The sons of Kohath were Amram, Izhar, 12
 Hebron, and Uzziel, four. The sons of Amram 13 were Aaron and Moses: and Aaron was separated, that he should sanctify the most holy things, he and his sons for ever, to burn incense before Jehovah, to minister unto him, and to bless, in his name, for ever. Now, as to Moses, 14
 the man of God, his sons were reckoned in the tribe of Levi. The sons of Moses were Gershon, 15 and Eliezer. Of the sons of Gershon, Shebuel 16 was the chief. And of the sons of Eliezer were 17 Rehabiah, the chief. And Eliezer had no other sons; but the sons of Rehabiah were very many.
 Of the sons of Izhar, Shelomith was the chief. 18
 Of the sons of Hebron, Jeriah was the chief, 19
 Amariah, the second, Jahaziel, the third, and Jekameam, the fourth. Of the sons of Uzziel, 20
 Micah was the chief, and Jesiah, the second.

The sons of Merari were Mahli, and Mushi. 21
 The sons of Mahli; Eleazar, and Kish. And 22
 Eleazar died, and had no sons, but daughters;

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXII. 1. David was not permitted to build the temple, because he had been engaged in great wars, probably, to intimate, that God's church must not be built and established by the sword, but by his spirit and his word. Human power and valour can do nothing in erecting the spiritual temple. The kingdom of God cannot be set up in the heart, or in the world, by force of arms; as it consists in righteousness, peace, and joy, it must owe its origin to the God of righteousness, peace, and joy. He must build this temple, and receive the glory.

2. We may learn how needful it is for God's servants to do what they can for his cause, and for the good of the coming generation.

 David made great preparations, and gave his son the most suitable advice. Old age had now paralyzed his arm, so that he could no longer wield the sword, but devotion warmed his heart, and led him to consecrate his wealth and his mind to the service of God. How desirable it is to spend our last days in rehearsing what God has done for us; in the exercise of faith in his promises, and in exhorting those around us, and especially our children, to walk in the ways of the Lord, that they may prosper. "Blessed is that servant, who, when his Lord cometh, is found so doing."

knowing the talent at three thousand shekels, to more than fifty millions of our money. Some consider that the term (ככ) as denoting only a piece of gold, and thus remove the objection to the sum specified. There is so much uncertainty in respect to the text, and to the meaning of the word rendered talent, that no objection can be made against the account, with any shadow of reason.

CHAP. XXIII. 4, 5. Houbigant observes, that something has been dropped from the text; and as the conclusion of the 5th verse proves that it is David who speaks, the words added are obviously necessary.

9. The words omitted have, doubtless, been inserted by mistake, as they are irreconcilable with the concluding part of the verse. For how could the sons of Shimei be the paternal chiefs of Libni? Besides, the sons and their brethren the sons of Kish took them. The sons of Mushi were Mahli, and Eder, and Jeremoth, three.

24 These were the sons of Levi, according to their paternal houses; paternal chiefs, as they were numbered by their polls, from the age of twenty years and upwards; who were to do the work of the ministry, in the house of Jehovah. For David said, "Jehovah, the God of Israel, hath given rest to his people, and will dwell in Jerusalem for ever: So that the Levites shall no more have to carry about the tabernacle, nor any of the utensils for its service. Therefore, by the last orders of David, the Levites were numbered from twenty years old and above; Because their office was to wait on the sons of Aaron for the service of the house of Jehovah; to be over the courts and chambers of the temple; and to keep clean the whole sanctuary; and to do other work of the ministry of the house of God; To arrange the presence-bread, and to provide fine flour for the wheaten-offering, and for the unleavened cakes, whether done on a fire-plate, or in a frying-pan; and to see that all were of due size and measure. And to stand every morning and evening, to thank and to praise Jehovah. And to offer continually, before Jehovah, all the burnt-sacrifices to Jehovah, on the sabbaths, on the new moons, and on the stated feasts, by number, according to the rite prescribed to them. And that they should keep the charge of the congregation-tabernacle, and the charge of the sanctuary, and the charge of the sons of Aaron their brethren, in the service of the house of Jehovah.

CHAPTER XXIV.

B. C. 1015. Distribution, by lot, of the sons of Aaron into twenty-four classes; other Levites classed.

Now these are the divisions of the sons of Aaron. The sons of Aaron were Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. But Nadab and Abihu died before their father, and had no children: therefore, Eleazar, and Ithamar, executed the priest's office. And David distributed them both, Zadok of the sons of Eleazar, and Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech, of the sons of Ithamar, according to their offices in their service. But as more chief men were found of the sons of Eleazar than of the sons of Ithamar, they were thus divided. Of the sons of Eleazar there were sixteen paternal chiefs; and of the sons of Ithamar, eight paternal chiefs. Thus 5 were they divided by lot, one with another; for the chiefs of the sanctuary, and chiefs of the judges, were of the sons of Eleazar, and of the sons of Ithamar. And Shemaiah, the son of 6 Nethaneel, the scribe, one of the Levites, wrote

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIII. 1. The numerous services of the tabernacle and temple required a number of persons to perform them. The daily offerings employed many priests and Levites; and on the sabbaths, new moons, and the stated feasts, what numbers were required to kill the victims, sprinkle the blood, prepare and offer the wheaten-offerings, &c.! Some regulations were necessary, that both priests and Levites might know when to attend, and what they had to do. Thus we are admonished to do all things relating to the worship of God, decently and in order, as tending to stop the mouth of the wicked, and to promote the edification of the serious.

of Shimei are mentioned in the next verse. Some would make the Shimei mentioned in the 10th verse a different person from him mentioned in this and the preceding; but I think the text does not warrant this opinion.

24. From twenty years, &c. In a former muster he had made thirty years the period: but reflecting that the temple to be built, with its courts, chambers, and purlieus, would require a greater number of attendants, he by a posterior regulation fixed the period at twenty. In the time of Moses it was fixed at twenty-five; or, as others think, at thirty.

CHAP. XXIV. 5. Chiefs of the judges. So Grotius and others render. The chiefs of the two families were the administrators of religion and

2. Various services were appointed to the Levites. Some were to keep clean the courts, and other apartments; some to prepare and have ready what might be wanted. Some were employed in praising God, accompanied with instruments of music; and others were the door-keepers. We ought to esteem any post in God's house honourable. "I had rather be a door-keeper," said the devout Psalmist, "in the house of my God, than dwell in the tents of wickedness." How amiable are his tabernacles, to an enlightened mind! May we love the habitation of his glory, and the place where his honour dwelleth.

of justice. To understand this, it must be remarked, that, although the high-priest had, Num. xxv. 12. been settled in the line of Eleazar and in the person of Phinehas, this prerogative was lost at the death of Eli; from which period, we find the progeny of Ithamar share equally in that dignity with the progeny of Eleazar. Hence David, to prevent jealousy between the two families, makes this distribution by lot.

6. I have adopted the text as corrected by Geddes, who considers that the names of Eleazar and Ithamar have been transposed. The 4th verse supports this opinion. Houbigant and Dathe suppose that there is no reference to the lots, but simply to his writing of the names; but the context them before the king, and the princes, and Zadok, the priest, and Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech, and the other paternal chiefs of the priests and Levites: one paternal chief being 7 taken for Ithamar, and two for Eleazar. Now the first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the second 8 to Jedaiah; The third to Harim; the fourth 9 to Seorim; The fifth to Malchijah; the sixth 10 to Mijamin; The seventh to Hakkoz; the 11 eighth to Abijah; The ninth to Jeshuah; the 12 tenth to Shecaniah; The eleventh to Eliashib; 13 the twelfth to Jakim; The thirteenth to Hup- 14 pah; the fourteenth to Jeshebeab; The fif- 15 teenth to Bilgah; the sixteenth to Immer; 16 The seventeenth to Hezir; the eighteenth to 17 Aphses; The nineteenth to Pethahiah; the 18 twentieth to Jehezkel; The one and twentieth 19 to Jachin; the two and twentieth to Gamul; 20 The three and twentieth to Delaiah; the four 21 and twentieth to Maaziah. These were the 22 courses of ministry, in their attendance at the house of Jehovah, according to their rites, by Aaron their fore-father, as Jehovah, the God of Israel, had commanded him.

20 And the rest of the sons of Levi were these: Of the sons of Amram, in the line of Gershon, was Shubuel: of the sons of Shubuel, Jehdeiah. 21 In the line of Ithamar, was Rehabiah: of the 22 sons of Rehabiah, the chief was Isshiah. Of the REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. I. We here see how one family may increase more than another; according to the good pleasure of God. The fruit of the womb is his gift. From some he withholds this blessing, so that they leave no son or heir behind them; while others have large and prosperous families, and transmit their name and wealth down through many generations. Let us learn to be content with the wise and sovereign appointment of heaven in this, and in other respects, and devoutly acknowledge that God is good when he gives, and not less so when he denies.

2. The lot causes contentions to cease, and separateth between the mighty. This method, adopted in the division of the land of Cana-

in my opinion, establishes the fact, that there is a reference to the lots. If we read in the latter clause with the Septuagint, and probably the Syriac, אחד אחד for אחד אחד; and retaining אחד in the first clause, with the other versions. I adopt the following text, (אחד אחד ואחד אחד לאלעזר) "One being taken for Ithamar, and one, or two, for Eleazar."

26—29. The names here are evidently confused. The order which I have adopted is at least consistent, and connected; and supported by the

Of the sons of 24 Uzziel, Michah: of the sons of Michah, Shamir. The brother of Michah, was Isshiah; of 25 the sons of Isshiah, Zechariah. The sons of 26 Merari were Mahli and Mushi. From Mahli 28 sprang Eliezer, who had no sons; And Kish: 29 and the son of Kish was Jerameel, whose son was Jaaziah. The sons of Merari, by his son 27 Jaaziah, were Shoham, and Zaccur, and Itri. The sons also of Mushi, Mahli, and Eder, and 30 Jerimoth. These were the sons of the Levites according to their paternal houses. These also 31 cast lots in like manner as their brethren, the sons of Aaron, in the presence of David, the king, and of Zadok, and of Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech, and the other paternal chiefs of the priests and Levites: the paternal chiefs and their inferior brethren in like manner.

B. C. 1015. The distribution of the singers into twenty-four classes.

No partiality was shown, no undue preference given to one family, or to the branches of the family. The lot was cast into the urn, and the disposal of it was of the Lord. They are, therefore, called to attend on their service, in the order, which God, by the lot, determined. Whatever station we may occupy in society, or in the church, let us aim to discharge the duties of it in the order in which they arise, and whatever our calling may be, endeavour to adorn the doctrines of God our saviour. CHAP. XXV. 1. Sacred order. The word (צבא) is applied to the sacred order, Num. iv. 3. and it seems more congruous to suppose that David and the chiefs of the priests and the Levites, should select and appoint singers for the temple service, than that military commanders should do

2 employed was their service. The sons of Asaph were Zaccur, and Joseph, and Nethaniah, and Asarelah. These sons of Asaph attended him when he sung under the direction of the king.

3 The sons of Jeduthun were Gedaliah, and Zeri, and ^aShimei, and Jeshaiiah, Hashabiah, and Mattithiah, six; these attended their father Jeduthun, when he sung with a harp, giving

4 thanks and praise to Jehovah. The sons of Heman were Bukkiah, Mattaniah, Uzziel, Shebuel, and Jerimoth, Hananiah, Hanani, Eliathah, Giddalti, and Romamti-ezer, Joshbekash, Mallothi, Hothir, and Mahazioth: All these were the sons of Heman, the king's seer, in divine matters. For, to exalt his horn, God gave to

6 Heman fourteen sons and three daughters. All these attended their respective fathers for singing in the house of Jehovah; with cymbals, psalteries, and harps, for the service of the house of God, under the direction of the king,

7 Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman. And their number, with their brethren, who were taught the songs of Jehovah, and all skilful singers, was two hundred and eighty-eight.

8 And they cast lots for their respective courses, the small as well as the great, the teacher

9 as well as the scholar. Now the first lot came out for Joseph, the son of Asaph; who with his brethren, the sons of Joseph, were twelve.

The second to Gedaliah, who, with his sons and 10 his brethren, were twelve: The third to Zaccur; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were

11 twelve: The fourth to Izri; who, with his

12 sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The fifth to Nethaniah; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The sixth to Bukkiah; 13 who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The seventh to Jesharelah; who, 14 with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The eighth to Jeshaiiah; who, with his sons, and 15 his brethren, were twelve: The ninth to 16 Mattaniah; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The tenth to Shimei; who, 17 with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The eleventh to Azareel; who, with his sons, 18 and his brethren, were twelve: The twelfth 19 to Hashabiah; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The thirteenth to Shubael; 20 who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The fourteenth to Mattithiah; who, 21 with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The fifteenth to Jeremoth; who, with his sons, 22 and his brethren, were twelve: The sixteenth 23 to Hananiah; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The seventeenth to Joshbe- 24 kashah; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The eighteenth to Hanani; who, 25 with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The nineteenth to Mallothi; who, with his sons 26 and his brethren, were twelve: The twentieth 27 to Eliathah; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The one and twentieth to 28 Hothir; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The two and twentieth to Gid- 29 dalti; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The three and twentieth to Ma- 30 hazioth; who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve: The four and twentieth to Ro- 31 mamti-ezer, who, with his sons, and his brethren, were twelve.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXV. 1. There are no arts more pleasing to a cultivated mind than poetry and music; and we find them both, in the days of David, consecrated to the divine glory. The prophets composed the sacred songs of Zion, and they were sung by full bands of the Levites. The leaders in this part of the temple service were men of piety, and some of the psalms were, probably, composed by them. Heman was the king's seer, in sacred matters; and the king himself consecrated both his talent for poetry and music to God. How have these noble arts been abused! The beauties and flowers of poetry have been lavished in the praise of vice; and all the charms of melody prostituted as incentives to the practice of it. When they are thus applied, thus perverted, let us detest them.

B. C. 1015. The distribution of the gate-keepers; the other offices of the Levites.

- 1 CONCERNING the divisions of the gate-keepers: Of the Korahites was Meshelemiah, the son of
- 2 Korah, of the sons of 'Ebiasaph'. And the sons of Meshelemiah were Zechariah, the first-born; Jediael, the second; Zebadiah, the third;
- 3 Jathniel, the fourth; Elam, the fifth; Jehohanan, the sixth; Elioenai, the seventh.
- 4 Next were the sons of Obed-edom, Shemaiah, the first-born; Jehozabad, the second; Joah, the third; and Sacar, the fourth; and Nethaneel,
- 5 the fifth; Ammiel, the sixth; Issachar, the seventh; Peulthai, the eighth: for God had
- 6 blessed him. Also to Shemaiah, his son, were sons born, who ruled in their paternal house:
- 7 for they were men of valour. The sons of Shemaiah were Othni, and Rephael, and Obed, Elzabad, whose brethren Elihu, and Semachiah
- 8 were valiant men. All these were the sons of Obed-edom: so Obed-edom had with these, their sons, and their brethren, sixty-two valiant
- 9 men, able for the service: But Meshelemiah had of sons and brethren, only eighteen valiant men.
- 10 Next was Hosah, of the children of Merari, whose sons were Simri, the chief, (for although he was not the first-born, yet his father made
- 11 him the chief;) Hilkiyah, the second; Tebaliah,

the third; Zechariah, the fourth: all the sons and brethren of Hosah were thirteen. Among 12 these chief men were the divisions of the gate-keepers, to minister in their respective wards, at the house of Jehovah. And they cast lots, 13 the small as well as the great, according to their paternal houses, for every gate. And the lot 14 for the east-gate fell to Shelemiah; and for Zechariah, his son, a wise counsellor, they cast lots; and his lot came out for the north-gate. To Obed-edom for the south-gate; and to his 15 sons the upper store-rooms. To Hosah came 16 out the west-gate, with the gate of ejection, by the raised causeway; ward against ward. At the east-gate, were daily posted six Levites; 17 at the north, four; at the south, four; and at the store-rooms, two; and two at the armoury; At the west, four at the causeway; and two at 18 the armoury. These are the divisions of the 19 gate-keepers among the sons of Korah, and among the sons of Merari.

And their brother Levites, who were over the 20 treasures of the house of God, and over the treasures of the dedicated things, were The sons 21 of 'Libni', the Gershonite; and the paternal chief sprung from 'Libni', the Gershonite, was Jehieli. pensation was only a shadow of a better. Its institutions were grand, and its services pompous, calculated for a carnal people. In this respect, it vied with, and even excelled, all the splendours of the heathen worship. However delightful this music might be, surely then God required it to be accompanied with the grateful emotions of the heart. We have the Apostle's direction badly divided. Some think that they signify to praise God with trumpets; but Houbigant justly observes, that there is no other place, where to raise or exalt the horn, has this signification. 16. The gate of ejection. Our Lightfoot maintains the gate to be signified which led from the temple to the royal palace. I have followed Houbigant and others, who from the usual sense of the word, (שַׁלַּח,) suppose the gate meant by which the filth of the temple was cast out.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVII. 1. The temple was designed to be most holy, and, like the tabernacle, to contain the ark of the covenant, and all the other instruments of sacred service. Suitable persons were posted at its several gates; men of valour, to prevent the intrusion of the profane, that the sanctuary might not be polluted. They kept guard by turns; and among them Obed-edom is mentioned, at whose house the ark had rested some months. He had received it into his own house with joy, guarded it with care, and is now called, together with his numerous family, to guard it continually. Thus promotion follows fidelity. He that faithfully improves his talents, shall receive a proportionate and honourable reward.

In the christian church, there are vast and inexhaustible treasures; not indeed arising from works of supererogation, and left to be sold to the highest bidder; but spiritual treasures, of wisdom and of grace, for all who apply. The unsearchable riches of Christ are made known to all those who are poor and ready to perish; and they who by faith embrace him, become rich and full, possessing much in hand but more in hope. 12 twenty-four thousand. The ninth captain, for the ninth month, was Abiezer, an Anathothite, of the progeny of Benjamin: and in his course 13 were twenty-four thousand. The tenth captain, for the tenth month, was Maharai, a Netophathite, of the progeny of Zarah: and in his course 14 were twenty-four thousand. The eleventh captain, for the eleventh month, was Benaiah, a Pirathonite, of the progeny of Ephraim: and 15 in his course were twenty-four thousand. The twelfth captain, for the twelfth month, was Heldai, a Netophathite, of the progeny of Othniel: and in his course were twenty-four thousand.

16 Also over the tribes of Israel, the following were rulers. The ruler of the Reubenites was Eliezer, the son of Zichri: of the Simeonites, 17 Shephatiah, the son of Maachah: Of the Levites, Hashabiah, the son of Kemuel: of the 18 Aaronites, Zadok: Of Judah, Eliab¹⁸, one of the brethren of David: of Issachar, Omri, the 19 son of Michael: Of Zebulun, Ishmaiah, the son of Obadiah: of Naphtali, Jerimoth, the son
20 of Azriel: Of the children of Ephraim, Hoshea, the son of Azaziah: of the half-tribe of Manasseh, on this side the Jordan, Joel, the son of 21 Pedaiah: Of the half-tribe of Manasseh in Gilead, Iddo, the son of Zechariah: of Benjamin, Jaasiel, the son of Abner: Of Dan, Azareel, the son of Jeroham. These were the chiefs of the tribes of Israel. But David took 23 not the number of the tribes from twenty years old and under; because Jehovah had said that he would increase Israel like to the stars of the heavens. Joab, the son of Zeruiah, began to 24 number, but he finished not, because the wrath of God, on this account, fell upon Israel; nor was the number put in the account of the chronicles of king David.

And over the king's treasures was Azmaveth, 25 the son of Adiel: and over the store-houses, in the fields, in the cities, and in the villages, and in the citadels, was Jonathan, the son of Uziah. And over those who wrought in the fields, for 26 tillage of the ground, was Ezri, the son of Chelub. And over the vine-yards was Shimei, a 27 Ramathite; but over the produce of the vine-yards, in the wine-cellars, was Zabdi, a Shiphmite. And over the olive-trees and the syca- 28 mores which were in the plains, was Baal-hanan, a Gederite: and over the oil-cellars was Joash. And over the herds that fed in Sharon, was 29 Shitrai, a Sharonite; and over the herds that were in the vallies was Shaphat, the son of Adlai. Over the camels was Obil, an Ish- 30 maelite; and over the asses was Jehdeiah, a Meronathite. And over the flocks was Jaziz, 31 a Hagerite. All these were rulers of the property which belonged to king David. Also 32 Jonathan, David's uncle, a wise counsellor, and scribe, and Jehiel, the son of Hachmoni, had the care of the king's sons. And Ahithophel 33 was the king's counsellor; and Hushai, the Archite, was the king's companion. And after 34 Ahithophel, Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, and Abiathar: and the general of the king's army was Joab.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVII. 1. The military establishment of David, and the regulations adopted, were such as to make him formidable abroad, and calculated to preserve tranquillity at home. Without the expense of a standing army, a vast force was constantly ready: a well trained militia, governed by their leading men. This formed the nation's best security. In like manner should the christian be always ready to face his spiritual enemies, and never think himself so safe as not to need to not to Benaiah. He is called a chief-priest, as being one of the paternal chiefs of the house of Aaron.

17. The Aaronites. These being of a different order, though sprung from Levi, they had a peculiar chief to preside over them.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

B. C. 1015. David's last exhortation to his son Solomon, and to the people.

- 1 Now David assembled at Jerusalem, all the chiefs of Israel, the chiefs of the tribes, and the chiefs of the divisions, who ministered to the king by courses, and the captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds; those also who had the care of all the king's property, and of his cattle, and of his sons; with the court-officers, and the worthies, and all the other men of 2 valour. Then David, the king, standing upon his feet, said, "Hear me, my brethren, and my people: I had purposed to build a house of rest for the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, even for the footstool of our God, and had made
3 preparations for the building: But God said to me, 'Thou shalt not build a house for my name, because thou hast been a man of war, and hast
4 shed blood.' Yet Jehovah, the God of Israel, hath chosen me before all the house of my father, to be king over Israel, for ever. For he hath chosen Judah to be the ruling-tribe; and of the house of Judah, the house of my father; so, among the sons of my father, he hath been
5 pleased to make me king over all Israel: And of all my sons, (for Jehovah hath given me many sons,) he hath chosen Solomon, my son, to sit upon the throne of Jehovah's kingdom,
6 over Israel. And he said unto me, 'Solomon, thy son, is he who shall build my house and my courts: for him I have chosen to be my son,
7 and I will be his father. Moreover, I will establish his kingdom for ever, if he be constant, as at this day, in doing my commandments and my judgments.' Now, therefore, in the sight

8 of all Israel, the congregation of Jehovah, and in the hearing of our God, I adjure you to study to keep all the commandments of Jehovah, your God: that ye may possess this good land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children after you for ever. And thou, Solomon, my 9 son, acknowledge the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart, and a willing mind: for Jehovah searcheth all hearts, and the whole frame of the thoughts he understandeth. If thou seek him, he will be found of thee; but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off for ever. Take heed now; for as Jehovah hath chosen 10 thee to build a house for his sanctuary, confidently undertake the work."

Then David gave to Solomon, his son, a plan
11 of the whole temple; of its porch, and its apartments, and its store-rooms, and its galleries, and its inner-rooms, and its most holy place; With 12 the plan of all that he had conceived in his mind, respecting the courts of the house of Jehovah, and of all the apartments around, of the treasures of the house of God, and of the treasures of the dedicated things; And an order respect-
13 ing the courses of the priests and the Levites, and the whole ministerial service of the house of Jehovah, and all the service-vessels in the house of Jehovah. He gave of gold, by weight, 14 for every service-utensil of gold; and of silver, by weight, for every service-utensil of silver;

alike hurtful to his subjects and to himself. The best laws, the wisest regulations, are to be carried into effect by human agency; and hence, what need there is that those who are employed as the agents of government, should do justly and love mercy! There is a kingdom, in which justice is administered impartially, mercy shown on repentance, and wise and good men only promoted to honour. This kingdom is not of this world, though set up in it; it is the spiritual kingdom of Jesus.

watch and guard against them. As a nation unprotected, without means of defence, must fall a prey to the first enemy that makes an attack, so a man, who keeps no guard upon himself, will fall a victim to the first temptation which besets him.

2. From the number of the officers and men employed in the affairs of the government, it is easy to infer how difficult it is to govern equitably and wisely. A king ought to have wise, diligent, and faithful advisers; or else he will undesignedly adopt measures

CHAP. XXVIII. 1. Worthies, and all the, &c. We are told, 1 King. i. that David was ill, when Solomon was made king in his stead; but from this account, it appears that he had so far recovered as to be present, and to address a vast assembly, called for the purpose of recognising Solomon as his successor.

4. King over Israel. It was proper to specify this, to show that there was nothing of hereditary right in this case. Judah was not the eldest son;

Jesse was not the most considerable family in it; David was the youngest son of this family; and Solomon one of his youngest.

8—10. This address to the people and to Solomon, is forcible, and becoming the wisdom and the experience of the aged monarch.

12. Conceived in his mind. So all our old translators understand the text. Some modern interpreters apply this to the Holy Spirit, but, I think, improperly.

- 15 for all service-utensils of every kind. Also for the golden chandeliers, and their golden lamps, a certain weight of gold for each chandelier and its lamps; and, for the silver chandeliers, a certain weight of silver for each chandelier and its lamps; according to the use of each chandelier. And he gave a certain weight of gold, for the presence-bread tables, for each table; and of silver, for the tables of silver: Also pure gold for the forks, and the sprinkling-basons, and the cups: and for every bason-cover of gold, a certain weight; and for every bason-cover of silver, a certain weight: And for the incense-altar, refined gold by weight; and gold, according to the pattern, for the chariot of the cherubs, which had their "wings" expanded, so that they might cover the ark of the covenant of Jehovah. David, through the assistance of Jehovah, who gave to him wisdom, left the whole in writing, the whole plan of these works.
- 20 And David said to Solomon, his son, "Be strong, and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed: for God Jehovah, my God, will be with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished the whole work for the service of the house of Jehovah. And, behold, the courses of the priests and the Levites, are with thee for all the service of the house of God: and for all kinds of workmanship, for every sort of service; every willing, skilful man will be with thee. The chiefs also, and all the people, are wholly at thy command."
- 1 Then David, the king, said to the whole congregation, "Solomon, my son, whom alone God hath chosen, is yet young and tender, and the work is great: for the palace is not for man, but for God Jehovah. Now I have prepared, 2 according to my utmost ability, for the house of my God, gold for the utensils of gold, and silver for those of silver, and brass for those of brass, and iron for those of iron, and wood for those of wood; onyx, and other stones for setting, glistening stones, and of divers colours, and all sorts of precious stones, and marble stones in abundance. Moreover, from my affection for 3 the house of my God, I have a private property of gold and silver, which I give to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house; Three thousand 4 talents of gold, of the gold of Ophir, and seven thousand talents of fine silver, to overlay the walls of the house. The gold for utensils of gold, 5 and silver for those of silver; and for all sorts of work to be done by artists. And who then is willing to come, this day, with full hands to Jehovah?" The paternal chiefs, and the chiefs of 6 the tribes of Israel, and the captains of thousands and of hundreds, with the rulers of the king's work, offered willingly; And gave for the service of the house of God, of gold, five thousand talents and ten thousand darics; and of silver, ten thousand talents, and of brass, eighteen thousand talents; and one hundred thousand talents of iron. And they who had precious 8 stones, gave them to the treasure of the house of Jehovah, into the hand of Jehiel, the Gershonite. Then the people rejoiced, in that 9 these had so willingly offered; with perfect heart had they willingly offered to Jehovah: and David, the king, also rejoiced with great joy.

David then, before the whole congregation, 10

18. The chariot of the cherubs. It is difficult to understand what is meant by the chariot of the cherubs, unless it be intended to signify the supporter on which they rested or to which they were fixed; or perhaps, the chariot of the cherubs may apply only to the cherubs which were considered as the chariot of Jehovah, he residing between them. Hence the metaphor, of God riding on the cherubs. Comp. 2 King. xix. 16. Ps. lxxx. 1. and xviii. 10. with Ezek. x. 15.

19. Through the assistance, &c. Literally, 'through the hand of Jehovah,' &c. With Houbigant, I read why, and consider this not as the language of David, but of the historian. The latter speaks from the 11th verse to this inclusive. The text is difficult, but my version, I hope, is clear and faithful. With many, I think that this passage intimates that the temple was of divine original; and Villalpandus has proved that the Greeks derived their architecture from this as their model.

CHAP. XXIX. 1. Young and tender. That is, comparatively; for he was now married, as appears by comparing 2 Chron. ix. 30. and xii. 13.

10—19. It is no wonder that such a sight fired his muse. Indeed, it is natural to expect when David rejoiced, to find afterwards a psalm of praise. Accordingly, we have here one of his noblest, most devout, and spirited compositions, though he was now in the decline of life.

blessed Jehovah; and David said, "Blessed from eternity to eternity, be thou, O Jehovah, 11 the God of Israel, our father. Thine, O Jehovah, is the greatness, and power, and glory, and victory, and honour; for all that is in the heavens, or on the earth, is thine; thine is the sovereignty, O Jehovah, and thou art exalted as 12 head over all. From thee come riches and honour, and thou reignest over all; and in thy hand is power and might; and in thy hand it is to make great, and to give strength to all. 13 Now, therefore, our God, we thank thee and 14 praise thy glorious name. But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to present such a free-will offering as this? Surely from thee come all things, and of thine own 15 have we given to thee. For before thee we are but strangers, and sojourners, as all our fathers were: our days, on the earth, are like a shadow; and there is no hope of abiding. O Jehovah, our God, all this store which we have prepared to build for thee a house, for the honour of thy holy name, cometh from thy hand, 17 and is all thine own. I know also, my God, that thou triest the heart, and hast pleasure in uprightness. As for me, in the uprightness of my heart, I have willingly offered all these things: and now have I seen with joy thy people, who are present here, offer willingly unto 18 thee. O Jehovah, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, our fathers, keep this for ever in the frame of the thoughts of the heart of thy 19 people, and direct their heart unto thee: And give to Solomon, my son, a perfect heart, to keep thy commandments, thy testimonies, and thy statutes; and to undertake and build the palace, for which I have made provision." 20 David then said to the whole congregation,

"Now bless Jehovah, your God." And all the congregation blessed Jehovah, the God of their fathers, and bowed down their heads, and worshipped Jehovah, and made obeisance to the king. And on the morrow after that day, they 21 slaughtered sacrifices to Jehovah, and offered burnt-offerings to Jehovah; a thousand steers, a thousand rams, and a thousand lambs, with their drink-offerings; and other sacrifices in abundance for all Israel: And they ate and 22 drank before Jehovah, on that day, with great gladness. And they made Solomon, the son of David, king, a second time, and anointed him according to the will of Jehovah, to be chief ruler, and Zadok to be high-priest. Then Solomon sat on the throne^o of David, his father, and prospered; and all Israel obeyed him. And 24 all the chiefs, and the mighty men, and all the sons likewise of king David, submitted themselves to Solomon, the king. And Jehovah 25 magnified Solomon exceedingly in the sight of all Israel, and bestowed upon him such royal splendour, as had not been bestowed on any king before him in Israel.

Thus David, the son of Jesse, reigned over 26 all Israel; And the time that he reigned over 27 Israel, was forty years; seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty-three years reigned he in Jerusalem. And he died in a good old age, 28 full of days, riches, and honour: and Solomon, his son, reigned in his stead. Now the acts of 29 David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Samuel, the seer, and in the book of Nathan, the prophet, and in the book of Gad, the seer; With the whole his- 30 tory of his reign and his power, and of the times with respect to himself, and to Israel, and to all the kingdoms of the countries around.

and engagements we are under. What an encouraging motive is this, 'if you seek him, he will be found of you,' will furnish you with assistance, and communicate all necessary blessings; 'but if you forsake him', though you are ever so wise or great, though you are the sons of God's servants, and of prayers and promises, yet 'he will cast you off for ever.' Let young persons hear and fear; and serve the God of their fathers with a perfect heart.

2. It affords great satisfaction to a good man, when leaving the world, to see a spirit of piety prevailing. 'David, the king, rejoiced with great joy.' It revived his heart to see such a disposition in the people, and especially that his own example should have such a good effect. It gives joy to aged and dying saints to see those who are likely to survive them zealous for God and religion, and for the support of his house and worship. It gives them hopes that religion will be supported and maintained in the world; and that the rising generation will walk in God's ways, and transmit religion in its power and its purity to those who shall come after them.

3. All good dispositions and good deeds are to be ascribed to God. All our good things come from him; he gives us wealth and plenty; 'both riches and honour come of thee.' And if we have hearts to do good with it, that also should be ascribed to him, 'who worketh in us to will and to do.' Good deeds and generous actions, should not lead us to indulge pride and vanity, but all should be ascribed to God, the fountain of good. Let us not glory in riches, generosity, and strength, but 'glory only in the Lord.'

4. A serious consideration of the shortness and uncertainty of human life, should excite us to every good work. 'Our days are as a shadow; we are strangers;' have but a little time to serve God in; and should therefore embrace every opportunity, and every day be kind and bountiful to others. If any day hath passed without doing something for the glory of God and the good of others, we should say with a renowned monarch, 'I have lost a day;' for 'we know not what shall be on the morrow.' So vain and transient is life! 'The fashion of this world passeth away;' therefore, let us make a good use of it, by being 'ready to distribute and willing to communicate,' both in temporal and spiritual things. This will make our lives comfortable, and our deaths happy. We shall then 'give up our account with joy, and be rewarded at the resurrection of the just.'

II. CHRONICLES.

INTRODUCTION.

IN this second book of Chronicles, we have a more full account of the reign of Solomon, the building of the temple, &c.; and also of the revolt of the ten tribes under Rehoboam, his son and successor. The reign of pious Jehoshaphat, is also given more at large; and many particulars are noticed in the reigns of all the kings of Judah, which had not been mentioned in the preceding books. This book contains the history of the most interesting events, during a period of four hundred and sixteen years.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1015. Solomon's sacrifice and vision at Gibeon; his riches, &c.

- 1 AND Solomon, the son of David, was established over his kingdom; and Jehovah, his God, was with him, and magnified him exceedingly. Then Solomon spoke to all Israel, to the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and to the judges, and to every governor in all Israel, and to the paternal chiefs. And Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high-place which was at Gibeon; for there was the congregation-tabernacle of God, which Moses, the servant of Jehovah, had made in the wilderness: (But the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-Jearim, to the place which David had prepared for it; for he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem.) Moreover, the brazen altar, which Bezaleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur, had made, was there before the tabernacle of Jehovah: and Solomon and the congregation, sought unto it. For Solomon went up thither to the brazen altar before Jehovah, which was at the congregation-tabernacle, and offered a thousand burnt-offerings upon it.
- 2 In that night did God appear to Solomon, and said to him, "Ask what I shall give to thee."
- 3 And Solomon said to God, "Thou hast showed great mercy to David, my father, and hast made me to reign in his stead. Now, O God Jehovah, let thy promise to David, my father, be established: for thou hast made me king over a people numerous as the dust of the earth. Give to me, now, wisdom and knowledge, that I may properly conduct the affairs of this people: for who can judge this thy so great a people?" And God said to Solomon, "Because this is the desire of thy heart, and thou hast not asked riches, wealth, or honour, nor the life of thine enemies, nor yet hast asked long life; but hast asked for thyself wisdom and knowledge, that thou mayest judge my people, over whom I have made thee king; Wisdom and knowledge are granted unto thee: and I will give thee riches, and wealth, and honour, such as none of the kings before thee have had, nor after thee, shall any have such." Then Solomon returned from the high-place which was at Gibeon, to Jerusalem, from before the congregation-tabernacle, and reigned over Israel.

Solomon then collected chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he stationed in the chariot-cities, and with himself at Jerusalem. And the king made silver and gold at Jerusalem as plentiful as stones; and cedar-trees made he as abundant as sycamores which are in the vale. And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and from

CHAP. I. 5. Was there before, &c. I consider be as the adverb, and not as the verb. So the Septuagint, Vulgate, and pointed text. The Syriac and Arabic translators took it for the verb; but there is no antecedent to which it can properly refer.

fetched and brought up out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty: and so were brought by them horses for all the kings of the Hethites, and for the kings of Syria.

CHAPTER II.

B. C. 1015. Solomon's application to Hiram for timber to build the temple.

- 1 AND Solomon determined to build a house to the name of Jehovah, and a palace for himself.
- 2 And Solomon numbered seventy thousand men to carry burdens, and eighty thousand to hew stones in the mountain, and three thousand and
"three" hundred to oversee them.
- 3 And Solomon sent to "Hiram", the king of Tyre, saying, "As thou didst deal with David,
my father, and didst send him cedars to build for himself a house to dwell in, even so deal 4 with me. Behold, I am about to build a house to the name of Jehovah, my God, to be dedicated to him; for the burning before him aromatic incense, and for the continual presence-bread, and for the burnt-offerings, morning and evening, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons,
and on the solemn feasts of Jehovah, our God;
5 which are commanded for ever to Israel. And the house which I am going to build is great; 6 for great is our God above all gods. But who is able to build for him a house, seeing the heavens, yea, the highest heavens cannot contain him? who am I then, that I should build for him a house, save only to burn incense before him? Send me now, therefore, a man, wise to 7 work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and crimson, and blue, and who is skilful in engraving; that he may work with the wise men who are with me in Judah,

and in Jerusalem, whom David, my father, provided. Send me also cedar-trees, fir-trees, and 8
"almug"-trees, out of Lebanon: for I know that thy servants are skilful in cutting down timber in Lebanon; and, behold, my servants shall be with thy servants, Even to prepare 9
for me timber in abundance: for the house which I am about to build, is to be great and wonderful. And, behold, I will give to thy 10 servants, the fellers, who cut down the timber, twenty thousand cores of wheat, and twenty thousand cores of barley, and twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil."

Then Hiram, the king of Tyre, answered in 11 writing, which he sent to Solomon, "Because Jehovah hath loved his people, he hath made thee king over them." Hiram said moreover, 12
"Blessed be Jehovah, the God of Israel, who made the heavens and the earth; who hath given to David the king, a wise son, endued with prudence and understanding, who intends to build a house for Jehovah, and a palace for himself. I have now, therefore, sent a wise 13 and very knowing man, Hiram-abiu, The son 14 of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his

REFLECTION UPON CHAPTER I. The exhortation of David deeply impressed the mind of Solomon, and he sought the God of his fathers. After offering sacrifices, and revolving in his mind his elevation to the throne, and the arduous duties imposed on him, he fell asleep, and in a delightful vision enjoyed converse with God. His anxiety was relieved, and he was assured of future prosperity. Not intent on riches, but on wisdom, to govern the people, he received the former as well as the latter, in abundance.

wrong. All the versions read here as in 1 Kings.

6. Save only, &c. Such is the glory and majesty of God, that no temple can be built worthy of his regard; the only end of such a structure must be for us to meet there and perform the services which he has appointed.

instead of almug it is algum. Some of the mss always read as in 1 Kings, x.

Thus they whose aim is to glorify God, and to promote the interest of his church and people; who ask not for themselves great things, but who live above the world, and are men of faith and fervent devotion, often receive what they do not seek. When we are solicitous to enjoy the favour of God, and can leave all our worldly affairs in his hand, his blessing shall enrich us; and he will give us what is better than any other kind of gain, a heart to enjoy with thankfulness whatever he bestows.

have been durable.

10. Compare 1 Kings, v. 11.

the proper name of this ingenious artist, perhaps added to distinguish him from the king of Tyre. Comp. ch. iv, 16. where the name is full חִירָם אֲבִי, and father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone, and in timber, in purple, in blue, and in fine linen, and in crimson; also to engrave any sort of engraving; and to devise every kind of artificial work, which may be proposed to him; together with thine own wise men, and the wise 15 men of my lord, David, thy father. Now, therefore, the wheat, and the barley, the oil, and the wine, which my lord hath spoken of, let 16 him send to his servants: And we will cut down timber out of Lebanon, as much as thou shalt need: and we will bring it to thee in floats by sea to Joppa; and thou shalt carry it up to Jerusalem."

 17 And Solomon numbered all the strangers who were in the land of Israel, (after the numbering which David, his father, had made;) and they were found to be a hundred and fifty-three 18 thousand and six hundred. And of these he appointed seventy thousand to carry burdens, and eighty thousand hewers of stone in the mountain, and three thousand and "three" hundred overseers, to direct the people at work.

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 1012. The building of the temple, and its various instruments of service.

1 SOLOMON began to build the house of Jehovah, at Jerusalem, on mount Moriah, as had been shown to David, his father, in the place which David had prepared, in the threshing-floor
 2 of Araunah, the Jebusite. And he began to build on the second day of the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.

Now these are the dimensions which Solomon 3 observed in building the house of God. The length, by cubits, (after the former measure,) was sixty cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits. And the porch before, was in length, according 4 to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits; and its breadth was ten cubits," and its height was "twenty cubits": and he overlaid it within with pure gold. And the greater house he ceiled with 5 wood, which he overlaid with fine gold; on which were sculptured palms and chain-works. And he paved the house with beautiful precious 6 stones. He overlaid also the house, the beams, 7 the posts, and its walls, and its doors, with gold; and he carved on the walls, cherubs. "The gold was gold of Pharyaim". And he made the 8 sanctuary, the length of which was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits; and its breadth twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold, amounting to six hundred talents. And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of 9 gold. And he overlaid the upper-chamber with gold. And in the sanctuary he made two che- 10 rubs of sculptured work, and overlaid them with gold. And the wings of the cherubs were to- 11 gether twenty cubits long: one wing five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing five cubits, reaching to the wing of the other cherub. And one wing of the other cherub 12 was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house; and the other wing was five cubits, joining to

REFLECTION UPON CHAPTER II. 1. Great as were the preparations which David had made for the temple, much it seems was wanting; and Solomon sets about obtaining whatever might be necessary. By the friendship of Hiram, and the skill of his people, he was supplied both with proper materials and workmen; and in return he afforded the Tyrians ample supplies of wheat, and oil, the two chief necessities of life. Hiram's friendship to David appears, in his congratulations to Solomon; and in his joy, that God had placed such a wise prince on the throne of Israel.

CHAP. III. 3. After the former measure. From this we may conclude, that when the author wrote, another sort of cubit was in use, than what had been formerly. He most probably refers to the Mosaic cubit. Comp. Ezek. xl. 5. and xliii. 13.

Solomon had reason to say, "Thy friend, and thy father's friend, forsake thou not." We may need their help, advice, and counsel, and they will be ready to do us any service in their power. When engaged in a good work, in endeavouring to build the temple of Jehovah, we may confidently hope that he will so overrule events and dispose the hearts of men, as to forward our designs. In dependence on his grace, wisdom, and power, let us persevere and not grow weary in well-doing: let us continue to the end in the exercise of faith, love, and obedience.

4. Twenty cubits. The common reading is admitted to be wrong; the difference between the word cubits and hundred consists in the transposition of two letters. See note Hebrew Bible.

13 the wing of the other cherub. The wings of these cherubs spread themselves forth twenty cubits; and they stood on their feet, and their faces were inward. And he made the veil of blue, and purple, and scarlet cotton; on which were wrought cherubs.

15 Also he made before the house, two pillars of "eighteen" cubits high, and the capital which was on the top of each of them, was five cubits.

16 And he made chain-works, like those in the oracle, and put them on the tops of the pillars; and made a hundred pomegranates, and placed

17 them on the chain-work. And he reared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and called the name of that, on the right hand, Jachin, and the name of that on the left, Boaz.

1. He made also an altar of brass; twenty cubits its length, and twenty cubits its breadth, and ten cubits its height.

2 He made also a molten sea, the diameter of which, from brim to brim, was ten cubits; and five cubits its height; and a line of thirty cubits

3 compassed it around. And under its brim were "knops", which compassed it around: ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about. The knops were in two rows, cast when it was cast.

4 It stood upon twelve oxen; three looking towards the north, and three looking towards the west, and three looking towards the south, and three looking towards the east: and the sea was so placed above them, that all their hinder parts

5 were inward. And the thickness of it was a handbreadth, and its brim was wrought like the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies. It contained three thousand baths.

6 He made also ten lavers, and put five on the right hand, and five on the left, to wash in: such things as they offered for the burnt-offering, they washed in them; but the sea was for 7 the priests to wash in. And he made ten golden chandeliers, according to the usual form, and placed them in the temple, five on the right hand, and five on the left. He made also ten 8 tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the right side, and five on the left. And he made a hundred basons of gold. He made also 9 the court of the priests, and the great court for the people; and doors for the courts, and overlaid the doors with brass. And he placed the 10 sea on the right side, at the south-east corner. And Hiram made the pots, and the shovels, and the sprinkling-basons.

Thus Hiram finished the work, which he had 11 to make for king Solomon, for the house of God; The two pillars, and the bowls, and the 12 two capitals, which were on the top of the two pillars, and the two net-works, to cover the two bowls of the capitals, which were on the pillars; And four hundred pomegranates, on the two 13 net-works, two rows of pomegranates on each net-work, to cover the two bowls of the capitals which were upon the pillars. He made also 14 laver-stands; and lavers made he upon the stands. One sea, and twelve oxen under it. 15 The pans also, and the shovels, and the forks, 16 and all the other instruments, did Hiram-abiu make of polished brass, for king Solomon, for the house of Jehovah. In the plain of the 17 Jordan did the king cast them, in the clay ground between Succoth and "Zarthan". Thus Solomon made all these vessels in great 18 abundance: for the weight of the brass could not be found out.

And Solomon made all the vessels that were 19 for the house of God; the golden altar also, and the tables whereon the presence-bread was placed. Moreover, the chandeliers with their 20 lamps, that they should burn, according to custom, before the oracle, were of pure gold; The flowers also, and the lamps, and the snuf- 21 fers, were of the purest gold; And the knives 22 and the basons, and the spoons, and the censers were of pure gold. The hinges also, of the doors of the inner-house, or sanctuary, and the doors of the house of the temple, were of gold.

B. C. 1004. The ark carried into the oracle; God's glory fills the temple; Solomon's prayer and sacrifice, &c.

2 THEN Solomon assembled "all" the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, and the paternal chiefs of the children of Israel, unto Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, out of the city of David, which is 3 Zion. And all the chief men of Israel assembled themselves unto the king, at the feast of 4 booths, which was in the seventh month. And all the elders of Israel came; and "the priests" 5 and the Levites took up the ark. And they brought up the ark, and the congregation-tabernacle, and all the holy vessels which were in the tabernacle, these the priests and the 6 Levites brought up. Also king Solomon, and the whole congregation of Israel, who were assembled with him before the ark, were sacrificing sheep and oxen, which could not be told 7 or numbered for multitude. And the priests brought the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, into its place, to the oracle of the temple, into

REFLECTION UPON CHAPTER III. & IV. Again we are called to meditate on the temple constructed by Solomon, according to the plan of his pious father David. (1 Chron. xxviii. 2.) The most costly materials were used; every thing within the temple and sanctuary were either of pure gold or covered with gold; the most brilliant stones were employed, and the effect produced by the reflection from the light of the lamps it is not easy to conceive. Every part of this building was magnificent; yet how mean when

CHAP. V. 4. The priests, &c. I have joined the reading of the parallel plate to the text, because the next verse has both. Some think that the Levites first took up the ark and brought it to the temple, and the

the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubs: For the cherubs spread forth 8 their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubs covered both the ark and its staves. And though the staves were so long, that the 9 ends of the staves might be seen from the ark before the oracle; yet they could not be seen without: and there they are unto this day. There was nothing in the ark but the two tables 10 which Moses put therein at Horeb, when Jehovah made a covenant with the children of Israel, on their coming out of Egypt.

Now when the priests had come out of the 11 holy place: (for all the priests present were sanctified, nor did they then wait by course.) And the Levites, the singers, the whole choir 12 of Asaph, of Heman, of Jeduthun, with their sons and their brethren, arrayed in white muslin: having cymbals, and psalteries, and harps, stood at the east-end of the altar; and with them were a hundred and twenty priests, sounding trumpets. And the trumpeters and singers united 13 in one grand chorus, praising and thanking Jehovah; and when they raised their voice with the trumpets and cymbals, and instruments of music, and praised Jehovah, saying, "For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever;" then the house was filled with a cloud, the house of Jehovah; So that the priests could not stand 14 to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of Jehovah had filled the house of God.

Then spoke Solomon, "Jehovah said that he 1 would dwell in the dark cloud. But I have 2 built a house of abode for thee; a place for thy compared with the heavenly temple! That is a temple not made with the hands of man; nor liable to be destroyed by the ravages of time, or of war; it is 'eternal in the heavens.' And he said, "Blessed be Jehovah, the God of Israel, who hath, with his own hands, fulfilled what he promised, with his own mouth, to my father David, saying, 'From the day that I brought forth my people out of the land of Egypt, I have not chosen a city, out of any of the tribes of Israel, to build a house in, that my name might be there revered; nor had I chosen any man to be ruler over my people Israel; But I have now chosen Jerusalem, that my name may be there revered: and I have chosen David to be over my people Israel.' Now it was the purpose of David, my father, to build a house to the name of Jehovah, the God of Israel. But Jehovah said to David, my father, 'Inasmuch as it was thy purpose to build a house to my name, thou didst well to form such a purpose. Nevertheless, thou shalt not build the house; but thy son who shall come from thine own loins, he shall build the house to my name.' Now Jehovah hath performed his word which he spoke: for I am risen up in the stead of David, my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as Jehovah promised, and have built the house to the name of Jehovah, the God of Israel. And in it I have placed the ark, in which are the tables of the covenant of Jehovah, which he made with the children of Israel."

12 And "Solomon" stood before the altar of Jehovah, in the presence of the whole congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands. For Solomon had made a brazen scaffold, of five cubits long, and five cubits broad, and three cubits high, and had placed it in the midst of the court; and upon it he stood, and then kneeled down upon his knees before the whole congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands towards the heavens, And said, "O Jehovah, the God of Israel, there is no God like thee in the heavens "above", or on the earth "below"; who keepest covenant, and showest mercy to thy servants, who walk before thee with their whole hearts: 'Thou who hast kept with thy servant David, my father, what thou didst promise to him: and, with thine own mouth, thou spokest what thou hast fulfilled with thine own hand, as is this day seen. Now, therefore, O Jehovah, the God of Israel, keep with thy servant David, my father, what thou didst promise to him, saying, 'Some one of thy posterity shall not fail to sit, in my presence, on the throne of Israel; provided that thy children take heed to their way to walk in my law, as thou hast walked before me.' Now then, O Jehovah, the God of Israel, let thy word be verified; which thou spokest unto thy servant "David, my father". But will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? behold, the heavens, yea, the highest heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house which I have built! Yet have thou respect to the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O Jehovah, my God, to hearken unto the cry and the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee "this day": That thine eyes, night and day, may be open towards this house; towards the place of which thou hast said that thou wouldst put thy name there; to hearken to the prayer which thy servant prayeth towards this place. Hearken, therefore, to the supplications of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, which they shall make towards this place: hear thou them from the heavens, thine own dwelling-place, and when thou hearest, forgive."

"If a man offend his neighbour, and he be put to his oath, and the oath be made before thine altar, in this house; Then hear thou from the heavens, and do justice to thy servants, in requiting the wicked, by bringing his guilt upon his own head; and in justifying the righteous, by giving him according to his righteousness."

praying, fire came down from the heavens, and consumed the burnt-offering, and the sacrifices; 2 and the glory of Jehovah filled the house. And the priests could not enter into the house of Jehovah, because the glory of Jehovah had filled 3 his own house. And when all the children of Israel saw the fire come down, and the glory of Jehovah upon the house, they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and worshipped and praised Jehovah, saying, "For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever."

4 Then the king and all the people offered sacrifices before Jehovah. And king Solomon offered a sacrifice of twenty-two thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep; thus the king and all the people dedicated the house 6 of God. And the priests attended on their ministrations; and the Levites with instruments of sacred music, which David, the king, had made, and in hymns which David taught them to praise Jehovah; "because he is good"; because his mercy endureth for ever; and opposite to them, the priests sounded the trumpets, 7 and all Israel stood around. And Solomon had hallowed the middle of the court which was before the house of Jehovah: for there he offered burnt-offerings, and the fat of the feast-offerings, because the brazen altar, which Solomon had made, was not able to receive the burnt-offerings and the wheaten-offerings, and the fat "of the feast-offerings".

8 Also at the same time, Solomon and all Israel with him, a very great congregation, from the entrance of Hamath unto the river of Egypt, kept a feast of seven days, "and seven days, 9 fourteen days". For on the eighth day, they kept a solemn assembly: thus they kept the dedication of the altar seven days, and the feast 10 seven days. And on the three and twentieth day of the seventh month, he sent away the people to their own homes, joyful and glad in heart for "all the good which Jehovah had shown" to David, and to Solomon, and to Israel his people.

When Solomon had finished the house of Jehovah, and his own palace, and had succeeded in doing whatsoever came into his mind to do, in the house of Jehovah and in his own house; Jehovah appeared to Solomon by night, and 12 said to him, "I have heard thy prayer, and have chosen this place to myself, for a house of sacrifice. If I shut up the heavens that there be 13 no rain, or if I command the locusts to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among my people; If my people, who are called by my 14 name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from the heavens, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land. Now 15 mine eyes shall be open, and mine ears attentive to prayer made in this place. For now have I 16 chosen and hallowed this house, that my name may be there for ever: and mine eyes and my heart shall be there perpetually. And as for 17 thee, if thou wilt walk before me, as David, thy father, walked, and do according to all that I have commanded thee, and observe my statutes and my judgments; Then will I establish the 18 throne of thy kingdom, according as I have covenanted with David, thy father, saying, 'Some one of thy posterity shall not fail to be ruler in Israel.' But if ye turn away, and 19 forsake my statutes and my commandments, which I have set before you, and will go and serve other gods, and worship them; Then 20 will I pluck "you" up by the roots, out of the land which I have given "you"; and this house, which I have hallowed to my own name, will I cast out of my sight, and will make it a proverb and a by-word among all nations. And of those 10 chief officers of king Solomon, there were "five" hundred and fifty, who directed the people, who wrought at the work.

And Solomon brought up the daughter of 11 Pharaoh, out of the city of David, unto the house that he had built for her: for he said, "My wife shall not dwell in the house of David, king of Israel, because it had been hallowed by the ark of Jehovah coming there."

CHAP. VIII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS V. VI. & VII. 1. The prayer of Solomon is a model, in many respects, for our imitation. In the noble and elevated views of Jehovah with which he commences, we should learn to think of him, speak of him, and address him, as becomes his greatness, glory, and majesty. He is indeed, in his nature and perfections, exalted above all blessing and praise.—In the humility which he discovers, let us imitate him. However splendid the temple might be, he was conscious that it was unworthy the divine majesty. On the part of Jehovah, it must be unspeakable condescension to dwell there by the tokens of his presence. When we are in this frame of mind, we may hope that God will dwell with us; for, though he be high, yet hath he respect to the lowly; the man that trembles at his word, he will regard, and every one who humbleth himself, he will exalt.

2. We may learn, that God was, and still is, the hearer of prayer. When Solomon had finished, fire from the heavens, as in ancient times, testified his acceptance of the petitions addressed to him; and the appearance of his glory, most probably the cloud, in the temple, showed his regard to the place. He took possession of it as his own palace, among the children of Israel. Well might the people, when they saw these tokens of favour, bow to the ground and worship, and praise Jehovah, "For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever." How encouraging are the words of our Lord, "Ask, and it shall be given; seek, and ye shall find." Let my reader cultivate the spirit of prayer; and be assured, that God will not despise but answer thy requests.

3. From God's address to Solomon, we are taught, that no ritual observances, no pompous ceremonies, are regarded for their own sake; but as they lead to obedience. God declares that he would forsake the temple, and that it should be laid in ruins, if they revolted to idols; alas! this but too soon took place. Be it our care then, to place no reliance on our temples, our forms and ceremonies, but to consider the design of them, and steadily seek the accomplishment of it. They are the means, and the end is practical obedience. They are designed to cherish the love of God and our neighbour; to promote repentance, strengthen faith, and conform us to the divine image; and unless these ends be attained, they are useless.

And they departed not from the commandment of the king, to the priests and Levites, concerning any matter, or concerning the treasures. Now every thing had been appointed, as to the work of Solomon, in building the temple of Jehovah, from the day of its foundation until its entire completion.

much gold, and precious stones. And when she was introduced to Solomon, she conversed with him, concerning all things which were in her mind. And Solomon replied to all her questions: and there was nothing hidden from Solomon which he told her not. And when the queen of Sheba had seen the wisdom of Solomon, and the house which he had built, And the food of his table, and the station of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel; his cup-bearers also, and their apparel; and his burnt-offerings, which he offered in the house of Jehovah; there was no more spirit in her. And she said to the king, "True was the report which I heard in mine own land of thy acts, and of thy wisdom: Yet that report I believed not, until I came, and saw with mine own eyes: and, behold, the one half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told to me: thou exceedest the report that I heard. Happy thy men, and happy these thy servants, who stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom! Blessed be Jehovah, thy God, who was so pleased with thee as to set thee on his throne, to be king for Jehovah, thy God. Because thy God loved Israel, and will establish them for ever, he hath, therefore, made thee king over them, to execute judgment and justice." And she gave to the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices a very great store, and precious stones: there hath been no such spices as the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon. And king Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, besides what he gave to her of his royal Solomon hitherto adhered to the God of his father David; and he enjoyed unexampled prosperity. passage into the Red sea from Tyre, but by sailing round all Africa.

CHAP. IX. 12. He gave to her, &c. The common text here is obviously wrong. The historian is giving an account of what Solomon said to the Queen of Sheba, and he would not surely insult her by returning her own presents. The other place then should correct this. Houbigant would correct the present reading and render, 'besides what the king himself bounty". So she turned, and went away to her own land, she and her servants.

- 10 Now the servants also of Hiram, and the servants of Solomon, who brought gold from Ophir 11 brought almug-trees and precious stones. And the king made of the almug-trees, balustrades for the house of Jehovah, and for his own palace, and harps and psalteries for the singers: and there had been no such wood seen before, in the land of Judah.
- 13 Now the weight of gold which came to Solomon in one year, was six hundred and sixty-six 14 talents of gold; Besides that which the miners and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia, and governors of the country, brought 15 gold and silver to Solomon. And king Solomon made two hundred shields of all this beaten gold: each shield containing six hundred she-16 kels of beaten gold. And he made three hundred smaller shields of beaten gold: each shield containing three hundred shekels of beaten gold. And the king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon.
- 17 Moreover, the king made a great throne of 18 ivory, and overlaid it with pure gold. And the throne had six steps, with a footstool of gold, which were fastened to the throne, and arm-stays on each side of the sitting place, and two
19 lions standing by the arm-stays: And twelve lions, on the one side and on the other, stood upon the six steps. The like had not been made 20 in any kingdom. And all the drinking vessels of king Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold: none were of silver; it was not any thing accounted of in the days of Solomon. For the king's ships with the servants of Hiram, 21 went to Tarshish: once every three years the ships of Tarshish returned, bringing gold, and silver, and ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

Thus king Solomon exceeded all the kings of 22 the earth in riches and wisdom. And all the 23 kings of the earth sought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, which God had put into his mind. And they brought every man 24 his present, utensils of silver, and utensils of gold, and garments, and armour, and spices, and horses, and mules; a rate, year by year. And Solomon had four thousand stalls for hor- 25 ses and chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen; whom he stationed in the chariot-cities, and with himself at Jerusalem. And they brought 28 unto Solomon, horses out of Egypt, and out of all lands".

And he reigned over all the kings, from the 26 river, even to the land of the Philistines, and to the border of Egypt. And the king made sil- 27 ver as plentiful in Jerusalem as stones; and cedars made he as abundant as the sycamores which are in the vales.

Now the rest of the acts of Solomon, first and 29 last, are written in the book of Nathan, the prophet, and in the prophecy of Ahijah, the Shilonite, and in the visions of Iddo, the seer, concerning Jeroboam, the son of Nebat. And 30 Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel, forty years. And Solomon slept with his fa- 31 thers, and he was buried in the city of David, his father: and Rehoboam, his son, reigned in his stead.

REFLECTION UPON CHAPTER IX. I. What is the fame of wisdom, what the value of power, wealth, and glory, unless connected with that godliness which is profitable unto all things, which has the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come? There is no solid glory unless founded on piety towards God, and the constant exercise of the social and christian virtues. When great talents are given, and employed to bless others; when they are consecrated to the divine glory, in the promotion of human happiness, by luminous displays of truth, active benevolence, and a consistent, holy conduct is produced, cherished, and animated, by christian principles; then may we hope for an imperishable fame, if not among men, at least in the records of heaven. Let us then seek that wisdom which is from above, &c.

brought to her.' This is probably the true reading; but as it is conjectural I have preferred the other text.

24. Every man his present, &c. This shows us what tributary kings were accustomed to pay. Garments and Armour would now be thought strange: but the former were much regarded in the east, and the wardrobes of kings contained sufficient for all their court and thousands besides. Their loose flowing dress suited all persons. The author of Chronicles passes over Solomon's apostacy, and the troubles of his latter end. See 1 King. 11

CHAPTER X.

B. C. 975. Rehoboam refusing the old men's counsel, ten tribes revolt under Jeroboam.

- 1 AND Rehoboam went to Shechem: for to Shechem had all Israel come to make him king.
- 2 And when Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who was in Egypt, whither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king, heard of Solomon's death, Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.
- 3 And they sent and invited him to the assembly. So Jeroboam and all Israel came and spoke to
- 4 Rehoboam, saying, "Thy father made our yoke grievous: now, therefore, make thou somewhat lighter the grievous servitude of thy father, and his heavy yoke that he put upon us, and we
- 5 will serve thee." And he said unto them, "Come again to me after three days." And the people departed.
- 6 And king Rehoboam consulted with the old men who had stood before Solomon, his father, while he yet lived, saying, "How do ye advise
- 7 me to answer this people?" And they spoke to him, saying, "If thou be kind to this people, and please them, and speak to them good words, they will be thy servants for ever."
- 8 But he neglected the counsel which the old men gave him, and consulted with the young men who had grown up with him, and attended
- 9 on him. And he said unto them, "How do ye advise me to answer this people, who have spoken to me, saying, 'Make somewhat lighter
- 10 the yoke which thy father put upon us?'" And the young men who had grown up with him spoke to him, saying, "Thus shalt thou answer the people who spoke to thee, saying, 'Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it

CHAP. X.

REFLECTION UPON CHAPTER X. Solomon affectingly observes, that it is uncertain to a man whether he that follows him, who will enjoy the fruits of his labours, will be a wise man or a fool. The wisest of men cannot bequeath their wisdom as an inheritance to their posterity; but in providence, we frequently see, that as children do not inherit the talents, so they do not follow the ways of their parents. It is distressing to think, that the imprudence, weakness, and folly of Solomon's son, should have divided the kingdom! We however see somewhat lighter for us;' thus shalt thou say unto them, 'My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins. For whereas my father 11 put a heavy yoke upon you, I will make your yoke still heavier: my father chastised you with whips, but I *will chastise you" with scorpions." And Jeroboam and all the people came to 12 Rehoboam on the third day, as the king bade, saying, "Come again to me on the third day." And the king answered them roughly; and king 13 Rehoboam neglected the counsel of the old men; And answered them after the advice of 14 the young men, saying, "My father made your yoke heavy, but I will make it still heavier: my father chastised you with whips, but I *will chastise you" with scorpions." So the king 15 hearkened not to the people: for God Jehovah so overruled this affair, that he might perform his word which he spoke by Ahijah, the Shilomite, to Jeroboam, the son of Nebat.

So when all Israel saw that the king would 16 not hearken to them, the people answered the king, saying, "What portion have we in David? or what inheritance in the son of Jesse? every man to your own homes, O Israel: now, David, see to thine own house." So all Israel went to their own homes. But as for the children of 17 Israel who dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them. Then king Reho- 18 boam sent Adoram who was over the tribute; and the children of Israel stoned him with stones, that he died; while king Rehoboam with difficulty got into his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem. So Israel rebelled against the house of 19 David, and continue a distinct kingdom unto this day.

in this, the truth of what God said, both to David and to Solomon. They held the throne on condition of obedience to the divine law; and when they transgressed and turned to idols, they were exposed to the evils threatened. Solomon had turned aside in his old age; and it is remarkable, that he who had multiplied wives and concubines, should have left but one son, and he destitute of talents! Be it our care to cleave to God with full purpose of heart, that he may both bless us and our posterity, with prudence and steadfastness.

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 975. Rehoboam forbidden to fight against Israel; he fortifies various cities, &c.

- 1 AND when Rehoboam had come to Jerusalem, he assembled of the house of Judah and Benjamin, a hundred and eighty thousand chosen men, who were warriors, to fight against Israel, that he might bring back to himself the kingdom.
- 2 But the word of Jehovah came to Shemaiah, the man of God, saying, "Speak to Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and to all Israel, in Judah and Benjamin, saying,
- 4 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren: return every man to his own house; for this thing is done by me.'"
- And they obeyed the words of Jehovah, and returned from going against Jeroboam.
- 5 And Rehoboam dwelt in Jerusalem, and repaired the fenced cities in Judah. He repaired
- 7 Bethlehem, and Etam, and Tekoa, And Bethzur, and Shoco, and Adullam, And Gath, and
- 9 Mareshah, and Ziph, And Adoraim, and
- 10 Lachish, and Azekah, And Zorah, and Aijalon, and Hebron, fortified cities which are in
- 11 Judah and in Benjamin. And he strengthened the fortifications, and put captains in them, and
- 12 store of victuals, and of oil, and wine. And in each city he put shields and spears, and made them exceedingly strong: and he ruled over Judah and Benjamin.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XI. 1. The loss of power is sensibly felt, and how ready are men to regain by force what they have lost by imprudence. Rehoboam was now intent on war; he would go against those who had refused to submit to the tyranny he threatened to exercise. He is controlled in his purpose; and perhaps perceiving the impolicy of the measure, and the little possibility of success, he abandons the measure on the address of the prophet. Let those who are raised to power, employ it wisely and justly, lest in the vicissitudes

CHAP. XI. 5. Repaired the fenced, &c. The cities mentioned were not first built by Rehoboam; as is certain from the preceding history; but it is probable, that during the long and peaceable reign of Solomon, little attention had been paid to the walls, and that the king now found it necessary to repair and strengthen them.

possessions, and came to Judah and Jerusalem; because Jeroboam, and his sons, had rejected them from performing the priest's office to Jehovah; And had ordained for himself priests 15 for the high-places, and for the demons, and for the calves, which he had made. And he 16 sides them, such as set their hearts to seek Jehovah, the God of Israel, out of all the tribes of Israel, came to Jerusalem, to sacrifice to Jehovah, the God of their fathers. Thus they 17 strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and made Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, strong, for three years: for three years they walked in the way of David and Solomon.

And Rehoboam took to wife Mahalath, the 18 daughter of Jerimoth, the son of David, and Abihail, the daughter of Eliab, the son of Jesse; Who bare to him children; Jeush, and Shama- 19 riah, and Zaham. And after her he took Maa- 20 chah, the daughter of Absalom; who bare to him Abijah, and Attai, and Ziza, and Shelomith. And Rehoboam loved Maachah, the 21 daughter of Absalom, above all his wives and his concubines: (for he took eighteen wives, and sixty concubines: and begot twenty-eight sons, and sixty daughters.) And Rehoboam 22 made Abijah, the son of Maachah, the chief ruler among his brethren: for he intended to make him king. He, therefore, prudently, 23 disposed of all his other sons, throughout the whole country of Judah and Benjamin; in every fortified city: and he allowed them victuals in abundance, and 'procured for them wives'.

of providence, they should be deprived of it. Let parents and masters, blend mercy and kindness with authority, if they wish to retain it.

2. In the confusion arising from the secession of ten tribes from the house of David, it is pleasant to witness, in some, the influence of religious principles. The Levites left the cities allotted to them, and came to Jerusalem. Others, whose hearts were set to seek Jehovah, followed their example. Thus to preserve a good conscience, they sacrificed their property; they showed that they were not influenced by

CHAPTER XII.

B. C. 972. Rehoboam forsaking the law, is punished by Shishak; the time he reigned.

1 AND when Rehoboam had established the kingdom, and had strengthened himself, he, and all Israel with him, forsook the law of 2 Jehovah. And in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, Shishak, king of Egypt, came up against Jerusalem, because they had transgressed 3 against Jehovah, With twelve hundred chariots, and sixty thousand horsemen: and the people, who came with him out of Egypt, were without number; the Lubims, the Suk- 4 kiims, and the Cushites: And he took the fortified cities which belonged to Judah, and came to Jerusalem.

5 Then came Shemaiah, the prophet, to Rehoboam, and to the princes of Judah, who had assembled at Jerusalem, because of Shishak, and said unto them, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Ye have forsaken me; and I also leave you in the 6 hand of Shishak,' On this the chiefs of 'Judah' and the king humbled themselves; and they 7 said, "Jehovah is righteous." And when Jehovah saw that they humbled themselves, the word of Jehovah came to Shemaiah, saying, "They have humbled themselves; therefore I will not destroy them, but I will grant them some deliverance; and my wrath shall not be poured out upon Jerusalem by the hand of 8 Shishak. Nevertheless, they shall be his servants, that they may know my service, and the service of other kingdoms." So Shishak, king 9 of Egypt, came up against Jerusalem, and took away the treasures of the house of Jehovah, and the treasures of the king's house; he took all: he carried away also the shields of gold which king Solomon had made. Instead of which 10 king Rehoboam made shields of brass, and committed them to the hands of the chief of the guard, who kept the entrance of the palace. And when the king entered into the house of 11 Jehovah, the guard came and fetched them; and brought them again into the guard-chamber. And when he humbled himself, Jehovah 12 so turned from him his wrath, that he would not utterly destroy him; and even in Judah the state of things became better. And king Rehoboam was strengthened and reigned in 13 Jerusalem.

Rehoboam was "sixteen" years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which Jehovah had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah, an Ammonitess. And he did evil "in 14 the eyes of Jehovah", because his heart was not steadfast in seeking Jehovah.

Now the acts of Rehoboam, first and last, are 15 accurately written in the book of Shemaiah, the prophet, and of Iddo, the seer. And there was war continually between Rehoboam and Jeroboam. And Rehoboam slept with his fa- 16

He is said to be young, on his accession; and besides, if he had been forty-one, Solomon must have been married before his father's death, and married to an Ammonitess before he took Pharaoh's daughter, which is contrary to the narrative. thers, and was buried in the city of David: and Abijah, his son, reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XIII.

B. C. 958. History of the reign of Abijah, and his victory over Jeroboam.

- 1 Now in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam,
- 2 began Abijah to reign over Judah. He reigned three years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was ^aMaacah, the daughter of Absalom, the son of Uriel of Gibeah. And there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam.
- 3 And Abijah formed in battle array, with an army of valiant men of war, four hundred thousand chosen men: Jeroboam also formed in battle array against him, with eight hundred thousand chosen men, mighty men of valour.
- 4 And Abijah stood upon mount Zemaraim, which is in mount Ephraim, and said, "Hear
- 5 me, thou Jeroboam, and all Israel; Know ye not that Jehovah, the God of Israel, gave the kingdom of Israel to David for ever, to him and
- 6 to his sons, by an immutable covenant? Yet Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, the servant of Solomon, the son of David, is risen up, and hath
- 7 rebelled against his lord. And there are collected about him vain and lawless men, who strengthened themselves against Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, when Rehoboam was young and tender-hearted, and could not withstand
- 8 them. And now ye think to prevail against the kingdom of Jehovah, in the hands of the sons of David. Ye are, indeed, a great multitude; and have with you the golden calves, which Jeroboam made to you for gods. Have ye not expelled the priests of Jehovah, the sons of Aaron, and the Levites; and have made priests for yourselves after the manner of foreign nations? so that whosoever cometh to consecrate himself with a steer and seven rams, may be a priest of gods that are no gods. But as for us, Jehovah is our God, and him we have not forsaken; and the priests, who minister to Jehovah, are the children of Aaron, and the Levites perform their business. And they burn to Jehovah every morning and every evening burnt-offerings and sweet incense: the presence-bread they arrange on the table of pure gold; and see that the golden chandelier, with its lamps be lighted every evening: for we keep the charge of Jehovah, our God; but him have ye forsaken. And, behold, God himself is with us for our captain, and his priests with trumpets to sound the alarm against you. O children of Israel, fight ye not against Jehovah, the God of your fathers; for ye shall not prosper."

But Jeroboam had ordered an ambush to come behind them: so they were before Judah, and the ambush was behind them. And when Judah looked back, behold, the battle was before and behind: and they cried to Jehovah, and the priests sounded with the trumpets. Then the men of Judah gave a shout; and as the REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. As soon as Rehoboam and his young counsellors had leisure to attend to the concerns of religion, they began to imitate many of their ancestors, in constructing high places, erecting statues and idols, on every high-hill and under every green tree. Nothing can account for this strong inclination to worship and to serve idols, but the sinful pleasures connected therewith. These were the inducements to forsake the law of Jehovah. And with all sinners, are not some supposed pleasures in things forbidden, the inducements to transgress? But be it remembered, that the pleasures of sin are but for a season, for a short season. How much more noble to act like Moses, and to despise them, seeking the pleasures of a peaceful conscience, and a hope full of immortality?

2. We here see the compassion of God to his revolting and sinful people. He sends his prophet to call them to repentance; and it must have given the prophet pleasure to witness them, in some degree, exercise it. Still God will make them know by experience, the difference between serving him as their king, and serving idols. Their gold which they were spending on their idols, he permits the king of Egypt to carry away; and reduces them to a low state. Repentance for sin does not remove all the effects of it in this life. David felt the consequences of his sin as long as he lived; and, doubtless, went down to his grave sorrowing on account of it. Let us aim then to keep our conscience undefiled; and, if we would enjoy peace and comfort on earth, we must cleave to God and keep his commandments.

men of Judah shouted, God smote Jeroboam 16 and all Israel before Abijah and Judah. And the children of Israel fled before Judah; and 17 God delivered them into their hand. And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter; so five hundred thousand chosen 18 men of Israel fell down slain: Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time;
and the children of Judah prevailed, because they relied on Jehovah, the God of their fa-19 thers. And Abijah pursued Jeroboam, and took from him the following cities, Bethel with its towns, and Jeshanah with its towns, and 20 Ephraim with its towns. Neither did Jeroboam recover strength again in the days of Abijah;

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. Let us adore the goodness and mercy of God in overlooking the infirmities, and pardoning the transgressions of his people. (1 King. xv. 5.) David had many infirmities not mentioned there; the matter of Uriah is forgiven; the manner in which he is spoken of is remarkably gracious, and an encouragement to repentance, and to earnest endeavours to serve God with sincerity, and not turn aside from any thing which he commands us. "There is forgiveness with thee that thou mayest be feared."

3. It is common for those who want real religion, to boast much of the profession and external forms of it. How eloquently Abijah talked of the regular order of the priests, and the exactness of the service of the temple, when his heart was not right with God, but man, but from 1 Kings, xv. we are told that he walked in all the sins of his father, and that his heart was not perfect with the Lord.

21. Married fourteen wives. Not after this victory, but before; for he died soon after. I have joined the first verse of the next chapter to this, according to the division of the Polyglot and most Hebrew Bibles.

Jehovah, his God: For he took away the altars 3 of the strange gods, and the high-places, and broke in pieces the statues, and cut down the groves; And commanded Judah to seek Je- 4 hovah, the God of their fathers, and to do the law and the commandment. He also removed 5 out of all the cities of Judah, the high-places and the sun-images: for the kingdom enjoyed peace under him. And he repaired the fortified 6 cities in Judah: for the land had rest, and he had no war in those years; because Jehovah had given him rest. Therefore he said to Judah, 7
"Let us repair those cities, and surround them with walls, and towers, gates, and bars, while the land enjoys peace: for because we have earnestly sought Jehovah, our God, he hath given us rest on every side." So they built and prospered.

And Asa had an army of three hundred 8 thousand, out of Judah, who bore shields and spears; and of two hundred and eighty thousand, out of Benjamin, who bore shields and spears: all these were men of valour.

And there came against them Zerah, the Cu- 9
shite, with a host of "ten hundred" thousand, and three hundred chariots. And he came to Mareshah. And Asa went out against him; 10 and they formed in battle array, in the valley of Zephathah, at Mareshah. And Asa cried to 11 Jehovah, his God, and said, "O Jehovah, it is followed the vices of his father. So the Pharisee said, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men." Thus too many christians boast of their zeal, the regularity of their attendance on divine worship, and exactness in all points of form and ceremony, while their hearts are far from God, and strangers to the life of religion: they think themselves better than others, when perhaps they are really more criminal in the sight of God. "Be not deceived, God will not be mocked."

If the heart be not upright, all profession is vain. They are hypocrites in heart, let them be ever so exact in worship, or talk ever so fluently, or eloquently, or confidently of their own goodness. They are an abomination in the sight of God, whose glory it is to be the God of truth, and who requires it in the inward parts.

CHAP. XIV. 7. Earnestly sought. I consider the repetition of the verb in the text as only denoting the diligence and earnestness with which they sought him.

9. The Cushite. Most probably, he was an Arabian Cushite. The number of his host, ten hundred thousand, is altogether improbable. If we sup-nothing with thee to help him, who hath no power, amidst a multitude: help us, O Jehovah, our God; for we rest on thee, and in thy name we go out against this multitude. O Jehovah, thou art our God: let not man prevail 12 against thee." Jehovah then smote the Cushites before Asa, and before Judah; and the Cushites

 13 fled. And Asa, and all the people who were with him, pursued them unto Gerar; and the Cushites were so overthrown, that they could not recover themselves; for they were destroyed before Jehovah, and before his host; who carried 14 away very much spoil. And they smote all the cities round about Gerar; (for the fear of Jehovah had come upon them:) and they spoiled all those cities; and in them was found a 15 very great spoil. They smote also the herds, and carried away sheep and camels in abundance, and returned to Jerusalem.

1 Then the Spirit of God came upon Azariah, the son of Oded; And he went out to meet Asa, and said to him, "Hear ye me, Asa, and all Judah and Benjamin! Jehovah is with you, while we are steadfast to him: and if ye seek him he will be found by you; but if ye forsake him,
 3 he will forsake you. Now for many days Israel were without the true God, and without a teaching priest, and without a law: But when, in their trouble, they turned to Jehovah, the God of Israel, and sought him, he was found by 5 them. And in those times there was no peace to him that went out, or to him that came in, but great vexations were upon all the inhabitants
 6 of the 'land'. And nation was destroyed by nation, and city by city: for God afflicted them
 7 with every kind of adversity. But be ye of good courage, and act vigorously: for your work shall be rewarded." And when Asa heard 8 these words of the prophecy of Azariah, the son of Oded, the prophet, he took courage, and put away the abominable idols out of the whole land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of all the cities which he had taken from mount Ephraim. He then repaired the altar of Jehovah, which was before the porch of the house of Jehovah; And he gathered all Judah and Benjamin, and the strangers with them, from Ephraim and Manasseh, and from Simeon: for they fell to him out of Israel in abundance, when they saw that Jehovah, his God, was with him. So they assembled at Jerusalem in the 10 third month, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa. And they offered to Jehovah, at that 11 time, out of the spoil which they had brought, seven hundred oxen and seven thousand sheep. And they entered into a covenant to seek Jehovah, the God of their fathers, with all their heart, and with all their soul; And that who- 13 soever would not seek Jehovah, the God of Israel, should be put to death, whether small or great, whether man or woman. And they swore 14 to Jehovah with a loud voice, and with shouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets. And 15 all Judah rejoiced concerning the oath: for with all their heart they had sworn, and had sought him with their whole desire; and he had been found by them: and Jehovah had given them rest on every side.

Moreover, Asa, the king, removed his grandmother Maachah from being queen, because she had made a grove-idol; and Asa cut down her idol, and stamped, and burnt it at the brook Kidron. But the high places were not wholly 17 taken away out of Israel: yet the heart of Asa pose that a cypher has been added, the number will be great. The variation of the Syriac, gives us reason to conjecture that the present text is erroneous.

11. To help him, who, &c. I have rendered as literally as possible. Geddes renders, "It is nothing to thee, to succour the powerless against the powerful." Dathe, "Thou canst aid the feeble equally as the strong." The former is the sense of my version; but I prefer the turn given as being more verbal.

15. Herd-tents. The Cushites had most probably brought their cattle along with them, as is the custom of many of the eastern tribes; and on the overthrow of the main body, these fell into the hands of Asa.

CHAP. XV. 3—6. The prophet seems to refer to the days of the judges, when, owing to their idolatry and discords, there was no peace. Comp. Judg. v. 6.

8. Azariah, the son, &c. These words have, doubtless, been omitted, as appears from the versions, and from the first verse of the chapter.

16. Removed his grand-mother. I suppose that a letter has dropped from the text, and I read מן for מן, which restores the text. See note Hebrew Bible.

17. The high-places. Such still continued as were used for worshipping Jehovah.

CHAPTER XVI.

B. C. 940. Asa's confidence in Ben-hadad; Hanani reproveth him; his sickness and death.

19 AND there was no more war unto the thirty-fifth year of the reign of Asa.

1 In the thirty-sixth year of the reign of Asa, Baasha, king of Israel, came up against Judah, and fortified Ramah, for the purpose of preventing any from going over to Asa, king of
2 Judah. Then Asa brought silver and gold out of the treasures of the house of Jehovah, and of the palace, and sent to Ben-hadad, king of
3 Syria, who dwelt at Damascus, saying, "Let there be a league between me and thee, as there was between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent to thee silver and gold: come break thy league with Baasha, king of Israel, that he 4 may depart from me." And Ben-hadad hearkened to king Asa, and sent the chiefs of his hosts against the cities of Israel; and they smote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-maim, and all the store-cities of Naphtali. And when Baasha 5 heard of this, he left off fortifying Ramah, and desisted from his work. Then Asa, the king, 6 took all Judah; and they carried away the stones of Ramah, and its timber, with which Baasha had been fortifying it; and with them he fortified Geba "of Benjamin", and Mizpah.

And at that time Hanani, the seer, came to 7 Asa, king of Judah, and said to him, "Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not relied on Jehovah, thy God, therefore shall the host of the king of Syria escape out of thy hand. 8 Were not the Cushites and the Lubites a large host, with very many chariots and horsemen? yet, because thou didst rely on Jehovah, he delivered them into thy hand. For the eyes of 9 Jehovah inspect the whole earth, to give strength to those whose hearts are perfect towards him. In this thou hast done foolishly: therefore from henceforth thou shalt have wars." Then Asa was wroth with the seer, and put him 10 in a prison house; for, on account of this ad-

CHAP. XVI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XIV. & XV. 1. Asa was no sooner possessed of supreme power, than he exerted it to promote reformation; and his laudable efforts were not in vain. It is a discouragement to many, when they think others have gone too far to mend, and there is no room to hope; but let not such be discouraged; vice may be weaker, and a disposition to amend, stronger than we imagine. God may give success to our endeavours. 'Though iniquity should abound, let not our love wax cold;' at least let us do our duty, and leave the event to God.

2. The king and his people wisely improved a time of peace, by engaging in useful and necessary works. In like manner we should own the hand of God in public rest, in the peace and comfort of our families, in our ease of body and quietness of mind, and improve them to work the works of God, to grow in wisdom and holiness. For we

CHAP. XVI. 1. Thirty-sixth year. This number is, doubtless, erroneous. Baasha began to reign in the third year of Asa, and he only reigned twenty-four years, so that it is impossible he should rebuild Ramah in the thirty-sixth of Asa. Houbigant would read twenty-six, and supposes that this attempt of Baasha was in the last year of his reign. This is scarcely probable, and I am inclined to think that we should read in the last verse of the preceding chapter, until the fifteenth year, &c. and here, In the sixteenth year, &c. We are told ch. xiv. 1. that the land had rest ten years, which were, doubtless, the first ten years; then we read of his war with Zerah, the Cushite, and of the solemn covenant which he and the people made to serve God, which events might occupy a few years. The date learn, that God will be with us while we are with him. He will not forsake the souls that seek and cleave to him. If we forsake him, what can we expect but that he will forsake us. Let this engage us to be active and resolute in religion. It is not without its rewards. It brings present peace and joy, and hope of a glorious reward hereafter,

3. Asa and the people of Judah, ought to be an example to us, to enter into solemn engagements to be the Lord's, and to renew them with cheerfulness and joy. This is proper at all times, to prevent temptations, and to keep us resolute; but especially in times of degeneracy, when we have bad examples and many temptations about us, we should renew them cheerfully. Times of sacramental engagements should be times of rejoicing in the goodness of God. They are pledges of his love, means of holiness, and a seal of the covenant, which includes the promise of eternal life.

above noticed seems to omit all these circumstances, and the mistake in the years is easily accounted for. Josephus has twenty-six.

2, 3. This plan of Asa was neither good policy, nor suitable to his general piety. It impoverished his own treasury, and argued a want of confidence in God. Comp. Jer. xli. 9.

10. For, on account of this, &c. There is an ambiguity in the text, arising from the word my. If it be a preposition, the common version is right; but if it be regarded as a noun, the sense will be, "Asa was wroth with the prophet, because his people were disturbed on account of this address, and he put him in a prison-house," &c. This prevents the repetition of the common version, and assigns a reason for Asa's wrath; yet as it dress, he was angry with him. And Asa oppressed, at the same time, some of the people.

11 And, behold, the acts of Asa, first and last, are written in the book of the kings of Judah

12 and Israel. And Asa, in the thirty-ninth year of his reign, was diseased in his feet, and his disease moved upwards, yet in his disease he sought not to Jehovah, but to the physicians.

13 And Asa slept with his fathers and died in 14 the one and fortieth year of his reign. And they buried him in his own sepulchre which he had made for himself in the city of David, and laid him on a bier which was filled with aromatics, and duly prepared ointments; and they made a very great burning for him.

CHAPTER XVII.

B. C. 940. Jehoshaphat begins to reign; the plan he adopted to promote religion.

CHAP. XVII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. Among so many good men, an account of whom we have in the scriptures, we find none perfect. Their virtues were mixed with infirmities; and if on one occasion they displayed the most lively faith and confidence in God, on others they manifested unbecoming fears, or placed undue reliance on an arm of flesh. This was the sin of Asa: and it was aggravated by the proofs he had experienced of God's power and goodness. "Were not the Ethiopians a great host? Yet the Lord delivered them into thy hand. The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect towards him." God has appeared for us in six and in seven troubles; it is, therefore, unreasonable to distrust him.

2. We learn how difficult it is to receive reproof with meekness and submission. Asa was offended with the prophet for telling the truth; and put him in prison and oppressed others. We is usual to repeat the same sentiment in other words, and as the versions support the common rendering, I have adopted it.

12. Moved upwards. Michaelis considers this disease as the gout, and ingeniously supposes these words to denote its ascent to the stomach, when it is most dangerous.—To the physicians. This must denote that he placed undue confidence in them.

14. A great burning for him. The body was surrounded with aromatics and duly prepared ointments; and with these he was laid in the sepulchre. The burning then must have been of other aromatic woods, most probably his father, had taken. And Jehovah was with 3 Jehoshaphat, because he walked in the first ways of his father, ° and sought not to Baal; But sought the God of his father, and walked 4 according to his commandments, and not according to the doings of Israel. Therefore Jehovah 5 established the royal power in his hand; and all Judah brought to Jehoshaphat presents; and he had riches and honour in abundance. Thus 6 his heart was encouraged in the ways of Jehovah: so that he removed the high-places and groves out of Judah.

Also in the third year of his reign he sent his 7 chiefs Ben-hail, and Obadiah, and Zechariah, and Nethaneel, and Michaiah, to teach in the cities of Judah; And with them the Levites, 8 Shemaiah, and Nethaniah, and Zebadiah, and Asahel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehonathan, and Adonijah, and Tobijah, and Tob-adonijah, and with them Elishama and Jehoram, priests. And they had the book of the law of Jehovah 9 with them, and they taught in Judah; and went about through all the cities of Judah, and taught the people.

hope he soon repented of this conduct, which argued the influence of unsubdued pride, and was an opposition to the divine will. Be it our care to regard reproof, and turn it to our own interest, by repenting, and forsaking those vices which have occasioned it. He that regardeth reproof shall be honoured.

3. The help of creatures should always be sought with a dependence on God. Asa did right in seeking after a physician. There was no blame due for that; but he is justly blamed for not seeking the Lord. All creatures are that to us which God makes them. Skilful physicians are but instruments in his hands, and should be used and acknowledged as such. All second causes are under his direction; without him physicians are of no value. Therefore, our eyes should be ever towards the Lord, to bless the means used; and we should own his hand in every success and every disappointment. In sickness we are called to serious reflection, and ought more especially to seek Jehovah.

at the mouth of the sepulchre, or some little distance from it. This was evidently a ceremony of respect, and designed to do honour to the dead.

CHAP. XVII. 3. I have omitted David as evidently improper. It is most probable that Asa is the true reading, whose first ways were more pious and holy than his last.

6. Removed the high-places, &c. That is, those devoted to idols, but others where sacrifices were offered to Jehovah, he did not remove. 1 King. xxii. 43.

- 11 Also some of the Philistines brought Jehoshaphat presents, and tribute silver; and the Arabians brought to him flocks, seven thousand and seven hundred rams, and seven thousand and seven hundred he-goats.
- 12 And Jehoshaphat became exceedingly great, and he repaired the fortresses and store-cities

CHAPTER XVIII.

B. C. 897. Jehoshaphat, joined in affinity with Ahab, goes with him to Ramoth-gilead; Ahab is slain.

1 Now Jehoshaphat had riches and glory in

REFLECTION UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. The church may expect to prosper, when kings are nursing fathers. How pleasing is it to find the heart of Jehoshaphat so devoted to God, and concerned for the instruction of his people. Real piety must be founded in knowledge; in the knowledge of ourselves and of God's holy word; without this, whatever apparent change be effected, it will be like the morning cloud or early dew, which passeth away. By the understanding, the conscience is enlightened, the judgment regulated, and the heart influenced; and genuine religion law; but the princes went with them, to see that it was done, to punish obstinate offenders and idolaters, to give greater respect to the instructors, and solemnity to the work.

CHAP. XVIII. 1. An affinity, &c. Joram, his eldest son, married abundance; and he contracted an affinity with Ahab. And at the end of two years he went 2 down to Ahab to Samaria. And Ahab killed many sheep and oxen for him, and for the people who were with him, and persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead. And Ahab 3 king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, "Wilt thou go with me to Ramoth-gilead?" And he answered him, "As thou art disposed, so am I; as thy people, so my people; in the war we will be with thee." And 4 Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel, "Inquire now, I pray thee, what is the will of Jehovah." Then the king of Israel assembled 5 the prophets, four hundred men, and said to them, "Shall we go to Ramoth-gilead, to battle, or shall we forbear?" And they said, "Go up; for God will deliver it into the king's hand."

But Jehoshaphat said, "Is there no prophet 6 of Jehovah here besides, that we may inquire by him?" And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "There is yet one man, by whom we may inquire of Jehovah: but him I hate; for he prophesieth no good concerning me, but always evil. He is Micaiah, the son of Imla." And Jehoshaphat said, "Let not the king say so." And the king of Israel called for one of 8 his officers, and said, "Bring quickly Micaiah, the son of Imla." And the king of Israel and 9 Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, sat each of them on his throne, clothed in their robes, and they sat in a void place at the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them. And Zedekiah, the son of Che- 10 involves the operation both of the conscience, the judgment, and the affections. To effect any permanent reformation, among a people, we must begin with instructing them; and only avail ourselves of power, so far as is necessary to enforce it. The common people generally respect, and follow their superiors, and the example of the king and his chiefs, would add weight to the instructions of the priests and Levites. May our kings and our nobles ever be examples to the lower order, and then we may hope for the general prevalence of piety.

Athalia, Ahab's daughter, as appears from ch. xxi. 6. and 2 King. viii. 18. This is mentioned as the mistaken policy of this good man.

4. Inquire now, &c. I have thus rendered here and in the parallel place, as more perspicuous than the common version. Geddes renders, naanah had made for himself horns of iron, and said, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'With these thou shalt push Syria until they be destroyed.'" And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, "Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for Jehovah shall deliver it into the hand of the king." And the messenger who went to call Micaiah spoke to him, saying, "Behold, the words of the prophets declare good to the king with one accord; let thy word, therefore, I pray thee, be like their's, and speak thou good." And Micaiah said, "As Jehovah liveth, even what my God saith, that will I speak." And when he had come to the king, the king said to him, "Micaiah, shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall we forbear?" And he said, "Go ye up, and prosper, and they shall be delivered into your hand." And the king said to him, "How often shall I adjure thee that thou say nothing but the truth to me, in the name of Jehovah?" Then he said, "I saw all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as sheep that have no shepherd: and Jehovah said, 'These have no master; let them return, therefore, every man to his house in peace.'" And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good but evil concerning me?" Again he said, "Hear thou, therefore, the word of Jehovah; I saw Jehovah sitting upon his throne, and all the host of the heavens standing on his right hand, and on his left. And Jehovah said, 'Who shall entice Ahab, king of Israel, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead?' And one spoke saying after this manner, and another saying after that manner. A spirit then came forth and stood before Jehovah, and said, 'I will entice him.' And Jehovah said to him, 'By what means?' And he answered, 'I will go forth and will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets.' And Jehovah said, 'Thou shalt entice him, and also prevail: go forth, and so do.' Now, therefore, behold, Jehovah hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of these thy prophets; for Jehovah hath spoken evil concerning thee."

Then Zedekiah, the son of Chenaanah, went near, and smote Micaiah upon the cheek, and said, "How hath the Spirit of Jehovah departed from me to speak by thee?" And Micaiah said, "Behold, thou shalt see on that day when thou shalt go into an inner-chamber to hide thyself." Then the king of Israel said, "Take ye Micaiah, and carry him back to Amon, the governor of the city, and to Joash, the king's son; And say, 'Thus saith the king, 'Put this man in the prison, and feed him with the bread of affliction and with the water of affliction, until I return in peace.'" And Micaiah said, "If thou certainly return in peace, then hath not Jehovah spoken by me." And he said, "Hearken, all ye people."

Then the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat, the king of Judah, went up to Ramoth-gilead. And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "I will disguise myself, and will go to the battle; but put thou on thy robes." So the king of Israel disguised himself; and they went to the battle. Now the king of Syria had charged the captains of the chariots who were with him, saying, "Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king of Israel." And when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, they said, "This is the king of Israel." Therefore they turned to fight against him: but Jehoshaphat cried out, and Jehovah helped him; and God moved them away from him. For when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, they turned back from pursuing him. But a certain man drew a bow at a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness; therefore he said to his charioteer, "Turn thy hand, that thou mayest carry me out of the host; for I am wounded." But the battle increased on that day; and the king of Israel was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians until the evening: and about the time of the going down of the sun, he died.

And as Jehoshaphat, the king of Judah, was returning to his house, in safety, at Jerusalem,

"Consult, I pray thee, the Oracle of the Lord;" which, I think, is not the sense. What follows explains that Jehoshaphat meant inquiring by some prophet, what was the will of Jehovah respecting this war. Comp. 1 King. xxii. and the notes.

- 2 Jehu, the son of Hanani, the seer, went out to meet him; and he said to king Jehoshaphat, "Oughtest thou to help the ungodly, and love them who hate Jehovah? On this account thou hast deserved wrath from Jehovah. Nevertheless, there are good things found in thee, inasmuch as thou hast removed the groves out of the land, and prepared thy heart to seek God."
- 4 After Jehoshaphat had abode some time at Jerusalem, he went out again through the people, from Beer-sheba to mount Ephraim, and brought them back to Jehovah, the God of their fathers. And he appointed judges in the land; in all the fortified cities of Judah, in every city. And he said to the judges, "Take heed what ye do: for ye judge not for man, but for Jehovah, who is with you in the judgment. Wherefore now let the fear of Jehovah be upon you, take heed, and act uprightly; for with Jehovah, our God, there is no injustice, no respect of persons, no taking of bribes."
- 8 Moreover, in Jerusalem, Jehoshaphat appointed some of the Levites, and of the priests, and of the paternal chiefs of Israel, who were to judge in what related to Jehovah, and in the controverted causes of the "inhabitants" of Jerusalem. And he charged them, saying, "In the fear of Jehovah, and with a faithful and a perfect heart, ye shall thus act: Whatsoever cause shall come to you from your brethren who dwell in their cities; whether between blood and blood, or concerning the law-commandments, statutes, and judgments; ye shall teach them that they may not trespass against Jehovah, and so bring wrath both upon yourselves, and upon your brethren; this do, that ye may not incur guilt. And, behold, Amariah, the chief priest, is over you, in all matters which relate to Jehovah; and Zebadiah, the son of Ishmael, ruler of the house of Judah, for all matters relating to the king: also the Levites shall be officers before you. Act with courage, and Jehovah shall be with you for good."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XVIII. & XIX. 1. We are taught, that professors of religion should not associate with the wicked, and thus be the occasion of emboldening them in their wickedness. Ahab, perhaps, was hardened by Jehoshaphat's alliance. At least Jehoshaphat showed that he had not that dread of idolatry he should have had, and his people might have been encouraged in it by the king's joining with notorious idolaters. Shall the servants of God help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? Wicked men hate God, and we should hate them, that is, hate their crimes but not their persons; we should shun their society, and have no communion with them; have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them; come out from among them and be separate.

2. The reproof of the prophet seems to have had a powerful effect on the mind of the king; and he repented of his sin, and resumed the work of instructing and reforming his people, with increased zeal and perseverance. He went himself, doubtless,

CHAP. XIX. 2. On this account, &c. I have rendered after Dathe: and the connexion supports this version. It does not appear that any particular judgment was inflicted on the king, though his conduct deserved it.

6. Who is with you in, &c. Geddes renders, "for with you lies the judicial sentence." The Greek supports this rendering. The common affords a good sense, "God is with you to observe your decisions, and to attended by the priests and Levites, to bring back the people to Jehovah, their God. Let us be thankful that God has appointed stated seasons for religious worship and instruction; and given to the church pastors and teachers. These have a happy influence on the righteousness, peace, and welfare of nations. All Christians should say, "How beautiful are the feet of those that bring glad tidings, who publish peace, and say unto Zion, 'Thy God reigneth!'"

3. How excellent is the instruction given to the judges. Ability and integrity are two essential qualities in a good judge. They should show a holy regard to the authority of God, to whom they are accountable, and by whom they must be judged. Both magistrates and others are chargeable with guilt, when they neglect to warn men that they trespass not against the Lord. It is the duty of all to promote the repentance and reformation of sinners, as much as lies in their power; and if they neglect this duty, they may become accessory to their guilt and ruin.

punish or reward you accordingly." The following verse, I think, favours the common version.

2 battle. Then there came some that told Jehoshaphat, saying, "There cometh a great multitude against thee from beyond the sea, from 'Edom'; and, behold, they are in Hazazon-
3 tamar, which is in En-gedi." And Jehoshaphat feared, and set himself to seek Jehovah, and 4 proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah. And Judah assembled themselves, to ask help of Jehovah; even out of all the cities of Judah they came to seek Jehovah.
5 And Jehoshaphat stood up in the congregation of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of 6 Jehovah, before the new court. And said, "O Jehovah, the God of our fathers, art not thou God in heaven, who rulest over all the kingdoms of the 'earth'? and in thy hand is there not power and might, so that none is able to 7 withstand thee? Didst not thou, our God, drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham, thy friend, for ever? And they have dwelt therein, and have built a sanctuary therein to 8 thy name, saying, 'If, when evil cometh upon us, as the judgments of the sword, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence, (for 'by thy name is this house called'), and cry to thee in our affliction, then 9 thou wilt hear and help.' And now, behold, the children of Ammon, and Moab, and mount Seir, whom thou wouldst not let Israel invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt; but they turned from them, and destroyed them not;
11 Behold, how they render 'evil' to us, by coming to cast us out of thy possession, which thou hast 12 given us to inherit. O our God, wilt thou not judge them? for we have no might to resist this great multitude which cometh against us; neither know we what to do: but our eyes are upon thee." And all Israel stood before Jehovah, with their little ones, their wives, and their children.

Then upon Jahaziel, the son of Zechariah, 14 the son of Benaiah, the son of Jeiel, the son of Mattaniah, a Levite, of the sons of Asaph, came the Spirit of Jehovah in the midst of the congregation; And he said, "Hearken all Judah, 15 and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat, Thus saith Jehovah unto you, 'Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not your's but God's. To-morrow go ye down against them: 16 behold, they come up by the cliff of Ziz; and ye shall find them at the end of the brook, before the wilderness of Jeruel. On this occasion 17 ye shall not need to fight, stand still only, and see the salvation which Jehovah will grant you. O Judah and Jerusalem, fear not, nor be dismayed; to-morrow go out against them: for Jehovah is with you.'" And Jehoshaphat 18 bowed his head with his face to the ground; and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, fell down before Jehovah, worshipping Jehovah. And the Levites of the children of the Kohath- 19 ites, and of the children of the Korahites, stood up to praise, with a loud and high-sounding voice, Jehovah, the God of Israel.

And they rose early in the morning, and went 20 forth into the wilderness of Tekoa; and as they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, "Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem; Confide in Jehovah, your God, and ye shall be established; believe his prophets and ye shall prosper." And when he had consulted with 21 the people, he appointed singers to Jehovah, who, with holy beauty, as they went before the army, were to praise him, and to say, "Praise

9. By thy name. This reading is more apposite: and as the authority for it is considerable, I have adopted it. The text is, "for thy name is in this house."

12. We have no might, &c. When we compare what is here said with ch. xvii. 14-16., this acknowledgment may surprise us. It should, however, be recollected, that every Israelite, when necessary, was liable to be called out to war: and that account, I suspect, contains the number who were fit for war. There might, however, be few who were actually trained, and on the advance of the enemy, such only would be of essential service: so that he might with truth say as above.

14. Came the Spirit. Perhaps he had never prophesied before, but the spirit then first came upon him; while they were praying, God heard, and assured them of deliverance.

21. With holy beauty. That is, in the same manner, and in the same habits, as was usual in the temple. They probably sung the 186th psalm,

Jehovah, "for he is good"; for his mercy endureth for ever."

- 22 And when they began to sing and to praise, Jehovah turned the ambush-men of mount Seir, who should have come against Judah, against the children of Ammon and Moab, and they 23 were smitten. Then the children of Ammon and Moab attacked the inhabitants of mount Seir, so as utterly to slay and destroy them; and when they had destroyed the inhabitants of Seir,
24 they "rushed" on to destroy one another. And when Judah came to the watch-tower in the wilderness, they looked on the multitude, and, behold, they were all lying on the ground dead;
25 and none had escaped. And when Jehoshaphat and his people went to seize the spoil, they found among them an abundance of riches, "raiments", and precious jewels, of which they stripped off for themselves more than they could carry away: and they were three days in gathering the spoil, it was so much. And on the fourth day they assembled themselves in the valley of Berachah; for there they gave thanks to Jehovah: therefore the name of that place hath been called "The valley of Berachah," [THANKSGIVING] unto this day.
27 Then all the men of Judah and Jerusalem, and Jehoshaphat at their head, returned to Jerusalem with joy; for Jehovah had made them 28 to rejoice over their enemies. So they came with psalteries, and harps, and trumpets, to 29 Jerusalem unto the house of Jehovah. And the fear of God was on all the surrounding kingdoms, when they heard that Jehovah had 30 fought against the enemies of Israel. So the realm of Jehoshaphat was quiet: for his God gave him rest on every side.
35 "And after this, Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, allied himself with Ahaziah, king of Israel, whose deeds were so wicked: And he allied 36 himself with him to make ships to go to Tarshish; and they made the ships at Ezion-geber. Then Eliezer, the son of Dodavah, of Mare- 37 shah, prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying, "Because thou hast allied thyself with Ahaziah, Jehovah hath broken thy works." And the ships were broken, that they could not proceed to Tarshish.

Thus Jehoshaphat reigned over Judah: he 31 was thirty-five years old when he began to reign and he reigned twenty-five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Azubah, the daughter of Shilhi. And he walked in the way of 32 Asa, his father, and departed not from it, doing what was right in the eyes of Jehovah. Yet 33 the high-places were not entirely removed: for the people still had not prepared their hearts to the God of their fathers. Now the rest of the 34 acts of Jehoshaphat, first and last, behold, they are written in the record of Jehu, the son of Hanani, which was inserted in the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

Now Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and 1 was buried with his fathers in the city of David, and Jehoram, his son, reigned in his stead. And 2 he had brethren, the sons of Jehoshaphat, Azariah; and Jehiel, and Zechariah, and Azariah, and Michael, and Shephatiah: all these were the sons of Jehoshaphat, king of "Judah". And 3 to them their father had given great gifts of silver, and of gold, and of precious things, with fortified cities in Judah: but the kingdom gave he to Jehoram; because he was the first-born. Now when Jehoram was firmly established in the 4 kingdom of his father, he slew all his brethren with the sword, and some of the chiefs of Judah.

CHAPTER XXI.

B. C. 892. The wicked reign of Jehoram, from whom the Edomites revolt; the letter of Elisha; the land invaded by the Philistines; the disease and death of Jehoram.

- 5 JEHORAM was thirty-two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eight years in 6 Jerusalem. And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, and did like the house of Ahab: for he had the daughter of Ahab to wife. But although he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, 7 Yet Jehovah would not destroy the house of David, because of the covenant which he had made with David, and because he had promised to give both to him, and to his sons, a lamp always.
8 In his days the Edomites revolted from under the dominion of Judah, and made a king over
9 themselves. Then Jehoram went forth with his chiefs, and all his chariots with him; and he rose up by night and smote the Edomites who had encompassed him and the captains of the chariots: "and the people fled to their own
10 homes." Yet the Edomites revolted from under the hand of the king of Judah, unto this day. At the same time Libnah revolted from under his hand; because he had forsaken Jehovah, 11 the God of his fathers. Moreover, he made high-places in the "cities" of Judah, and caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem and of Judah to go astray.

and universal dominion. We should recollect and plead former instances of God's favour, like Jehoshaphat, (ver. 7, 8.); and especially God's promises, with an humble sense of our weakness and insufficiency, to resist and vanquish our enemies, without his aid.

2. We have here another proof that God heareth prayer. When it is offered in sincerity, he will regard it, and appear to the comfort of his people. While the king and the people were pour-

12. From Elisha. This letter to king Jehoram was written in the sixth year of his reign; because he reigned eight years, and it was written two years before his death. But then, Elijah had been taken up to heaven about thirteen years before the time of this writing. For the ascension is recorded in the second chapter of the second book of Kings; and the chapter following says, that Jehoram, king of Israel, began to reign in the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat: consequently, the ascension took place about seven years before the death of Jehoshaphat, who reigned twenty-five years. If therefore, this letter was written so long after Elijah's ascension; it will

And there came a letter to him from "Elisha", 12 the prophet, saying, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of David, thy fore-father, 'Because thou hast not walked in the ways of Jehoshaphat, thy father, nor in the ways of Asa, king of Judah, 13 But hast walked in the way of the kings of Israel, and hast made Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to go astray after idols, like the house of Ahab, and hast also slain thy brethren, of thy father's house, who were better than thyself: Behold, with a great plague will Jehovah 14 smite thy people, and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy possessions: And thou shalt 15 have the most grievous complaint, a disease in thy bowels; until, from that complaint, thy bowels, after many days, shall fall out.'" 16

Moreover, Jehovah stirred up against Jehoram 16 the spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians, who were next to the Cushites. And they 17 came into Judah, and broke through it, and carried away all the substance which was found in the king's house, with his sons, and his wives; so that there was no son left to him, save "Ahaziah", the youngest of his sons. And 18 after all this Jehovah smote him with an incurable disease in his bowels. So, that in process 19 of time, at the end of two years, his bowels fell out by reason of his disease: and he died of the most grievous diseases. His people made no burning for him, like the burning of his fa-

ing out their requests, the Spirit came upon Jahaziel, and he was commissioned to foretell the deliverance which God would effect. Though we have no prophets now, we have the revelation of prophets, of apostles, and of our blessed Lord, and from this, ministers are authorized to assure a penitent, believing, praying people, that they shall be saved. readily be allowed that the writer of it was (not Elijah, but) Elisha—a correction, which seems absolutely necessary; though not confirmed, perhaps, by any one manuscript, or ancient version. Josephus supposes that it was written in heaven, and sent by angels! Others suppose it was written before the death of Elijah, and left with his successor, or some other person, to be sent to him; while some have considered that the Elijah mentioned here was another prophet of that name. Admit but the slight error of some scribe anciently mistaking the name of one prophet for another, and every difficulty vanishes. From comparing parallel places, it is clear that errors in names are most frequent.

1 And the inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah, his youngest son, king in his stead: for the horde of men, who had come with the Arabians to the camp before Jerusalem, had slain all the eldest. So Ahaziah, the son of Jehoram, was made king of Judah.

CHAP. XXII. 2. †Syr. Arab. and partly Sept. and 2 King. viii. 26.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. We see the awful effects of marrying a wicked person, and being allied to an irreligious family. The source of Jehoram's wickedness and misery, was a wife, of Ahab's idolatrous race, who counselled him, and her son after him, to do wickedly. How needful, therefore, is the caution of the apostle to those who pay any regard to religion, and who would maintain their integrity, "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers." For if evil communications corrupt good manners, we should guard against it.

2. The sins of the children of good parents are highly aggravated, and they expose themselves to severe condemnation. Observe how Jehoram is reminded of his good father and of his grand-father; and let children of good parents see, in his misery, the sad consequences of forsaking the God of their fathers, and despising their counsel. Such are, like Jehoram, generally the worst of men; worse than those who never enjoyed such advantages. Let young people, therefore, "know the God of their fathers; and serve him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind."

CHAP. XXII. 2. Twenty-two, &c. On the error of the text, and the occasion of it, the learned reader may see the note in the Hebrew Bible. Every one must be sensible that a son cannot be older than his father; and if his father died when forty, how could his son, who immediately succeeded him, be forty-two? See ver. 20. ch. xxi.

tion. For he walked after their counsel, and 5 went with Joram, the son of Ahab, king of Israel, to war against Hazael, king of Syria, at Ramoth-gilead: and the Syrians smote Joram. And he returned to be healed, in Jezreel, of 6 the wounds which he had received from the Syrians at Ramoth, when he fought with Hazael, king of Syria. And "Ahaziah", the son of Jehoram, king of Judah, went down to see Joram, the son of Ahab, at Jezreel, because he was sick. But his coming to Joram, God so 7 directing it, was the destruction of Ahaziah: for, when he was come, he went out with Joram, against Jehu, the son of Nimshi, whom Jehovah had anointed to cut off the house of Ahab. And, 8 when Jehu was executing judgment upon the house of Ahab, and found the princes of Judah, and the sons of the brethren of Ahaziah, who ministered to Ahaziah, he slew them. And he 9 sought Ahaziah: and they caught him, (for he was hid in Samaria,) and brought him to Jehu: and when they had slain him, they buried him: "Because," said they, "he is the grandson of Jehoshaphat, who sought Jehovah with his whole heart."

6. †So the versions.

3. What a spectacle of horror was this wicked prince in the last scenes of life! What distress must it have occasioned him, that his wives and children, who might have been comforts to him, were taken from him, except a young child, and one wicked, ill-natured, cruel wife, who was left to torment him. His substance gone, his kingdom divided, his people, some revolting, and all despising him; unable, by reason of his disorder, to do any thing towards recovering his substance or his kingdom. A more dreadful situation can scarcely be conceived. The instruction conveyed by it is, that we should "stand in awe, and sin not." To be sick, without substance, without friends, is bad enough; but to be sick and in sin, under the curse of God; to have no grace to bear it, nor wisdom to improve it; to have no prospect; nothing to hope for; but "a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation," is a sad case indeed. This wicked prince was executed as a warning to all wicked men, what a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God! What torments can he inflict on men even in this life!

9. Hid in Samaria. This account has been thought at variance with that of 2 King. ix. 27. It is possible that some circumstances have been omitted in each account, which, if given, would remove the discrepancy. From the position of Jezreel, Samaria, and Megiddo, it is probable, that Ahaziah, after being wounded at the ascent of Gur, fled to Samaria, where

Nor had the house of Ahaziah power to pre-10 serve the sovereignty. For when Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah, saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the royal seed of the 11 house of Judah. But Jehoshebad, the daughter of the king, took Joash, the son of Ahaziah, (whom she had stolen from among the king's sons who were slain,) and she put him and his nurse in a bed-chamber of the temple. So Jehoshebad, the daughter of king Joram, the wife of Jehoiada, the priest, (for she was the sister of Ahaziah,) hid him from Athaliah, so 12 that she slew him not. And he was hid with them in the house of God six years: and Atha-liah reigned over the land.

1 But in the seventh year, Jehoiada took courage and entered into a league with the captains of hundreds, Azariah, the son of Jeroham, and Ishmael, the son of Jehohanan, and Aza-riah, the son of Obed, and Maaseiah, the son of Adaiah, and Elishaphat, the son of Zichri.
 2 And they went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah, and the paternal chiefs of Israel, and they came to 3 Jerusalem. And the whole congregation made a covenant with the king in the house of God.
 For "Jehoiada" had said to them, "Behold, the king's son! let him be king as Jehovah hath 4 promised concerning the sons of David. This is the thing that ye shall do; let a third part of those of you who come in on the sabbath, of the priests and of the Levites, be the door-keepers;
 5 And let another third part be at the king's apartment; and a third part be posted at the foundation-gate: but let all the rest of the people be in the courts of the house of Jehovah.
 6 But let none come into the house of Jehovah,
 save the priests, and the ministering Levites;
 they may come in, for they are hallowed: but let all the rest of the people watch in the courts
 7 of Jehovah. And let the Levites encompass the king, every man with his weapons in his hand; and whosoever else cometh into the house, let him be put to death: but be ye with the king when he cometh in, and when he goeth out." So the Levites and all Judah did ac- 8

 cording to all things that Jehoiada, the priest, had commanded, and took each his men who were to come in on the sabbath, with those who were to go out on the sabbath: for Jehoiada, the priest, dismissed not the courses. Moreover, 9 Jehoiada, the priest, gave to the captains of hundreds the spears, and bucklers, and shields, which had belonged to king David, that were in the house of God. And he ordered all the 10 people to stand around the king, every man having his weapon in his hand, from the right side of the temple to the left side of the temple, along by the altar and the sanctuary. Then "he" 11 brought forth the king's son, and put the crown
 upon him, and gave him the royal ornaments;
 and they made him king. Thus Jehoiada, and his sons, anointed him; and said, "Long live
 the king."

Now when Athaliah heard the noise of the 12
 people running and praising the king, she came to the people in the house of Jehovah: And 13
 she looked, and, behold, the king stood by the pillar at the entrance of the temple; and by the king the chiefs, singers, and trumpeters: and all the people of the land rejoiced, and blew with trumpets, and the musicians played on various other instruments, accompanied by those skilful in singing praise. Then Athaliah rent her clothes, and said, "Treason, Treason!"
 And Jehoiada, the priest, brought out the cap- 14
 tains of hundreds who were set over the host, and said to them, "Take her forth without the ranges: and whoso followeth her, let him be slain with the sword." For the priest had said,
 "Let her not be slain in the house of Jehovah."
 So they laid hands on her; and when she had 15
 come to the horse gate-way, by the king's house,
 they slew her there.

And Jehoiada made a covenant between 16 himself and all the people, and between the king, that they should be Jehovah's people.

 17 Then all the people went to the temple of Baal, and demolished it, and broke in pieces its altars and its statues, and slew Mattan, the priest of 18 Baal, before the altars. Also Jehoiada re-appointed the officers of the house of Jehovah, among the priests and the Levites, whom David had distributed in the house of Jehovah, to offer the burnt-offerings of Jehovah, as it is written in the law of Moses; with rejoicing and with 19 singing, as was ordained by David. And he placed the gate-keepers at the gates of the house of Jehovah, that no one, in any respect
 20 unclean, might enter. And he took the captains of hundreds, and the nobles, and the governors of the people, and all the people of the land, and brought down the king from the house of Jehovah: and they came through the high-gate to the king's house, and placed the king upon 21 the throne of the kingdom. And all the people of the land rejoiced: and the city was quiet, although they had slain Athaliah with the sword.

CHAPTER XXIV.

B. C. 896. Joash reigns well while Jehoiada lived; then falls off to idolatry, and at last is slain.

- 1 JOASH was seven years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.
- 2 And Joash did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, all the days of Jehoiada, the priest.
- 3 And Jehoiada took for him two wives; and he begot sons and daughters.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XXII. & XXIII. 1. We see in the conduct of Ahaziah, that judgments alone do not produce repentance. He had before his eyes the sins and sufferings of his father; but yet continued to follow his wicked example. He was influenced by the worst counsellors, his idolatrous mother, and his relations of the house of Ahab; and he pursued their ways, to his own destruction. How true is it that the companions of foolish, wicked men, shall be destroyed! If such entice us, let us not consent to them; let us detest their ways, and seek and walk in the path of wisdom and piety.

2. We see the remarkable providence of God in preserving

CHAP. XXIV. 5. Hastened it not. Great negligence may be justly attributed to them in suffering the temple to remain in a dilapidated state, for twenty-three years. Comp. 2 King. xii. 6,

And after this, Joash purposed to repair the 4 house of Jehovah. And he gathered together 5 the priests and the Levites, and said to them, "Go out into the cities of Judah, and gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter." The Levites, however, hastened it not. And the king called for Jehoiada, the 6 chief-priest, and said to him, "Why hast thou not required of the Levites to bring in, out of Judah and Jerusalem, the collection appointed by Moses, the servant of Jehovah, to be paid by the congregation of Israel, for the witness-tabernacle?" For the sons of Athaliah, that 7 wicked woman, had broken up the house of God: and they had applied to the service of Baal, all the things dedicated to the house of Jehovah. And at the king's command they 8 made a chest, and placed it without the gate of the house of Jehovah. And they made a pro- 9 clamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to Jehovah the collection, which Moses, the servant of God, had, in the wilderness, laid upon Israel. And all the chiefs, and all the 10 people rejoiced, and brought in, and cast their contributions into the chest until the whole was completed. Now at what time the chest was 11 brought into the king's office, by the hand of the Levites, and when they saw that there was much money, the king's scribe, and the high-priest's officer, came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it back to its own place. Thus they did day by day, and collected money

one child to be as a lamp to David in Jerusalem. Amid the general massacre, he is snatched as a brand from the burning, and by the care of his aunt preserved. Thus there did not fail one to sit on the throne of David; and soon Athaliah received the reward due to her crimes. Her idolatry, and the innocent blood which she had shed, called for vengeance; and when she probably thought her power was established, and herself secure, it fell upon her. Thus will it be with all the ungodly. When they cry peace, then sudden destruction cometh; for though hand join with hand, they shall not go unpunished. An awful day of retribution is approaching, which they cannot escape.

12 in abundance. And the king and Jehoiada gave it to those who had the inspection of the work of the house of Jehovah; and they hired with it masons and carpenters to repair the house of Jehovah; and also such as wrought iron and 13 brass, to strengthen the house of Jehovah. And the workmen so wrought, that the work was by them soon completed, and the house of God restored to its former state of strength.

14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money to the king and Jehoiada; and of it were made utensils for the house of Jehovah, utensils for the service of the burnt-offerings; and incense-pots, and other utensils of gold and silver. And they continually offered burnt-offerings in the house of Jehovah, all the 15 days of Jehoiada. But Jehoiada became old, and died full of days; a hundred and thirty 16 years old was he when he died. And they buried him in the city of David, among the kings, because he had done good in Israel, both with respect to God, and to his house.

17 Now after the death of Jehoiada came the princes of Judah, and made obeisance to the 18 king. Then the king hearkened to them. And they forsook the house of Jehovah, the God of their fathers, and served grove-idols and other idols: and the wrath of Jehovah came upon Ju-19 dah and Jerusalem for this their trespass. Yet he sent prophets to them, to bring them back to himself; and they testified against them: but 20 they would not give ear. And the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada, the priest, who stood above the people, and said to them, "Thus saith God, 'Why transgress ye the commandments of Jehovah, and so cannot prosper? Because ye have forsaken Jehovah, he hath also forsaken you." And they conspired against him, and stoned him with stones at the command of the king, in the court of the house of Jehovah. Thus Joash, the king, remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada, his father, had done to him, but slew his son; who, when he was dying said, "Jehovah will regard and requite this."

Now at the end of the year Jehovah requited 23 Joash. For the host of Syria came up against him: and they came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed all the chiefs of the people, and sent all their spoil to the king of Damascus. For though the Syrian host consisted of but few 24 men, yet Jehovah delivered a very great host into their hand, because these had forsaken Jehovah, the God of their fathers. And on Joash they executed judgment; For they left 25 him pierced with many wounds. And when they had departed from him, his own servants conspired against him for the blood of the "son" of Jehoiada, the priest, and slew him on his bed: and when he was dead, they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings. And these are they 26 who conspired against him; Jozabad, the son of Shimeath, an Ammonitess, and Jehozabad, the son of Shimrith, a Moabitess.

Now his buildings, and the greatness of the 27 burdens laid on by him, and the repairing of the house of God, behold, they are written in the records of the kings of Judah. And Amaziah, his son, reigned in his stead.

B. C. 839. Amaziah's reign; overthroweth the Edomites, but turns to idols, and is defeated by Joash; his servants kill him.

- 1 AMAZIAH was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty-nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name
 2 was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem. And he did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, but not with a perfect heart.
 3 Now when the royal power was established in his house, he slew his servants, who had killed
 4 the king, his father. But he slew not their children, according to what is written in the law, in the book of Moses, in which Jehovah commanded, saying, "The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor shall the children be put to death for their fathers; but every man shall be put to death for his own sin."
 5 Moreover, Amaziah gathered Judah together, and made them captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, according to their paternal houses, throughout all Judah and Benjamin: and he numbered them from twenty years old and upward, and found them three hundred thousand choice men able to go forth to war,
 6 who could wield both spear and buckler. He hired also a hundred thousand men of valour out
 7 of Israel, for a hundred talents of silver. But there came a man of God to him, saying, "O king, let not the army of Israel go with thee; for Jehovah is not with Israel; with any of the honour of God, and the support of his house and worship! Princes and people cheerfully brought in supplies. The workmen were diligent and honest; all contributed their part. What a lovely sight! We should show such zeal ourselves; excite it in others, and stir up acquaintances to such labours of love.

3. See how much the public often lose by the death of good men, though past the active scenes of life. Thus, while Jehoiada lived, he kept things in order, supported the worship of God, and prevented idolatry. Zeal and piety seemed to depart with him. We should value such while they live, and lament for them when they die. It is a peculiar honour to have done good to God and his house; and it is to be wished their spirit remained with survivors, that instead of the fathers, there may be the children to serve children of Ephraim. But if thou go, act with 8 vigour in the war, else God will overthrow thee before the enemy: for God hath power to help, and to overthrow." And Amaziah said to the 9 man of God, "But what shall we do for the hundred talents of silver which I have given to the army of Israel?" And the man of God answered, "Jehovah is able to give thee much more than this." Then Amaziah separated 10 these troops that had come to him out of Ephraim, that they might go home again: wherefore their anger was greatly kindled against Judah, and they returned home in great anger.

And Amaziah took courage, and led forth his 11 people, and went to the valley of salt, and smote of the children of Seir, ten thousand. And other ten thousand left alive, did the chil- 12 dren of Judah carry away captive; and they brought them to the top of a rock, and cast them down from the top of the rock, so that they were all dashed to pieces. But the troops 13 which Amaziah sent back, that they might not go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from Samaria, even to Beth-horon, and smote three thousand of the inhabitants, and took much spoil.

Now, after that Amaziah had come from the 14 slaughter of the Edomites, he brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to be his gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burned incense to them. Wherefore the 15

the Lord, maintain his cause, and promote a holy regard to genuine piety, and the advancement of it among men.

4. Reflect on the sad consequences of apostacy, and the miserable state of those whose hearts are not right with God. There are many, like Joash, who set out well; their friends indulge great hopes; they begin in the spirit, but end in the flesh. Such should remember God's judgment upon Joash; after all these pleasing prospects, he died miserable. Let those who forsake God after having known him, and for a while walked in his ways, remember, their guilt is aggravated, and their plagues shall be great and wonderful. Let all, especially those who are young, and are now hopeful, beware, lest they draw back to perdition. May they believe and persevere to the end, that they may be saved.

CHAP. XXV. 1—4. Compare 2 King. xiv. 1—6.

12. Dashed to pieces. This was barbarous treatment, but very common, especially among the Romans. We find in 2 Kings that he called the city Joktheel, or, obedience to God, because he thought this victory a reward for his obedience in sending back the hired Israelites. Thus are acts of cruelty often thought meritorious.

anger of Jehovah was kindled against Amaziah, and he sent to him a prophet, who said to him, "Why seekest thou to the gods of a people who could not deliver their own people out of 16 thy hand?" And, as he talked with him, the king said to him, "Art thou made one of the king's counsel? Forbear; why shouldst thou be smitten?" Then the prophet forbore, but said, "I know that God hath determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened to my counsel."

17 Then Amaziah, king of Judah, took advice, and sent to Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, "Come, let 18 us look one another in the face." And Joash, king of Israel, sent to Amaziah, king of Judah, saying, "A thistle of Lebanon sent to a cedar of Lebanon, saying, 'Give thy daughter to my son to wife:' and a wild-beast of Lebanon
19 passed by, and trod down the thistle. Thou sayest, 'Lo, I have smitten the Edomites;' and thy heart is lifted up: abide now at home; why wouldst thou meddle to thy hurt, so that thou 20 shouldst fall, and Judah with thee?" But Amaziah would not hearken; for God so overruled this, that he might deliver them into the hand 21 of their enemies, because they sought to the gods of Edom. So Joash, the king of Israel, went up; and they looked one another in the face, both he and Amaziah, king of Judah, at Beth-shemesh, which belongeth to Judah. And Judah was smitten before Israel, and they 22 fled, every man to his own home. And Joash, 23 the king of Israel, took Amaziah, king of Judah, the son of Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, at Beth-shemesh, and brought him to Jerusalem, and broke down the wall of Jerusalem, from the gate of Ephraim to the corner gate, four hundred cubits. And he took all the gold and the 24 silver, and all the vessels found in the house of God with Obed-edom, and the treasures of the king's house, and hostages, and returned to Samaria.

And Amaziah, the son of Joash, king of Judah, lived after the death of Joash, son of Jehoahaz, king of Israel, fifteen years. Now 25 the rest of the acts of Amaziah, first and last, behold, they are written in the history of the kings of Judah and Israel.

Now after the time that Amaziah turned 26 away from following Jehovah, they made a conspiracy at Jerusalem: and he fled to Lachish: but they sent after him to Lachish, and slew him there. And they brought him upon horses, 27 and buried him with his fathers in the city of "David".

CHAP. XXV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXV. 1. In the reply of Amaziah, we see the influence of a worldly spirit. "What shall we do for the hundred talents?" When men are urged to give up unlawful gain, they quarrel with God. But surely it is below a good man to ask such a question, in cases where duty and conscience are concerned. The belief of God's all-sufficiency, is an answer to a thousand such trifling objections. He can make up every loss. Let us often think of this when we are called upon to part with any thing for God and religion. So Paul urges to charity: "God is able to make all grace abound in you."

2. See the miserable condition of that man to whom the word of the Lord is a burden and reproach, (ver. 16.) "Then the prophet said, 'I know that God hath determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened to my counsel.'" Young and headstrong people are willing that ministers

15. Could not deliver, &c. Had he thrown the gods from the rock instead of the captives, he would have acted more becoming an Israelite; and instead of worshipping them, he should have acted like Fabius, the Roman general, who, when he had taken Tarentum, and was asked what they must should always prophesy smooth things. They are angry at them, and at parents and friends, because they reprove and admonish them. We may certainly say in such a case, "I know God is determined to destroy thee;" for the word of God declares, "he that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy."

28. * So the versions, many mss. and 2 King. xiv. 20.

3. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." Amaziah, hot-headed and flushed with victory, would defy the hosts of Israel; and this was 'because his heart was lifted up.' This is the cause of many disorders. It is not men's substance, their honours, or their victories, which do them mischief, but their pride; 'their hearts are lifted up.' The story we have been considering confirms the usefulness of Solomon's advice, "Go not forth hastily to strive, lest thou know not what to do in the end thereof, when thy neighbour has put thee to shame."

do with the gods? answered, "Let them alone, they are good for nothing, since they could not defend their worshippers."

16. Thou be smitten. He had probably here a reference to Zechariah, who was put to death in the former reign for his faithful reproof, ch. xiv. 21.

CHAPTER XXVI.

B. C. 810. Uzziah's reign; he invades the priest's office, and is struck with the leprosy.

1 THEN all the people of Judah took Uzziah, who was sixteen years old, and made him king
2 in the room of his father Amaziah. He rebuilt Elath, and restored it to Judah, after that the 3 late king had slept with his fathers. Sixteen years old was Uzziah when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty-two years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Jecoliah of Jerusalem.
4 And he did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, according to all that his father Amaziah
5 at first did. And he sought God while Zechariah lived, who instructed him in the "fear" of God: and as long as he sought Jehovah, he
6 caused him to prosper. And he went forth and fought against the Philistines, and broke down the wall of Gath, and the wall of Jabneh, and the wall of Ashdod, and built other cities about 7 Ashdod, and among the Philistines. And God helped him against the Philistines, and against the Arabians who dwelt in Gur-baal, and the 8 "Ammonites". And the Ammonites gave gifts to Uzziah: and his name spread to the entrance of Egypt; for he had become exceedingly 9 strong. Moreover, Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem, at the corner-gate, and at the valley-gate, and at the angles of the wall, and fortified
10 them. He also built towers in the wilderness, and digged many wells: for he had many cattle both in the valleys and in the plains: ground-tillers, and vine-dressers in the mountains, and 11 in Carmel: for he loved husbandry. Moreover, Uzziah had a host of warriors, who went out to war by bands, according to the number enrolled by Jeiel, the scribe, and Maaseiah, the ruler, under direction of Hananiah, one of the king's captains. The whole number of paternal chiefs, 12 men of valour, were two thousand and six hundred. And under these was an army of three 13 hundred and seven thousand and five hundred warriors, a powerful host, to help the king against the enemy. And Uzziah prepared for 14 them, for all the host, shields, and spears, and helmets, and breast-plates, and bows, and stone-slings. And he made in Jerusalem engines, 15 invented by skilful men, to be on the towers and upon the bulwarks, to shoot arrows and great stones. And his name spread far abroad; for, assisted by such inventions, he attained wonderful power.

But when he had become strong, his heart 16 was lifted up to his own destruction: for he transgressed against Jehovah, his God, and went into the temple of Jehovah, to burn incense upon the incense-altar. And Azariah, 17 the priest, went in after him, and with him, eighty priests of Jehovah, valiant men: And 18 they withstood Uzziah, the king, and said to him, "Not to thee, Uzziah, belongeth it to burn incense to Jehovah, but to the priests, the sons of Aaron, who have been hallowed to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; nor shall this be to thy honour from God Jehovah." Then Uzziah was wroth, and 19 took a censer in his hand to burn incense: and while he was wroth with the priests, the leprosy broke out on his forehead, in the presence of the priests, in the house of Jehovah, from beside the incense-altar. And Azariah, the chief 20 priest, and all the priests, looked upon him; and, behold, he was leprous in his forehead, and they thrust him out thence; yea, himself hastened also to go out, because Jehovah had

It is probable that his father died when he was about four years old, and twelve years after that the people made him king in the room of his father.

7. Ammonites. I have adopted this reading because it obtains in the next verse. The Greek has in both places, the Maonites, which Gaddes adopts.

8—10. He rebuilt the wall that was demolished in his father's time by the king of Israel, and built towers to defend it.

14, 15. Uzziah seems to have been warlike, and to have encouraged every invention for the purpose of attack or defence.

16. To burn incense, &c. It is difficult to assign any just reason for this strange conduct. It was a violation of the law, which permitted none but the sons of Aaron to approach the incense-altar. Perhaps he wanted to be like the heathen princes; or to imitate his father, who burnt incense.

21 smitten him. And Uzziah, the king, was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt as a leper, in a separate apartment; for he was cut off from the house of Jehovah: and Jotham, his son, was over the king's house, judging the people of the land.

22 Now the rest of the acts of Uzziah, first and last, did Isaiah, the prophet, the son of Amoz, 23 write. Uzziah then slept with his fathers, and they buried him with his fathers in the burying-ground which belonged to the kings; for they said, "He is a leper:" and Jotham, his son, reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XXVII.

B. C. 758. The reign of Jotham, who subdueth the Ammonites.

1 JOTHAM was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Jerusha, 2 the daughter of Zadok. And he did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, according to all that his father Uzziah did. Only he did not go into the temple of Jehovah; and the people 3 were still depraved. He built the high-gate of the house of Jehovah, and on the wall of Ophel

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVI. 1. We may learn, that the way to secure prosperity is to seek and to serve God. As long as Uzziah did so, 'God made him to prosper exceedingly.' All prosperity comes from God, and it is most likely to be found in the ways of piety. Whatever was peculiar to that dispensation, still it is to be remembered, that "godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

2. We see from what we have read, that it is no easy matter to enjoy prosperity with moderation and thankfulness. When Uzziah had become strong, his heart was lifted up. He had large forces against his enemies, and subdued them; but pride subdued him. Good men as well as great men are in danger of this. We have need to watch our hearts against the encroachments of so dangerous a foe; and to pray, that we may not enter into so common and hurtful a temptation.

3. Learn how jealous God is for the purity of his institutions and the order of his house; who made this great and glorious, and in other before the gods of Edom; or Jeroboam, who did so before his calves.

20. Jehovah had smitten him. This was a very remarkable punishment. He aspired at honour, and was smitten with a loathsome disease. He invaded the priest's office, and was angry with them, and now was smitten with a disease which was subject to their inspection. For coming into the sanctuary, he was expelled the outer court, where the meanest subject might enter. By aspiring to the priestly office, he lost the royal dignity.

he built much. Moreover, he built cities on the 4 mountains of Judah, and in the forests he built castles and towers.

He fought also with the king of the Ammon- 5 ites, and prevailed against them. And the children of Ammon gave him the same year a hundred talents of silver, and ten thousand cores of wheat, and ten thousand of barley. So much did the children of Ammon pay unto him both the second year, and the third. So Jotham 6 became mighty, because he prepared his ways before Jehovah, his God.

Now the rest of the acts of Jotham, and all 7 his wars, and his ways, lo, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah. He 8 was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. And Jotham slept with his fathers, and they 9 buried him in the city of David: and Ahaz, his son, reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

B. C. 741. Ahaz's wicked reign; he is attacked by the Syrians; his idolatry and death.

AHAZ was twenty-five years old when he 1

respects, good king, so awful a monument of his displeasure. We have no such particular laws now; but the reason of the thing, and the rule of the gospel, require men to keep within their own sphere and calling; and especially not to invade the ministerial office: it is pride and ignorance which sometimes embolden men to do it. But 'it is not for their honour before the Lord God,' nor for the honour of their ministry. Let every man abide in his own calling, and in that aim to glorify God.

REFLECTION UPON CHAPTER XXVII. Jotham imitated the example of his father, in his regard to the temple; and awed by the judgment inflicted for his presumption in invading the priest's office, he made no attempt to invade the sanctuary. He is not charged with any crimes, and appears to have enjoyed great peace and prosperity. Happy the people whose king rules with justice and mercy, and who cultivates peace in the spirit of peace. Such is the king of Zion, and blessed are they who obey him.

CHAP. XXVII. 1. Compare 2 Kings, xv. 32-38.

2. Did not go into the temple, &c. He was probably afraid, from what had happened to his father: but whether his not frequenting the temple is there meant, or his not daring to enter the sanctuary, is not easily determined: although I think the context requires us to take it in the latter sense. The bad example of the king tended to deprave the people.

CHAP. XXVIII. 1-4. Compare 2 Kings, xvi. 1-4, and the notes.

began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem: but he did not what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, like David his fore-father. 2 But he walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, and made also molten images for Baal. 3 Moreover, he burnt incense in the valley of the son of Hinnom, and burnt his children in the fire, after the abominable custom of the nations whom Jehovah had cast out before the children of Israel. 4 He sacrificed also, and burnt incense on the high-places, and on the hills, and under every green tree. 5 Wherefore Jehovah, his God, delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria; and they smote him, and carried away a great multitude of his people captives, and brought them to Damascus.

And he was also delivered into the hand of the king of Israel, who smote him with a great slaughter. 6 For Pekah, the son of Remaliah, slew in Judah, a hundred and twenty thousand in one day, all valiant men; because they had forsaken Jehovah, the God of their fathers. 7 And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, slew Maaseiah, the king's son, and Azrikam, the governor of the house, and Elkanah, who was 8 next to the king. And the children of Israel carried away captive of their brethren, two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters; and took also away much spoil from them, and 9 brought the spoil to Samaria. But a prophet of Jehovah was there, whose name was Oded: and he went out to meet the host before they came to Samaria, and said to them, "Behold, because Jehovah, the God of your fathers, was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them with a rage 10 that reacheth up unto the heavens. And now ye purpose to reduce the children of Judah and Jerusalem for bond-men and bond-women to yourselves: are there then no sins among yourselves against Jehovah, your God? Now, 11 therefore, hear me, and deliver back the captives whom you have taken from among your brethren: otherwise the fierce wrath of Jehovah will fall upon you." Then certain of the chiefs 12 of the children of Ephraim, Azariah, the son of Johanan, Berechiah, the son of Meshillemoth, and Jehizkiah, the son of Shallum, and Amasa, the son of Hadlai, stood up against these who came from the war, And said to them, "Ye 13 shall not bring in hither these captives, to increase our guilt before Jehovah. Intend ye to add to our sins and to our trespass? for our trespass is great, and fierce is the wrath of Jehovah" against Israel." So the armed men left 14 the captives and the spoil, with the chiefs and the whole congregation. And the men above 15 named, rose up, and took the captives, and out of the spoil clothed all among them that were naked; yea, they clothed them, and shod them, and gave them to eat and to drink, and anointed them, and carried all the feeble of them upon asses, and brought them to Jericho, the city of palm-trees, to their brethren; and they returned to Samaria.

And at that time, king Abaz sent to the king 16 of Assyria to help him. For again the Edomites had come and smitten Judah, and carried away captives. The Philistines also had invaded the cities of the low country, and of the south of Judah, and had taken Beth-shemesh, and Ajalon, and Gedereth, and Shocho, with its villages, and Timnah, with its villages, Gimzo also, and its villages: and they dwelt there. For Jehovah brought Judah low because of 17 Abaz, king of "Judah"; for he made Judah defenceless, having so grievously transgressed against Jehovah. And Tiglath-pileser, king 20

8. Two hundred thousand. This number is most probably erroneous. A hundred and ten thousand valiant men slain in one day; and two hundred thousand taken captives, must have nearly left the country desolate. The versions have the same number as the text; and some copies of the Septuagint have 300,000, and one 800,000! One manuscript has 1,000.

9-15. The address of the prophet and the determination of the leading men of Israel, saved these helpless Judahites from a miserable captivity. The mutual wars of the kingdoms of Israel and of Judah, hastened the ruin of both.

 21 and strengthened him not. For Ahaz took away a portion out of the house of Jehovah, and out of the house of the king, and of the chiefs, and gave it to the king of Assyria; but he helped him not.
 22 And in the time of his distress, he trespassed
 23 yet more against Jehovah. For this king Ahaz said, "I will seek to" the gods of Damascus, who smote me:" for he said, "Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, I will sacrifice to them, that they may help me." But they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.
 24 Ahaz now collected "all" the utensils of the house of God, and cut in pieces the utensils of the house of God, and shut up the doors of the house of Jehovah, and made for himself altars
 25 in every corner of Jerusalem. And in every other city of Judah, he made high-places to burn incense to other gods, and provoked to anger, Jehovah, the God of his fathers.
 26 Now the rest of his acts and all his ways, first and last, behold, they are written in the book
 27 of the kings of Judah and Israel. And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city of Jerusalem: but they brought him not into the sepulchres of the kings of Judah: and Hezekiah, his son, reigned in his stead.

REFLECTION UPON CHAPTER XXVIII. We may here see the dreadful effects of folly and impiety. The counsellors of Ahaz were weak and impolitic, and a total disregard of God was manifest in his actions. The most awful calamities brought on his country, were insufficient to bring him to reason, and to a sense of duty. The eloquence of Isaiah made no impression on his obdurate heart; but he pears that the king of Assyria came against Damascus, took it and carried the people captive. But he did not effectually help Ahaz; for he received the treasures, but did not aid him against Israel and the other nations.

name was Abia, the daughter of Zechariah. And he did what was right, in the eyes of Jehovah, according to all that David his fore-father had done.

In the first month of the first year of his reign, 3 he opened the doors of the house of Jehovah, and repaired them. And having assembled the 4 priests and Levites, he brought them into the eastern area of the temple, And said to them; 5 "Hearken to me ye Levites! Hallow now yourselves, and hallow the house of Jehovah, the God of your fathers, and carry away the filth out of the sanctuary. For our fathers have 6 trespassed, and done evil in the eyes of Jehovah, our God, and have forsaken him, and have turned away their faces from the habitation of Jehovah, and turned to him their backs. Also they have shut the doors of the porch, 7 and put out the lamps, and have not burnt incense nor offered burnt-offerings in the holy place, unto the God of Israel. Hence the 8 wrath of Jehovah hath fallen upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them up to tribulation, to desolation, and hissing, as ye see with your eyes. For, lo, for this our fathers 9 have fallen by the sword, and our sons and our daughters, and our wives, are in captivity. Now it is my purpose to make a covenant with 10 Jehovah, the God of Israel, that his fierce wrath may be turned from us. My sons, be not now 11 negligent: for you hath Jehovah chosen to stand before him, to serve him, to minister to him, and to burn incense."

Then the Levites arose, Mahath, the son of 12 Amasai, and Joel, the son of Azariah, of the

went on from bad to worse, until he had devoted the temple itself to idols. Under the conduct of such a shepherd, it is not wonderful that the sheep should be scattered and destroyed. Let this awful example warn us to avoid all disrespect to God, his word, or his house, lest he should arm all creatures against us, and make us miserable both in this world and that which is to come.

CHAP. XXIX. 1. Daughter of Zechariah. Compare 2 Kings, xviii. 2. and the note.

5—11. Hezekiah seems sensible of the cause of the calamities of his country; and begins his reign with restoring the worship of the God of sons of the Kohathites: and of the sons of Merari, Kish, the son of Abdi, and Azariah, the son of Jehalelel: and of the Gershonites; Joah, the son of Zimmah, and Eden, the son of Joah:

13 And of the sons of Elizaphan, Shimri and Jeiel: and of the sons of Asaph; Zechariah, and Mataniah: And of the sons of Heman; Jehiel, and Shimei: and of the sons of Jeduthun; She-
 15 maiah, and Uzziel. And they assembled their brethren, and hallowed themselves, and came, according to the command of the king, in reference to the matters of Jehovah, to cleanse
 16 the house of Jehovah. And the priests went into the inner part of the house of Jehovah, to cleanse it, and brought out all the filth which they found in the temple of Jehovah, into the court of the house of Jehovah; and the Levites took and carried it forth unto the brook Kidron.

17 Now they began to cleanse, on the first day of the first month; and on the eighth day of the month, they came to the porch of the house of Jehovah; and in eight days more they cleansed the house of Jehovah; so that on the sixteenth
 18 day of the first month they finished. They then went in to Hezekiah, the king, and said, "We have cleansed the whole house of Jehovah, and the altar of burnt-offering, with all its utensils, and the presence-bread table, with all its uten-
 19 sils. Moreover, all the utensils which king Ahaz, in his reign, 'profaned', have we prepared and hallowed, and, behold, they are before the altar of Jehovah.

20 Then Hezekiah, the king, rose early, and assembled the rulers of the city, and went up 21 to the house of Jehovah. And they brought seven steers, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he-goats, for a sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah. And he commanded the priests, the sons of

Aaron, to offer them on the altar of Jehovah. So they killed the steers, and the priests received the blood, and sprinkled it on the altar: likewise, when they had killed the rams, they sprinkled the blood upon the altar: they killed also the lambs, and they sprinkled the blood upon the altar. And they brought forth the he-23 goats for the sin-offering, before the king and the congregation; and they laid their hands upon them. And the priests killed them, and 24 they made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, to make an atonement for all Israel: for the king had commanded that the burnt-offering and the sin-offering should be made for all Israel. And he stationed the Levites in the 25 house of Jehovah with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, according to the command of David, and of Gad, the king's seer, and of Nathan, the prophet: for such was the command of Jehovah, by his prophets. And the Levites
 26 stood with the instruments of David, and the priests with the trumpets. Hezekiah then com-
 27 manded them to offer the burnt-offering upon the altar. And when the burnt-offering began, the song of Jehovah also began, accompanied with the trumpets, and with the instruments devised by David, king of Israel. And all the 28 congregation worshipped; and the singers sang, and the trumpeters sounded, until the burnt-offering was finished. And when they had 29 made an end of offering, the king and all that were present with him, bowed themselves, and worshipped. Moreover, Hezekiah, the king,
 30 and the chiefs, commanded the Levites to sing praise to Jehovah with the words of David, and of Asaph, the seer. And they sang praises with gladness; and they bowed their heads and worshipped. Then Hezekiah addressed them,
 31 and said, "Now ye have consecrated yourselves

Israel, as the best means of removing them, and securing prosperity.

19. Profaned. This is more probable than the common text; for the utensils of the temple were too valuable to be thrown away; but it is natural to think that as Ahaz profaned the temple itself, by idols, so he profaned the utensils by using them in their service. See note Hebrew Bible.

21. He-goats. Bishop Patriek has observed, that the words עִזִּים were not used prior to the captivity to denote a he-goat; and hence infers that Ezra was the author of the second book of Chronicles.—Seven he-goats. The law only appointed one of each as a sin-offering; but as their transgressions had been heinous, Hezekiah ordered seven, one seven times over.

27. The song of Jehovah. Some have thought that this was the 136th Psalm, which seems to be adapted to the daily worship.

to Jehovah, come near, and bring sacrifices of thanksgiving into the house of Jehovah. And the congregation brought in sacrifices of thanksgiving; and as many as were of a willing heart, 32 burnt-offerings. And the number of the burnt-offerings, which the congregation brought, was seventy steers, a hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt-offering 33 to Jehovah. And the consecrated things were six hundred oxen, and three thousand sheep. 34 But the priests were too few, so that they could not slay all the burnt-offerings; therefore their brethren, the Levites, helped them, till the work was ended, and until the other priests had hallowed themselves: for the Levites were more upright in heart to hallow themselves 35 than the priests. For the burnt-offerings also were in abundance, with the fat of the feast-offerings, and the drink-offerings, for every burnt-offering. Thus the service of the house 36 of Jehovah was set in order. And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, that God had so disposed the people: for the thing had been suddenly done.

CHAPTER XXX.

B. C. 726. Hezekiah orders a solemn pass-over to be proclaimed; the altars of idols demolished, &c.

1 AND Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah, and wrote letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come to the house of Jehovah, at Jerusalem, to keep the pass-over unto Jehovah, the God of Israel. For the 2 king, and his chiefs, and the whole congregation in Jerusalem, had taken counsel to keep the pass-over, in the second month. For they 3 could not keep it at that time, because the priests had not sufficiently hallowed themselves, neither had all the people assembled at Jerusalem. And the thing pleased the king and the 4 whole congregation. So they decreed to make 5 proclamation throughout all Israel, from Beersheba even to Dan, that they should come to keep the pass-over unto Jehovah, the God of Israel, at Jerusalem: for they had not kept it, as prescribed, for a long time. Foot-posts then 6 went with the letters from the king and his chiefs throughout all Israel and Judah, with the king's orders, to say, "Ye children of Israel, turn again unto Jehovah, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and he will return to the remnant of you, who have escaped out of the hand of the kings of Assyria. And be not like 7 your fathers, and like your brethren, who trespassed against Jehovah, the God of their fathers, who therefore gave them up to desolation as ye see. Now be ye not stiff-necked, as your 8 fathers were; submit yourselves to Jehovah, and enter into his sanctuary which he hath hallowed for ever: and serve Jehovah, your God, that the fierceness of his wrath may be turned away from you. For if ye turn again to 9 Jehovah, your brethren and your children shall find compassion among those, who have led REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIX. 1. We learn from this account, how awfully the king and the people had departed from the God of their fathers! His temple was converted to the vilest purposes. The lamps extinguished; the altar, the sanctuary, and the holy utensils profaned! The daily service wholly omitted, and the voice of prayer and praise never heard. God's beautiful house full of filth. How dreadful is the state of a people who have thus apostatized, and have become devoted to every abomination. This is an emblem of the soul of the sinner.—The lamp of the understanding darkened, through ignorance; the altar of the heart polluted, and the sanctuary of the affections devoted to profane idols.

is obviously an idiom, when used to begin a discourse, and should be rendered accordingly. It is frequent in the New Testament.

CHAP. XXX. 2. In the second month. According to the law, it was to be kept until the 14th day of the first month; but in case any man was

2. What joy must the righteous feel, in the change which Hezekiah effected! They had sighed in secret, and been hid from the notice of the wicked; for when the foundations were destroyed, what could they do? They had seen the wicked walk on every side, when the vilest men were exalted. But now they found that the time to favour Zion, yea, the set time, was come; and with devout and adoring gratitude, they joined in the song of Jehovah. What mercy, undeserved mercy, to Judah, for God to raise up such a character as Hezekiah. O that we may imitate him in his regard to God, to his house, and his worship; and then we may hope to be saved from all our enemies, however powerful.

unclean, &c. he might keep it in the second month. Comp. Num. ix. 10, 11. This was their case; the temple was not hallowed, nor could they be prepared before the second month.

8. Submit yourselves. Literally, 'give the hand,' which both denoted them captive, so that they shall come again into this land: for Jehovah, your God, is gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him." So the posts passed on from city to city, through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh, even to Zebulun: but they laughed at them, and taunted them. Nevertheless, some of Asher and of Zebulun humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem. But in Judah, the hand of God had given them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the chiefs, according to the word of Jehovah.

13 And there assembled at Jerusalem many people to keep the feast of unleavened bread, in the second month, a very great congregation.

14 And they arose and took away the altars which were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into the brook

15 Kidron. Then they killed the pass-over, on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the priests and the Levites were now ashamed, and they hallowed themselves, and brought the burnt-offerings into the house of Jehovah.

16 And they stood in their place after their manner, according to the law of Moses, the man of God: the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received from the hand of the Levites.

17 For there were many in the congregation who were not hallowed: therefore the Levites had the charge of the killing of the pass-over for every one that was not clean, so as to be hal-

18 lowed to Jehovah. For very many of the people, many of Ephraim, and Manasseh, Issachar, and Zebulun, had not cleansed themselves, yet did they eat the pass-over, contrary to what was prescribed. But Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, "May the good Jehovah pardon every one, Who hath prepared his heart to seek Jehovah, the God of his fathers, although not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary." And Jehovah hearkened to Hezekiah, and was reconciled to the people.

So the children of Israel who were present at Jerusalem, kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with great gladness; and the Levites and the priests praised Jehovah, day by day, with instruments of sacred music. And Hezekiah spoke comfortably to all the Levites who best understood the worship of Jehovah, that they would "complete" the seven days fast, offering feast-offerings, and making confession to Jehovah, the God of their fathers. And the whole assembly resolved to keep other seven days; and they kept the feast other seven days with gladness. For Hezekiah, king of Judah, gave to the congregation, a thousand steers, and seven thousand sheep; and the chiefs gave to the congregation, a thousand steers, and ten thousand sheep; and a great number of priests hallowed themselves. And the whole congregation of Judah, with the priests and the Levites, and the whole congregation that had come out of Israel, and the strangers that had come out of the land of Israel, and that dwelt in Judah, rejoiced. So there was great joy in Jerusalem: for since the time of Solomon, the son of David, king of Israel, there had not been the like in Jerusalem.

Then the priests, the Levites, arose and blessed the people; and Jehovah hearkened to their voice, and their prayer went up to his holy dwelling-place in the heavens.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXX. 1. Where good men are anxious for the conversion of sinners to God, and use every method to effect it, they are often treated with every mark of disrespect. It is no new thing for messengers who come on the most important concerns, and in the most friendly way, to be despised and scorned. One would have thought the Israelites should at least have given Hezekiah submission and a renewal of their covenant with him. Comp. 1 Chron. xxix. 24. Ezra, x. 19. and Ezek. xvii. 18.

10. They laughed at them. This shows the hardened state of the people. God's service was the subject of their unhallowed mirth; but soon were the bonds of these mockers made strong.

20. Reconciled. I have adopted the Arabic sense of נָחַם here, as best agreeing with the context; for we have no reason to think that those who attended were smitten with any disease.

22. Would complete. This reading seems more natural than the common text; for surely there was no reason for the king to exhort the priests to eat, but there was to persevere in the laborious service of killing and offering victims for other seven days.

CHAPTER XXXI.

B. C. 726. Idols destroyed; tithes and offerings brought; the king's integrity and success.

- 1 Now when all this was finished, all Israel that were present, went out to the cities of Judah, and broke the statues in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high-places and the altars, in all Judah and Benjamin; in Ephraim also and Manasseh, until they had utterly destroyed them all. Then all the children of Israel returned to their own cities, every man to his own possession.
- 2 And Hezekiah appointed the courses of the priests and the Levites according to their classes; each of the priests and Levites according to his service; for offering burnt-offerings, and feast-offerings, to minister, give thanks, and praise
- 3 at the gates of the camp of Jehovah. He also appointed a portion of his own property for the burnt-offerings, for the morning and evening burnt-offerings, and the burnt-offerings for the sabbaths, and for the new moons, and for the stated feasts, as it is written in the law of
- 4 Jehovah. Moreover, he commanded the people who dwelt in Jerusalem, to give the portion due to the priests and the Levites, that they might be wholly employed in the law of Jehovah.
- 5 And as soon as the commandment went abroad, the children of Israel brought, in abundance, the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundance. And Judah, and the children of Israel, who dwelt in the cities of Judah, they also brought in the tithe of oxen and sheep; and the tithe of holy things which were hallowed to Jehovah, their God, they laid in heaps. In the third month they began to lay the heaps, and finished them in the seventh month. And when Hezekiah and the chiefs came and saw the heaps, they blessed Jehovah, and his people Israel. Then Hezekiah questioned the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps; And Azariah, the chief-priest of the house of Zadok, answered him, and said, "Since the people began to bring their offerings into the house of Jehovah, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty: for Jehovah hath blessed his people; and that which is left, is this great store."

Then Hezekiah commanded chambers to be prepared in the house of Jehovah; and they prepared them, And brought in the offerings and the tithes, and the dedicated things faithfully: over which Cononiah, the Levite, was ruler, and Shimei, his brother, was the next. And Jehiel, and Azariah, and Nahath, and Asahel, and Jerimoth, and Jozabad, and Eliel, and Ismachiah, and Mahath, and Benaiah, were overseers under Cononiah, and Shimei, ah's messengers a civil reception: but they mocked them, and laughed them to scorn. So the gospel of reconciliation is often treated; and the kind invitations of the king of heaven are often despised. But the consequences will be dreadful. "Such despisers shall wonder and perish." It is, however, some consolation, that, if many reject the gospel message, there are some who receive it, and to whom it is a savour of life unto life.

2. Hezekiah's prayer for the people may properly be adopted by us in our approaches to God. The great thing is to prepare the heart to seek God: to have a sincere mind, and a fixed intention to serve him: there may be defects in our wandering thoughts, in the frame of our spirits; when they are not such as we could wish, or desire, we may go to God by prayer, intreat him to pardon us, and accept our sincere endeavours through Christ, notwithstanding these unallowed imperfections. "Let us, therefore, come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in the time of need."

3. Religious services ought always to be attended with joy. This is often repeated, "They kept the feast with gladness, and rejoiced with great joy." All religious duties should be performed with pleasure; we should come to them with delight; endeavour to keep our hearts cheerful. "Pray without ceasing, and rejoice evermore," is the Apostolic direction.

CHAP. XXXI. 2. Camp of Jehovah. The whole space within the outer wall that surrounded the temple, is thus called, because here the people assembled to worship, and here the musicians and singers were stationed.

14 of God. And Korah, the son of Imnah, the Levite, the door-keeper at the east-gate, was over the free-will-offerings of God, to distribute the oblations of Jehovah, and the most holy 15 things. And next to him were Eden, and Benjamin, and Joshua, and Shemaiah; Azariah, and Shecaniah; whose office was to give a portion to their brethren in the cities of the 16 priests, according to their courses, whether great or small: Besides to those of their males reckoned from three years old and upward, (to every one coming into the house of Jehovah, his daily portion,) for their ministerial service
17 according to their courses. Now the priests and the Levites were reckoned according to their paternal houses, from twenty years old and upward, in their ministrations by their courses;
18 And the whole multitude of their little ones, their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, were taken into the account; of those who 19 had faithfully hallowed themselves. And to the sons of Aaron, the priests, who were in the fields of the suburbs of their cities, in every city, the men above named gave also portions;

CHAP. XXXI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXI. 1. We are here taught, that the influence of religious ordinances should be shown, by zealously seeking to promote piety at home and around us. We are not to think all is over when the sabbath is done; or that it is sufficient to have performed the public duties of it; for then the hardest work begins; to cherish good impressions, and put in practice the good instructions we have received. "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only."

2. It is a natural inference from this chapter, that where there is a love to God and his house, and a concern for the interest of religion, there will be a care for the comfortable maintenance of ministers. Hezekiah was solicitous not only to have them maintained, but also

16. Three years old, &c. The male children of the Levites, above three years old, were allowed to come to the temple with their fathers, and share in the distribution. In their time of waiting they brought their families with them.

17. Twenty years old. In the law it was from thirty years old; but David altered this, probably by divine appointment, as the numbers of the people and the proselytes increased. 1 Chron. xxiii. 26.

18. Hallowed themselves. This is given as a reason why such care was taken of their families, because they were either employed in the temple, or in teaching the people at home; and would otherwise have been to all the males among the priests, and to all the Levites, who were reckoned among them.

And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah; acting with goodness, uprightness, and faithfulness before Jehovah, his God. And in every work that he began for the service of the house of God, and in respect to the law, and the commandments, in seeking his God, he performed with his whole heart; hence he prospered.

CHAPTER XXXII.

B. C. 713. Sennacherib's invasion, and defeat; Hezekiah's sickness and recovery.

AFTER these things were faithfully accomplished, Sennacherib, king of Assyria, came, and entered into Judah; and encamped against the fortified cities, and thought to gain them by force to himself. And when Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib had come, and that he had purposed to fight against Jerusalem, He took counsel with his chiefs and his mighty men, to stop the water-fountains which were without the city: and they assisted him. And many people were assembled, who stopped all the fountains, and the brook that ran through the encouraged in the work of God. Those who experience the benefit and comfort of a good ministry, will never grudge the expense of it.

3. The way to secure the blessing of God, is to do that which is right, and to do it uprightly. Whatever is agreeable to the nature and will of God, should be done vigorously, and with resolution; with a sincere intention to please God, to profit men, and save ourselves: this will be to our own honour and comfort. The apostle Paul's rule is applicable to every circumstance in life, "Whatever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ." Lukewarmness in the service of God, is what he abhors and detests.

21. One circumstance of Hezekiah's wisdom and piety is not mentioned here, but may be inferred from Prov. xxv. 1. that he employed some skilful scribe to compare and write out copies of the law and other sacred writings; and also smaller collections of proverbs, which were scattered abroad in several hands. These he employed some priests or prophets to copy, and publish for the good of his kingdom.

midst of the land, saying, "Why should the kings of Assyria come, and find much water?" He also took courage, and repaired all the wall that was broken, and erected towers above, and another outer wall. He also strengthened Millo in the city of David, and made darts and shields 6 in abundance. And he appointed captains of war over the people, and assembled them to himself in the area, at the gate of the city, and 7 spoke comfortably to them, saying, "Be strong and courageous; be not afraid nor dismayed on account of the king of Assyria, nor on account of all the multitude that is with him: for he with us is more powerful, than all those with 8 him. With him is an arm of flesh; but with us is Jehovah, our God, to help us, and to fight our battles." And the people relied on the words of Hezekiah, king of Judah.

9 After this, Sennacherib, king of Assyria, (who himself, with all his forces, then besieged Lachish,) sent his servants to Jerusalem, unto Hezekiah, king of Judah, and unto all Judah 10 that were at Jerusalem, saying, "Thus saith Sennacherib, king of Assyria, 'On what do ye rely, that ye would abide a siege in Jerusalem? 11 Is it not Hezekiah who persuadeth you to give yourselves up to die by famine and by thirst, saying, 'Jehovah, our God, will deliver us out 12 of the hand of the king of Assyria?' Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high-places and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, 'Ye shall worship before one altar, and burn incense upon it?' 13 Know ye not what I and my fathers have done to all the people of other lands? were the gods of those nations at all able to deliver their lands 14 out of my hand? Who was there among all the gods of those nations, whom my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of my hand, that your God should be able to deliver 15 you out of my hand? Now, therefore, let not Hezekiah deceive you, nor persuade you in this: believe him not: for as no god of any nation or kingdom hath been able to deliver his people out of my hand, and out of the hand of my fathers, how shall your God deliver you out of my hand?" And his servants spoke yet 16 more against God Jehovah, and against his servant Hezekiah. He wrote also letters to 17 reproach Jehovah, the God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, "As the gods of other nations have not delivered their people out of my hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of my hand." Then 18 they cried with a loud voice, in the Jewish language, to the people of Jerusalem who were on the wall, to terrify and confound them; that they might take the city. And they spoke 19 against the God of Jerusalem, as against the gods of other nations, which were the work of men's hands.

On this, Hezekiah, the king, and the prophet 20 Isaiah, the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven. And Jehovah sent an angel, 21 who cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria; and he returned, with shame of face, to his own land. And when he had gone into the house of his god, the offspring of his own loins slew him there with the sword. Thus Jehovah saved Hezekiah and the inhabi- 22 tants of Jerusalem, from Sennacherib, the king of Assyria, and from all "their enemies", and defended them on every side. And many 23 brought offerings to Jehovah to Jerusalem, and presents to Hezekiah, king of Judah: so that thenceforth he was magnified in the eyes of all nations.

In those days, Hezekiah was sick unto death, 24 and prayed to Jehovah: and he "hearkened to" him, and gave to him a token of recovery. But Hezekiah rendered not according to the 25 benefit conferred on him; for he became proud in heart: therefore was wrath kindled against

27 And Hezekiah had riches and glory in abundance: and he made for himself treasuries for silver, and for gold, and for precious stones, and for spices, and for shields, and for all kinds

28 of valuable utensils. Store-houses also for the increase of corn, and wine, and oil; and stalls for all kinds of cattle, and sheep-cotes for 29 flocks. Moreover, he built cities for himself; and possessed flocks and herds in abundance: for God gave to him very much substance.

30 This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper water-course of Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west-side of the city of David: for

31 Hezekiah prospered in all his works. But in respect to the ambassadors, the princes *of the king" of Babylon, who were sent unto him to inquire concerning the miracle, that had been done in the land, God left him, to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart.

32 Now the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and his goodness, behold, they are written in the vision of Isaiah, the prophet, the son of Amoz, and in the book of the kings of Judah and

33 Israel. And Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the chief of the sepulchres of the sons of David; and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem honoured him at his death. And Manasseh, his son, reigned in his stead.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXII. 1. We may learn that a believing confidence in God, is the best remedy against the fear of man. Hezekiah exhorted the people to be strong and courageous: and why? because God was for them. Our enemies endeavour to frighten us from this, because it is our best security; but let us resist such temptations, "and have our hearts fixed, trusting in the Lord." The fear of our maker will prevent the fear of the fury of the oppressor. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower; the righteous runneth into it, and is safe."

B. C. 698. Manasseh's wicked reign; he, when carried to Babylon, repents and is restored; his death.

Manasseh was twelve years old when he 1 began to reign, and he reigned fifty-five years in Jerusalem. But he did evil in the eyes of 2 Jehovah, like to the abominable deeds of the nations, whom Jehovah had cast out before the children of Israel.

For he rebuilt the high-places which Hezeki- 3 ah, his father, had broken down, and he reared up altars for Baal, and made groves, and worshipped all the host of the heavens, and served them. Also he built altars for idols in the 4 house of Jehovah, concerning which Jehovah said, "In Jerusalem shall my name be for ever." And he built altars for the whole host 5 of the heavens, in the two courts of the house of Jehovah. And he devoted his children by 6 fire, in the valley of the son of Hinnom: also he observed the clouds, and used divination, and practised augury, and encouraged necromancers, and wizards: he wrought much evil in the eyes of Jehovah, to provoke him to anger. And he set a carved grove-idol, made by 7 himself, in the house of God, of which God had said to David and to Solomon, his son, "In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen before all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever: Nor will I any more remove 8 the foot of Israel out of the land which I appointed for their fathers; provided they observe to do all that I have commanded them, accord-

CHAP. XXXIII.

2. When we are brought into difficulties, our confidence should always be accompanied with the use of proper means for our deliverance: so Hezekiah did. He fortified the city, and made weapons offensive and defensive. To trust in God without the use of proper means, is to tempt him. Prudence, valour, and piety, should always go together; and then they constitute a spiritual hero. The christian must unite the wisdom of the serpent with the harmlessness of the dove; and as a good, brave, and intrepid soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ, must endure hardships, with patience.

ing to the whole law, and the statutes, and the ordinances by Moses."

9 But Manasseh seduced Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, to do more evil than the nations, whom Jehovah had destroyed before 10 the children of Israel. And Jehovah spoke to Manasseh, and to his people; but they would 11 not hearken. Jehovah, therefore, brought upon them the captains of the host of the king of Assyria, who took Manasseh "alive", and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon.
12 But when, in his affliction, he besought Jehovah, his God, and humbled himself greatly 13 before the God of his fathers, And prayed to him, and intreated him; he heard his supplication, and brought him back to Jerusalem, unto his own kingdom. Then Manasseh acknowledged that Jehovah was the only God. Now after this, he built a wall without the city of David, on the west-side of Gihon, in the valley, even to the entrance of the fish-gate, and carried it about to Ophel, and raised it a very great height. And he put captains of 15 war in all the fortified cities of Judah. And he removed the strange gods, and the grove-idols, out of the house of Jehovah, and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the house of Jehovah, and in Jerusalem; and 16 cast them out of the city. And he repaired the altar of Jehovah, and sacrificed thereon feast-offerings, and thank-offerings, and commanded Judah to serve Jehovah, the God of 17 Israel. Nevertheless, the people still sacrificed on the high-places, yet to Jehovah, their God, only.

Now the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and his 18 prayer to his God, and the words of the seers who spoke to him in the name of Jehovah, the God of Israel, behold, they are written in the records of the kings of Judah. His prayer also 19 and its acceptance; and all his sins, and his trespasses, and where he built high-places, and set up carved grove-idols, before he was humbled: behold, they are written in the records of the seers.

And Manasseh slept with his fathers, and 20 they buried him in the garden of his own house; and Amon, his son, reigned in his stead. Amon 21 was twenty-two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned two years in Jerusalem. But he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, as at 22 first did Manasseh, his father: for Amon sacrificed unto all the carved idols which Manasseh, his father, had made, and served them; And 23 humbled not himself before Jehovah, as Manasseh, his father, had humbled himself; but Amon trespassed more and more. And his 24 servants conspired against him, and slew him in his own house; But the people of the land 25 slew all those who had conspired against king Amon: and the people of the land made Josiah, his son, king in his stead.

11. * So Syr. and Arab. the rest, among the thorns.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIII. 1. We are again admonished, that the way of transgressors is hard, and that if we follow their example, we must share their miseries. As Manasseh and Amon were like Ahab and his race, so they were punished like them. If men will presumptuously walk in an evil way, keep bad company, and say and do as the wicked, they must expect to be punished with them, or with heavier calamities, as their guilt is aggravated by what they have seen and known of the sufferings of others.

2. See the use of affliction to bring men to repentance.

11. Alive. The various reading of the Syriac and the Arabic is so natural and coherent, that I am satisfied it is the true one. For what can be meant by taking Manasseh "with thorns, or flesh-hooks, or among thorns?"

13. The only God. In his reform, he changed his chief minister, removing Shebna and appointing Eliakim. Is. xlii. 15-25.

Manasseh, while in prosperity, acted most wickedly and abominably. But when he got into prison, he began to think on his ways. The pleasures of the court intoxicated him; but the horrors of a prison brought him to himself. God's design in afflicting his people, is to take away sin, and bring them to repentance; which will show itself, as Manasseh's did, in humiliation, prayer, and reformation: to undo the mischief they have done, and strive to reform those they have corrupted, are fruits meet for repentance.

3. This history affords great encouragement to repentance.

19. In the records of the seers. We are here referred to some history then extant for a larger account of his sin and repentance. Particular notice is taken of his prayer; it is to be found in the Apocrypha, but whether genuine or not is uncertain; it is not unlikely but it may be so, for it is a good prayer, and much to the purpose.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

B. C. 896. The reign of Josiah; the book of the law found; he and the people enter into covenant.

- 1 JOSIAH was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem thirty-one
- 2 years. And he did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, and walked in the ways of David, his fore-father, and declined neither to the right hand nor to the left.
- 3 For in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David, his fore-father; and in the twelfth year he began to cleanse Judah and Jerusalem from the high-places, and the groves, and the
- 4 carved and molten idols. For in his presence were the altars of Baal broken down; and the solar statues, which were high above them, were destroyed. And the groves he cut down, and the carved and molten idols he broke in pieces, and stamped them to dust, and strowed upon the graves of those who had sacrificed to them.
- 5 And he burned the bones of the priests of the idols upon their own altars, and cleansed Judah
- 6 and Jerusalem. And in the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even unto Naphtali, he destroyed on every hand their idol temples.
- 7 And he demolished the altars and the groves, and stamped the carved idols to dust, and cut down all the solar statues throughout the whole land of Israel; and then returned to Jerusalem.
- 8 Now in the eighteenth year of his reign, when he had cleansed the land, and the house of Jehovah, he sent Shaphan, the son of Azaliah, and Maaseiah, the governor of the city, and Joah, the son of Joahaz, the recorder, to
- 9 repair the house of Jehovah, his God. And

CHAP. XXXIV.

We can scarcely conceive of a viler sinner than Manasseh, who was so wicked himself, and did so much mischief: yet when he repented, and prayed, God heard his supplication, renewed his prosperity, and lengthened his life: and, one would hope, saved his soul. This was designed as a pattern of divine long suffering.

when they came to Hilkiash, the high-priest, they delivered the money which was brought into the house of God, which the Levites, who kept the doors, had collected from Manasseh and Ephraim, and from all the remnant of Israel, and from all Judah and Benjamin, and from the inhabitants of Jerusalem. And they put it 10 in the hand of those who had the oversight of the work of the house of Jehovah, and they gave it to the workmen who wrought in the house of Jehovah, to repair and strengthen the house: To the artificers and builders gave they 11 it, to buy hewn stones, and timber for couplings, and to floor the apartments which the kings of Judah had destroyed. And the men 12 did the work faithfully, and their overseers to forward the work, were Jahath, and Obadiah, the Levites of the sons of Merari; and Zechariah and Meshullam, of the sons of the Kohathites, and such other Levites as were skilful musicians. Also over the burden-bearers, for 13 forwarding all those who did any kind of work, were the Levites, scribes, and officers, and gatekeepers.

And when fetching out the money which had 14 been brought into the house of Jehovah, Hilkiash, the priest, found the book of the law of Jehovah, written by Moses. And Hilkiash 15 spoke and said to Shaphan, the scribe, "I have found the book of the law, in the house of Jehovah." And Hilkiash delivered the book to Shaphan. And Shaphan carried the book to 16 the king, and brought back word to the king; saying, "All that was committed to thy servants, they have done. And they have collected 17 the money found in the house of Jehovah, and have delivered it into the hand of the overseers,

"Let the wicked, therefore, forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Such is the connexion between duty and privilege. The promise is sure to every penitent sinner.

18 and to the hand of the workmen." Then Shaphan, the scribe, told the king, saying, "Hilkiah, the priest, hath given to me a book."
 19 And Shaphan read it before the king. And, when the king had heard the words of the law,
 20 he rent his garments. And the king commanded Hilkiah, and Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, and Abdon, the son of Micah, and Shaphan, the scribe, and Asaiah, a servant
 21 of the king, saying, "Go, inquire of Jehovah for me, and for those that are left in Israel and in Judah, concerning the words of the book which is found: for great is the wrath of Jehovah, to be poured out upon us, because our fathers have not kept the word of Jehovah, by doing according to all that is written in this book."
 22 And Hilkiah, and they whom the king appointed, went to Huldah, the prophetess, (the wife of Shallum, the son of Tikvath, the son of Hasrah, keeper of the wardrobe,) who dwelt in the suburbs of Jerusalem, and on this subject spoke to her.
 23 And she answered them, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'Tell ye the man that
 24 sent you to me, 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon its inhabitants, even all the curses that are written in the book which hath been read before the king
 25 of Judah: Because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense to other gods, so as to provoke me to anger by all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be poured out upon this place, and shall not be quenched."
 26 But to the king of Judah, who sent you to inquire of Jehovah, thus shall ye say to him, 'Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'Because at the words which thou hast heard, Thy heart was softened, and thou didst humble thyself before God, when thou heardest my words against this place, and against its inhabitants, and humbledst thyself before me, and didst rend thy garments, and weep before me; I have even heard thee, saith Jehovah. Behold, I will gather thee to thy fathers, to thy grave in peace, neither shall thine eyes see all the evil that I will bring upon this place, and upon its inhabitants."

When they had reported these words to the king, The king then sent and assembled all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem. And the king, and all the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests, and the Levites, and the whole people, great and small, went up to the house of Jehovah: and he read in their hearing all the words of the book of the covenant that had been found in the house of Jehovah. And the king stood by a pillar, and made a covenant before Jehovah, to walk after Jehovah, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all his heart, and with all his soul, to perform the words of the covenant which are written in this book. And he caused all that were present in Jerusalem and Benjamin to stand to it. And the inhabitants of Jerusalem did according to the covenant of God, the God of their fathers. And Josiah took away all the abominations out of all the countries which belonged to the children of Israel, and made all that were present in Israel to serve Jehovah, their God. And during all his days, they departed not from following Jehovah, the God of their fathers.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIV. 1. We have here an eminent and lovely example of early piety. When only eight years old, Josiah was very good; he turned not to the right hand nor to the left; when sixteen he began to seek God more publicly. Early piety is peculiarly honourable to all young people, especially in persons of rank and fortune; and above all, amidst the prevalence of degeneracy and impiety. When very young, but eight years old, he began this work, and with growing years he pursued it. Let us "go and do likewise; for God loves them that love him, and they that seek him early shall find him."

2. We have great reason to thank God for his holy word. It was a sad time in Israel, when scarcely any copy of the law was attended at the temple; and the conduct of the idolatrous kings in destroying them, shows both their impiety and policy. They wished to banish those from the temple who might have been a hindrance to their schemes.

19. Rent his garments. It cannot be supposed that all the copies of the law were lost. Hezekiah had taken care to furnish the people with many: and their being and polity as a nation, as well as their religion, depended on the knowledge of the law. Perhaps they had, for the use of the priests and the king, some abstract, like our abridgment of the statutes; without the promises and threatenings, with which the king seemed so much affected, and which it is evident he had not before read. The king

CHAPTER XXXV.

D. C. 623. Josiah keepeth a solemn passover; opposing Pharaoh Necho he is slain.

- 1 MOREOVER, Josiah kept a pass-over to Jehovah in Jerusalem: and they killed the pass-over on the fourteenth day of the first month.
- 2 And he appointed the priests to their offices, and encouraged them to do the service of the house
- 3 of Jehovah. And he said to the Levites, who being hallowed to Jehovah, were to teach all Israel, "Put the holy ark in the house which Solomon, the son of David, king of Israel, built for it: for it is no more to be borne on your shoulders: serve now Jehovah, your God, and
- 4 his people Israel. And be prepared according to your paternal houses, and courses, as prescribed by David, king of Israel, and re-
- 5 peated by Solomon, his son. And attend at the sanctuary, according to the divisions of the paternal families of your brethren, the people; and according to the division of the fami-
- 6 lies of the Levites. So kill the pass-over, and hallow yourselves, and prepare your brethren, that they may do according to the word of found: no wonder they were so degenerate and wicked. This was a happy discovery of the original, as it both directed and quickened them in the reformation of their worship and lives. The king valued it highly; he read it, and took heed to it. Let us bless God for the holy scriptures, and let "our delight be in the law of the Lord." We do the greatest honour to them, when we read and study them daily, and regulate our sentiments and our lives by them.

3. We should cultivate that tenderness of heart which good Josiah manifested. Whenever we read the word, let us labour to have our hearts and consciences impressed with an holy fear of being impatient to know the contents, begins to read immediately, and as their books were written upon long scrolls, and rolled upon a stick, the latter part of Deuteronomy would come first in course, where he found those terrible threatenings, which so greatly impressed him, threatenings upon the king, as well as upon the people. Deut. xxviii. 36.

It is scarcely possible for words more naturally to describe a book written by Moses himself than, the words of the text; or to vouch more fully, that the manuscript of the law then found was in the hand-writing of Moses. And perhaps all doubt will be removed, when it is considered farther—that, though there are fifteen places in the Old Testament, which mention the words law of Moses and book of Moses, yet this one place only mentions the book of the law in the hand (or by the hand) of Moses: the reason of which seems to be, that the other places speak of that law in general; but this place speaks of one particular ms. namely, the original.

Jehovah by Moses."

Josiah then gave to the people, of the flock, 7 lambs and kids, all for the pass-over offerings, for all that were present, to the number of thirty thousand, and three thousand steers: these were from the king's own property. And his 8 chiefs gave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: Hilkiah, and Zechariah, and Jehiel, rulers of the house of God, gave unto the priests for the pass-over offerings, two thousand and six hundred lambs and kids, and three hundred oxen. Conaniah also, and 9 Shemaiah, and Nethaneel, his brethren, and Hashabiah, and Jeiel, and Jozabad, chief of the Levites, gave unto the Levites for pass-over offerings, five thousand lambs and kids, and five hundred oxen. So the service was prepa- 10 red, and the priests stood in their place, and the Levites in their courses, according to the king's commandment. And they killed the 11 pass-over victims, and the priests sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites flayed them. And they removed the burnt-offerings, 12 that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto Jeho-

that wrath which is revealed from heaven: let our flesh tremble for fear of God's judgments, and be deeply humbled under a sense of our guilt and violation of God's holy law: let us desire to know and do our duty, as therein described; and do what we can to reform and save others. Then, whatever becomes of them, the consequence will be happy to ourselves: we shall 'come to the grave in peace,' and go to a world of everlasting peace; for, thus saith the Lord, "to this man will I look, and with him will I dwell, who is of an humble and contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." Before honour is humility. One prepares and fits for the enjoyment of the other.

12—28. Compare 2 Kings, xxii. 8—20. and the notes; and verses 29—33. with 2 Kings, xxiii. 1—3.

CHAP. XXXV. 3. Who being hallowed, &c. Houbigant renders, "Who taught the people how they might hallow themselves to Jehovah," a sense which I think the text will not bear.—Put the holy ark. His father Amon had probably removed it, to make room for his idols.

5. Paternal families, &c. In order to understand this, it must be observed, that each family, if it were sufficient to eat a whole lamb, was obliged to have one slaughtered for them: this office was to be performed by the Levites: who were consequently to be distributed among the families for that purpose. Comp. Exod. xii. 8, 9.

8. Lambs and kids. I have supplied the words, because no other animals were used for the pass-over victims; and of course it must be these which are meant.

vah, as it is written in the book of Moses. And 13 so did they with the oxen. And they roasted the pass-over victims with fire, according to the ordinance: but the other holy offerings they boiled in pots, and in caldrons, and in pans,
 and divided them speedily among all the peo-14 ple. And afterwards they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: because the priests, the sons of Aaron, were employed in offering of burnt-offerings and the fat until night; therefore the Levites prepared for themselves, and for the priests, the sons of Aaron.
 15 And the singers, the sons of Asaph, were in their place, according to the commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun, the king's seer: and the door-keepers waited at every gate; they might not depart from their service; for their brethren, the Levites, pre-16 pared for them. So all the service of Jehovah was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt-offerings upon the altar of Jehovah, according to the commandment of 17 king Josiah. And the children of Israel, who were present, kept the pass-over at that time, and the feast of unleavened bread seven days.
 18 And there was no pass-over like to that kept in Israel from the days of Samuel, the prophet:
 nor did any of the kings of Israel keep such a pass-over as was kept by Josiah, and the priests, and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel, who were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.
 19 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah,
 was this pass-over kept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXV. 1. It is the duty of every pious mind to observe all divine institutions. Josiah was zealous against idolatry, and as zealous for keeping the pass-over. This suggests a good lesson to us, to observe and keep whatever God commands us. The Lord's supper succeeds to the pass-over; it is a memorial of a great sacrifice and deliverance, and a means of supporting christian piety in the world. Notice is seve-

19. This pass-over. This was a most extraordinary pass-over; none had been celebrated with such solemnity, with such great preparations, and with such great joy. It had been kept in Hezekiah's time; but the people were not properly purified, and Josiah was more liberal in proportion to his abilities.

20. Went out against him. The conduct of Josiah has been thought rash, if not an act of disobedience to God. I cannot but think it highly becoming his character; as it is probable he was in league with the king of

After all this, when Josiah had prepared the 20 temple, Necho, king of Egypt, came up to fight against Charchemish, on the Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him. But he sent 21 ambassadors to him, saying, "What have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee this day, but against a house with which I have war: for God commanded me to make haste. Forbear to oppose God, who is with me, lest he destroy [thee]." Nevertheless, 22 Josiah would not turn his face from him, but disguised himself, that he might fight with him, and hearkened not to the words of Necho from the mouth of God, and came to fight in the valley of Megiddo. And the archers shot at 23 king Josiah; and the king said to his servants, "Take me away; for I am grievously wounded." His servants, therefore, took him out of 24 that chariot, and put him in the second chariot that he had; and they brought him to Jerusalem, and he died, and was buried in one of the sepulchres of his fathers. And all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah.

And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah: and all 25 the singing-men, and the singing-women, by an established custom in Israel, speak of Josiah in their lamentations to this day, and, behold, they are written in the lamentations. Now the 26 rest of the acts of Josiah, and his goodness, according to what is prescribed in the law of Jehovah: And his deeds, first and last, behold, 27 they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah.

ral times taken that "all was done according to the law;" which may intimate, that we are most acceptable to God in our religious services, when we keep closest to his word.

2. Generosity in persons of plentiful circumstances, especially for the support of religion, is highly commendable. Josiah, the chief-priests, and the Levites, all furnished oxen and lambs for this service. Those who know the value of gospel privileges,

Babylon, and had, perhaps, received from him authority over the cities of Israel. As for what Pharaoh says, that God had commanded him to make haste, he must mean his own god, or idol, to which Josiah was not to pay any respect. In opposing Pharaoh, he acted as a faithful ally of the king of Babylon, and though he fell, it was rather a punishment to his people than a judgment on himself; for death was his gain.

22. Disguised. The versions seem to have read some other word, most probably נִסְתָּר, as they render desired to fight with him. So Geddes.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

B. C. 610. History of the reigns of Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah.

- 1 THEN the people of the land took Jehoahaz, the son of Josiah, and made him king in his
- 2 father's stead in Jerusalem. Jehoahaz was twenty-three years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem.
- 3 And the king of Egypt removed him from Jerusalem, and laid a tribute on the land, of a hundred talents of silver and a talent of gold.
- 4 And the king of Egypt made Eliakim, his brother, king over Judah and Jerusalem, and changed his name to Jehoiakim. And Necho took Jehoahaz, his brother, and carried him to Egypt.
- 5 Jehoiakim was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem: and he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, his God. Against him came up Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and bound him
- 6 in fetters, and carried him to Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar also carried away some of the utensils of the house of Jehovah to Babylon,
- 7 and put them in his temple at Babylon. Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and his abominations which he committed, and that which was found in him, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah: and Jehoiachin, his son, reigned in his stead.
- 8 Jehoiachin was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months and ten
- 9 days in Jerusalem: and he did evil in the eyes of Jehovah. And when the year was expired, king Nebuchadnezzar sent, and brought him to Babylon, with the choicest utensils of the house of Jehovah, and made Zedekiah, his "uncle", king over Judah and Jerusalem.

Zedekiah was twenty-one years old when he 11 began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And he did evil in the eyes of 12 Jehovah, his God, and humbled not himself before Jeremiah, the prophet, speaking from the mouth of Jehovah. And he also rebelled 13 against king Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him swear allegiance to him by God: but he stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning to Jehovah, the God of Israel.

Moreover, all the chiefs of the priests, and 14 the people, transgressed very much, according to all the abominations of the heathen; and polluted the house of Jehovah which he had hallowed in Jerusalem. And Jehovah, the 15 God of their fathers, sent to them by his messengers early, and often; because he had compassion on his people, and on his own dwelling-place: But they derided the messengers of 16 God, and despised his words, and insulted his prophets, until the wrath of Jehovah arose against his people, until there was no remedy, Therefore he brought upon them the king of 17 the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword in the apartments of their own sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man, or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age: he gave them all into his hand. And all the 18 utensils of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of Jehovah, and the treasures of the king, and of his chiefs; all these he brought to Babylon. And they burnt 19 the house of God, and broke down the wall of Jerusalem; they burnt all the palaces also with fire, and destroyed all its choicest furniture.

and the excellency of religion, will not grudge any prudent expense for the support of God's worship, to encourage his priests, as Josiah did, and to provide for the necessities of the poor. This gives religion reputation, and tends to promote the happiness both of the donor and the receiver.

the sun." Good Josiah was slain in battle. Probably few of the people were slain then, though most of them were hypocritical, and disliked his reformation. God's providence is a mighty deep. He has various ways of taking good men out of this world; but they all die in peace; and "verily there is a reward for the righteous; verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth."

CHAP. XXXVI. 1. Compare with this chapter, 2 Kings, xxiv. 21,

20 And those who had escaped from the sword, carried he away to Babylon; where they were servants to him and his sons, until the reign of 21 the kingdom of Persia: To fulfil the word of

Jehovah, by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her sabbaths: for as long as she lay desolate she kept sabbath seventy complete years.°

CHAP. XXXVI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXVI. 1. Admire the tender compassion of God to a very provoking people; therefore he delayed vengeance so long, and sent his prophets, rising early, and sending them with diligence and earnestness. And thus still, his word and promises, and warnings, and ministers, are all instances of divine compassion, and show that he is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

2. Observe how God resents the affronts and contempt offered to his ministers. This is given as a principal reason why he brought destruction upon them, they treated his prophets as enemies, because they told them the truth; they despised their words, and made a jest of their most affecting addresses. God will resent any thing said or done to make faithful ministers despicable, or to vex and discourage them: "He that despiseth you, despiseth me," saith Christ.

21. ° Verses 22, 23, same as what begins Ezra.

3. See the sad consequences of rebelling against God, and refusing to hearken to his word. Zedekiah would not take warning though it was frequently and solemnly given him by Jeremiah: the Israelites likewise would not hearken; but went on in their wicked ways, till at length Jerusalem, the joy of the whole earth; and his temple, the glory of their city, their nation, and the world, were utterly destroyed. The terrible calamities of the people are most pathetically described in the book of Lamentations. How righteous and faithful, how awful and terrible, is God in his judgments! No word of his falls to the ground; when he judgeth he will overcome. External privileges are of no avail without religion: they will not prevent his judgments, but hasten them. May the inhabitants of Britain take warning by this awful history; all things which happened to the Jews, were for examples or admonitions to us. Amen.

first chapter of Ezra; and have undoubtedly been added by mistake; or rather, they show that the book of Ezra once followed this.

E Z R A .

INTRODUCTION.

This book has been generally ascribed to Ezra, by the Jewish church; and there is no solid reason to suppose that this opinion is unfounded. He was descended from the house of Aaron, and was the grandson of Seraiah, who was the high-priest in the reign of Zedekiah. Compare 2 Kings, xxv. 18. and Ezra, vii. 1. From his rank and education, he was well qualified to obtain and write the account of the first return of his brethren; and was himself afterwards chiefly employed in restoring the civil and religious polity of his country. We have an account of those who first returned to their own country; of the building of the temple, in spite of the opposition made by their enemies; of Ezra's coming to Jerusalem, and the reform which he effected. It contains the history of about eighty years.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 536. The proclamation of Cyrus; the people prepare to return; the utensils of the temple restored.

- 1 Now in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia, that the word of Jehovah, by the mouth of Jeremiah, might be fulfilled, Jehovah so influenced the mind of Cyrus, king of Persia, that he made a written decree, and proclaimed it
2 through all his kingdom, saying, "Thus saith Cyrus, king of Persia, 'Jehovah, the God of the heavens, hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build for himself a temple at Jerusalem, which is in 3 Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? May his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the temple of Jehovah, the God of Israel: he is the true God, who is to be worshipped at 4 Jerusalem. And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place assist him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with cattle, besides a free-will-offering for building the temple of God at Jerusalem."

Then rose up the paternal chiefs of Judah 5 and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, together with all those, whose minds God had influenced to go up to build the temple of Jehovah, at Jerusalem. And all those around 6 them supplied them with utensils of silver, with gold, with goods, and with cattle, and with precious things, besides all that was willingly offered.

Also Cyrus, the king, brought forth the 7 utensils of the house of Jehovah, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought from Jerusalem, and had put in the house of his gods; Those did 8 Cyrus, king of Persia, bring forth by the hand of Mithredath, the treasurer, and numbered them unto Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah. And this is their number: "one thousand" gold- 9 en chargers, a thousand silver chargers, twenty-nine slaughter-knives, Thirty golden bason 10 covers, and "two thousand" silver bason covers, and a thousand other utensils. All the utensils 11

CHAP. I. 1. Might be fulfilled. Jeremiah had foretold the destruction of the king and empire of Babylon, (Jer. xxix. 10.) and the return of the Jews after seventy years. This was accomplished at the death of Belshazzar, the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. v. Upon the conquest of Babylon, Cyrus made his uncle Cyaxares, there called Darius, the Median, king of Babylon. He reigned two years, and after his death, Cyrus reigned over all Persia and the country that had been subject to the kings of Assyria and Babylon; and in this first year of his reign he issued this proclamation.

2. To build a temple. There is reason to believe that Daniel had shown to the king, the prophecy of Isaiah, xl. 28. and xlv. 1-4.; and that he, in gratitude to that God who had given him such success, issued the proclamation, granting liberty to the Jews, and authorizing the building of the temple.

8. Sheshbazzar. The name was the same as Zerubbabel, one being his Babylonish and the other his Jewish name. He was a prince of Judah by birth, and made captain of those who choose to return. Compare ch. iii. 8. with v. 16.

of gold and of silver were five thousand four hundred and sixty-nine". All these Sheshbazzar brought with those of the captivity, who came up from Babylon unto Jerusalem.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. Let us adore the exact fidelity of God to his promises. "When the time to succour Zion, the set time was come, he remembered her." This should induce us to reverence him, strengthen our own faith in him, and encourage us to hold fast the profession of that faith without wavering; for "faithful is he who hath promised, and will also do it."

2. We infer, that the exaltation and possessions of men are owing to God. This Cyrus gratefully acknowledged, saying, "Jehovah, the God of the heavens, hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth." "He putteth down one and setteth up another. Promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south." This shows the reasonableness of praying that God would prosper our works; and the duty of thanksgiving, when he makes our way prosperous; of our obligations to serve him; and to render unto him ac-

9-11. I have followed the reading of Esdras, because the numbers agree with the sum total. See note Hebrew Bible.

CHAP. II. 1. Children of the province. That is, of Babylon, as what follows clearly proves. Those of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin returned first, to the city of their fathers.

2. We have two other copies of this catalogue, one in Nehemiah vii. 4, &c. and the other in Esdras ii. I shall give the numbers, when they differ, of the parallel places, that the reader may judge for himself, which deserves preference.

The sum total of the people who returned from captivity in all three accounts, is the same, 42,360.; which exceeds the particulars added together here, 10,777. Altling and Calmet conjectured that this number could not produce their genealogy, and in consequence, their names were not given.

Joab, two thousand eight hundred and twelve. The posterity of Elam, a thousand two hundred and fifty-four. The posterity of Zattu, eight hundred and forty-five. The posterity of 9 Zaccai, seven hundred and sixty. The posterity of 10 Bani, six hundred and forty-two. The posterity of 11 Bebai, six hundred and twenty-three. The posterity of 12 Azgad, a thousand two hundred and twenty-two. The posterity of 13 Adonikam, six hundred and sixty-six. The posterity of 14 Bigvai, two thousand and fifty-six. The posterity of 15 Adin, four hundred and fifty-four. The posterity of 16 Ater of Hezekiah, ninety-eight. The posterity of 17 Bezai, three hundred and twenty-three. The posterity of 18 Jorah, a hundred and twelve. The posterity of 19 Hashum, two hundred and twenty-three. The posterity of 20 Gibeon, ninety-five. The people of 21 Bethlehem, a hundred and twenty-three. The people of 22 Netophah, fifty-six. The people of 23 Anathoth, a hundred and twenty-eight. The people of 24 Beth-azmaveth, forty-two. The people of 25 Kirjath-jearim, Chephirah, and Bee-cording to his benefits, so graciously and so freely vouchsafed.

3. The liberty proclaimed to the captives, should lead our thoughts to the gospel offers, and the redemption granted by our Lord Jesus Christ. Sinners are slaves, and have long been the captives of Satan. Christ proclaims liberty; to him all authority is given to do so. He urges and beseeches them to go up to the new Jerusalem; he intercedes that God may be with them; he encourages them, and furnishes them with all necessary supplies for the way. Too many stay behind, and love their slavery too well; but others go; and this is to be ascribed to God's influence on their spirits; the work is of grace. Let us hear Christ's voice, thankfully receive his offers, and earnestly pray that we ourselves, and all about us, may be disposed to "ask the way to Zion, with our faces thitherward; and join ourselves to God, in the bonds of an everlasting covenant."

Houbigant maintains that as the three accounts do not differ much in the particulars, it is probable the error is in the sum total. Others maintain that it is more probable that errors have obtained in the numbers of particular families; and the variation of the different accounts strongly supports this last opinion. Some families have also been omitted. Our Lightfoot supposes that the number of names omitted, were the posterity of the ten tribes, and for this reason not mentioned in this list.

17. Here we find in Esdras four names, Ceilan and Azetas, 67.; Azurum, 432.; and Ananias, 410. The order of the 17th, 18th, and 19th verses is inverted in Nehemiah.

21. The people. The following names to the 35th verse, I consider as names of places, and have rendered accordingly.

25. Here Esdras gives to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, the sum of

- 26 roth, seven hundred and forty-three. The people of Ramah and Gaba, six hundred and twenty-one. The people of Michmas, a hundred and twenty-two. The people of Beth-el and Ai, two hundred and twenty-three. The people of Nebo, fifty-two. The people of Magbish, a hundred and fifty-six. The people of Elam-ar, a thousand two hundred and fifty-four. The people of Harim, three hundred and twenty. The people of Lod, Hadid, and Ono, seven hundred and twenty-five. The people of Jericho, three hundred and forty-five. The people of Senaah, three thousand six hundred and thirty.
- 36 The priests: the posterity of Jedaiah of the house of Joshua, nine hundred and seventy-three. The posterity of Immer, a thousand and fifty-two. The posterity of Pashur, a thousand two hundred and forty-seven. The posterity of Harim, a thousand and seventeen.
- 40 The Levites: the posterity of Joshua, and Kadmiel, sprung from Hodaviah, seventy-four.
- 41 The singers: the posterity of Asaph, a hundred and twenty-eight.
- 42 The posterity of the porters: of Shallum, of Ater, of Talmon, of Akkub, of Hatita, of Shobai, in all a hundred and thirty-nine.
- 43 The Nethinims: the posterity of Ziha, of Hasupha, of Tabbaoth, of Keros, of Siaha, of Padon, of Lebanah, of Hagabah, of Akkub, of Hagab, of Shalmal, of Hanan, of Giddel, of Gahar, of Reaiah, of Rezin, of Nekoda, of Gazzam, of Uzza, of Paseah, of Besai, of Asnah, of Mehunim, of Nephusim, of Bakbuk, of Hakupha, of Harhur, of Bazluth, of Meshida, of Harsha, of Barkos, of Sisera, of Thamah, of Neziah, and of Hatipha.
- 55 The posterity of Solomon's servants: the posterity of Sotai, of Sophereth, of Peruda, of Jaalah, of Darkon, of Giddel, of Shephatiah, of Hattil, of Pokereth of Zebaim, of Ami. All the Nethinims, and the posterity of Solomon's servants, were three hundred and ninety-two. And these were they who went up from Tel-melah, Tel-harsa, Cherub, Addan, and Immer: but they could not show their father's house, and their seed, whether they were of Israel: The posterity of Delaiah, of Tobiah, of Nekoda, six hundred and fifty-two.

And of the posterity of the priests: the posterity of Habaiah, of Koz, of Barzillai: who took a wife of the daughters of Barzillai, the Gileadite, and was called after their name: These sought their register among those who were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood. And the governor said to them, that they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim.

The whole congregation together was forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty. Besides their servants, and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred and thirty-seven: and there were among them two hundred singing-men, and singing-women. Their horses were seven hundred and thirty-six; their mules, two hundred and forty-five; Their camels, four hundred and thirty-five; their asses, six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

And some of the paternal chiefs, when they came to the house of Jehovah at Jerusalem, offered freely, in order to rebuild the house of God in its place: They gave according to their ability unto the treasure for the work, one thousand and sixty darics of gold, and five

25, and to those of Chephirah and Beeroth, the same as the text. After this verse, we have also in Esdras, Pira, 700; Chanio and Ammidioi, 422.

31. This and the two following verses are wanting in Esdras. This verse is confused; and Houbigant would read וילחמתי as one word. Michaelis would omit it as a corruption of the 7th verse, and because wanting in Esdras.

36—39. Of the 24 courses of the priests that were carried away to Babylon, only four returned, and they were the courses of Jedaiah, Immer, Pashur, and Harim, which made up the number of 4,289 persons. The rest either tarried behind, or were extinct. However, the old number of the courses, as established by king David, were still kept up. For, of the four courses that returned, each subdivided themselves into six, and the new courses taking the names of those that were wanting, still kept up the old titles; and hence it is, that after this Mattathias is said to have been of the course of Joarib, and Zecharias, of the course of Abia, though neither of these courses were of the number of those that returned. Talmud. Hierosol. in Taanith.

43. Nethinims. Michaelis contends that these were some of the captives taken in war, who were devoted to the service of the temple; and not the descendants of the Gibeonites.

63. With Urim, &c. That is, until God himself declared their descent. From this it appears, that they had lost these, whatever they were.

thousand mina of silver, and one hundred priests' garments. So the priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the gate-keepers, and the Nethinims, dwelt in their own cities, and all Israel in their own cities.

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 536. The altar built; offerings brought, and the foundation of the temple laid.

1 AND when the seventh month came, the children of Israel who were in the cities, the whole people assembled themselves as one man at 2 Jerusalem. Then stood up Joshua, the son of Jozedek, and his brethren, the priests, and Zerubbabel, the son of Salathiel, and his brethren, and built the altar of the God of Israel, to offer burnt-offerings thereon, as it is written 3 in the law of Moses, the man of God. And they set the altar upon its base; although fear was upon them, because of the people of those countries: and they offered burnt-offerings thereon to Jehovah, burnt-offerings morning and evening. 4 They kept also the feast of booths, as it is prescribed, and offered the daily burnt-offerings by number, according to the rite, as the duty of 5 every day required; And afterwards, the continual burnt-offering, both of the new moons, and of all the stated feasts hallowed to Jehovah; and every free-will-offering they brought to 6 Jehovah. From the first day of the seventh month they began to offer burnt-offerings to Jehovah. But the foundation of the temple of Jehovah was not yet laid. They gave money also to the masons, and to the carpenters; and meat, and drink, and oil, to the Zidonians and Tyrians, to bring cedars from Lebanon to the sea of Joppa, according to the grant of Cyrus, king of Persia, to them.

Now in the second year of their coming to the house of God at Jerusalem, in the second month, began Zerubbabel, the son of Salathiel, and Joshua, the son of Jozedek, and the remnant of their brethren, the priests and the Levites, and all those who had come out of captivity unto Jerusalem; and appointed the Levites, from twenty years old and upward, to set forward the work of the house of Jehovah. Then stood Joshua, with his sons and his brethren, Kadmiel and his sons, the sons of Judah, together, to set forward the workmen in the house of God: the sons of Henadad, with their sons and their brethren, the Levites. And 10 when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of Jehovah, they stationed the priests, furnished with trumpets, and the Levites, the sons of Asaph, with cymbals, to praise Jehovah, according to the ordinance of David, king of Israel. And they sang together, by course, 11 in praising and giving thanks to Jehovah; because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever towards Israel. And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised Jehovah; because the foundation of the house of Jehovah was laid. But many of the priests, and Levites, 12

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. In the return of these Jews, we see the influence both of the love of country, and of religion. Many had power and riches, but they sighed after the land of their fathers. They regarded it as the glory of all lands; and there they wished to live and to die. The serious, those devoted to God, remembered Zion, the city of their solemnities. They longed to hear the songs and to join in the services of God's house. This led them to forsake Babylon. How could a good man be satisfied to live where there are no religious ordinances? "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God."

2. They who returned at once began to prepare to rebuild the temple. They gave liberally of their substance for this purpose. Thus they honoured the Lord with it, and might expect his blessing, on what was left. They had many difficulties to encounter; the land was desolate, and the city a heap of ruins, yet amidst all these difficulties and discouragements, they began to build the temple. May religion have our first, and our chief regard. "Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all things shall be added unto you."

69. Daries of gold. Prideaux observes, that these were coined by Cyaxares or Darius, during the two years he reigned at Babylon. The gold was uncommonly pure; and these pieces continued in circulation in Asia and Greece, for a long time. They were worth about 25 shillings of our money.—Mina. This is thought to have varied in its weight, at different times; so that it is difficult to ascertain its value.

CHAP. III. 1. In the seventh month. Though they were dispersed for a while about the country, to cultivate some land and prepare their habitations, yet they unanimously came together in the seventh month, at the feasts of atonement and tabernacles.

3. Although fear, &c. This intimates that they were not so solicitous to fortify themselves, as to enjoy the divine protection.

10. Furnished. The word מְבֹרָשִׁים stands in construction with trumpets, and must have the sense attributed to it. It is often applied to putting on and paternal chiefs, old men, who had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a 13 loud voice; but many shouted aloud for joy: So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people, although the people shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off.

CHAPTER IV.

B. C. 535. The enemies of the Jews write to Artaxerxes, who orders them not to proceed with the building.

1 Now when the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin heard that the children of the captivity were building a temple to Jehovah, the
 2 God of Israel; They then came to Zerubbabel, and to the paternal chiefs, and said to them, "Let us build with you: for we seek your God as ye do; and we have sacrificed to him since the days of 'Esar-haddon', king of Assyria,
 3 who brought us up hither." But Zerubbabel, and Joshua, and the rest of the paternal chiefs of Israel, said to them, "Ye have nothing to do with us to build a house to our God; but we ourselves will build to Jehovah, the God of CHAP. IV. 2. * Salmanser, Josephus, and 2 King. xvii. 2. xix. 37.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. We may here learn, that our best relief in times of difficulty, is prayer, and attention to the other duties of religion. Wherever providence may cast our lot, we should erect an altar, and begin with God. Our trials should drive us to our knees; and if God be on our side, he both can and will help us.

2. When God gives us a prospect that he is raising his temple and reviving religion, let us praise him for these mercies. We should not despise the day of small things; but rejoice in every appearance of the divine favour. Though the circumstances should be distressing, and the work great and hazardous, still let us give thanks to God, for he is good. This should be the burden of every song, on earth and in or being furnished with, armour; and in this sense it must be taken here.

12. Wept with a loud, &c. All this was very natural. The young people, who were bred up in Babylon, had only heard of the former temple, and were glad to see one now erecting. But some of the old people, who remembered the first, wept; partly on account of its destruction, and the calamities of the nation, which now came fully to their remembrance; and partly, to think how far this would come short of the former. For what constituted the glory of the first temple were wanting in this, the ark, the Shekinah, the Urim, and the holy fire. Hence, Haggai was sent to assure them, that in some respects the glory of this latter house should be greater than that of the former. Ch. ii. 7, 9.

CHAP. IV. 1. Adversaries, &c. These were the people whom the Israel, as king Cyrus, the king of Persia, hath commanded us." Then the people of the land 4 discouraged the people of Judah. And they deterred them from building, And hired coun- 5 sellors against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus, king of Persia, until the reign of Darius, king of Persia. And in the 6 reign of Ahasuerus, in the beginning of his reign, wrote they an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.

And in the days of Artaxerxes wrote Bish- 7 lam, Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their companions, to Artaxerxes, king of Persia; and the letter was written in the Syrian tongue.* Rehun, the chancellor, and Shimshai, the 8 scribe, wrote a letter against Jerusalem, to Artaxerxes, the king, in this manner: Then 9 wrote Rehun, the chancellor, and Shimshai, the scribe, and the rest of their companions; the Dinaites, the Apharsathchites, the Tarpe- lites, the Apharsites, the Archevites, the Ba- bylonians, the Susanchites, the Dehavites, and the Elamites, And the rest of the nations 10 whom the great and noble Asnapper brought over, and settled in the cities of Samaria, and heaven too. O that our hearts were always in tune for it! and did we but consider his mercy they would be more so.

3. In the mixture of joy and sorrow, when the foundation of the temple was laid, we have a lively emblem of the state of the church of Christ on earth. Many weep, while many rejoice: We must expect a mixture of joy and sorrow in this world. Let us learn to weep, as though we wept not; and to rejoice as though we rejoiced not; and long for that day when the spiritual temple will be finished; when the top stone shall be laid with rejoicing, and not one weeping eye or sorrowful heart be found in all the general assembly of the church of the first-born in heaven. In the prospect of this, "Let us give thanks to the Lord, for he is good, and his mercy endureth for ever."

king of Assyria had settled in a part of the land of Israel, with a mixture of the apostate Israelites, and who were afterwards called Samaritans.

5. The reign of Darius, called Hystaspes, who succeeded Smerdis, the magian, called Artaxerxes in the 7th verse. Ahasuerus, mentioned in the 6th verse, was Cambyses, the son and successor of Cyrus. Cyrus became sole king of the Babylonish empire, 536 years before the christian era, when he issued the decree in favour of the Jews. He reigned seven years, and was succeeded by Cambyses, who also reigned seven years, and a few months. Smerdis, the magian, as the brother of Cambyses, usurped the throne, and reigned about seven months, on whose accession the following letter was sent.

7. I have omitted the last two words, as altogether incoherent; for the rest that are on this side the river, and at such a time.

- 11 This is a copy of the letter which they sent to Artaxerxes, the king; "Thy servants, the men on this side the river, and at such a time. 'Be 12 it known unto the king, that the Jews who came from thee to us, are rebuilding the rebellious and the bad city Jerusalem; and having laid the 13 foundations, are about to set up its wall. Be it known now to the king, that if this city be rebuilt, and the walls restored, they will neither pay toll, tribute, or custom; and so the royal 14 revenues will be injured. Now because we are supported from the palace; and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, we have,
15 therefore, sent to certify this to the king; That search may be made in the records of thy fathers. And in those records thou wilt find, and know, that this city hath been a rebellious city, and injurious to kings and provinces; and that within it of old they moved continual seditions;
16 for which cause was this city destroyed. We certify to the king, that if this city be rebuilt, and its walls restored, thou will have no authority on this side the river."
17 Then sent the king an answer to Rehum, the chancellor, and to Shimshai, the scribe, and to the rest of their companions who dwelt in Samaria, and others beyond the river, "Peace,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. We learn from this account, that the enemy will stir up his servants to oppose the work of God; and the servants of God ought to expect it. Religion will meet with difficulties and opposition; the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman are still at variance; and those who are remarkably zealous for God will be sure to meet with discouragements. If we have fewer of these than our fathers had, it is not because Satan and the world are mended, but because our zeal is less, and our opposition to Satan's kingdom not so formidable.

2. We are hence also taught, not to wonder if false accusations and slanders are thrown on the faithful servants of God. It has been so of old; the enemy is the accuser of the brethren, and too many are now like him, accusing them of being enemies to Cæsar, seditious, and rebellious. They have need of the wisdom

how could it be that they would write a letter in the Syrian tongue, and interpret it in the Syrian tongue? Some propose to render, "And the letter was written in the Syrian tongue, and in the Syrian character." The sense of the words will not admit this version. I have, therefore, omitted them, on the authorities noticed. See note Hebrew Bible.

and at such a time. 'The letter which ye sent 18 to us hath been interpreted and read before me. And I commanded, and search hath been made, 19 and it is found that this city of old time hath made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made in it; And 20 that there have been powerful kings at Jerusalem, who ruled over all countries beyond the river; to whom toll, tribute, and custom, were paid. Proclaim now the decree, that these men 21 desist, and that this city be not rebuilt, until a decree be sent from me. Take heed now, and 22 fail not to do this; lest damage should occur to the kings?"

Now when the copy of king Artaxerxes' letter was read before Rehum, and Shimshai, the scribe, and their companions, they speedily went up to Jerusalem, unto the Jews, and by force and power made them cease to build. Then, 24 ceased the work of the house of God at Jerusalem. So it ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius, king of Persia.

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 520. The building of the temple resumed, at the address of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah; the letter of Tatnai to Darius.

Then the prophets, Haggai and Zechariah, 1 the son of Iddo, prophesied to the Jews who were in Judah and Jerusalem, in the name of

of the serpent and the innocence of the dove to guard against such designs. Let us faithfully attend to the present duty, "the duty of the day in its day; and trust in God to deliver us from those who shoot out their arrows, even bitter words, against us.

3. It is a great satisfaction to good men that the Lord reigneth; since the greatest of men, are easily imposed upon, and liberty stands but on a weak foundation. Kings must often see with other men's eyes, and, therefore, are liable to judge wrong: false representations of things are often made to them, and, therefore, appear in a partial light. Let us, therefore, rejoice in God's universal government and influence over the spirits of princes; and seek to him for a continuance of our liberties, civil and religious, and in the enjoyment of them endeavour "to lead quiet and peaceable lives, in all godliness and honesty."

11—16. There was some truth in this letter, although circumstances were disguised, to serve the purpose they had in view.

14. Supported from the, &c. Literally, "We are scattered with the salt of the palace." It is allowed that this is idiomatical, and means support in any way.

2 the God of Israel. And then rose up Zerubbabel, the son of Salathiel, and Joshua, the son of Jozedek, and began to build the house of God at Jerusalem: and with them were the prophets of God helping them.

3 At that time came to them Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and their companions, and said thus to them; "Who hath commanded you to build this house, and 4 to restore this wall?" They then spoke to them in this manner, "What are the names of 5 the men who are erecting this building?" But the eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews, so that they could not cause them to desist, until the decree of Darius should come. And they wrote a letter concerning this thing.

6 This is the copy of the letter which Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and his companions the Apharsachites, who were on this side the river, sent unto Darius, the king; They sent a letter to him, in which it was thus written; "To Darius, the king, 8 be all prosperity. 'Be it known to the king, that we went into the province of Judea, to the house of the great God, which is building with great stones; and timber is laid on the walls, and this work goeth fast on, and prospereth in 9 their hands. Then asked we those elders, and said to them thus, 'Who commanded you to build this house, and to restore these walls?'
10 We inquired also of them the names of their chiefs, that we might write and make them known to thee. And thus they answered, saying, 'We are the servants of the God of the heavens and the earth, and are rebuilding the temple to him, which a great king of Israel, many years ago, built and completed. But 12 after that our fathers had provoked the God of the heavens unto wrath, he gave them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away unto Babylon. But in 13 the first year of Cyrus, the king of Babylon, king Cyrus made a decree to rebuild this house of God. And the utensils also of gold and silver

14 of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the temple at Jerusalem, and brought into the temple of Babylon, those did Cyrus, the king, take out of the temple of Babylon, and they were delivered unto one, whose name was Sheshbazzar, whom he had made governor; And said to him, 'Take these utensils, 15 go, carry them into the temple at Jerusalem, and let the house of God be rebuilt in its own place.' Then came the same Sheshbazzar, and laid the 16 foundation of the house of God at Jerusalem: and since that time, even until now, hath it been in building, but is not yet finished.' Now,
17 therefore, if it seem good to the king, let there be search made in the king's treasure-house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that a decree was made by Cyrus, the king, to rebuild this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send his command concerning this matter."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. Ministers, like the prophets, should be very solicitous to build God's house, and animate others to it. When the number of worshippers, especially of those that join themselves to the Lord in covenant, increases, when religion revives, and sinners are converted, and saints grow in knowledge and piety, then the building of the spiritual temple goes on and prospers. They should be greatly concerned about this themselves, and every one should join hand in hand to promote it; those in private stations in life, by exhorting one another daily, and animating each other to every good word and work. The zeal of a few good men employed in the service of God, may be of extensive and lasting benefit.

CHAP. V. 1. Haggai. Read his prophecy, from which it appears, that the people had grown remiss, and were suffering by unfruitful seasons in consequence. On the death of Artaxerxes, they ought to have renewed

2. Let us, as St. Peter exhorts, "be willing to give a reason for our religious conduct and hope, with meekness and fear." With meekness, as opposed to resentment, and with fear, as opposed to rashness and abuse, and thereby give our enemies a handle against us. The Jews here give a particular account of their principles, their relation to God, the intent of their building, &c. and thus should we be ready to do, endeavouring to understand our religious principles, the reason of our faith and hope, and conduct, and give them with all meekness and charity, without abusing and reviling others. This will be to the honour of our profession, and give those who differ from us a better opinion of our principles and practice.

the work; but from fear or some worse causes they remained inactive.

6-17. This letter is of a different kind to the one sent to Artaxerxes, and contains only a fair statement of facts.

CHAPTER VI.

B. C. 519. The decree of Darius; the temple finished; its dedication, &c.

- 1 THEN Darius, the king, made a decree, that search should be made in the record-office, where the treasures were laid up in Babylon.
- 2 At length there was found at Achmetha, in the palace of the province of the Medes, a roll, and
- 3 therein was a record thus written: "In the first year of Cyrus, the king: Cyrus, the king, made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, 'Let the house be rebuilt, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let its foundations be strongly laid; its height sixty cubits,
- 4 and its breadth sixty cubits; With three rows of great stones, and a row of new timber: and let the expences be given out of the king's
- 5 house: And also let the golden and silver utensils of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple at Jerusalem, and brought to Babylon, be restored, and carried back to the temple at Jerusalem,
- 6 and place them in the house of God.' Now, therefore, Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai, and your companions, the Apharsachites, who are beyond the river, depart
- 7 thence: Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews, and the elders of the Jews, build this house of God in
- 8 its place. Moreover, I make a decree, that ye shall assist the elders of the Jews in building this house of God: from the king's treasure, from the tribute beyond the river, immediately let the expences be given unto these men, that
- 9 they be not hindered. Moreover, let there be given to them, daily, without fail, whatever they need; steers, and rams, and lambs, for burnt-offerings, to the God of the heavens; wheat, salt, wine, and oil, according to the appointment of the priests who are at Jerusalem;
- 10 That they may offer sacrifices of a sweet savour

CHAP. VI. 1—10. In Babylon. It appears that nothing being found there, they then searched the archives of the palace at Achmetha, or Ecbatana, where the decree of Cyrus was found. Darius confirmed this decree, and added grants to it, most probably, out of respect to Cyrus, two of whose daughters he had married; Atossa and Artiston, who was his chief favourite.

14. I have omitted Artaxerxes, with Houbigant and others, as irreconto the God of the heavens, and pray for the life of the king, and of his sons. Also I command, 11 that whosoever shall alter this decree, let timber be pulled down from his own house, and being set up, let him be hanged thereon; and let his house become mire. And may the God 12 who hath caused his name to dwell there, destroy all kings and people, who shall put to their hand to alter and to destroy this house of God, which is at Jerusalem. 1 Darius have made a decree; let it be done with speed."

Then Tatnai, governor on this side the river, 13 Shethar-boznai, and their companions, according to what Darius, the king, had sent, so they did speedily. And the elders of the Jews build- 14 ed, and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai, the prophet, and Zechariah, the son of Iddo. And they builded, and finished it, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, kings of Persia. And this 15 house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius, the king.

And the children of Israel, the priests, and 16 the Levites, and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of this house of God with joy; And offered at the dedication 17 of this house of God a hundred steers, two hundred rams, and four hundred lambs: and for a sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel. And they appointed the priests in their divisions, 18 and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God, at Jerusalem; as it is written in the book of Moses. And the children of the cap- 19 tivity kept the pass-over upon the fourteenth day of the first month. For the priests and the 20 Levites were purified together, all of them were pure, and killed the pass-over for the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the cilable with the 4th chapter, where we are informed that he commanded them to desist from building, nor can the text refer to any other of the same name, as no other reigned between Cyrus and Darius.

16. With joy. Some suppose that the 146th, 147th, and 148th psalms were composed on this occasion, as in the Seventy they are called the psalms of Haggai: this is not unlikely, as they are suitable enough to it.

21. All such as, &c. From this it appears, that many of the heathen

- 21 priests, and for themselves. And the children of Israel who had come out of captivity, and all such as had separated themselves from the uncleanness of the heathen land, that they might seek Jehovah, the God of Israel, ate,

CHAPTER VII.

B. C. 457. Ezra goeth to Jerusalem; his commission from Artaxerxes, &c.

- 1 Now after these things, in the reign of Artaxerxes, king of Persia, Ezra, the grandson of Seraiah, the son of Azariah, the son of Hilkiah,
- 2 The son of Shallum, the son of Zadok, the son
- 3 of Ahitub, The son of Amariah, the son of
- 4 Azariah, the son of Meraioth, The son of
- 5 Zerariah, the son of Uzzi, the son of Bukki,
- 6 The son of Abishua, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, the chief priest; This Ezra went up from Babylon; and he was a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which Jehovah, the God of Israel, had given:

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. We here see how God can dispose events so as to accomplish his own pleasure. The Samaritans probably instigated the governor to oppose the Jews and make this inquiry, and this turned out to their advantage; thus God takes the wise in their own craftiness. The Jews persecuted the apostles with the design of checking the spread of the gospel; but God made this the very means of spreading it throughout the land. Acts, viii. 1.

2. We are taught to be thankful for our civil and religious privileges, and to pray for our king and his family, under whom we enjoy our liberty. Darius knew the Jews were a praying people, and had a great and powerful God, and therefore he desired their prayers. This is a duty we owe in honour and gratitude to them; and to which we are obliged by the laws of christianity. "I exhort, therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, in-inhabitants of Judea, witnessing the growing prosperity of the Jews, became proselytes, and submitted to the law of Moses.

22. King of Assyria. As the Babylonish kings reigned over both the ancient empire of Assyria and of that of Babylon, they are sometimes called kings of Assyria, and sometimes kings of Babylon.

CHAP. VII. 1. The reign of Artaxerxes. Prideaux has proved that this is the Artaxerxes called Longimanus, by the Greek writers, the son and successor of the famed Xerxes. He was the Abasuerus of Esther; and from whose influence, probably, he became the steady friend and protector of the Jews. He began his reign 464 years before Christ, about 71 years from and the king granted him all his request, according to the disposing hand of Jehovah, his God. And there went up some of the children 7 of Israel, and of the priests, and the Levites, and the singers, and the door-keepers, and the Nethinims, unto Jerusalem, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes, the king. And he came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the king. For on the first day 9 of the first month, he set out from Babylon, and on the first day of the fifth month he came to Jerusalem, according to the good providence of his God towards him. For Ezra had prepared 10 his heart to study and practice the law of Jehovah, and to teach Israel his statutes and judgments.

Now this is the copy of the letter which the 11 king Artaxerxes gave to Ezra, a priest and scribe; a scribe of the words of the commandments of Jehovah, and of his statutes to Israel. "Artaxerxes, king of kings, to Ezra, the priest, 12 a scribe of the law of the God of the heavens, all prosperity, and at such a time. 'I make a 13 decree, that any of the people of Israel, and of the priests and Levites, in my realm; who are tercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men, for kings and for all that are in authority under them; that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives, in all godliness and honesty."

3. Let us trace up all the benefits we enjoy by our fellow creatures, to the turn God gives to their hearts. Of this important truth, we need frequently to be reminded, that the hearts even of kings are in his hands. When we meet with a favourable reception from others, or good success in our business, or respect and kindness in the world, gratitude to those from whom we receive these favours, is a duty; but let us trace the stream through the several channels, to the fountain, to God, "the author of every good and perfect gift, whose kingdom ruleth over all," and "who does what he pleases in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of this lower world." All creatures are but instruments in his hands, and do his pleasure.

the first year of Cyrus; so that as there were different periods in which the Jews were carried into captivity, there were also different restorations.—Ezra, the grandson of Seraiah. I have so rendered, because in 1 Chron. vi. 14. it is said that Seraiah begot Jozadak, who went into captivity; so that Ezra must have been his son. In this pedigree of Ezra, several names are omitted, according to the Jewish custom. See note 1 Chron. i. & comp. ch. vi. 3—15.

6. A ready scribe, &c. One who understood well the law, having made it his chief study, and who was a teacher of it to others. In this sense the word scribe occurs in Jer. viii. 8. Matt. vii. 29. &c.

- willing to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee.
- 14 Forasmuch as thou art sent by the king, and his seven counsellors, to inquire in Judah and Jerusalem, concerning the law of thy God in
- 15 which thou art conversant; And to carry the silver and gold, which the king and his counsellors have freely offered to the God of Israel,
- 16 whose habitation is at Jerusalem; And all the silver and gold which thou canst obtain in all the province of Babylon, with the free-will-offering of the people, and of the priests, to the
- 17 house of their God at Jerusalem. With this money thou shalt speedily buy steers, rams, lambs, with their wheaten-offerings and their drink-offerings, and offer them upon the altar of the house of your God which is at Jerusalem.
- 18 And whatsoever shall seem good to thee, and to thy brethren, to do with the remainder of the silver and gold, that do according to the will of
- 19 your God. The utensils also which are given to thee for the service of the house of thy God, those lay thou up before God at Jerusalem.
- 20 And whatsoever else may be needful for the house of thy God, which thou shalt have occasion to expend, thou shalt receive from the
- 21 king's treasury. And I, Artaxerxes, the king, do make a decree to all the treasurers who are beyond the river, that whatsoever Ezra, the priest, the scribe of the law of the God of the heavens, shall require of you, be done speedily.
- 22 As far as a hundred talents of silver, and to a hundred cores of wheat, and to a hundred baths of wine, and to a hundred baths of oil, and salt
- 23 in any quantity. Whatsoever is commanded by the God of the heavens, let it be diligently done for the house of the God of the heavens: for why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons? We also make known 24 to you, that it shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom, upon any of the priests, and Levites, singers, porters, Nethinims, or ministers of this house of God. And thou, Ezra, 25 according to the wisdom of thy God, which is in thee, appoint magistrates and judges, who may judge all the people who are beyond the river; all such as know the laws of thy God; and teach those who know them not. And whoso- 26 ever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king, let judgment be executed speedily upon him, whether by death or banishment, or confiscation of goods, or imprisonment."

Blessed be Jehovah, the God of our fathers, 27 who hath put it in the king's heart, to beautify the [house of Jehovah, which is at Jerusalem: And hath extended kindness to me with the 28 king, and his counsellors, and with all the king's valiant chiefs. Then I was encouraged, as the hand of Jehovah, my God, was with me, and I assembled the chiefs of Israel to go up with me.

CHAPTER VIII.

B. C. 457. The names of those who accompanied Ezra; their journey, and their arrival at Jerusalem.

THESE are now the paternal chiefs, and this 1 is the account of those who went up with me from Babylon, in the reign of Artaxerxes, the king. Of the posterity of Phinehas, Gershom: 2 of the posterity of Ithamar, Daniel: of the REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. From hence we are taught to acknowledge the providence of God, in our safe and prosperous journeys, in directing our way, preserving us from evil, and in prospering our undertakings. His favour is to be sought when we are going out, and to be owned when coming in. The circumstances of our journeys should be carefully recollected, that God may have the glory of all our mercies.

2. In Ezra we see a good example to christians, and especially to ministers. He sought the law, made it his study; formed his notions and sentiments from it, and reduced all to practice. He did not waste his days in trifling; especially not in hurtful things.

Thus we should study the law of God, practise its precepts ourselves, be conformed to the rule, and then teach others; ministers, their people; parents, their children; and christian friends, one another; and be careful that they see their own exhortations illustrated and enforced by a good example.

3. Learn of this heathen prince, diligently to do what the God of heaven commands; out of gratitude to him, because it is our duty and our interest, and lest wrath should be against us, and our children. Let us do it diligently and with pleasure, for "his commands are not grievous, and in keeping them there is great reward;" present peace, and future glory.

12-26. This decree contains all that Ezra could wish, to perfect the state of the Jews, and to maintain the honour of divine worship.

CHAP. VIII. 3, 5, 10. In each of these verses a name has been lost; nor do either manuscripts or versions supply them.

3 posterity of David, Hattush. Of the posterity of Shecaniah, * * *: of the posterity of Pha-rosh, Zechariah: and with him were reckoned by genealogy of the males, a hundred and fifty.
 4 Of the posterity of Pahath-moab, Elihoenai,
 the son of Zeraiah; and with him two hundred 5 males. Of the posterity of Shecaniah, * * *, the son of Jahaziel; and with him three hundred 6 males. Of the posterity also of Adin, Ebed, the son of Jonathan; and with him fifty males.
 7 And of the posterity of Elam, Jeshaiah, the son of Athaliah; and with him seventy males.
 8 And of the posterity of Shephatiah, Zebadiah,
 the son of Michael; and with him eighty males.
 9 Of the posterity of Joab, Obadiah, the son of Jehiel; and with him two hundred and eighteen 10 males. And of the posterity of Shelomith,
 * * *, the son of Josiphiah; and with him a 11 hundred and sixty males. And of the posterity of Bebai, Zechariah, the son of Bebai; and with 12 him twenty-eight males. And of the posterity of Azgad, Johanan, the son of Hakkatan; and 13 with him a hundred and ten males. And of the later posterity of Adonikam, whose names are these, Eliphelet, Jeiel, and Shemaiah; and with 14 them sixty males. Of the posterity also of Bigvai, Uthai, and Zabbud; and with them seventy males.
 15 And I assembled them at the river which runneth to Ahava; and there we abode in tents
 three days: and when I surveyed the people, and the priests, I found there none of the sons 16 of Levi. Then I sent for Eliezer, for Ariel, for Shemaiah, and for Nathan, ° and for Zechariah, and for Meshullam, chief men; also for Jarib, and for Elnathan, men of understand-17 ing. And I sent them with commandment unto Iddo, chief of the place Casiphia, and I told them what they should say to Iddo, and to his brethren, the Nethinims, at the place of Casi-phia, that they might bring to us ministers for the house of our God. And, by the kind dis- 18 posal of our God towards us, they brought us a man of understanding, of the sons of Mahli, the son of Levi, the son of Israel; and Sherebiah, with his sons and his brethren, eighteen;

 And Hashabiah, and with him Jeshaiah of the 19
 sons of Merari, his brethren, and their sons, twenty; Also of the Nethinims, whom David 20
 and the chiefs appointed for the service of the Levites, two hundred and twenty Nethinims:
 all of them were expressed by name.

Then I proclaimed a fast there, at the river 21
 of Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before our God, to seek from him a right way for ourselves, and for our little ones, and for all our substance. For I was ashamed to ask of the 22 king soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy on the way: because we had spoken to the king, saying, "The hand of our God is with all those who seek him for good; but his power and his wrath are against all those who forsake him." So we fasted and besought our 23
 God for this: and he was intreated of us.

Then I separated twelve of the chief of the 24 priests, Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren with them, And weighed to them the 25
 silver and the gold, and the utensils, the offering for the house of our God, which the king, and his counsellors, and his lords, and all Israel
 there present, had offered: I weighed to them 26 six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and of silver utensils a hundred talents, and of gold a hundred talents; Also twenty golden basons, 27
 of a thousand darics; and two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. And I said to them, 28
 "Ye are hallowed to Jehovah; the utensils are also hallowed; and the silver and the gold are a free-will-offering to Jehovah, the God of your fathers. Watch and keep them, until ye weigh 29 them before the chiefs of the priests and the Levites, and the paternal chiefs of Israel, at

15. None of the sons of Levi. That is, as distinguished from the priests; for many of the latter were there.

16. The names omitted occur twice in the verse, and have been evidently repeated by mistake. See note Hebrew Bible.

17. Casiphia. It is uncertain where this place was. Some suppose not far from the Caspian sea, but without any probability. It was somewhere in Babylonia.

22. I was ashamed, &c. The journey was long, the treasure which they

Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of Je-30 hovah. So the priests and the Levites received the silver, and the gold, and the utensils, as weighed, to bring to Jerusalem, to the house of our God.

31 Then we departed from the river of Ahava on the twelfth day of the first month, to go to Jerusalem: and the hand of our God was with us, and he delivered us from the enemy, who 32 lay in wait by the way. And we came to Jerusalem, and abode there three days.

33 Now, on the fourth day was the silver, and the gold, and the utensils, weighed in the house of our God, by Meremoth, the son of Uriah, the priest; with whom was Eleazar, the son of Phinehas; and Jozabad, the son of Joshua, and 34 Noadiah, the son of Binui, Levites. All were numbered and weighed, and the whole weight

35 was at the same time written down. And the exiles, who had come out of captivity, offered burnt-offerings to the God of Israel, twelve steers for all Israel, ninety-six rams, seventy-seven lambs, twelve he-goats, for a sin-offering: all this was a burnt-offering to Jehovah.

36 And they delivered the king's commissions unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors on this side the river: and they assisted the people, and the house of God.

CHAPTER IX.

B. C. 457. Ezra mourneth for the sin of the people and prayeth with confession.

1 Now when these things were done, the chiefs

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. We are again admonished to render due praise to the disposing hand of God, and in all our ways to acknowledge him. We should seek for ourselves direction and preservation, for success in our affairs, and for a blessing on our families and our substance. Without his blessing, there is no comfort in relative life; our substance will waste and perish, or afford us no satisfaction. If we desire his favour, we must put away iniquity, be humbled for our sin, and "in every thing, by prayer and supplication, make known our requests unto God," as the sovereign disposer of all events.

2. We learn, from this example, to manifest lively faith and had with them considerable, and bands of lawless banditti infested the roads.

 Ezra, therefore, fasted, and sought the divine guidance and protection; and he and his company arrived safe at Jerusalem.

CHAP. IX. 1, 2. The chiefs. That is, some of the more serious and came to me, saying, "The people of Israel, and the priests, and the Levites, have not separated themselves from the people of these lands; doing according to the abominations of the Canaanites, the Hethites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites. For they have 2 taken their daughters for themselves, and for their sons: so that the holy seed have mingled themselves with the people of these lands: yea,

 the chiefs and rulers have been the principal leaders in this trespass." And when I heard 3
 this thing, I rent my garment and my mantle, and plucked off the hair from my head and my beard, and sat down astonished. Then assem- 4 bled unto me all those who trembled at the words of the God of Israel, because of the transgression of the exiles; and I sat astonished until the evening sacrifice.

And at the evening sacrifice I arose from my 5 heaviness; and having rent my garment and my mantle, I fell upon my knees, and spread out my hands to Jehovah, my God. And said, "O 6
 my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our great trespass reacheth the heavens. From the days 7 of our fathers, unto this day, we have greatly trespassed; and for our iniquities, have we, our kings, and our priests, been delivered into the hand of the kings of the lands, to the sword, to captivity, and to spoil, and to confusion of face, as it is this day. And now for a short period 8 confidence in God, and not to be ashamed to own it before the greatest of men. Let us show that our trust in God, and our belief of his power and providence, influence our conduct, restrain us from unreasonable fears of men, and make us bold and resolute in the discharge of our duty. Let us openly acknowledge our regard to God and dependance on him, as Ezra did before the king; and speak of God's testimonies, though king's should hear.

 Let us exemplify our assertion that "The hand of our God is with all those who seek him; but his power and his wrath are against all those who forsake him," by our fear of offending him, and by our steadfast adherence to him.

pious; for many of them were the leaders in this crime.

3. Rent my garment, &c. These were usual, but strong marks of grief and displeasure. He was astonished to find them again associating with idolaters, after having been so lately delivered from captivity, to which

Jehovah, our God, hath been gracious in leaving us an escaped remnant, and in giving us a fixed abode in his holy place; our God hath enlightened our eyes, and given us a little life
 9 in our bondage. For we were bond-men; yet in our bondage our God hath not forsaken us; but hath inclined the kings of Persia to show us kindness; to preserve us, to raise up the house of our God, and to restore its ruins, and to give to us a fortified place in Judah and in Jerusalem. And now, O our God, what shall we say after this? for we have forsaken thy command-
 10 ments, Which thou hast commanded by thy servants, the prophets, saying, 'The land which ye are going to possess, is an unclean land, through the uncleanness of the people of these countries; for with their abominable pollutions
 12 they have wholly filled it. Now, therefore, give not your daughters to their sons, nor take their daughters to your sons, nor ever seek their peace or their prosperity; that ye may be strong, and eat the good of the land, and leave it for a perpetual inheritance to your children.'
 13 And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great trespass, (for thou our God hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve, and hast given us such deliverance as 14 this;) Should we again break thy commandments, and join in affinity with the people who commit these abominations, wouldst thou not be angry with us till thou hadst consumed us, so that none shall be left or escape? O Jehovah, 15 the God of Israel, thou art gracious: for we this day are left a remnant escaped. Behold, we confess before thee our trespasses: for on account of these we cannot stand before thee."

CHAPTER X.

B. C. 457. On the address of Ezra the people repent, and promise amendment.

Now when Ezra had prayed, and when he 1 had confessed, weeping and casting himself down before the house of God, there assembled to him out of Israel, a very great congregation of men, and women, and children; for the people wept exceedingly. And Shecaniah, the 2 son of Jehiel, of the posterity of Elam, spoke and said to Ezra, "We have trespassed against our God, and have taken foreign wives of the people of the land: yet now there is hope to Israel concerning this thing. Now, therefore, 3 let us make a covenant with our God, to put away all these women and their offspring, according to the counsel of my lord, and of those who tremble at the commandment of our God; and let it be done according to the law. Arise; 4

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. We learn, that those who tremble at the word of God, should lament for the sins of others, and begin to oppose their progress. When God is dishonoured, and the souls of men injured, or likely to be so, it should grieve the hearts of all who fear God, or dread his wrath. We should behold transgressors with grief, and heartily join with all those who are desirous of opposing the progress of sin, as these persons did with Ezra, that we may assist them, keep them in countenance, and strengthen one another's hands in such an important work.

2. Deep humility and shame, become us all when we acknowledge our sins before God. We should blush inwardly at our guilt, folly, and rebellion; should appear before him in the most humble posture, and be covered with confusion of face. These are essential ingredients of true repentance; and if we thus humble ourselves before God, we may hope for his pardoning mercy, and that he will exalt us in due time.

3. Relapses into sin, after affliction and humiliation, are exceedingly provoking to God, and merit his peculiar displeasure and may be our utter ruin. The design of national or personal afflictions is to take away sin; and if we have acknowledged this, and professed repentance, yet return to folly, we may expect the anger of the Lord to increase, and that our plagues shall be made wonderful. Oh that we may consider this! lest God rise up to plead his cause against an hypocritical nation, and utterly destroy us.

4. It becomes a penitent to give judgment against himself, and glorify God even while he condemns himself. This will show that his heart is truly humble, that pride is in some measure subdued, and that he accepts the punishment of his iniquities. This is the sure way to obtain forgiveness and help. Let us then own that the Lord is righteous in the judgments which he sends; and this will promote, as well as manifest, our humility and patience; it will quicken us in our return to God and to duty, and dispose him to return to us in a way of grace and mercy, and to grant us his salvation.

they had been reduced for their neglect of God's law, and their love of idols.

6—15. Nothing can exceed the propriety, beauty, and force of this prayer. It is the language of the heart; and contains all that could be expected in the circumstances in which it was uttered.

CHAP. X. 3. These women, &c. This has been thought hard, if not unjust; but let it be remembered, first, that the law prohibiting these marriages is express, Deut. vii. 1. and secondly, that though they put them away as wives, they were not prohibited, but bound to take care of them.

- for this matter belongeth to thee: we will also assist thee: be of good courage, and do it."
- 5 Then Ezra arose, and made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, to swear that they would do according to this word. And they swore.
- 6 Then Ezra rose up from before the house of God, and went into the chamber of Johanan, the son of Eliashib: and when he came thither, he ate no bread, nor drank water: for he mourned because of the transgression of those who
- 7 had been carried away. And they made proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem unto all the children of the captivity, that they should
- 8 assemble at Jerusalem; And that whosoever should not come within three days, according to the counsel of the chiefs and the elders, all his substance should be forfeited, and himself separated from the congregation of those who had been carried away.
- 9 Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin assembled at Jerusalem within three days. It was the ninth month, and the twentieth day of the month; and all the people sat in the area of the house of God, trembling both on account of this thing, and on account of the heavy rain.
- 10 And Ezra, the priest, stood up, and said to them, "Ye have transgressed, and have taken foreign wives, to increase the trespass of Israel.
- 11 Now, therefore, make confession to Jehovah, the God of your fathers, and do his will: and separate yourselves from the people of the land
- 12 and from these foreign women." Then the whole congregation answered and said with a loud voice, "As thou hast said, it is right for
- 13 us to do. But the people are many, and it is a time of heavy rain, and we are not able to stand without, nor is this a work of one day or two: for we are many who have transgressed in this thing. Let now the chiefs of our whole congregation be appointed, and let all those who, in our cities have taken foreign wives, come at fixed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until the fierce wrath of our God for this matter be turned from us."

Only Jonathan, the son of Asahel and Jahaziah, the son of Tikvah, were employed about this matter; and Meshullam and Shabbethai, the Levite, assisted them. And the children of the captivity did so. And Ezra, the priest, selected certain paternal chiefs who were all named, and they sat down on the first day of the tenth month, to examine the matter. And they made an end with all the men that had taken foreign wives by the first day of the first month.

And among the sons of the priests, there were found who had taken foreign wives: of the sons of Joshua, the son of Jozedek, and his brethren; Maaseiah, and Eliezer, and Jarib, and Gedaliah. And they gave their hands that they would put away their wives; and they offered a ram of the flock for their trespass. And of the posterity of Immer; Hanani, and Zebadiah. And of the posterity of Harim; Maaseiah, and Elijah, and Shemaiah, and Jehiel, and Uziah. And of the posterity of Pashur; Elioenai, Maaseiah, Ishmael, Nethaneel, Jozabad, and Elasah. Also of the Levites; Jozabad, and Shimei, and Kelaiah, (the same is Kelita,) Pethahiah, Judah, and Eliezer. Of the singers also; Eliashib: and of the door-keepers; Shalum, and Telem, and Uri. Moreover of Israel: of the posterity of Parosh; Ramiah, and Jeziah and Malchiah, and Miamin, and Eleazar, and Malchijah, and Benaiah. And of the posterity of Elam; Mattaniah, Zechariah, and Jehiel, and their offspring. From the enforcement of this unpopular law, we have a strong argument, that the Mosaic institutions were restored as far as possible.

8. Separated, &c. That is, should be deemed to have forfeited all his privileges as a Jew; should be excommunicated.

9. Ninth month. That is, sometime in December, when the rains are violent, and it is very cold.

19. Gave their hands. Compare 2 King. x. 15. and the note.

20. The following list shows that the priests, Levites, and leading men, were the chief offenders. We find no particular account how the affair was conducted. It seems probable, that if any of these foreign women would have embraced the Jewish religion and put away their idolatry, they might have been retained, except in the case of the priests, to whom such a liberty could not have been allowed: undoubtedly those who were sent away had a proper provision made for them. Shecaniah proposed putting away the children, but Ezra in ver. 2, says nothing about them. It is probable they were detained and instructed in the knowledge of the law. Had not this resolute step been taken, the purity of the Israelitish nation would have been soon and very greatly corrupted.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER X. 1. When men are humble and contrite, it is a hopeful circumstance that they will reform what is amiss; "there is hope in Israel concerning this thing." There is no expectation of a thorough reformation, till the heart be sensible of the evil of sin, and deeply humbled for it. Professions of concern, and promises of reformation, are very little to be depended upon till then. "Godly sorrow alone, worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of."

2. The zeal and courage of Shecaniah were very honourable and worthy of imitation. Though his father and uncles were guilty, yet, when the honour of God and the purity of his religion were concerned, he boldly declared his detestation of such practices, and his desire to have them rectified. A good example to all, especially to young people, not to be ashamed to appear on the Lord's side, though their seniors and near relations may be corrupt or lukewarm. It will be much to their honour, and God will own and honour them for it.

4. Solemn covenant transactions with God should seal and confirm our resolutions of amendment. These people swore to do it, and offered up a sacrifice for their trespass. The heart is treacherous; therefore when a good resolution is formed, we should bind ourselves solemnly to the Lord. This strengthens good resolutions, prevents our returning to folly, and will be a happy means of securing us from future temptations. We should be able to say with David, "I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments."

INTRODUCTION.

THIS book was, by the Jews, considered the second part of Ezra, as being a continuation of it; and they were both regarded as one book. From internal evidence, it appears that Nehemiah wrote this account of his own commission and transactions; though there are some additions by a later hand. See note ch. xii. 22. Ezra was chiefly occupied in collecting the sacred writings, and, in connexion with the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, establishing the observance of the law; Nehemiah in restoring the civil polity, and fortifying Jerusalem. He was a man of prudence, fortitude, and courage; and in the face of great opposition, he accomplished his object; he was also a man of great piety, as his fervent ejaculations demonstrate. His book extends from the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, to the fifteenth of Darius Nothus, according to Prideaux, that is, about thirty-five years. Others make it not more than thirty.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 446. Nehemiah learning the state of Jerusalem, fasts and prays.

- 1 THE words of Nehemiah, the son of Hachaliah. "And it came to pass in the month Chisleu, in the twentieth year, as I was in
- 2 Shushan, the palace, That Hanani, one of my brethren, came, and certain men of Judah; and I asked them concerning the Jews who had escaped, who were left of the captivity, and con-
- 3 cerning Jerusalem. And they said to me, "The remnant who are left of the captivity there in the province, are in great affliction and reproach; the walls of Jerusalem also remain broken down, and its gates burned with fire."
- 4 And, when I heard these words, I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed to the God of the heavens,
- 5 And said, "I beseech thee, O Jehovah, the God of the heavens, the great and terrible God, who keepest thy merciful covenant with those
- 6 who love and observe thy commandments; Let thine ear now be attentive, and thine eyes open, that thou mayest hear the prayer of thy servant, which I pray before thee now, day and night, for the children of Israel, thy servants, and confess the sins which we, the children of Israel, have sinned against thee. Both I and my father's house have sinned; We have dealt very corruptly against thee, and have not kept the commandments, nor the statutes, nor the judgments, which thou commandedst thy servant Moses. Remember, I beseech thee, the word which thou didst command thy servant Moses, saying, 'If ye transgress, I will scatter you abroad among the nations; But if ye turn to me, and keep my commandments, and do them; should ye be dispersed to the remotest regions, yet thence will I gather you, and will bring you unto the place which I have chosen to put my name there.' Now these are thy servants and thy people, whom thou hast redeemed by thy great power, and by thy strong hand. O Jehovah, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thine own children", who desire to

CHAP. I. 1. Hachaliah. All the versions read Hilchiah or Hilkiah, a name which often occurs.

3. Remain, &c. The text cannot be understood in any other sense, than that the walls and gates remained in that state of ruin to which they had been reduced by Nebuchadnezzar. By supplying is in the common version, a sense remote from this, is suggested; as if the walls and gates had been restored, but again destroyed.

5. Merciful covenant. I give the sense rather than the idiom. It is usual in the Hebrew for the latter of two nouns to be used adjectively. Comp. Exod. xx. 6.

11. Thine own children. I have followed the Septuagint, to prevent the tautology.—For I was the, &c. Many of the Jews were advanced to considerable posts in Babylon and Persia. This was wisely designed by providence, that they might be of service to their brethren, both in Babylon and Judea. And it must have contributed to spread the knowledge of the true fear thy name: and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man." For I was the king's cup-bearer."

CHAPTER II.

B. C. 445. Nehemiah obtaineth a commission, and cometh to Jerusalem; vieweth the walls, &c.

1 "AND in the month Nisan, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, the king, when wine was before him, I took up the wine, and gave it to the king. Now I had not beforetime been sad 2 in his presence. Wherefore the king said to me, "Why is thy countenance sad, seeing thou art not sick? this is nothing but sorrow of 3 heart." Then I was greatly afraid. And said to the king, "Long live the king: why should not my countenance be sad, when the city, the place of my father's sepulchres lieth waste, and 4 its gates are consumed with fire?" Then the king said to me, "For what dost thou make request?" So having prayed to the God of the 5 heavens, I said to the king, "If it please the king, and if thy servant hath found favour in thy sight, I request that thou wouldst send me to Judea, to the city of my fathers' sepulchres, 6 that I may rebuild it." And the king said to me, (the queen also sitting by him,) "How long will thy journey be? and when wilt thou return?" So I stated the time, and it pleased the king to send me. Moreover, I said to the 7 king, "If it please the king, let letters be given to me for the governors beyond the river, that they may permit me to pass on until I come in- to Judea; And a letter to Asaph, the keeper 8 of the king's forest, that he may give to me timber for the beams of the court-gates belong- ing to the temple, and for the wall of the city, and for the house which I shall inhabit." And the king granted me my request, according to the kind hand of my God towards me. Then I 9 came to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. Now the king had sent captains of the army and horsemen with me. When Sanballat, the Horonite, and 10 Tobiah, the Ammonite servant, heard that a man had come to seek the welfare of the chil- dren of Israel, they were exceedingly vexed.

So I came to Jerusalem, and when I had 11 been there three days, I arose in the night, I 12 and some few men with me; for I had told no man what my God had put in my heart to do for Jerusalem: nor was there a beast with me, save that on which I rode. And I went out by 13

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. Whatever our own circumstances may be, we should cherish the love of our country; and its afflictions and distresses should engage us in deep humiliation and solemn devotion. Though Nehemiah was easy and happy at court, yet when he heard of the distress of Jerusalem, "he wept, and mourned, and fasted, and prayed." It is lamentable indeed when men have no concern for the interest of religion, and can hear of the desolation of the sanctuary, and the decay of religion, without sorrow, humiliation, and prayer. How unlike this good man are they who dwell at ease, delight themselves in the pleasures of sense, and "drink wine in bowls, but are not grieved at the afflictions of Joseph!"

2. In our addresses to God, we should view him as the great and terrible God, full of awful majesty, and to be adored and served with the greatest reverence. We should also address him with humble con- fidence, as a God "who keepeth his merciful covenant." Worship without inward reverence is insulting; and prayer without confidence is wholly unacceptable.

3. Let us observe the correspondence between the providence and the word of God, as Nehemiah here did, in scattering and recovering the people. The scripture is a key to providence; and providence is often the best interpreter of scripture; they mutually illustrate each other, and show that both are from the Lord. This will tend to con- firm our faith in both, and excite a becoming regard to God's word and the operation of his hands; it will teach us both to plead his prom- ises, and his former appearances for us, as Nehemiah did; nor shall we plead with him in vain.

God extensively in the east, and might lead some to serve him.

CHAP. II. 2. I was greatly afraid. This arose from his anxiety, lest the request he was going to make should not be granted; or lest some should impute to him evil designs. He adopted the best method to obtain success, by praying to the God of the heavens, in whose hands are the hearts of kings.

5. Rebuild it. The word also signifies to fortify; and this was includ- ed in his commission, as appears from what follows.

8. Court-gates, &c. It is not probable that Nehemiah would talk of building a royal palace. The word דבירה, according to Castell, signifies not only a palace, but a citadel, camp, or metropolis. It seems here to be used for the walls and out-buildings belonging to the temple, which had not been rebuilt. Junius so renders.

10. Horonite. As Horonaim was a considerable city of Moab, (Is. xv. 5.) it has been justly supposed that he was a native of this city, and there- fore a Moabite.—Tobiah, the Ammonite servant. He had been a slave, but was raised to the government of some province.

13—15. Descending by the valley-gate, he proceeded south on the night, by the gate of the valley, and went on opposite the dragon-well, to the dung-gate, and I viewed the demolished walls of Jerusalem, and the gates which had been consumed with 14 fire. Then I passed on to the fountain-gate, and to the king's pool: but there was no place

 15 for the beast under me to pass. Then went I up in the night by the brook, and viewed the wall, and I came back by the gate of the valley,
 16 and so returned. And the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did; for neither to the Jews, nor to the priests, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers, nor to those over the work, had I told any thing.

17 Then said I to them, "Ye see the distress in which we are, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and her gates are burned with fire: come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be 18 no more a reproach." Then I told them of the kind hand of my God towards me; as also the words which the king had spoken to me. And they said, "Let us arise, and build;" and they 19 encouraged one another in this good work. But when Sanballat, the Horonite, and Tobiah, the Ammonite servant, and Geshem, the Arabian, heard, they derided us, and in contempt, said to us, "What is this thing that ye do? will ye 20 rebel against the king?" Then answered I them, and said to them, "The God of the heavens, he will prosper us; therefore we, his servants, will arise and build: but ye have no portion, nor right, nor memorial, in Jerusalem."

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 445. The names and order of those who built the wall.

"THEN Eliashib, the high-priest, arose with his brethren, the priests, and they builded the sheep-gate: they 'laid its beams', and set up its doors; even from the tower of Meah, to the tower of Hananeel, they 'laid' its beams. And next to him builded the men of Jericho. And next to them builded Zaccur, the son of Imri. But the fish-gate the posterity of Hassenaah built, who also laid its beams, and fixed its doors, and its locks, and its bars. And next to them repaired Meremoth, the son of Urijah, the son of Koz. And next to them repaired Meshullam, the son of Berechiah, the son of Meshezabeel. And next to them repaired Zaddok, the son of Baana. And next to them the Tekoites repaired; but their nobles put not their necks to the work of their lord. Moreover, the old-gate Jehoiada, the son of Paseah, and Meshullam, the son of Besodeiah, repaired; they laid its beams and fixed its doors, and its locks, and its bars. And next to them repaired Melatiah, the Gibeonite, and Jadon, the Meronothite, the men of Gibeon, and of

CHAP. III.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. We are taught to inquire into the distresses and sorrows of others, though our inferiors. It was great humanity and good nature in this king to do so; and it is peculiarly our duty, as christians, to do so to our servants and inferiors. We should not say, "what is it to us," but inquire into the causes of their grief, that we may, if possible, remove them, or at least alleviate their sufferings by our pity; and thus "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

2. Let us hence learn the benefit of ejaculatory prayer, that is, the sudden darting of the soul or wishes towards God, as the word signifies. It is an excellent way to keep communion with him, it hinders no business, it interrupts no innocent pleasures; it keeps a west-side of the city, until he came to the fountain-gate, that of Siloam or Gihon, and thence to the king's pool, where he was stopped, the road being impassable. This was the pool which Hezekiah made. 2 Chron. xxxiii: 3, 30. Leaving the walls, he went on till he reached the valley of Jehoshaphat, and proceeded by the brook Kidron along the east and north parts of the city; thus going round the whole city.

CHAP. III. 1. They laid its beams. I have adopted the emendation sense of religion uppermost, fits us for more solemn exercises of devotion, and secures the divine assistance, presence, and help, in every difficult and perplexing case. Thus saith the Lord, "acknowledge me in all thy ways, and I will direct thy paths."

3. Let us cheerfully depend on God, and not be discouraged from prosecuting good undertakings by the scorn and insults of wicked men. No good work will go on without enemies. They will laugh us to scorn; but let not this move us. 'Remember that we are God's servants, engaged in his cause; that he will prosper us; and we shall have a portion and memorial in "the new Jerusalem, the city of the living God, which abideth for ever." The wicked have no portion, nor right, nor memorial, in that Jerusalem.

of Houbigant, which is supported by the following verses. The sense of the word sanctified in this connexion is wholly inapposite. See note Hebrew Bible.

5. Their lord. I think Nehemiah is meant, who, as governor, might be justly so called. Some, however, refer it to God, as being in a peculiar sense, their Lord. This is a reflection on the indolence or indifference of these persons.

Mizpeh, which belonged to the jurisdiction of 8 the governor on this side the river. Next to him repaired Uzziel, the son of Harhiah, a goldsmith. Next to him also repaired Hana-niah, an apothecary, and they fortified Jerusa-9 lem unto the broad wall. And next to them repaired Rephaiah, the son of Hur, the ruler of the half-part of Jerusalem, and others with 10 him. And next to them repaired Jedaiah, the son of Harumaph, opposite to his own house.
 And next to him repaired Hattush, the son of 11 Hashabniah. Malchijah, the son of Harim, and Hashub, the son of Pahath-Moab repaired the other piece, and the furnace-tower.
 12 And next to him repaired Shallum (together with his daughters,) the son of Halohesh, the 13 ruler of the other half-part of Jerusalem. The valley-gate repaired Hanun, and the inhabitants of Zanoah; they built it, and fixed its doors, its locks, and its bars, and a thousand 14 cubits on the wall to the dung-gate. But the dung-gate repaired Malchiah, the son of Re-chab, the ruler of part of Beth-haccerem; he built it, and fixed its doors, its locks, and its 15 bars. But the fountain-gate repaired Shallun, the son of Col-hozeh, the ruler of part of Mizpeh; he built it and covered it, and set up its doors, and its locks, and its bars, and the wall of the pool of Siloah, by the king's garden, to the stairs that go down from the city of 16 David. After him repaired Nehemiah, the son of Azbuk, the ruler of the half-part of Bethzur, from the place opposite the sepulchres of David, to the pool that was made, and to the 17 house of the worthies. And after him repaired the Levites, Rehum, the son of Bani. Next to him repaired Hashabiah, the ruler of the half-18 part of Keilah, in his part. After him repaired his brother, Bavai, the son of Henadad, the ru-19 ler of the other half-part of Keilah. And next to him repaired Ezer, the son of Joshua, the ruler of Mizpeh, another piece over against the 20 ascent to the armoury at the angle. After him Baruch, the son of Zabbai diligently repaired

the other piece, from the angle to the door of the house of Eliashib, the high-priest. After 21 him repaired Meremoth, the son of Urijah, the son of Koz, another piece, from the door of the house of Eliashib, even to the end of the house of Eliashib. And after him repaired the priests, 22
 the men of the plain of the Jordan. After 23 them repaired Benjamin and Hashub over against their own houses. After them repaired Azariah, the son of Maaseiah, the son of Ananiah, by his own house. After him repaired 24
 Binnui, the son of Henadad, another piece, from the house of Azariah, to the angles. Pa- 25 lal, the son of Uzai, over against the angle, and the tower projecting from the king's high house, which was by the court of the prison.
 After him Pedaiah, the son of Parosh. More- 26
 over, the Nethinims, the inhabitants, built Ophel, over against the water-gate towards the east, and the projecting tower. After 27 them the Tekoites repaired another piece, over against the great projecting tower, even to the wall of Ophel. From above the horse-gate re- 28 paired the priests, every one over against his own house. After them repaired Zadok, the 29
 son of Immer, over against his own house.
 After him repaired also Shemaiah, the son of Shecaniah, the keeper of the east-gate. After 30 him repaired Hananiah, the son of Shelemiah, and Hanun, the sixth son of Zalaph, another piece. After them repaired Meshullam, the son of Berechiah, over against his own chamber. After him repaired Malchiah, the gold- 31
 smith's son, to the place of the Nethinims,
 and of the merchants, over against the gate
 Miphkad, and to the ascent at the angle.
 And between the ascent at the angle and of 32
 the sheep-gate repaired the goldsmiths and the merchants."

2 and mocked the Jews. And he spoke to his brethren and the army of Samaria, and said, "What do these feeble Jews? will they fortify themselves? shall they be permitted to sacrifice? will they complete their work in a day? will they restore the burnt stones out of the heaps of rubbish?" Now Tobiah, the Ammonite, was by him, and said, "Were a jackal to go against the stone walls which they are building, he would break them down." Hear, O our God how we are despised: and turn their reproach upon their own head, and give them for a prey in the land of their captivity: And cover not their iniquity, nor let their sin be blotted out before thee: for they have provoked to anger the builders. Yet we built the wall; and the whole wall as far as the half-part was joined together; for the heart of the people was engaged in the work.

7 But when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, and the Ammonites, and the Ashdodites, heard that the walls of Jerusalem were raised, and that the breaches began to be stopped, they then were very wroth; And all of them conspired together, to come to fight against Jerusalem, and to hinder the work.

9 But we prayed to our God, and appointed a watch over the builders day and night, for fear of the enemy. And some of Judah said, "The strength of the burden-bearers is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to complete the building of the wall." And our adversaries said, "They shall not know, neither see, till we come among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease."

12 But the Jews who dwelt by them, came, and said to us often, "From all places where they dwell, they will advance against us." I therefore stationed, on the lower cleared place behind the wall, the people according to their families, with their swords, their spears, and their bows. And having inspected and settled these things, I said to the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, "Be not ye afraid of them; remember Jehovah, who is great and terrible, and fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses." But when our enemies heard that it was known to us, and that God had so brought their counsel to nought, we all of us returned to the wall, every one to his own work. And from that time forth, the half of my servants wrought at the work, and the other half of them held the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah. They who builded on the wall, and they that bore burdens with those that laded, each with one of his hands wrought at the work, and with the other held a weapon. For the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet, stood near to me. And I said to the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, "The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another. In what place, therefore, ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: our God shall fight for us." So we laboured at the work: and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared. Likewise at the same time said I to the people, "Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour in the day." So neither I, nor my brethren, nor my servants, nor the men of the guard who followed me; none of us put off our clothes for a full month."

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 445. Some complain of their debt, and Nehemiah redresseth their grievance.

- 1 "Now these people and their wives complained greatly against their brethren, the Jews.
- 2 For there were that said, "We have many sons and daughters; whence shall we receive corn,
- 3 that we may eat, and live?" And some there were that said, "We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses; whence shall we receive
- 4 corn during the dearth?" There were others that said, "We have borrowed money on our lands and vineyards, to pay the king's tribute.
- 5 Yet now our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children: and, lo, we must bring our sons and our daughters into bond-service; yea, some of our daughters are brought into bond-service, nor is it in our power to redeem them; for other men have our lands and vineyards."
- 6 And when I heard their complaints, I was
- 7 very angry; And I consulted with myself, and I called to account the nobles, and the rulers, and said to them, "Ye exact usury, every one of his brother." And I appointed a great as-
- 8 sembly against them; And I said to them, "We, according to our ability, have redeemed our brethren, the Jews, who were sold to the heathen; and will ye again sell your brethren? and shall they be sold among ourselves?" But tradesmen, goldsmiths, merchants, and apothecaries, all joined, and some ladies contributed to this good work, ver. 12. This is a good example of zeal, generosity, and public spirit, which it will be our honour, as christians, to imitate; and we should go on cheerfully in it, notwithstanding all discouragements.

2. We may learn what precaution is necessary in going on in God's work, and endeavouring to build up his house. We must work and watch at the same time, as our spiritual enemies are ever ready to attack us. We must guard against them; take the whole armour of God, and still work on, without being discouraged. We should join together, strengthen one another's hands, and so further the good the common version. The reading adopted shows how long their fear lasted, above one half of the time employed in the work. See ch. viii. 15.

CHAP. V. 1. The Jews. That is, the wealthy part of them; they availed themselves of the people's necessities, so as to obtain whatever they possessed.

said, "The thing ye do is not good: ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God, lest the heathen, our enemies, should reproach us? I likewise, and my brethren, and my servants, might exact of them money and corn: I pray you, let us leave off this usury. Restore, I pray you, to them, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their oliveyards, and their houses; also some of the money, and of the corn, the wine, and the oil, that ye exact of them." Then said they, "We will restore them, and will require nothing of them; so will we do as thou sayest." Then I called the priests, and took an oath of them, that they should do according to this promise. And I shook my lap, and said, "So may God shake out every man from his house, and from his labour, that performeth not this promise; even thus may he be shaken out, and emptied." And all the congregation said, "Amen," and praised Jehovah. And the people did according to this promise.

Moreover, from the time that I was appointed to be their governor in the land of Judah, from the twentieth year, even unto the thirtieth year of Artaxerxes, the king, twelve years, I and my brethren have not eaten the bread of the governor. But the former governors were chargeable unto the people, and took of them bread and wine, besides forty shekels of silver a day; yea, even their servants bore rule over the people: but I did not thus, be-designs we have at heart. Danger should not intimidate us, but prudence should warn us against being secure.

3. We have, in the conduct of Nehemiah and the people, an example of great self-denial. Those who promote the cause and interest of God, must learn to deny themselves, to suffer hardships, to do and to bear what may be disagreeable to flesh and blood. They must guard against luxury; against nice and delicate dispositions, and a fondness for bodily indulgencies. For if any man would come after Christ, be eminent in piety, and greatly useful, let him deny himself, take up his cross daily, and follow his master. The life of a christian must be a life of labour in his master's service.

16 cause I feared God. Yea, I also continued at the work of this wall, for we bought no fields; so that all my servants were gathered thither to 17 the work. Moreover, at my table were a hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, besides those who came to us from the neighbouring 18 nations. Now there was prepared for me daily, one ox and six choice sheep; also fowls were prepared for me, and once in ten days store of all sorts of wine: yet for all this I did not require the bread of the governor, because the bondage 19 was heavy upon this people. Remember me, O my God, for good, according to all that I have done for this people."

CHAPTER VI.

B. C. 445. The methods which their enemies adopted to discourage them; Nehemiah's prudence and fortitude.

1 "Now when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and Geshem, the Arabian, and the rest of our enemies, heard that I had builded the wall, and that there was no breach left therein; (though at that time I had not set up the doors of the 2 gates;) Sanballat and Geshem sent to me saying, "Come, let us meet together at Chephirim, in the plain of Ono." But they intended to do 3 me mischief. And I sent messengers to them, saying, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down; why should the work cease, 4 whilst I leave it, and come down to you?" Yet they sent unto me in this manner four times;

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. We are taught that a regard to the credit of religion should restrain us from that which is unjust and dishonourable. It is a duty particularly incumbent upon christians, to avoid every thing which would bring a reproach upon the gospel: and nothing will be a greater or more just one, than being cruel and oppressive, grinding the face of the poor, or the want of justice and of charity. Let us cultivate these virtues, that we may "adorn the gospel of God our saviour, in all things."

confirmed by their solemn amen, which signifies, so be it.

15. I feared God. The noun seems used in the text instead of the verb. I have followed Vatable.

CHAP. VI. 2. Chephirim. I have followed the interlinear version, and many moderns, in considering the term as a proper name, and not as an appellative.

6. Geshem. So all the versions read; and there is no doubt but the same person is intended as is mentioned in the first verse. The design of

and in the same manner I answered them. 5 Then Sanballat sent his servant to me in like manner, the fifth time, with an open letter in his hand. In which was written, "It is reported 6 among the nations, and Geshem affirmeth it, that thou and the Jews intend to rebel; therefore thou buildest the wall with this design, that thou mayest be their king. And thou hast also 7 appointed prophets to preach of thee at Jerusalem, saying, 'There is a king in Judah:' and now shall it be reported to the king according to these words. Come now, therefore, and let us take counsel together." Then I sent to him, 8 saying, "There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart." For they all made us afraid, saying, 9 "Their hands shall be weakened so that the work shall not be done;" but this strengthened my hand the more. Then I went to the house: 10 of Shemaiah, the son of Delaiah, the son of Mehetabeel, who was shut up; and he said, "Let us meet in the inner part of the house of God, and let us shut the doors of the temple: for they are coming to slay thee; yea, to night they are coming to slay thee." And I said, 11 "Should such a man as I flee? and who, like me, would go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in." And, lo, I perceived that 12 God had not sent him; but that he pronounced this prophecy against me, because Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him. And he was hir- 13

2. We should be willing to recede even from our just right, when it is greatly injurious to others, especially to the poor. On this principle Nehemiah acted, and he exhorted the rich Jews to follow his example. He gave up his salary when the times were hard; and required the Jews to restore the mortgaged lands, without principal or interest, when their brethren could not pay. It is our duty to lend freely, and "to give, hoping for nothing again;" remembering that awful text, "they shall have judgment without mercy, who have showed no mercy."

this letter is apparent, it was to intimidate, by suggesting a spirit of rebellion, as the cause of his fortifying Jerusalem.

9. But this strengthened. This, setting aside the points, is the most obvious and literal version of the text. Their opposition strongly impressed his mind with the necessity of completing the defence of Jerusalem, that they might be more secure, and prosper.

10-13. These allies of Sanballat endeavoured in one way or another, to obtain some ground for the pretence, that he was meditating revolt from

ed, that I might be made afraid, and do so, and sin, and that they might have matter for an evil report, that they might reproach me.

14 Remember, O my God, Tobiah and Sanballat, according to these their works, and the prophetess Noadiah, and the rest of the prophets, who would have put me in fear.

15 So the wall was finished on the twenty-fifth day of the month Elul, in fifty-two days. And when all our enemies heard, and all the nations around saw, they were much cast down in their own eyes: for they perceived that this work was wrought through the aid of our God.

17 Moreover, in those days, the nobles of Judah sent many letters to Tobiah, and many from 18 Tobiah came unto them. For there were many in Judah sworn unto him, because he was the son-in-law of Shecaniah, the son of Arah; and his son Johanan had taken to wife the daughter 19 of Meshullam, the son of Berechiah. Also they reported his "words" to me, and my words they carried to him. And Tobiah sent letters to put me in fear."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. We are here taught, that great pretensions of friendship, such as were made to Nehemiah, are not always to be depended upon. Their design seems to have been either to destroy or to disgrace him; "their words were softer than oil, but treachery and war were in their heart." Let us not wonder if we meet with treacherous and designing men; and to prevent the ill consequences of deceit, we should join the wisdom of the serpent with the meekness of the dove.

2. How melancholy is it when the sacred character is abused to countenance deceit and mischief! some who pretended to be prophets of God, endeavoured to hinder his work, and to destroy his faithful servants. Too many, under the name of christian ministers, have told mischievous lies in the name of the Lord; have persecuted, and endeavoured to destroy, the best of men. Others, by pretending to extraordinary devotions and revelations

the king of Persia; but his prudence and courage extricated him from every snare.

19. His words to me. This reading seems preferable to the reading of the text, in the opinion of the learned Hallet, one part of the sentence being up the doors, and the singers, and the Levites were appointed gate-keepers, I gave to my 2 brother Hanani, and Hananiah, the ruler of the palace, charge over Jerusalem; for Hananiah was a faithful man, and feared God above many. And I said to them, "Let not the gates of 3 Jerusalem be opened until the sun be hot; and while they stand by, let them shut the doors, and bar them: and appoint watches of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, every one in his watch, and every one to be over against his house. 4 Now the city was large and great, but the people were few therein, and the houses were not builded.

And my God put into my heart to assemble 5 the nobles, and the rulers, and the people, that they might be reckoned by genealogy. And I found a genealogical register of those who came up at first, and it was written therein, "These are the children of the province, 6 that went up out of the captivity, of those who had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, had carried away unto Babylon, and came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city. from heaven, have deceived persons, who, like Nehemiah, have been remarkable for wisdom and goodness. Let us be cautious, that we are not imposed upon; and try the spirits, whether they are of God; for even Satan can put on the form of an angel of light.

3. Steadfastness and resolution in a good work will overcome all difficulties, and at last be crowned with success. Had Nehemiah been discouraged and intimidated by these various artifices, perhaps all the glory of Jerusalem would have been injured; but his steadfastness brought the work to perfection. Let those who are desirous to serve God themselves, and promote the interests of religion, be resolute in the good cause. Let no allurements draw them aside, let no threatenings or banter dishearten them; and may we all learn, from this example, "to be steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know that our labour is not in vain in the Lord."

law before the congregation both of men and women; and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month. And he read therein, in the street before the water-gate, from the morning until mid-day, before the men and the women, and those that could understand; and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law. And Ezra, the scribe, stood upon a 4 pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose; and beside him, on his right hand, stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Anaiah, and Urijah, and Hilkiyah, and Maaseiah; and on his left hand, Pedaiah, and Mishael, and Malchiah, and Hashum, and Hashbadana, Zechariah, and Meshullam. And Ezra opened the book
 5 in the sight of all the people; (for he was above all the people;) and when he opened it, all the people stood up: And Ezra blessed Jehovah,
 6 the great God. And all the people, with uplifted hands, answered, "Amen, amen:" and they bowed their heads, and worshipped Jehovah with their faces to the ground. Also, Jo-

 8 in the book of the law of God, distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.

And Nehemiah, the governor, and Ezra, the 9 priest and scribe, and the Levites who taught the people, said to all the people, "This day is holy to Jehovah, your God; mourn not, nor weep." For all the people wept, when they heard the words of the law. Then he said to

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. We are taught by this example, that the reading and expounding the scriptures in public assemblies, is an important and useful exercise; it is doing great honour to God and to his word, and tends much to the edification and instruction of the church. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction, in righteousness." It is the business of ministers to read the law, to give the sense of it according to their best abilities, and cause the people to understand the true meaning; and to enforce on their consciences the duties required in it. It is the honour of many churches that this practice is still retained among them; and it is much to be wished that it was as general as it is proper and useful.

2. The congregation assembled were men and women, and those children who could understand any thing. Children are early capable of receiving instruction; and even before that period are capable of receiving some impressions of the seriousness and solemnity of worship on their minds, which may be of great importance to them in future life. Servants also should attend upon מִשְׁכָּנֵי. They were now thankfully to recollect the favours which God had recently conferred. These, called joy from Jehovah, were to be the themes of their praises.

14. Dwell in booths. Compare Levit. xxiii. 34.

15—17. This feast was kept in this manner in after times; and it is probable that it was so kept formerly. We are not to suppose that this feast had never been kept with such joy. They then rejoiced because God had given them the land of Canaan; and they now rejoiced that he had reversed roofs, some in their courts, some in the courts of the house of God, some in the street of the water-gate, and some in the street of the gate of Ephraim. And the whole congregation of 17 those who had come out of the captivity made booths, and sat under the booths: for since the days of Joshua, the son of Nun, unto that day, had not the children of Israel done so. And there was very great gladness. Also day by day 18 from the first day unto the last day, the book of the law of God was read. And they kept the feast seven days; and on the eighth day was a solemn assembly, according to the rite."

the worship of God; for detaining them at home on one part of the Lord's day, when there is no absolute necessity for it, is very injurious to them, and contrary to the will of God. The rule under the law was, "Gather the people together, men, and women, and children, and thy stranger that is within thy gates, that they may hear, and that they may learn, and fear the Lord your God, and observe to do all the words of the law:" and the same reason for it holds good under the gospel.

3. We learn the benefit of holy joy, and of keeping holy days with cheerfulness. Sabbaths, or holy convocations, ought to be kept with joy; the mind should be cheerful and thankful. Joy in God and his goodness, especially in giving us spiritual blessings, should be maintained. Works of charity are peculiarly proper on solemn feast days; and the goodness of God to us should make us bountiful and charitable to our poor brethren. We serve a good master, who loves to see his servants cheerful, easy, and happy; and nothing will contribute more to this than to do all in our power to make our devotion lively, and our charity warm and extensive. God loves a devout worshipper, and a cheerful giver.

18. Law of God was read. Henceforth the leading men took care that the law should be constantly read among the people; for it was ordered that in every town synagogues should be built, where certain prayers should be presented to God, and portions of his word read and explained to the people. This wise regulation prevented the people relapsing into the idolatry of their fathers.

5 with a loud voice to Jehovah, their God. And the Levites, Joshua, and Kadmiel, Bani, Hashabniah, Sherebiah, Hodijah, Shebaniah, and Pethahiah, said, "Stand up and bless Jehovah, your God, for ever and ever: and blessed be thy glorious name, which is exalted above the sea on dry land; and their persecutors, thou didst throw into the depths, as a stone into the mighty waters. Moreover, thou didst lead them 12 on the day, by a cloudy pillar; and during the night by a pillar of fire, to give them light in the way in which they should go. Thou didst 13 come down also upon mount Sinai, and didst speak with them from the heavens, and didst give them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments; And didst make 14 known to them thy holy sabbath, and didst command them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses, thy servant: And didst give 15 them bread from the heavens for their hunger, and didst bring water for them out of the rock for their thirst; and didst command them to go and possess the land which thou hadst sworn to give them. But they, our fathers, dealt proudly, 16 ly, and hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments; And refused to 17 obey, neither were mindful of thy wonders which thou didst among them; but hardened their necks, and appointed a captain to return to their bondage "in Egypt"; but thou being a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, didst not forsake them. Yea, when they had made for them- 18 selves a molten calf, and said, 'This is thy God who brought thee up out of Egypt,' and had wrought great provocations; Yet thou, in 19 thy manifold mercies, didst not forsake them in the wilderness: the pillar of cloud departed not from them by day, to lead them in the way; nor the pillar of fire by night, to show them light, and the way in which they should go.  22 and their feet swelled not. Moreover, thou didst give to them the kingdoms of the nations which thou didst wholly divide among them. They possessed the land of Sihon, king of Heshbon, and the land of Og, king of Bashan.

 23 Their children also thou didst multiply as the stars of the heavens, and didst bring them into the land, concerning which thou hadst promised to their fathers, that they should go in to 24 possess it. So the children went in and possessed the land, and thou didst subdue before them the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, and didst give them into their hands, with their kings, and the people of the land, that they 25 might do with them as they would. And they took strong cities, and a fat land, and possessed houses full of all good things, wells digged, vineyards, and oliveyards, and fruit trees in abundance. And they ate, and were filled, and became fat, and delighted themselves in thy 26 great bounty. But they were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, and cast thy law behind their backs, and slew thy prophets who testified against them to turn them to thee, and they
 27 wrought great provocations. Therefore thou didst deliver them into the hand of their enemies, who vexed them: yet, when in the time of their trouble, they cried unto thee, thou didst hear them from the heavens; and, according to thy manifold mercies, thou didst give them saviours, who saved them from the hand of their 28 enemies. But after they had rest, they did evil again before thee: therefore didst thou leave them in the hand of their enemies, so that they had dominion over them: yet when they returned, and cried to thee, thou didst hear them from the heavens; and many times, according 29 to thy mercy, didst thou deliver them. And thou didst testify against them, that thou might-

est bring them back to thy law: yet they dealt proudly, and hearkened not to thy commandments, but sinned against thy judgments, which if a man do, by them he shall live. Rebellious they turned their back, and hardened their neck, and would not hearken. Yet many years 30 didst thou bear with them, and didst testify against them by thy spirit in thy prophets; and when they would not give ear, then thou didst give them into the hand of the people of these countries. Nevertheless, for thy great mercies 31 sake, thou didst not utterly consume them, nor forsake them; for thou art a gracious and merciful God. Now, therefore, O our God, the 32 great, the mighty, and the terrible God, who keepest thy merciful covenant, let not all the calamity seem little to thee, which hath come on us; on our kings, on our princes, and on our priests, and on our prophets, and on our fathers, and on all thy people, since the time of the kings of Assyria unto this day. Thou, in 33 deed, art just in all that hath come upon us; for thou hast done right, but we have done wickedly. For our kings, our princes, our priests, 34 and our fathers, have not kept thy law, nor hearkened to thy commandments and thy testimonies, which thou didst impart to them. For in thine own kingdom, which in thy 35 great goodness thou didst give to them; and in the large and fat land which thou didst give before them, they did not serve thee, nor turn from their wicked works. Behold, we are 36 this day servants in the land which thou didst give to our fathers, that they might eat of its most excellent fruits; behold, in it we are servants. And its abundant increase we are obliged 37 to give to the kings whom thou hast set over us, because of our sins; also they have dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, according to their own will; and we are in great distress."

sense, and omitted the two words which have been repeated by the mistake of some transcriber.

27. Saviours. That is, the judges, whom God raised up on various occasions, to save them from the hand of their enemies.

35. In thine own kingdom. How much more perspicuous is this reading than the text. Three versions out of four support it.

36, 37. These concluding verses show their afflicted state. The king had power to employ them in his works or wars; had power to demand their

38 Now after all these things, we made a firm covenant which we wrote, and which our chiefs,
 1 Levites, and priests, sealed. And those who sealed, were Nehemiah, the son of Hachaliah,
 2 the governor, and Zidkijah, Seraiah, Azariah, Jeremiah, Pashur, Amariah, Malchijah,
 3 Hattush, Shebaniah, Malluch, Harim, Meremoth, Obadiah, Daniel, Ginnethon, Baruch, 4 Meshullam, Abijah, Mijamim, Maaziah, Bilkai, Shemaiah: these were the priests. And 5 the Levites were Joshua, the son of Azaniah, Binnui, of the sons of Henadad, Kadmiel;
 6 And their brethren, Shebaniah, Hodijah, Kelitha, Pelaiah, Hanan, Micha, Rehob, Hashabiah,
 7 Zaccur, Sherebiah, Shebaniah, Hodijah,
 8 Bani, Beninu. The chief of the people were Parosh, Pahath-moab, Elam, Zattu, Bani, 9 Bunni, Azgad, Bebai, Adonijah, Bigvai, Adin, Ater, Hizkijah, Azzur, Hodijah, Hashum,
 10 Bezai, Hariph, Anathoth, Nebai, Magpiash,
 11 Meshullam, Hezir, Meshezabeel, Zadok, Jaddua, Pelatiah, Hanan, Ananiah, Hoshea, Hannaniah, Hashub, Hallohesh, Pileha, Shobek, 12 Rehum, Hashabnah, Maaseiah, And Ahijah,
 13 Hanan, Anan, Malluch, Harim, Baanah.
 14 And the rest of the people, the priests, the Levites, the gate-keepers, the singers, the Nethinims, and all they that had separated themselves from the people of the lands to the law of God; their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one having knowledge, and 15 having understanding; They adhered to their brethren, the nobles, and bound themselves by oath under a curse, to walk according to God's law, (which was given by Moses, the servant of God,) and to observe and do all the commandments of Jehovah, our Lord, and his judgments and his statutes; And that we would 16 not give our daughters to the people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons; And if the people of the land should bring ware 31 or any victuals on the sabbath-day to sell, that we would not buy it of them on the sabbath, or other holy day: and that we would not cultivate the land on the seventh year, nor exact any debt. Also we made ordinances for ourselves, that we would give yearly, the third 32 part of a shekel for the service of the house of our God; For the presence-bread, and for 33 the continual wheaten-offering, and for the continual burnt-offering, of the sabbaths, of the new moons; for the stated feasts, and for the holy things, and for the sin-offerings, to make an atonement for Israel, and for all the work of the house of our God. And we cast lots respecting the oblation of wood among the priests, the Levites, and the people, that it might be brought to the house of our God, by each family, at appointed times yearly, to burn upon the altar of Jehovah, our God, as it is written in the law. Also we engaged to bring the first- 34 fruits of our ground, and the first-fruits of all the fruit trees, yearly, unto the house of Jehovah: And the first-born of our sons, and of 35 our cattle, as it is written in the law; the firstlings of our herds and of our flocks, to bring to the house of our God, to the priests, who minister in the house of our God. And likewise, 36 that we would bring the first of our dough, and our offerings, of the fruit of all manner of trees, of wine, and of oil, to the priests, to the chambers of the house of our God; and the tithes of our ground, through all our agricultural cities, to the Levites, who, in their turn, might give tithes to the priests. And the priest, the son of 37 Aaron, shall be with the Levites, when the Levites take tithes: and the Levites shall bring up the tithe of the tithes to the house of our God, tribute in cattle, or order them to be employed about his works; they were now tenants to the king of Persia, whereas formerly they held their land under God alone.

CHAP. X. 29. Here they solemnly engage to observe the whole law; and in what follows, they specify some particulars, in which they had lately offended, and to which they seemed but too much inclined. Ist, That they would not intermarry with the people of the land; Secondly, That they would keep holy the sabbath, not buying or selling on that day; Thirdly, That they would in future observe the sabbatical year.

32. The third part of, &c. This was a poll-tax paid by every Israelite, whether residing in Judea or any other country, and continued to be paid as long as the temple stood. They had the example of some of their best kings for such an ordinance. Comp. 2 Chron. xxiv. 5.

For the children of Israel and the children of Levi, shall bring the offering of the corn, of the new wine, and the oil, to the chambers, where are the vessels of the sanctuary, and the priests who minister, and the door-keepers, and the singers; and we will not forsake the house of our God."

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 445. The rulers, the voluntary men, and every tenth man chosen by lot, dwell at Jerusalem, and their names, &c.

- 1 "AND the rulers of the people dwelt at Jerusalem; the rest of the people also cast lots, to bring one out of ten to dwell in Jerusalem, the holy city, and nine parts to dwell in other cities.
- 2 And the people blessed all the men, who willingly offered themselves to dwell at Jerusalem.
- 3 Now these are the chiefs of the province who dwelt in Jerusalem: for in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of Israel, dwelt every one in

CHAP. XI. 3. v Sept. Syr.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS IX. & X. 1. We are taught to form high and honourable thoughts of God whenever we approach him, "that his name may be exalted." The noblest creatures cannot praise him as he deserves, cannot make him more excellent. He is not only above our blessing and praise, but above all blessing and praise. We should consider him as the creator and preserver of the whole. Angels worship him, and therefore he is worthy of our highest reverence.

2. The goodness of God in giving us laws and ordinances, ought to be reflected upon with peculiar thankfulness, (ver. 13.) and particular notice is taken of the sabbath, ver. 14. It was a singular and valuable gift; a sign between God and them, that they were his people, and the worshippers of the true God. He gave them also his good spirit to instruct them. This blessing we have particular reason to be thankful for. The laws of Christ are right, true, and good; are not so burdensome and grievous as the CHAP. XI. 1. Michaelis conjectured, that Nehemiah borrowed from the writings of Ezra what is contained from ch. vii. 6. to the beginning of this; and to him Dathe assents. I think there are objections to this hypothesis which cannot easily be removed. First, The date of the different commissions which they received, the one in the 5th, the other in the 20th year of Artaxerxes. Secondly, The express mention of Nehemiah as Tershatha or governor, ch. viii. 9. which he could not be until the commission of Ezra expired, and he had received his own. Thirdly, the solemn covenant now made, he, as governor, was the first that sealed, ch. x. 1. I conceive then that the catalogue included all that is borrowed from Ezra, and what follows to have occurred during Nehemiah's superintendence of the Jewish state. The walls of Jerusalem being built, Nehemiah seems to have gone to the Persian court, as he appointed a deputy to govern, vii. 2; on his re-

his possession; the priests, and the Levites, and the Nethinims, and the children of Solomon's servants. Now at Jerusalem dwelt some of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin. Of the posterity of Judah; Athathiah of the posterity of Pharez, by Uzziab, the son of Zechariah, the son of Amariah, the son of Shephatiah, the son of Mahalaleel; And Maaseiah, the son of Baruch, the son of Col-hozeh, the son of Hazaiah, the son of Adaiah, the son of Joiarib, the son of Zechariah, the son of Shiloni. All the posterity of Pharez who dwelt at Jerusalem, were four hundred and sixty-eight valiant men. And these are the posterity of Benjamin; Sallu, the son of Meshullam, the son of Joed, the son of Pedaiah, the son of Kolaiah, the son of Maaseiah, the son of Ithiel, the son of Isaiah. And after him, Gabbai, Sallai, nine hundred and twenty-eight. And Joel, the son of Zichri, was their overseer; and Judah, the son of Senuah, was second over the Jewish laws; the sabbath is continued, and the observation of it enforced by the authority of Christ, and in commemoration of his resurrection; his good spirit is given to instruct us; and we have the hope of the heavenly Canaan. These mercies are of great value, and ought to be recollected every day; and should be acknowledged with peculiar thankfulness in all our public assemblies.

3. With solemn exercises of devotion it is proper to enter into solemn engagements to be the Lord's. "Because of all this," thy mercy, and our disobedience, "we make a firm covenant." When we are convinced of the evil of sin, we should solemnly engage to have no more to do with it; when we have recollected the mercies of God, we should bind ourselves to make all suitable returns, and promise and engage to keep God's commands. This we have frequently done; let us often reflect upon it; and "hav-sworn, let us perform it, that we will keep God's righteous judgments.

turn, considering the inhabitants of Jerusalem few, he devised the plan of increasing them. In the mean time, Ezra having completed his revision of the law, and the feast of the seventh month occurring, what is related in the 8th, 9th, and 10th chapters took place. Nehemiah then took occasion to fulfil his design, and ordered the rulers to reside at Jerusalem; others willingly came to dwell there; and every tenth man was chosen by lot, whose names follow.

3. Of the province. Judea was now made a province of the Persian empire. That some of the ten tribes returned is evident, but the priests and Levites had cities in the land of Israel, as distinguished from Judah, as we learn from Joshua, and in these they again dwelt.

10. Jedaiah, &c. The parallel place justifies the omission of some of the names. See note Hebrew Bible.

10 city. Of the priests: Jedaiah, Joiarib, Jachin, 11 Seraiah, the son of Hilkiah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Zadok, the son of Meraioth, the son of Ahitub, the ruler of the house of 12 God. And their brethren who did the service of the sanctuary, were eight hundred and twenty-two: and Adaiah, the son of Jeroham, the son of Pelaliah, the son of Amzi, the son of Zechariah, the son of Pashur, the son of Mal-13 chiah, And his brethren, paternal chiefs, two hundred and forty-two: and Amashai, the son of Azareel, the son of Ahasai, the son of Me-14 shillemoth, the son of Immer, And their brethren, men of valour, a hundred and twenty-eight: and their overseer was Zabdiel, the son 15 of Hagdolim. Also of the Levites: Shemaiah, the son of Hashub, the son of Azrikam, the 16 son of Hashabiah, the son of Bunni; And Shabbethai, and Jozabad, chiefs of the Levites, had the oversight of the outward business of the 17 house of God. And Mattaniah, the son of Micha, the son of Zabdi, the son of Asaph, was the chief leader in thanksgiving and prayer;
 and Bakbukiah, the second among his brethren, then Abda, the son of Shammua, the son of 18 Galal, the son of Jeduthun. All the Levites in the holy city were two hundred and eighty-19 four. Moreover, the gate-keepers, Akkub, Talmon, and their brethren, who kept the gates, were a hundred and seventy-two.
 20 And the residue of Israel, of the priests, and the Levites, were in all the cities of Judah, 21 every one in his inheritance. But the Nethinims dwelt in Ophel: and Ziha, and Gispah, 22 were over the Nethinims. The overseer also of the Levites at Jerusalem, as to the business of the house of God, was Uzzi, the son of Bani, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Matta-niah, the son of Micha, of the sons of Asaph, 23 the singers. For by the king's command, a certain portion was allowed daily for the singers.
 24 And Pethahiah, the son of Meshezabeel, of the posterity of Zerah, the son of Judah, was, by the king's authority, over all matters respecting the people. And many of the Jews dwelt in 25

 the villages, in their own lands at Kirjath-arba, and its villages, and at Dibon, and its villages,
 and at Jekabzeel, and its villages; And at 26
 Jeshua, and at Molahah, and at Beth-phelet,
 And at Hashur-shual, and at Beer-sheba, and 27
 its villages; And at Ziklag, and at Meko- 28
 nah, and its villages; And at En-rimmon, and 29
 at Zareah, and at Jarmuth, Zanoah, Adul- 30 lam, and their villages; at Lachish, and its fields; at Azekah, and its villages. And they dwelt from Beer-sheba unto the valley of Hin-nom. The children also of Benjamin, from 31 Geba, Michmash, and Aija, and Beth-el, and their villages; And at Anathoh, Nob, Ana- 32
 niah, Hazor, Ramah, Gittaim, Hadid, Zeboim, 33
 Neballat, Lod, and Ono, the valley of Cha- 34
 rasim. And of the classes of the Levites, some 35 dwelt in Judah, and some in Benjamin.

Now these are the priests and the Levites 1
 who came up with Zerubbabel, the son of Salathiel, and Joshua: Seraiah, Jeremiah, Ezra, Amariah, Malluch, Hattush, Shecaniah, Re- 2
 hum, Meremoth, Iddo, Ginnetho, Abijah, 3 Miamin, Maadiah, Bilgah, Shemaiah, and Joi- 4
 arib, Jedaiah, Sallu, Amok, Hilkiah, Jedaiah. 5
 These were the chiefs of the priests, and of 6 their brethren, in the days of Joshua. More- 7 over, the Levites: Joshua, Binnui, Kadmiel, 8 Sherebiah, Judah, and Mattaniah, who, with his own brethren, was the leader in the praises of the temple. And Bakbukiah and Unni, their 9 brethren, superintended the watches.

And Joshua begot Joiakim, and Joiakim be- 10
 got Eliashib, and Eliashib begot Joiada, And 11
 Joiada begot Jonathan, and Jonathan begot Jaddua. And in the days of Joiakim, the 12 paternal chiefs of the priests were: from Seraiah, Meraiah; from Jeremiah, Hananiah;
 From Ezra, Meshullam; from Amariah, Jeho- 13
 hanan; From Melicu, Jonathan; from She- 14

 chiefs, were * * *: also the priests, to the reign of Darius, the Persian, were * * *

23 The sons of Levi, the paternal chiefs, were written in the chronicles, even until the days of 24 Johanan, the son of Eliashib. And the chiefs of the Levites: Hashabiah, Sherebiah, and Joshua, the son of Kadmiel, with their brethren, were appointed to praise and give thanks,

 according to the command of David, the man

25 of God, in alternate bands. Mattaniah, and Bakbukiah, Obadiah, Meshullam, Talmon, Akkub, kept watch at the thresholds of the 26 gates. These lived in the days of Joiakim, the son of Joshua, the son of Jozadak, and in the days of Nehemiah, the governor, and of Ezra,

 the priest and scribe.

27 And at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem, they sought and brought the Levites from all their places to Jerusalem, to keep the dedication with gladness; with thanksgivings, and songs, accompanied with cymbals, psalteries, 28 and harps. And all those skilful in sacred music were assembled from the plain country round about Jerusalem, and from the villages of Ne-

29 tophathi; And from the region of Gilgal, and the fields of Geba and Azmaveth: for those musicians had built for themselves villages round 30 about Jerusalem. And the priests and the Levites purified themselves; and they purified

31 the people, and the gates, and the wall. Then I brought up the chiefs of Judah upon the wall, and appointed two great bands to sing praises; one of which went along the wall to 32 the right, towards the dung-gate. And after them went Hoshaiah, and half of the chiefs of Judah, Azariah, Ezra, and Meshullam, Judah, and Benjamin, and Shemaiah, and Jeremiah. And some of the sons of the priests with 35 trumpets; namely, Zechariah, the son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Michaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph. And his brethren, Shema- 36

 iah, and Azarael, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethaneel, and Judah, Hanani, with the musical instruments of David, the man of God, and Ezra, the scribe, before them. And at the 37 fountain-gate, which was opposite to them, the rest went up by the stairs of the city of David, ascending the wall, above the house of David,
 even to the water-gate eastward. And the 38 other band went over against them, and I after them, and the half of the people upon the wall from beyond the furnace-tower, even unto the broad wall; And from above the gate of 39
 Ephraim, and above the old-gate, and above the fish-gate, and the tower of Hanaieel, and the tower of Meah, even unto the sheep-gate:
 and they stood still at the prison-gate. Then 40
 the two bands stood in the house of God, and I,
 and half of the rulers with me: And the 41
 priests, Eliakim, Maaseiah, Miniamin, Michaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, and Hananiah, with trumpets; And Maaseiah, and Shemaiah, and 42 Eleazar, and Uzzi, and Jehohanan, and Mal-chijah, and Elam, and Ezer. And the singers sang aloud, with Jezrahiah, their leader. And 43 on that day they offered great-sacrifices, and rejoiced; for God had caused them to rejoice with great joy; the women also and the children rejoiced; so that the rejoicing of Jerusalem was heard afar off.

And at that time some were appointed over 44
 the chambers for the treasures, for the offerings,
 for the first-fruits, and for the tithes, to gather into them from the fields of the cities, the portions assigned by the law for the priests and the Levites: for Judah rejoiced that the priests and the Levites waited at the temple. And they 45

have been added long after Nehemiah, as must be evident to all.

 them, either in the versions or the mss.

 sense in several other places.

observed what related to the worship of their God, and to purification; and so did the musicians and gate-keepers, according to the commandment of David, and of Solomon, his son.
 46 For in the days of David and Asaph of old, chiefs of the musicians were appointed to sing songs
 47 of praise to God. And all Israel, in the days of Zerubbabel, and in the days of Nehemiah, gave the daily portions to the singers and the door-keepers; and the holy things to the Levites; and the Levites the tenth of the holy things to the children of Aaron."

CHAPTER XIII.

B. C. 434. The abuses which had obtained, and Nehemiah's redress of them.

- 1 "ON that day they read in the book of Moses in the hearing of the people; and therein was found written, that an Ammonite, or a Moabite, should never enter into the congregation of 2 God; Because they met not the children of Israel with bread and with water, but hired Balaam against them, that he should curse them; but our God turned the curse into a blessing.
 3 Now, when they had heard the law, they separated from Israel all the mixed multitude.
 4 Now, before this, Eliashib, the priest, having the oversight of the chamber of the house of 5 our God, was allied to Tobiah: And he had prepared for him a great chamber, where they laid the wheaten-offerings, the incense, and the utensils, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, which was commanded to be given to the Levites, the singers; and the door-
 6 keepers; and the offerings of the priests. But when all these things were done, I was not at

at Jerusalem: for in the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes, king of Babylon, I came to the king, but after some time I obtained leave of the king: And I came back to Jerusalem, and 7 understood the evil deed which Eliashib had done in favour of Tobiah, in preparing for him a chamber in the courts of the house of God. And it grieved me exceedingly: therefore I 8 cast out all the household furniture of Tobiah from the chamber. I then commanded, and 9 they cleansed the chambers; and thither I brought back the utensils of the house of God, with the wheaten-offering and the incense.

And I perceived that the portions of the Le- 10 vites had not been given to them; for the Levites and the singers, who did the service of the temple, had fled every one to his own field. Then I contended with the rulers, and said, 11 "Why is the house of God forsaken?" And I assembled and appointed them to their own office. Then all Judah brought the tithe of the corn, 12 and the new wine, and the oil, into the treasuries. And I made treasurers over the trea- 13 suries, Shelemiah, the priest, and Zadok, the scribe, and of the Levites, Pedaiah: and next to them was Hanan, the son of Zaccur, the son of Mattaniah: for they were counted faithful, and their office was to distribute to their brethren. Remember me, O my God, concerning 14 this; blot not out my kindness, which I have showed to the house of my God, and to its services.

In those days I saw in Judah some treading 15 wine-presses on the sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; and also that on the REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XI. & XII. 1. We may remark, that honourable mention is made of those who preferred Jerusalem, and willingly came there to dwell. They, doubtless, went there not only for security, but from a love to the temple. Because of the house of Jehovah, their God, they chose to reside there. In the choice of residences, every good man would wish to live where he can enjoy the benefit of religious ordinances; where he can associate with them who fear and worship God. Such a choice will be attended with great advantage; and there will be no reason to regret it.

2. The expression of the people's joy on the completion of the wall, may remind us how we ought to rejoice, when the spiritual Jerusalem is built up. Every method was adopted to express their grateful feelings, and the glory was given where it was due, to the God of Israel. Their joy was accompanied with sacrifice, to intimate that there is no spiritual joy without atonement. Guilt must be removed, before we can rejoice in the triumphs of his grace among men. Build up, O God, thy Jerusalem still; and make thy Zion the joy of the whole earth. Let the Redeemer's kingdom be universally established.

CHAP. XIII. 1. An Ammonite, &c. Compare Dent. xxiii. 3, 4.

6. I was not at Jerusalem. This proves that Nehemiah had been for some time absent, as this abuse had crept in during that period. Ch. vii. 2.

sabbath, they brought into Jerusalem, wine, grapes, and figs, and burdens of every kind; and I testified to them when they ought to sell food. And the Tyrians who dwelt at Jerusalem, brought fish, and other articles, and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah. Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said to them, "What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath-day? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? and will ye increase the divine wrath against Israel by profaning the sabbath?" And, when the gates of Jerusalem were overshadowed before the sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the sabbath; and I appointed some of my servants at the gates, that no burden might be brought in on the sabbath-day. So the merchants and sellers of all kinds of articles lodged once or twice without Jerusalem. Then I protested against them, and said to them, "Why lodge ye about the wall? if ye do so again, I will lay hold on you." From that time forth they came no more on the sabbath. And I commanded the Levites, that they should purify themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates, to hallow the sabbath-day. Remember me, O my God, for this also, and spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. We are taught how dangerous the consequences are of being unequally yoked with unbelievers, or those who have no real religion. How dishonourable was it to the servants of God! how uncomfortable to themselves! how injurious to their children! who were likely to learn the language of Ashdod, that is, profane and sinful discourse. When professors thus violate the laws of God in reference to one of the most important affairs of life, it is no wonder that the sabbath should be profaned, by buying and selling, and in other ways.

2. We see what zeal and piety may accomplish. Nehemiah set so that the Levites were obliged to desert the temple-service, and to go to cultivate their own land.

16. Who dwelt at Jerusalem. In rendering this I have given the sense rather than the idiom. The noun being given makes the pronoun pleonastic. In it can only refer to Jerusalem.

19. Were overshadowed. That is, when the sun was about setting; for the gates were overshadowed by reason of the mountains which were round about and near Jerusalem. Ps. cxxv. 2.

In those days I saw also Jews, who had married women of Ashdod, of Ammon, and of Moab; And their children spoke half the speech of Ashdod, and could not speak in the Jews' language, but according to the language of each people. And I contended with them, and reprov'd them; yea, I smote some of them, and plucked off their hair, and made them swear by God, saying, "Ye shall not give your daughters to their sons, nor take their daughters for your sons, or for yourselves. Did not Solomon, king of Israel, sin by these things? although among many nations, there was no king like him, who was beloved of his God, so that God made him king over all Israel: nevertheless, even him did foreign women cause to sin. Shall we then hearken to you, to do all this great evil, to transgress against our God by marrying foreign women?" And one of the sons of Joiada, the son of Eliashib, the high-priest, was son-in-law to Sanballat, the Horonite; therefore I chased him from me. Remember them, O my God, because they have defiled the priesthood, and the covenant of the priesthood, and of the Levites. Thus I purified them from all strangers, and appointed the offices of the priests and Levites, every one to his own office. And for the wood-offering, at times appointed, and for the first-fruits. Remember me, O my God, for good."

his face like a flint, and resolutely opposed the folly and sin of the people; and his success should animate us to go and do likewise. Yet, whatever we do in the cause of God and religion, let us still remember our obligations to divine grace. Nehemiah, after all his labours for the good of Zion, prayed that God would spare him "according to the greatness of his mercy." We ought ever to keep in mind, that it is God who inclines us to do good, who assists and succeeds us in it; and to him the glory should be given. Every good man should say with the Apostle, in respect to any good work, "Not I, but the grace of God which was with me."

speak a different language from the fathers.

28. Son-in-law. Josephus says that this man's name was Manasseh, that he went to Samaria, and his father-in-law, Sanballat, by his interest with the Persian prince, got leave to build a temple on mount Gerizim, like that at Jerusalem; that he made his son-in-law high-priest, and many that married strange wives went after him, and others also who had violated the Jewish law, and deserved punishment; so that it became a receptacle for apostate Jews; and this occasioned that enmity between the Jews and Samaritans which continued till Christ's time.

ESTHER.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS book contains the narrative of a plot to destroy all the Jews dispersed throughout the Persian empire, and the wonderful interposition of Providence in defeating it. The author of the book is not known, some ascribing it to Ezra, and others to Mordecai. Its canonical authority has been questioned, on account of the wonderful series of events which it records, and because the name of God never once occurs in it. The Jews, it is plain, admitted it; and it is difficult to account for such a history, unless it was founded in truth. Besides, it is impossible to believe that the Jewish nation would appoint and observe, even to this day, the feast of PURIM, if the book contained a fictitious narrative. I agree with Prideaux, that the Ahasuerus of this book, is the Artaxerxes of Nehemiah; and so the Greek translators always render Ahasuerus. Further, the influence of Esther accounts for the favour shown to the Israelites during his reign; and she was present when Nehemiah made his request and obtained his commission. Nehem. ii. 6. I place then the transactions recorded, about the fourth to the thirteenth year of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, when Haman perished.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 521. Ahasuerus makes a feast; the queen refuses to come; her punishment.

1 Now it was in the days of Ahasuerus, ° who reigned from India even unto Ethiopia, over a 2 hundred and twenty-seven provinces: When in those days, king Ahasuerus sat on the throne of his kingdom, which was in the palace Shushan, 3 In the third year of his reign, he made a feast for all his princes and his servants; the commanders of the Persian and Median army, the nobles and chiefs of the provinces, being 4 before him: When he showed the abundant riches, and the honour and greatness of his kingdom many days, even a hundred and 5 eighty days. And when these days were expired, the king made a feast of seven days, for all the people who were present in the palace Shushan, both great and small, in the court of the garden of the king's palace. The hangings 6 of the canopy were of the finest linen, white and blue, fastened with cords of fine purple cotton, to silver rings and pillars of marble; the cushions were embroidered with gold and silver, upon a pavement of red, and blue, and white, and black, marble. And they gave them 7 drink in golden vessels, the vessels being constantly changed; and royal wine in abundance, according to the state of the king. And the 8 drinking was according to the law; none was compelled: for so the king had appointed to all the officers of his house, that they should do according to every man's pleasure. Also 9 Vashti, the queen, made a feast for the women in the royal house which belonged to king Ahasuerus.

On the seventh day, when the heart of the 10 king was cheerful with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, and A-

CHAP. I.

CHAP. I. From India, &c. From Daniel, vi. 1. we learn that the Persian empire was at first divided into 120 provinces, so that from the time of Cyrus seven new provinces had been added. It is not easy to specify the precise limits of this vast empire. The Ethiopia here mentioned was, I think, a part of Arabia Felix, and not Abyssinia; for it does not appear that the Persians ever conquered the Abyssinians.

2. Shushan. This city, where the Persian kings had a magnificent palace, was situate on the river Ulla, or Euleus of the Greek writers, was the capital of the province of Elam, or Susiana, and at no great distance from Babylon.

3. Made a feast. On the death of Xerxes, by Artabanes, he raised Artaxerxes to the throne, with the intention of cutting him off; but the design of Artabanes being known, it was prevented, and himself punished. When Artaxerxes had counteracted the plots of his enemies, and his power was established, and peace prevailing, he made this splendid feast.

6. The cushions, &c. This refers to the Persian method of sitting, or rather, reclining on cushions, which were placed on a raised part of the room adjoining the wall; in the present case, this was raised in the court, and consisted of the richest marble.

bagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven eunuchs, 11 who waited on Ahasuerus, the king, To bring Vashti, the queen, to the king with the crown royal, to show the people and the princes her 12 beauty: for she was exceedingly beautiful. But the queen Vashti refused to come at the king's command by the eunuchs: therefore was the king very wroth, and his anger burned in him.
 13 Then the king said to the wise men, who knew the customs, (for thus every affair of the king was laid before all those who knew law 14 and judgment. And there were then near to him Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan, the seven princes of Persia and Media, who saw the king's face, and held the first place in the kingdom ;) 15 "What shall we do to the queen Vashti according to law, because she hath not performed the command of the king Ahasuerus by the eu-16 nuchs?" And Memucan answered in the presence of the king and the princes, "Vashti, the queen, hath not done wrong to the king only,
 but also to all the princes, and to all the people who are in the provinces of the king Ahasuerus.
 17 For this deed of the queen will spread abroad among all the women, and they will despise their own husbands, when it shall be reported, 'The king Ahasuerus commanded Vashti, the queen, to be brought in before him, but she would not come.' In like-manner will the ladies of 18

 Persia and Media, who have heard of this deed of the queen, speak to all the king's princes;
 and thus will arise mutual contempt and displeasure. If it please the king, let a royal edict 19 be promulgated by him, and let it be written
 among the laws of the Persians and the Medes, that it may not be altered, 'That Vashti come no more before king Ahasuerus; and let the king give her royal estate unto another that is better than she.' And when the king's decree 20 which he shall make shall be published throughout all his empire, (for it is great,) all the women will give to their own husbands, whether rich or poor, due honour." And this counsel 21 pleased the king and the princes; and the king
 did according to the counsel of Memucan:
 For he sent letters into all the king's provinces, 22
 into every province, according to its written language, to every people after their own tongue, that every man should bear rule in his own house, and should speak the language of his own people.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. We may learn how much of the vanity of the world appears amidst all its glory. When Ahasuerus was making this great feast, with all his splendour and magnificence, and every heart admiring his grandeur and bounty, the disobedience of his queen tarnished it all: and those who were astonished at his power, majesty, and splendour, would depart and say, 'What advantage is it to Ahasuerus to rule so many provinces afar off, if he cannot command at home? In vain doth he boast of governing so many thousands, when he is thus checked, repulsed, and disappointed, in his own house.' What little dependance is to be placed on external grandeur, when such various, and sometimes trifling circumstances, may spoil and embitter it.

2. The custom which prevailed in the court of Persia, or compelling no one to drink, was very good and highly proper; and deserves to be universally adopted. It is a reproach to many called christians, that they allow not the same liberty, but try, at least, to

13. The customs. I have thus rendered, because the same persons seem to be meant, who are in the next clause said to know law and judgment.
 The terms חכמים must be taken to imply their knowledge of history, law, &c. The conduct of Ahasuerus was improper in commanding the queen to be brought and exposed; yet her refusal was also improper, according to the established customs of the east.

16. And Memucan, &c. Memucan is mentioned last; he was probably make men intemperate, by forcing them to take more than they otherwise might. Let you and me, my reader, guard against a custom so prevalent and so disgraceful to man, as reasonable, and especially as professing the gospel. "Let your moderation be known to all men;

 and be not filled with wine, but rather with the Spirit."

3. We may observe how much a little obstinacy and ill humour may affect the future happiness of life, especially in the married relation. It becomes all persons, more especially husbands and wives, to guard against all differences and quarrels, particularly before company, than which nothing is more scandalous. This unalterable decree of the king of Persia, that "every man should bear rule in his own house," is likewise an unalterable decree of the king of kings, and a rule of the gospel; and the peace and happiness of families would be very much secured, if the apostle's precept was observed, "Let every man love his wife as himself, and the wife see that she reverence her husband."

the youngest privy counsellor, and, therefore, speaks first; as is the custom of our judges, that they may not be influenced by the opinion of their seniors.

22. Should speak the, &c. I have followed the Chaldee and many ancient and modern commentators, in rendering this clause. The common version is the mere repetition of the preceding words; the version which I have given makes it an injunction to men, to use their native tongue, and not to neglect it out of complacency to their foreign wives.

CHAPTER II!

B. C. 518. Vashti being divorced, Esther is chosen to succeed her.

- 1 AFTER these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, he remembered Vashti, and what she had done, and what was
- 2 decreed against her. Then said the king's servants who ministered to him, "Let there be beautiful young virgins sought for the king;
- 3 And let the king appoint officers in all the provinces of his kingdom, who may assemble all the most beautiful young virgins unto the palace Shushan, to the house of the women, under the care of Hegai, the king's eunuch, keeper of the women; and let their purification-
- 4 things be given to them: And let the young woman who pleaseth the king be queen instead of Vashti." And the thing pleased the king; and he did so.
- 5 Now, in the palace Shushan, there was a certain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, the son of Jair, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish,
- 6 a Benjaminite; Who had been carried away from Jerusalem among the captives, with Jecooniah, king of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar,
- 7 the king of Babylon, had carried away. And he brought up Hadassah, that is, Esther, his uncle's daughter; for she had neither father nor mother, and the young woman was beautiful in form and features; whom Mordecai, when her father and mother were dead, took for his own daughter.
- 8 Now, when the king's command and his decree was heard, and when many young women were assembled unto the palace Shushan, to the custody of Hegai, Esther was brought also unto the king's house, to the custody of Hegai,
- 9 keeper of the women; And the young woman pleased him, and found acceptance with him; and he speedily gave her the purification-things, with her assigned portions; and he gave to her seven maids, selected from the king's house: and he preferred her and her maids to the best place of the house of the women. Esther had not told 10 her people or her kindred: for Mordecai had charged her that she should not tell it. And 11 Mordecai walked every day before the court of the women's house, that he might know how Esther did, and what would be done to her.

Now each young woman in her turn was in- 12 troduced to king Ahasuerus, after she had been twelve months, according to the law respecting the women. For so many days were spent in their purification; six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and other things used for their purification. When a 13 young woman was introduced to the king, whatsoever she desired to take with her out of the house of the women to the king's house, was given to her. In the evening she went, and on 14 the morrow she returned into the second house of the women, under the care of Shaashgoz, the king's eunuch, who kept the concubines: she went in to the king no more, unless the king delighted in her, and called for her by name.

Now when the turn of Esther, the daughter 15 of Abihail, the uncle of Mordecai, who had taken her for his daughter, had come to go in to the king, she required nothing but what Hegai, the king's eunuch, the keeper of the women, appointed. And Esther obtained favour in the eyes of all those who saw her. Esther was then 16 taken to king Ahasuerus, into his royal house, in the tenth month, which is the month Tebeth, in the seventh year of his reign. And the king 17 loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained favour and acceptance in his sight more than all the virgins; so that he set the royal crown upon her head, and made her queen instead of Vashti. Then the king made a great 18

CHAP. II. 1. Remembered Vashti. He now probably repented of what he had done, but pride, and the foolish custom of not altering a decree, prevented him from being reconciled to the queen.

2-4. This proposal was intended to divert his thoughts, as well as to provide a new consort; and it perfectly suits the known manners of the Persians. Kings did not marry women for their rank or wealth, but for their beauty and accomplishments; and, like Solomon, they had in their harems a vast number.

5-7. I cannot but think that these verses contain a strong presumptive proof of the truth of the narrative. Mordecai's pedigree, and that of his relative Esther, is given, with particularity; and the reason why Mordecai was so greatly interested in her.

12-14. We have here a peep into the manners of oriental kings, among whom polygamy was carried to the most extravagant lengths; and in their history the miseries and mischiefs of it were abundantly displayed.

feast, a feast on his marriage with Esther, for all his princes and his servants; and he made a release to the provinces, and gave gifts, according to the state of the king.

²⁰ Now Mordecai sat at the king's gate; And Esther told not her kindred nor her people; as Mordecai had charged her: for Esther did the commandment of Mordecai, like as when she 21 was brought up with him. And in those days while Mordecai sat at the king's gate, two of the king's eunuchs, Bigthana and Teresh, door-keepers, were wroth, and sought to slay the 22 king Ahasuerus. And the thing was known to Mordecai, who told it to Esther, the queen; and Esther informed the king, in the name of 23 Mordecai. And the thing was investigated and proved; and they were both hanged on a tree: and it was written in the chronicles before the king.

B. C. 510. Haman's advancement; despised by Mordecai, seeketh in revenge the destruction of the Jews.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. We may justly admire the care which God exercises towards those who have been early left orphans, by raising them up guardians and friends. It was happy for Esther, when in a strange land, to find so faithful and so tender a guardian as her cousin Mordecai was. Those who have found, in relations, or friends, persons who acted with the tenderness and kindness of parents, should thankfully own the goodness of God. This should be a motive to all to be the friends of orphans, that they may live to see the good effects of their care and charity. Such works are very benevolent, and pleasing to God, who hath taken it among the titles of his honour, to be "the father of the fatherless," and hath commanded us "to be merciful, as he is merciful."

2. An easy, moderate, contented temper in young people, bodes well as to their future advancement. It is observed, that Esther was contented without all that apparatus of perfumes, dress, and ornaments, which the other women had; and it was no wonder that this

19. Now Mordecai, &c. I have omitted the words thrown into the bottom margin, on the authority of the Greek version, because they are not connected with the narrative, and as no one has been able to explain them.

21. Sought to slay. Literally, "to put forth the hand to or against the king." I have preferred the sense, with Dean Pilkington and others; for it is manifest that they sought his life. We are not informed what was the reason of their anger; but most probably their disappointed expectations.

ted Haman, the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, and advanced him, and set his seat above all the princes who were with him. And all the 2 king's servants, who were at the king's gate, bowed, and revered Haman; for the king had so commanded concerning him. But Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence. Then 3 the king's servants who were at the king's gate, said to Mordecai, "Why transgressest thou the king's command?" Now, when they spoke 4 daily to him, and he hearkened not to them, they told Haman, that they might see whether Mordecai's reasons would stand good: for he had told them that he was a Jew. And when 5 Haman saw that Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence, then was Haman full of wrath. And it seemed a contemptible thing to stretch 6 forth a hand against Mordecai alone; for they had told him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman sought to destroy all the Jews, the people of Mordecai, who were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus.

In the first month, which is the month Nisan, 7 in the twelfth year of king Ahasuerus, they cast recommended her first to the king's officers, and then to the king himself. Fondness for dress, ornament, and show, is a sign of a light, trifling mind. Those who are most fond of these things, generally defeat their own ends, and render themselves contemptible in the eyes of those whom they desire to please and allure. Virtue, modesty, and good nature, are the truest charms.

3. God can, and often does make the disorderly affections and dispositions of the human mind answer his own wise and gracious purpose. We hear nothing yet of Haman and his plot; but God is here taking methods to defeat it, before it was formed. Vashti's rage, the king's inordinate passion, the choice of virgins, the chamberlain's treason, all subserve the divine purposes. It is a comfortable thought, that God knows how to overrule the lusts and passions of men to answer his own designs, and bring about the happiness of his church and people. In this we may rejoice, that though "there are many devices in the heart of man, the counsel of the Lord shall stand."

2. Mordecai bowed not. This must have arisen from some conscientious motive; either from the nature of the homage required, or else Mordecai, as a Jew, thought it sinful to pay respect to him as an Amalekite. I think the former most probable, as in the 4th verse, he informs the king's servants that he was a Jew, and of course could not, in consistence with the precepts of his religion, pay divine homage to any man.

6. A contemptible thing. Unworthy his power and greatness; he resolved, therefore, to destroy the whole Jewish race.

7. They cast pur. This is known to be an ancient custom among the

Pur, that is, the lot, before Haman from day to day, and from month to month, "that he might destroy on one day the race of Mordecai, and the lot fell for the fourteenth" of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar. And Haman said to king Ahasuerus, "There is a certain people scattered and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and their laws are different from those of all other people; and they keep not the king's laws: and it is not for the king's profit to suffer them to live. If it please the king, let it be commanded that they may be destroyed; and I will pay ten thousand talents of silver to those who perform this business, that they may bring it into the king's treasuries." And the king took his ring from his hand, and gave it to Haman, the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the Jews' enemy. And the king said to Haman, "The silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee." Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month, and there was written according to all that Haman commanded to the king's lieutenants, and to the governors who were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province, written in the writing, and in the language of every people; in the name of king Ahasuerus was it written, and sealed with the king's ring. And the letters were sent by posts into all the king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish, all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day, upon the "fourteenth" day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar, and to take the spoil of them for a prey. This was the substance of the written law to be published in every province, and among every people, that they should be ready against that day. The posts went out, being hastened by the king's commandment, and the decree was published in the palace Shushan. And the king and Haman sat down to drink: but the city Shushan was troubled.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. A good man will bring religion into the common affairs of life, and carry the ordinary forms of civility no further than is consistent with it. It was not pride or stiffness which influenced Mordecai, but a principle of conscience, for which his memory is worthy of reverence. It suggests a useful hint to us, to make the word of God the standard of politeness and good breeding, at least so far as never to contradict its rules. This will prevent fulsome flattery, and all mean and sinful compliances, the injuring of our health, the wasting of time, or neglecting religious services, to please and humour any persons, be they ever so great and eminent. A wise and good man will never pay any compliment to the injury of his conscience, and to displease him who is higher than the highest, and whose favour is all in all.

2. How miserable is that mind which is under the influence of pride and revenge. What a wretched, restless principle is pride! How astonishing, that Haman should ever form such a cruel and diabolical scheme! There is great need for us all to watch against the rising of pride and revenge, for they may transport persons to commit the most horrid and bloody excesses. Let us endeavour to subdue every such turbulent and wretched disposition, and learn from the precept and example of Christ, that humility and readiness to forgive injuries, will most effectually secure our own comfort; for if we indulge pride and revenge, no one suffers by it so much as ourselves.

3. God for a while may leave his people in the greatest danger, that he may display his power the more remarkably and effectually in their deliverance. It is no wonder that the Jews and all their friends were perplexed, when they were all condemned as sheep to the slaughter, and had no apparent means of escape. When the church is in the greatest distress, God seems sometimes to retire, that when he appears it may be with greater lustre, to the confusion of his enemies and the joy of his friends. This thought should keep up our courage in the darkest prospects, and when our apprehensions are most dismal; for we see in the course of this history, as in many other instances, that "God taketh the wise in their own craftiness, and ensnares the wicked in the works of their own hands." He will resist the proud, and sooner or later abase them.

Persians and the neighbouring nations; and when they had found a lucky day for any enterprise, on that day they undertook it. Haman sought for such a day; and at last the lot fell on the fourteenth day of the twelfth month; as the clause happily preserved by the Greek version attests.

8, 9. Here are his accusations; their laws are different—they keep not the king's laws—and it is not for the king's real profit to suffer such a people to exist. He was willing to sacrifice his wealth to his revenge.

10, 11. This was strange conduct in the king. He prudently consulted before he put away Vashti; he made inquisition into the conduct of the conspirators, before he condemned them; here he regarded nothing, but made a general decree, and gave Haman all the spoils for his own use.

13. By posts. Cyrus is said to have appointed posts at convenient distances throughout his empire, so that news of every kind could be easily and swiftly conveyed. This was a wise appointment, and has been adopted by all civilized nations, in one way or another.

15. The city Shushan, &c. Nothing can paint in more lively colours the weakness, folly, and dreadful mischiefs of arbitrary governments, than the decree of Ahasuerus. Well might his subjects in general tremble, and

CHAPTER IV.

B. C. 510. Mordecai and the Jews mourn; Esther appointeth a fast.

- 1 WHEN Mordecai knew all that was done, he rent his garments, and put on sackcloth with ashes, and went out into the midst of the city, 2 and cried with a loud and bitter cry; And came even before the king's gate; for none might enter into the king's gate clothed with 3 sackcloth. And in every province, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, there was great mourning among the Jews, and fasting, and weeping, and wailing; 4 and many lay in sackcloth and ashes. And Esther's maids and her eunuchs went and told her. Then was the queen exceedingly grieved; and she sent raiment to clothe Mordecai, and to take away his sackcloth from him; but he 5 would not receive it. Then called Esther for Hatach, one of the king's eunuchs, whom he had appointed to attend on her, and gave him a command to Mordecai, to know what had happened, and on what account he mourned? 6 So Hatach went to Mordecai to the street of the 7 city, which was before the king's gate. And Mordecai told him all that had happened to him, and of the sum of money which Haman had promised to pay to the king's treasuries in 8 order that he might destroy the Jews. And he gave him a copy of the written decree which was given at Shushan to destroy them, that he might show it to Esther; and ordered him to REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. It is great satisfaction to good men, that the law of God is not like the laws of the Persian court. There was no attending there with mourning, or any kind of sorrow. But God allows, invites, and encourages afflicted souls to come to him. His law runs thus, "Is any man afflicted? let him pray. Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will be distressed! No one could be sure of his life, when a whole people were to be destroyed to please a favourite.

CHAP. IV. 1. Bitter cry. Mordecai was particularly affected with it, because the edict arose from his conscientious scruples.

2. Clothed with sackcloth. This custom is still preserved in the east; none are admitted into the king's palace in mourning, lest they should disturb their pleasures, and put them in mind of sickness and death.

4. Went and told her. The retired manner in which the women lived accounts for the circumstance of Esther knowing nothing of the decree, or of the cause of Mordecai's mourning.

8. For her people. This advice was prudent; and, doubtless, this tell her, and to charge her to go in to the king, to make supplication to him, and to make request before him for her people. And Hatach came and told Esther the words of Mordecai.

Again Esther spoke to Hatach, and gave him in charge to say to Mordecai; "All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know, that there is a law, that whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come to the king into the inner-court, who is not called, shall be put to death, unless the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live; but I have not been called to come in to the king these thirty days." And they told Mordecai Esther's words. Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, saying, "Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, any more than other Jews. For if thou art wholly silent this time, aid and deliverance shall arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer; "Go, assemble all the Jews who are present in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink three days, night or day; I also, and my maids will fast likewise; and, although against law, I will go in to the king: and if I perish, I will perish." And Mordecai departed, and did according to all that Esther had commanded him.

deliver thee." The law of the Persian court was, that no man should come to the king without express leave, on peril of his life: a bad law for themselves and their king too. But the king of heaven bids us always welcome; allows the poorest and the meanest to draw near, to come boldly, with humble confidence, to the inner-court, the holy of holies, through the blood of Jesus. Let method was suggested as the most likely to prevent their destruction.

11. All the kings, &c. This law illustrates the idolatrous homage which the Persian and other eastern sovereigns exacted from their people. They were not to be approached, but when they thought proper.

14. Such a time as this? He here insists upon her going in unto the king; urging that she would share in the general destruction, that even her rank would not exempt her; and with a noble triumph of faith adds, that God would deliver his people some other way. He apprehended, that while the rest escaped, God would take her and her family off for want of zeal for his cause and people; and that she ought rather to think that God had advanced her to be an instrument of their deliverance.

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 510. Esther ventures to approach the king, and obtains his favour; she invites him and Haman to a banquet.

- 1 Now on the third day, Esther put on her royal apparel, and stood in the inner-court of the king's house, over against the king's house; and the king was sitting upon his royal throne in the royal house, over against the gate of the
- 2 house. And, when the king saw Esther, the queen, standing in the court, she obtained favour in his sight: and the king held out to Esther, the golden sceptre which he had in his hand. Esther then drew near, and touched the
- 3 top of the sceptre. Then said the king to her, "What desirest thou, queen Esther? and what is thy request? to the half of the kingdom it
- 4 shall be given to thee." And Esther answered, "If it seem good to the king, let the king and Haman come this day to the banquet which I
- 5 have prepared for him." Then the king said, "Cause Haman to make haste, that he may do as Esther hath said." So the king and Haman went to the banquet which Esther had prepared.
- 6 And the king said to Esther at the banquet of wine, "What is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? even to the half of the kingdom it shall be performed." Then answered Esther, and said, "My petition and my request is; If I have found favour 8 in the sight of the king, and if it please the king to grant my petition, and to perform my request, let the king and Haman come to the banquet that I shall prepare for them, and I will do to-morrow as the king hath said."

Then Haman, that day, went away joyful and 9 with a glad heart; but when Haman saw Mordecai in the king's gate, that he stood not up, nor moved for him, he was full of indignation against Mordecai. Nevertheless, Haman re- 10 strained himself; and when he came home, he sent and called for his friends, and Zeresh, his wife. And Haman told them of his glory, his 11 riches, and the multitude of his children, and in what manner the king had promoted him, and how he had advanced him above "all" the princes and servants of the king. Haman said 12 moreover, "Yea, Esther, the queen, let no man come in with the king unto the banquet which she had prepared but myself; and to-morrow am I invited to her also with the king. Yet all this 13 availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai, the Jew, sitting at the king's gate."

Then said Zeresh, his wife, and all his friends 14 to him, "Let a gallows be made fifty cubits us be thankful for these privileges, and use them, lifting up holy hands, and cheerfully pour out our complaints to the Lord.

2. We are admonished, that in times of trouble, we should not only give ourselves to prayer, but engage the prayers of others. Esther, when thus distressed for herself and her country, and tortured with a mixture of hope and fear, desired the prayers of all the Jews. Those who know what devotion is, what prayer has done, and what it can do, will be desirous of, and thankful for, the prayers of their brethren. But those who desire the prayers of others should not think that enough; they should be careful to pray for themselves, as Esther did.

3. We may also learn, that we ought to improve the advantages of our station, whatever it be, to glorify God; and though we may expose ourselves to danger, yet we are not to shrink from duty. A man may not at first know why God brings him to such a place, or gives him such and such blessings; and he should therefore observe the openings of providence, and do all the good in his power. It was undoubtedly Esther's duty to enter in unto the king, and save the lives of so many thousands of her nation and of God's people, whatever had been the consequence. We ought, says the apostle, to lay down our lives for the brethren; and his love should constrain us to it, "who gave his life a ransom for many." No christian should count his life dear to him so that he may glorify God, his saviour.

refused this favour there would be no hope of the other; she might endear herself to him the more by the entertainment, and she would farther please him by inviting his favourite.

8. I will do to-morrow, &c. Perhaps the queen's heart failed her at this time; or she might hope that at another entertainment the king would be still more affectionate and ready to grant her request; she might expect that Haman would grow more proud and insolent, and so be more easily ruined; and the king's mind be prepared by the expectation of some great high, and to-morrow speak thou to the king that Mordecai may be hanged thereon; then go thou in merrily with the king to the banquet." And the thing pleased Haman; and he caused the gallows to be made.

CHAPTER VI.

B. C. 510. Ahasuerus rewardeth Mordecai for detecting the conspiracy of Bigthana and Teresh; Haman doeth him honour, and is hanged.

- 1 ON that night the king could not sleep, and he commanded the book of the records to be brought, and they were read before the king.
- 2 And it was found written, that Mordecai had told of Bigthana and Teresh, two of the king's eunuchs, the door-keepers, who sought to slay
- 3 the king Ahasuerus. And the king said, "What reward and dignity hath been done to Mordecai for this?" Then said the king's servants who ministered to him, "There hath been nothing done for him."
- 4 And the king said, "Who is in the court?" (Now Haman had come into the outward court of the king's house, to speak to the king about hanging Mordecai on the gallows that he had
- 5 prepared for him.) And the king's servants said to him, "Behold, Haman standeth in the court." And the king said, "Let him come

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. In the success of Esther, we see an answer to prayer; and we should be encouraged to pray and not to faint. It is his glorious character to be a God hearing prayer; and he magnifies his mercy towards us when we are most humble and diffident. The golden sceptre is always held out; God's chief favourite is our friend and advocate: therefore "let us come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in every time of need."

2. We here see the misery of a proud, envious, ungovernable spirit. Haman had every thing he could desire, riches, honours, a large family, and the king's favour. A small part of this would have satisfied any reasonable modest man: but all was nothing to him, because only one man denied him the respect and homage he expected. It is of little consequence what such men have, if they have not every thing. The proud and envious will always and important petition. Above all, God might order it thus, that Mordecai's honour might be displayed in the mean time, and the way be open to his advancement, and Haman's ruin. See ch. vi.

CHAP. VI. 1. The records, &c. We see the special disposing hand of God, in the king's restlessness, and in his choosing to have the public records of occurrences during his own reign, read to him.

3. There hath been nothing, &c. Some think that some reward had in." So Haman came in. And the king said to him, "What shall be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour?" Now Haman thought in his heart, "Whom would the king delight to honour more than myself?" And 7 Haman answered the king, "For the man whom the king delighteth to honour, Let the 8 royal apparel be brought which the king useth to wear, and the horse on which the king rideth, and the crown royal which is placed upon his head: And let this apparel and horse be delivered to one of the king's most noble princes, and let the man, whom the king delighteth to honour, be clothed therewith, and brought on horseback through the street of the city, and proclaim before him, 'Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour.'" Then the king said to Haman, "Make haste, 10 and take the apparel and the horse, as thou hast said, and do even so to Mordecai, the Jew, who sitteth at the king's gate: let nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken." Then took Haman the apparel and the horse, and arrayed Mordecai, and brought him on horseback through the street of the city, and proclaimed before him, "Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour."

have something to make them uneasy. May we guard our hearts against such a wretched disposition, or else we shall have no true enjoyment of what we possess, but "have our hearts pierced through with many sorrows."

3. We see in the spirit of Haman's wife and friends, the same pride of heart, which he possessed. Alike strangers to humility and justice, they were ready to shed blood in torrents, to wipe off what they considered disgrace. It is sad indeed when a man's enemies are of his own household, and his bosom counsellors are counsellors of iniquity. The truest friendship is to endeavour to promote in others, quietness, meekness, patience, and a humble spirit, without which they can never be happy. "He that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Better is it to be of an humble mind with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the great.

been ordered, but through the ill-will of Haman, or some other courtiers, he had been deprived of it. Perhaps the account of rewards conferred upon others, led the king to ask what had been done for him.

7—9. Haman thinking that the king intended to confer some peculiar mark of his favour on himself; and as he did not want money, nor could be raised to a higher post in the court, he proposes the highest honour he could conceive. There seems to have been nothing but the sceptre that he did

12 And Mordecai came back to the king's gate.
But Haman hasted to his own house mourning, 13 and having his head covered. And Haman told Zeresh, his wife, and all his friends, every thing that had befallen him. Then said his wise men, and Zeresh, his wife, to him, "If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou hast begun to fall, thou wilt not prevail against him, but wilt surely fall before 14 him." And while they were yet talking with him, came the king's eunuchs, and hasted to bring Haman to the banquet which Esther had prepared.

1 And the king and Haman went to banquet
2 with Esther, the queen. And the king said again to Esther on the second day, at the banquet of wine, "What is thy petition, queen Esther? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? to the half of the king-3 dom, and it shall be performed." Then Esther, the queen, answered and said, "If I have found favour in thy sight, O king, and if it please the king, let my life be granted to me at my petition, and the life of my people at my 4 request; For we are sold, I and my people to be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish. But if we had been sold for bond-men and bond-women, I would have been silent, yet the enemy could not compensate the damage done to the king." Then the king Ahasuerus answered 5 and said to Esther, the queen, "Who is he,

and where is he, that dare presume in his heart to do thus?" And Esther said, "The adver- 6 sary and enemy is this wicked Haman." Then Haman was afraid before the king and the queen.

And the king arising from the banquet of 7
wine in his wrath, went into the palace-garden;
and Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther, the queen; for he saw that there was evil determined against him by the king.
Then the king returned from the palace garden 8
into the place of the banquet of wine; and Haman had fallen on the couch on which Esther lay. Then said the king, "Will he force the queen also before me in the house?" As the word went out of the king's mouth, they covered Haman's face. And Harbonah, one of the 9 eunuchs, said to the king, "Behold also, the gallows fifty cubits high, which Haman hath made for Mordecai, who had spoken good for the king, standeth in the house of Haman."
Then the king said, "Hang him thereon." So 10 they hanged Haman on the gallows which he had prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath pacified.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS VI. & VII. 1. Gratitude for public services and benefits, is always becoming, though not always met with. Mordecai's fidelity and kindness to the king were forgotten, and were not at all likely to save him from destruction.
It is much to be wished that princes may have wisdom to see, and honesty to advance, real merit, and reward faithful services.
This is a comfort to God's faithful servants, that there is no unjust or partial proceedings in the court of heaven; "He is not unrighteous to forget any works or labours of love."

2. In Haman we see how the pride of a man's heart may deceive him. Observe the vanity of Haman, in ver. 6. "Now Haman thought in his heart, whom would the king delight to honour more than himself?" he thought much better of himself than he deserved, because the king esteemed him, and courtiers bowed to him: "he thought himself some great one," and in a state of security. Thus it is through pride that many think themselves wise, and pious too; and because they meet with esteem and respect from others, imagine that there is something uncommonly valuable in themselves, and that none are like them.

Let no man thus deceive himself; but pray to God to search and not think it proper to invest himself with; and probably he thought it would be an agreeable circumstance to have Mordecai hanged to grace the cavalcade.

13. Fall before him. They probably grounded their opinion on the deliverance of Daniel, and the three youths, and other wonderful interposi-tions of providence in favour of the Jews, which must have been well known.

CHAP. VII. 3. Let my life be, &c. The king, no doubt, expected some importunate petition for wealth, or honour, or the advancement of some of her friends, and must be much surprized when she only begged for her life, and the deliverance of her people; his rage against her enemies must rise in proportion to her humility.

6. This wicked Haman. Esther found no reason to fear speaking plainly; she therefore fixed her charge upon Haman. And she gave his true character in one word, this wicked Haman.

8. Will he force, &c. Had the king been calm he would hardly have supposed that Haman had such an intention; but his passion had so blinded him, that he put the worst construction upon every thing.—They covered Haman's face. As the dignity of a prince made the being arrayed in his clothes a mighty honour, so it did not allow of a malefactor's setting his eyes upon him. The majesty at least of the kings of Persia did not allow of this, as appears in the case of Haman, whose face was covered, as soon as the courtiers perceived Ahasuerus looked upon him in that light. Har-bonah's covering Haman's face then was the placing him before the king, as a malefactor, to hear his doom.

CHAPTER VIII.

B. C. 510. Mordecai advanced; the Jews allowed to defend themselves.

- 1 ON that day, the king Ahasuerus gave the house of Haman, the Jews' enemy, to Esther the queen. And Mordecai came before the king; for Esther had told how he was related
2 to her. And the king took off his ring which he had taken from Haman, and gave it to Mordecai. And Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman.
3 And Esther spoke yet again before the king, and fell down at his feet, and besought him with tears to put away the mischief of Haman, the Agagite, and his device that he had devised
4 against the Jews. Then the king held out the golden sceptre towards Esther. So Esther
5 arose, and stood before the king. And said, "If it please the king, and if I have found favour in his sight, and the thing seem right before the king, and I be pleasing in his eyes, let it be written to reverse the letters devised by Haman, the son of Hammadetha, the Agagite, which he wrote to destroy the Jews who are in 6 all the king's provinces: For how can I endure to see the evil that will come upon my people? or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?"
7 Then king Ahasuerus said to Esther, the queen, and to Mordecai, the Jew, "Behold, I have given Esther the house of Haman, and him they have hanged upon the gallows, because he stretched forth his hand against the 8 Jews. Write ye also for the Jews as it pleaseth you, in the king's name, and seal it with try him, and make him upright before him, so that he may neither deceive himself or others.

3. We see the justice of God, in bringing on Haman that destruction which he had intended to bring on others: and how awful is it to perish suddenly and when we are looking for great things. He who expected all men should reverence him, is brought to "sudden destruction in a moment, and utterly con-

10. So they hanged. In the east, the sentence is immediately executed. CHAP. VIII. 1. How he was related, &c. Thus Mordecai was raised by the influence of the queen; and her favour, doubtless, procured the commission of Nehemiah, and the liberal grant of what was necessary to restore Jerusalem.

3-6. Though Haman was destroyed, the decree which he had procu-

the king's signet: for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's signet, may no man reverse." Then were the king's scribes called in the third month, that is, the month Sivan, on the twenty-third day thereof; and it was written according to all that Mordecai commanded, to the Jews, and to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces, from India to Ethiopia, a hundred and twenty-seven provinces; to every province written in the writing and in the language of every people; and to the Jews in their own writing and language. And he wrote in the name of king Ahasuerus, and sealed it with the king's signet, and sent letters by posts on horseback, and riders on mules, camels, and young dromedaries. In them the king granted the Jews who were in every city to assemble themselves, and defend their own life, by destroying, slaying, and causing to perish, all the host of the people in the province that should assault them, little ones and women, and to take the spoil of them for a prey. On one day in all the provinces of king Ahasuerus, namely, on the fourteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar. The copy of the written law to be published in every province, and among every people, that the Jews should be ready against that day to avenge themselves on their enemies. So the posts that rode upon mules and camels went out, being hastened and pressed on by the king's command. And the decree was published at the palace Shushan.

And Mordecai went out from the presence of sumed with terrors: his evil doings come upon his own head. The righteous is delivered out of trouble, and the wicked cometh in his stead; into the pit which he digged he is fallen himself, and in the snare which he laid is his own foot taken." God has often, in like manner, confounded and destroyed proud oppressors; and the enemies of his church have great reason to say, "The Lord is known by the judgments that he executeth."

red existed in full force; and Esther saw the necessity of obtaining another to counteract its effects.

11. Granted the Jews, &c. This shows the absurdity of this law of the Persians, as the king was now forced to allow a civil war, and permit the Jews and their enemies to take up arms by his authority to combat against it.

the king in royal apparel of blue and white, and with a great crown of gold, and with a garment of fine linen and purple; and the city of Shushan rejoiced and was glad. To the Jews arose 16 light and gladness, joy and honour. And in every province, and in every city, whithersoever the king's command and his decree came, the Jews had joy and gladness, a feast and a good day; and many of the people of the land became Jews; for the fear of the Jews fell upon them.

CHAPTER IX.

B. C. 509. The Jews slay their enemies with the ten sons of Haman; the feast of Purim, and the greatness of Mordecai.

- 1 Now in the twelfth month, the month Adar, on the thirteenth day of the same, when the time drew near, that the king's decree was to be put in execution, in the day that the enemies of the Jews hoped to have power over them; (yet the affair so turned out, that the Jews had rule over those who hated them:)
- 2 The Jews assembled themselves in their cities throughout all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, to oppose such as sought their hurt; and no man could withstand them; for the fear
3 of them fell upon all the people. And all the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and officers of the king, helped

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. Let us learn to cultivate a tender concern for the happiness of our country and people. Esther expressed her concern to the king in a very moving manner. She did not weep when she petitioned for her own life; but was deeply afflicted by the calamities which threatened her country and people. This is a becoming disposition. It is an unhappy thing when men are so selfish as to forget or overlook the concerns of the public, and not to feel amidst its calamities and dangers.

2. The advancement of wise and good men to power and influence, is a public blessing. When the righteous are in authority the people rejoice. When upright men, persons who have the real interest of their country at heart, are promoted, it gives joy

17. Became Jews. That is, submitted to their laws, and professed the belief of one supreme God. This is natural, as the hand of God was so displayed in their favour.

CHAP. IX. 2. To oppose such. Literally, "to stretch forth the hand," which idiomatical phrase seems limited by the context to the sense given. The 16th verse demonstrates, that they stood on the defensive, and only resisted when attacked.

the Jews; because the fear of Mordecai fell upon them. For Mordecai was great in the king's house, and his fame went out throughout all the provinces: for this man Mordecai became greater and greater. The Jews, therefore, smote
5 all their enemies with the sword, and slew and destroyed them, and did to those who hated them according to their pleasure. And in the palace Shushan, the Jews slew and destroyed five hundred men. And Parshandatha, and 7 Dalphon, and Aspatha, And Poratha, and Adalia, and Adriatha, And Parmashta, and 9 Arisai, and Aridai, and Vajezatha, The ten sons of Haman, the son of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews, they slew; but on the spoil they laid not their hand. On that day, the 11 number of those who were slain in the palace Shushan, was brought before the king.

And the king said to Esther, the queen, "The Jews have slain and destroyed five hundred men in the palace Shushan, and the ten sons of Haman; what have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? now what is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: or what is thy request further? and it shall be done." Then 13 said Esther, "If it please the king, let it be granted to the Jews who are in Shushan to do to-morrow also according to this day's decree, and let Haman's ten sons be hung up upon the

to all who are wise and considerate. They knew the character of Mordecai as illustrated by the different character of Haman, and that he would seek the public good. Let us pray that such may be promoted among us; that those may fill public posts, who will be zealous and faithful in discharging their duty.

3. The joy of God's people often rises in proportion to their sorrows. There was great lamentation and distress among the Jews when the first edict was issued; but when the second was known, light and gladness, joy and honour. "They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy." The brightness of harvest is illustrated by the former gloom. Thus the rest and happiness of the future state of God's people, will be greatly enhanced by the sorrows and afflictions they experienced in this distant world.

5. It is not possible to render this verse literally, and perspicuously; I have, therefore, given the sense in equivalent terms.

13. Be hung up. They had been slain before, and this respects their dead bodies, which were to be hung up for the greater infamy. They had probably sought to avenge their father's fall and death; and for this reason they were thus treated.

15. Three hundred men. The whole of those slain in Shushan were:

14 gallows. And the king commanded it so to be done: and the decree was given at Shushan; 15 and they hanged up Haman's ten sons. For the Jews who were in Shushan, assembled themselves on the fourteenth day also of the month Adar, and slew three hundred men at Shushan; 16 but on the spoil they laid not their hand. But the other Jews who were in the king's provinces assembled themselves, on the 'thirteenth day of the month Adar', that they might defend their own lives, and rest from their enemies; and they slew of their foes seventy-five thousand; but on the spoil they laid not their hands. 17 And on the fourteenth day of the same, they rested, and made it a day of feasting and gladness. 18 But the Jews who were at Shushan, assembled on the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth thereof; and on the fifteenth day of the same they rested, and made it a day of feasting and gladness. Therefore the 19 Jews of the villages who dwelt in the unwalled towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar, a day of gladness and feasting, and a good day, and of sending portions one to another. 20 And Mordecai wrote these things, and sent letters to all the Jews who were in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, near and distant, 21 By which he appointed, that they should keep the fourteenth day of the month Adar, and the 22 fifteenth day of the same, yearly, As the days in which the Jews had obtained rest from their enemies, and the month in which their sorrow had been turned into joy, and their mourning into festivity; that they should make them days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor. And the 23 Jews undertook to do as they had begun, and as Mordecai had written to them; Because 24 Haman, the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, had devised to destroy them, and had cast Pur, that is, the lot, to consume them, and to destroy them; But 25 when Esther went in to the king, he commanded, by letters, that his wicked device, which he devised against the Jews, should return upon his own head, and that he and his sons should be hung up on the gallows. Wherefore they 26 called these days Purim from the word Pur. Hence on account of all the words of this letter, and of the things which they had seen, and which had come unto them, The Jews ordained, 27 and engaged in regard to themselves, and their seed, and all such as joined themselves to them, that they would keep these two days yearly, without fail, according as it had been prescribed and appointed. And that these days should 28 be remembered and kept throughout every generation, every family, every province, every city; and that these days of Purim should not fail among the Jews, nor the memorial of them perish from their seed. Then Esther, the queen, 29 the daughter of Abihail, and Mordecai, the Jew, wrote with all authority, to confirm again the days of Purim. And he sent the letters to 30 all the Jews, to the hundred and twenty-seven provinces of the kingdom of Ahasuerus, with words of peace and truth, To confirm these 31 days of Purim in their appointed times, according as Mordecai, the Jew, and Esther, the queen, had enjoined them, and as they had decreed for themselves and for their seed, the eight hundred; and from this it appears that many Jews resided there, and that they had many enemies.

16. Seventy-five thousand. The ancient Jewish writers say that most of these were Amalekites, which is not unlikely, as Haman might have introduced great numbers of them into the provinces, and they would be peculiarly inveterate against the Jews.

20—32. The feast of purim, or of lots, so called from the Persian word pur, which signifies lot, is taken from the circumstance of Haman having cast lots to destroy them, has been observed by the Jews down to the present time, with some peculiar ceremonies. The Jews tell us that though this feast was established by Esther and Mordecai, eighty-five elders opposed it as an innovation against the law. During this festival the whole book of Esther is twice read in their synagogues, once in the evening, when the feast begins, and again the next morning, and when the name of Haman is mentioned, the very children are taught to beat on the benches, and stamp for joy. After the second reading of the book is finished, they spend the remaining part of the day in sports, with music and dancing, until the time for feasting arrives, in which they indulge to the greatest excesses. In the Talmud, intoxication is even authorized, and this feast has not been improperly called the Bacchanalian feast of the Jews. The best part of this feast is the custom of giving abundant alms to the poor, that they may be enabled to keep the feast as well as their richer brethren.

32 matters of the fastings, and of prayer. And the decree of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim, as it is written in this book.

1 And the king Ahasuerus laid a tribute upon
2 the land, and upon the isles of the sea. And all the acts of his power and of his might, and the declaration of the greatness of Mordecai, to which the king advanced him, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Media and Persia. For Mordecai, the Jew, was next to king Ahasuerus, and great among the Jews, and accepted of the multitude of his brethren, seeking the wealth of his people, and speaking peace to all his seed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. & X. 1. We may here observe God's favourable interposition for his people. He gave them success against their enemies, by striking a panic into their opposers; and made way for their comfortable settlement, by removing so many of their enemies. All these wonderful scenes of providence center in this grand design, to promote the knowledge and worship of God among the nations where the Jews were scattered; to which they would no doubt greatly contribute. They were calculated to impress the truth, that the God of Israel was the only true God

2. The character of Mordecai, as here related, is very honourable; and it would be well if all ministers of state were like him.

Notwithstanding his exaltation, he kept to his principles and practices as a Jew; he was not solicitous about aggrandizing his own family, but promoted the public good; he was celebrated through the provinces for his wisdom and justice; he was especially kind to the Jews; not only as his people, but as the people of God; speaking peace to them, in a humble, condescending manner. Let us be thankful that we live under a government where the wealth and the peace of the people are sought, and no tribute laid but by our representatives. We have rest from our enemies, and have no bloody edicts against us. May God long continue our public mercies, and enable us to "to lead quiet and peaceable lives, in all godliness and honesty." Amen.
